THE HERITAGE COLLECTION

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY

IN 68-1
OV

In Memory of Irene Walling

68-1
PP544
Tuckey
K

HISTORY

OF

RANDOLPH COUNTY,

INDIANA,

WITH

Illustrations and Biographical Sketches

OF

SOME OF ITS PROMINENT MEN AND PIONEERS,

TO WHICH ARE APPENDED MAPS OF ITS SEVERAL TOWNSHIPS.

BY E. TUCKER.

CHICAGO:
A. L. KINGMAN,
LAKESIDE BUILDING.

1882.

Culver, Page, Hoyne & Co., Printers, Chicago.

Reprint
Date Unknown

SEATTLE GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY

whipporwill publications
Successor to Unigraphic, Inc.
4400 Jackson Ave. – Evansville, IN 47715

The reproduction of this publication has been made possible through the sponsorship of the Randolph County Historical Society, Winchester, Indiana.

PREFACE.

SIXTY-EIGHT years have joined the ages before the flood since the first white settler pitched his camp within the borders of Randolph County. Hundreds and thousands of hardy pioneers followed the first bold adventurer into this waste and howling wilderness. Their vigorous strokes have felled the giant monsters of the woods and opened the virgin soil to to the genial sunshine. In hardship and peril, under privation and want, through scarcity and sickness, in labors constant and severe, they toiled their lives away. And now hardly a single soul of all that heroic band remains on earth among us! Possibly a scanty, scattered few yet survive. A small number more of those who came here as children still breathe the vital air—still linger amid the places of their youthful homes, to wonder whether these fields and farms and dwellings and towns are indeed the spots where, in the dense woods so long ago, their fathers and their mothers built the rude cabins, or even the "camp" or the rail pen, to shelter their dear ones from the cold and the storm. They gaze bewildered on the gilded show, and marvel at the incredible change which time and toil, like mighty magicians, have wrought. Soon, full soon, the grave will close over the "very last" of these ancient pioneers; and their children, too, are old and way-worn, and, one by one they, also, are dropping from sight; and, erelong, pioneer life will be a thing forgotten, or known only in the recital of fireside tales, handed down from the days of long ago. And yet, of the history of these sixty-eight years no permanent memorial has ever been made. A few manuscripts, a scattering, ancient newspaper here and there, alone attest, in writing or in print, the perils and the toils of those pregnant, eventful years, those hardships, that endurance, that heroism, that wondrous activity and perseverance, that endless labor, day and night, summer and winter, in sunshine and storm, and endless and fathomless mud, out of all which beyond the power of the present generation even to imagine, has grown this wondrous edifice of luxury and splendor, this grand and stately Commonwealth—the noble old mother of us all!

Sixty-eight years ago not one stick had been laid upon another, except by the miserable red men to build their wretched wigwams. The sun shone, the waters flowed in their channels, the forest flung its arms aloft, the bosom of mother earth lay warm and fertile beneath; the sand, the gravel, the lime-rock, all were stored away beneath the ground; every needed article which nature furnishes to her children was at hand; the sweet and balmy air, fragrant with the breath of flowers, waved with gentle motion the yielding foliage; then, as now, fell the fructifying rain from the clouds, and moistened the surface of the ground; springs gushed from the earth, and sped dancing away over the pebbles, under the shadow of the forest. But wherefore? Ah, wherefore? That a few ignorant red men might chase a few deer or kill a turkey now and then; that they might eat the flesh and tan the hide of the one, and ornament their head with the tail feathers of the other? Is such a beggarly thing a sufficient result for so grand an array of appliances? Nay, verily, but that a race might come at length in the progress of the ages who could take possession and make the utmost out of these wondrous possibilities; a race who should have power and skill to fulfill the primal command "to multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it." And now the work is (at least measurably) done, the miracle of years is accomplished, and from out those gloomy woods and trackless jungles and primeval pathless wastes, have sprung these waving fields, these homes of beauty, those palaces of splendor, which we do now behold! And shall not the history of the authors of this mighty change be written? Shall their memory perish from the earth? So it would seem, for among the thousands skillful and gifted of the sons and daughters of these hardy sires, has never one been found to search out the events of the past and write them for future generations. Verily, our soul cries out, this thing ought not so to be. Why do these sons and daughters of those heroic fathers and mothers suffer that heroism to be forgotten, and the memory thereof to vanish from among men? The task were, truly, not properly ours to perform; for we are only a late-comer into this Western land. Our boyhood and early manhood were spent far away amid other and distant scenes. Our youthful eyes rested on the hills and mountains of the far-off East; but our boyish ears in those days, now long past, drank eagerly in the recital of events, then ancient, the tales of what was to us pioneer life, of hardship and toil, of Indian warfare, of border troubles, of defeat and capture, of dreary winter camps, of loathsome prison ships, of poverty, suffering and want, of failing harvests, of midnight conflagrations, of deadly epidemics; all these and more by far, came upon men, and were heroically borne by them, by grandfathers and grandmothers in those days of "Auld Lang Syne," in the land where our childhood's hours were spent. And we have read, too, histories of those times, gathered in patient perseverance, by the grateful descendants of those hardy ancestors, and published as enduring memorials of those by-gone years.

Time has fled rapidly on, and the sources of history for these things in this county of ours, have been well-nigh dried up. Yet thus far nothing permanent and effectual has been done. Pardon us, then, dear friends, if, in our earnest conviction that something should be accomplished, and that without delay, we have overstepped the bounds of propriety, if in the eager desire to collect and preserve the memorials of these hardy settlers, we may appear to have usurped the place which ought to belong to some native-born son or daughter of old Randolph.

But hitherto no step forward has been taken, and we have been by many who claim to be friends, urged and encouraged to undertake the task; and truly a long and tedious task it has, in fact, turned out to be; even longer and more tedious and difficult than we had pictured to ourself. The facts are hard to find—hard to verify—hard to condense—hard to present in proper form; and one thing we wish to say with great frankness, that while we have done our utmost for the purpose, yet we do by no means flatter ourself to have attained complete accuracy, and perhaps hardly even an approximation thereto. The chief dependence for information as to alleged facts is, of course, the memory of pioneers or of their relatives or friends; but memory is proverbially treacherous and uncertain, and often contradictory, e. g., take so simple a fact as the time when the first rail track reached the State line at Union City. The thing took place only about twenty-nine years ago; it was a notable public event, and perhaps twenty persons are now residents in that town who were then there and witnessed the occurrence or heard the fact stated by those who did witness it. As to this event, one would suppose entire accuracy might be secured; yet we find it true that three different men, all claiming to be eye-witnesses, give three different dates, varying as much as a whole month, and each one is sure that he is right, giving special reasons for the exactness of his memory. So, then, absolute accuracy is doubtless out of the question; and for every defect which any critical eye may detect in this work, we can ourself doubtless point out a dozen. We are, indeed, painfully conscious of the imperfections of our work, yet we feel, moreover, that we have expended great labor and taken exceeding care to approach as near entire correctness as could possibly be done. And, with this conviction, we humbly solicit the forbearance of our readers. If it were to happen that a second edition were to be issued, corrections might be made as should be found needful; but as to that, time alone can tell. We can say with truth, that having taken up the enterprise, we have done what could reasonably be asked or expected to make the book reliable, interesting and true; we have honestly tried to make it a work of which Randolph County "will not willingly let die," and which may be a worthy and valuable addition to the local history of the Commonwealth.

In arrangement of material, the principle of grouping has been employed to a great extent. Agriculture, education, religion, military matters, cemeteries, attorneys, physicians and several other subjects, have been treated for the county as a whole.

The military history is unusually full and comprehensive. Biography, also, is very extensive in the work, and personal reminiscences have been freely given, the author believing that these sketches will be full of interest. So far as possible, the lives of early pioneers have been detailed, especially of those who are now resting from their labors. The lives of subscribers are inserted, but the biographies of many may be found who have long since left the shores of time, and of many also who are now aged and feeble and infirm, yet who are numbered still among the living heroes who have achieved the mighty conquest of human prowess over wild and savage nature, and who have made the wilderness to bud and blossom as the rose, and who survive to behold the changes that have been wrought. The chapter on the public lands was framed from materials furnished from Washington, through the kindness of J. H. Stine, Esq., Government employe therefor many years, but who still retains his connection with, and affection for, the county which was his residence when called into the public service.

In the military history, great use has been made of Adjutant General Terrell's Report for Indiana, published soon after the close of the war, while, in many cases also, facts from personal and other sources have been stated. The prison life of C. W. Diggs was condensed from Gen. Shank's Report on the Treatment of Prisoners, published by authority of Congress in 1869. The details concerning the others were written down from the lips of the parties themselves. Great labor has been expended in searching the official records of various kinds. The county officers, past and present, have rendered every practicable aid, and furnished every possible facility in furtherance of our enterprise, and scarcely an individual has been found in the county who did not cheerfully do whatever seemed needful to make our toilsome task an abundant success.

Among the other works consulted have been Tuttle's and Dillon's History of Indiana, Darke County History, Allen County History, Delaware County History, Elkhart County History, the Legislative journals, C. H. Smith's Recollections, Smith's Early Methodism, and various other works. The Smith family gave access to the manuscripts left by Hon. Jere Smith, some of which have been incorporated in the work. Mr. Osborn, of Economy, Wayne County, allowed us to present the substance of the "weather record" begun by his father nearly fifty years ago, and continued by the family to the present time.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

A few among the multitude who have rendered assistance in the work (not to exclude others perhaps equally worthy of mention), are as follows:

Greensfork.—James C. Bowen, Squire Bowen, James Clark, Aaron Hill, Thomas Hough, James Kelly, Jesse Parker, Henry Horn.

Washington.—Paul Beard, Jr., W. A. W. Daly, William Johnson, Silas Johnson, Thomas Phillips, Mrs. Shoemaker (daughter of Curtis Cleny).

West River.—William M. Botkin, C. W. Osborn, Jeremiah Smith, Ira Swain.

White River and Winchester.—T. M. Browne, Hannah Diggs, William Diggs, Jr., H. H. Neff, M. A. Reeder, Gen. A. Stone, I. P. Watts, Thomas Ward, Jesse Way, Moorman Way, Judith Way, W. C. Willmore.

Franklin.—Elder Thomas Addington, Dr. Bailey, Arthur McKew, Pardon Sherman, Mrs. Sherman, Dr. Shoemaker.

Ward.—Edward Edger, Joseph Edger, Perry Fields, John Key, Daniel B. Miller, John Mock, Burgett Pierce, Thomas Ward, Olney Whipple.

Wayne (and Union City).—Seth Hoke, Alfred Lenox, Mrs. Thomas Mason, Robert Murphy, William Orr, William Pickett, Jesse Paxson, William Peacock, George and Asenath Thomas, James Woodbury, W. K. Smith.

Stony Creek.—Isaac Amburn, John H. Bond, W. A. Thornburg, Solomon Wright, Dr. Chenoweth.

Nettle Creek.—Mrs. Burroughs, William Clevinger, M. L. Canady, Mrs. Patsy Branson, Lemuel Wiggins, Mrs. Wine, James Scott, Mrs. Mark Diggs.

Jackson.—Ezekiel Clough, Thomas Devor, Jesse Johnson, James Porter, Mrs. Reeves, Mrs. Ruby, the Simmonses, the Warrens.

Green.—Philip Barger, Mr. Green, Thomas Godwin, Thomas Hubbard, Mr. McProud.

Monroe.—Mr. Driver, Mrs. Hammer, Mr. Jones, Rev. Moses Marks, David Macy, John A. Moorman, Mrs. Wallace.

It remains for us to express our grateful acknowledgements to the many kind friends (and their name is legion, and they embrace the entire county), who have encouraged and assisted in accomplishing our arduous task. Without their kind co-operation, indeed, such a task would have been utterly in vain.

The sources of history in our case have been mostly personal and verbal. Something, of course, has been gleaned from books and from records, but most has been drawn from original sources, from the aged, worthy pioneers themselves or from their intelligent and enterprising descendants.

Entire and absolute accuracy is, of course, scarcely attainable in such an enterprise, since the information is to be gained almost wholly by word of mouth; and reliance must be upon the memory, often of persons who are aged and infirm, and concerning events which occurred in the long, long ago. Even where one would expect to find records at command in the county offices of county officials in the past, a painful deficiency is noticeable.

It might have well been supposed that a full and accurate record could have been found as to the names and terms, etc., of of the various incumbents of county and township offices. It would have been thought also that a record of the names of the soldiers enlisted from the county would have been preserved as a part of the official history thereof. Neither of these things, however, is to be found; and as to some of the officers of the days of "Auld Lang Syne," to find out who they were, how long they served, etc., has been wholly out of the question. And after the long experience of painful and often fruitless research, the author feels a settled conviction that, instead of being blameworthy for omissions or mistakes, he is, rather, deserving of public approval, not to say admiration, for the array of facts as to the early and later history presented, and for the degree of accuracy achieved in the performance of the work.

Records, wherever attainable, have been freely brought into requisition. Written documents, personal or official, have been used; records preserved in that precious treasure, the family Bible, "grandmother's old Bible," oftentime worn and fallen in pieces from reading and handling, when the primeval forest frowned heavy and dark over all this land, written by hands beloved that have long been cold and lifeless in the tomb, have in many cases been made to yield their sacred remembrances for our benefit. Births, marriages, deaths, lists of the names of children, eight, ten, even fifteen or eighteen in number in a single group, have been discovered in the ancient record: or the ancient grandfather, or, better still, the aged grandmother, with clearer mind and more accurate memory, has recited the facts, still recollected, of the events of their early youth and their active maturity, of Indian troubles, of early migration, of primal forest life, of privation and hunger and hardship, when the roads were trails, and the stream-crossings were fords, when the dwellings were cabins and the towns were not.

It is greatly to be hoped that, while minor errors may, doubtless, be found, and possibly of such not a few, yet substantial accuracy will have been attained; and, if not, that such errors will rather be regarded as mistakes to be lamented than as faults to be condemned.

To the business men, the legal fraternity, the medical profession, the clergy and the press, to the officials, past and present of every degree, and to all and sundry, too many even to name, citizens of Randolph, now or heretofore, for every encouraging word spoken, and for every friendly act done in its behalf, sincere and hearty thanks are hereby cheerfully tendered by the author of Randolph County History, by the publishers thereof, and by all who have taken part or borne responsibility in its preparation.

And now, to the citizens of Randolph, the warm-hearted, generous men and women of our noble old county, and to those who have at any time been residents therein; to those who, remain of the old stock, and to the children of the pioneers wherever they may be found, and truly they are scattered far and wide throughout this mighty Western valley and among the mountains stretching boundless to the ocean shore; and to the reading public at large, we modestly and timidly, yet confidingly, present this final result of long and wearisome labor, fondly hoping that those who receive and those who read the work will, at least, do us the justice to believe that, in this pious attempt to rescue from hopeless oblivion the memory of the venerable past, and to assist the present and coming generations to bestow fitting and reverential honor upon the hardy and glorious band who, in by-gone years, with much labor and unknown hardship, led forth "the grand procession of the ages" to lay the foundations of this princely Commonwealth of the latter day; that, in this difficult, yet sacred and pleasing, task which our hands have undertaken to accomplish, "we have done what we could."

[The deaths of the pioneers are occurring with alarming frequency. Since this work was begun, many of the aged veterans have dropped into the grave. This treatise was planned, indeed, in the "nick of time." It contains important statements taken from the lips of aged persons, then hale and vigorous, now, alas! pale and silent in death, and hidden in the cold and solemn tomb!]

[Note.—It is proper to state that while the great body of this volume is the work of myself, it is true, nevertheless, that a considerable number of the biographical sketches contained in the book have been prepared by other hands. E. TUCKER.]

CONTENTS.

PART I.

HISTORY OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.

PRE-HISTORIC. PAGE.

CHAPTER I.—General—Spanish Explorations—Relics—Antiquities....11-16

INDIAN HISTORY.

CHAPTER II.—General—Indian Tribes—Races—Chiefs—Miscellaneous—Reminiscences—Troubles—Wars—Treaties—Reserves—Towns—Burying Grounds—Retrospect—Destiny—White and Chief—Peace Coming—Tecumseh's War—The End....16-28

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.

CHAPTER III.—Location—Boundaries—Indian Boundaries—Counties—Second Boundary—Kekionga—Miscellany—Public Lands—Meridians and Base Lines—Surface—Vegetation—Animals—Drainage—Minerals—Inland Waters—Mississinewa—White River—Miami—Divides—Uses of Streams....28-35

EARLY HISTORY.

CHAPTER IV.—General—Settlement—First Things—Manner of Life—Building—Clearing—Lands—Furniture—Food—Cooking—Work—Clothing—Money—Amusements—Religion, etc....35-51

ORGANIZATION.

CHAPTER V.—Counties—Preliminary—County Seat—Official History—Public Bnildings—Townships—Roads, etc....51-69

RECORDS.

CHAPTER VI.—Deeds—Apprenticeship—Free Papers—Abstract of Titles—Marriages—Circuit Court—Commissioners' Board—Probate Court....69-79

REMINISCENCES. PAGE.

CHAPTER VII.—Jesse Parker—Celia Arnold—Squire Bowen—James C. Bowen—Silas Johnson—Cholera, 1849—Ira Swain—Anna Retz—W. M. Botkin—John Fisher—Jane Fisher—Temple and Priscilla Smith—E. Cammack—William Digga, Jr.—Fanny (Diggs) Hill—F. Frazier—Bear Story—Bell Making—Jere Smith—Clothing—Clearing Land—Birds and "Varmints"—Pigeon Roost—Fallen Timber, etc., etc....79-116

OLD SETTLERS.

CHAPTER VIII.—Meetings—Pioneers—Aged People 116-199

CEMETERIES.

CHAPTER IX....121-133

COLORED PEOPLE.

CHAPTER X.—Settlements—Temperance—Churches—Biography....133-141

RELIGION.

CHAPTER XI.—Baptists—Catholics—Christians—Congregationalists—Disciples—Friends—German Churches—Methodists—Presbyterians—Protestant Methodists—Universalists—United Brethren—Wesleyans—Clergymen—Spiritualists—Holiness Band—Y. M. C. A.—Biography....141-175

EDUCATION.

CHAPTER XII.—General Association—Seminary—Union Literary Institute—Normal Schools—Institutes—Teachers' Association—Funds—Schools—Statistics—Private Schools—Trustees—Music—Lectures—Sunday Schools—Libraries....175-189

TEMPERANCE. PAGE.

CHAPTER XIII.—General—Union City—Sons—Templars—Porter Lodge—S. S. V. & E. L.—Reminiscences....189-194

ANTI-SLAVERY.

CHAPTER XIV.—General—Underground Railroad—William Steele—Runaways—Stringfellow (Wilkerson Girls)—Reminiscences—Negro Slavery....194-199

AGRICULTURE.

CHAPTER XV.—General—Fruit—Horticulture—Sorghum—Fences—Ditches—Drains—Weather, Crops, etc.—Patrons of Husbandry—Fairs—Implements....199-209

SECRET SOCIETIES.

CHAPTER XVI.—General—I. O. O. F.—F. & A. M.—K. of P.—I. O. O. F....209-213

POLITICAL.

CHAPTER XVII.—Harrison Campaign—Mass Meetings—Republicanism—Sons of Liberty, etc....213-215

PERSONAL.

CHAPTER XVIII.—Officials—Attorneys—Physicians—Press....215-228

MISCELLANY.

CHAPTER XIX.—Banks—Insurance—Loan Associations—Statistics—Anecdotes—Biography....228-238

MILITARY.

CHAPTER XX.—Revolution—Indian Wars—Widows, Pensions, etc.—Militia, 1832—Mexican War—War of 1861—General Relief, Bounties, etc.—Account of Regiments, Battles, Prisons, Officers, Soldiers, Deaths, Burials, etc.—Reminiscences, Biography—Sanitary Operations, etc....238-296

PART II.

TOWNSHIP HISTORIES.

Franklin....405
Green....496
Greensfork....359
Jackson....482
Monroe....504
Nettle Creek....474
Stony Creek....465
Union City....436
Ward....414
Washington....375
Wayne....424
West River....390
White River....329
Winchester (County Seat)....297

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Winchester....306-329
White River....333-359
Greensfork....363-374
Washington....378-389
West River....393-405
Franklin....408-414
Ward....417-423
Wayne....427-436
Union City....453-465
Stony Creek....468-474
Nettle Creek....476-482
Jackson....485-495
Green....499-504
Monroe....507-512

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Aker, Hon. Andrew....306
Aker, Mrs. Andrew....306
Almonrode, Alex....345
Amburn, Samuel....471
Bales, I. N....384

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES—CONTINUED.

Barr, E. M....396
Beeson, A. C....Facing 354
Berry, J. S....Facing 370
Blair, J. S....384
Boltz, B. F....308
Botkin, W. M....396
Bolander, Lewis....346
Bowen, Squire....368
Bowen, E. H....369
Bowen, E. L....369
Bousman, C....421
Branham, S....Facing 437
Branson, Joseph B....508
Browne, Gen. Thomas M....306
Butler, E. H....Facing 215
Butts, N. T....345
Butterworth, Joseph....410
Byrum, Eli....491
Cadwallader, N....454
Canady, M. L....480
Carter, Samuel L....Facing 460
Cheney, John J....308
Chenoweth, J. T....Facing 306
Chenoweth, A. J....428
Chenoweth, Celia H....428
Clough, E. C....491
Coddington, Ezra....428
Colgrove, Gen. Silas....Facing 238
Commons, William....290
Commons, John....Facing 219
Converse, J. N....222
Coons, J. M....410
Cottom, James....309
Cox, George....346
Daly, W. A. W....385
Davis, J. S....509
Demory, W. H....347
Diggs, Mark....Between 480-1

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES—CONTINUED.

Diggs, Susannah....Between 480-1
Diggs, John W....311
Edger, Edward....312
Edger, George N....312
Engle, J. S....312
Engle, William....386
Fisher, Robert S....Between 462-3
Franks, H. P....480
Gaddis, Elisha....398
Garrett, Nathan....Facing 481
Goodrich, Charles....314
Gutheil, John B....314
Hall, Amos....349
Hamilton, R. W....386
Haynes, J. G....399
Haynes, Stephen....399
Heaston, David....348
Hill, Levi....370
Hill, John W....371
Hinshaw, Uriah....387
Hirsch, Adam....Facing 299
Hudson, J. M....Facing 214
Hunt, H. C....400
Irvin, George W....316
Jaqua, Dr. Charles....316
Jenkins, John....401
Jennings, S. J....371
Knapp, Alex. A....458
Kizer, W. D....351
Kizer, T. W....351
Lasley, Peter and wife....352
Lasley, Jacob....353
Lasley, David....352
Leavell, R. H....316
Lenox, A....459
Lewis, C. L....316
Luellen, O. F....317
McKew, Arthur....412

CONTENTS.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES—Continued. Page.

Macy, W. P. ... 510
Macy, J. W. ... 319
Macy, W. W. ... Facing 239
Markle, Dr. J. E. ... Facing 309
Marsh, A. O. ... 319
Masslich, Bentley ... Facing 465
Merryweather, William. ... 472
Miller, Judge P. S. ... 510
Miller, M. B. ... 318
Miller, D. B. ... 318
Miller, Nancy A. ... 318
Monks, William ... 353
Monks, Mrs. Catharine ... 353
Monks, Miss Mary A. ... 353
Monks, G. W. ... 317
Monks, L. J. ... Facing 216
Moorman, Jno. A. ... 510
Moorman, Jas. ... 319
Morris, D. T. ... 432
Murray, W. E. ... 354
Murray, R. V. ... 320
Osborn, I. ... 403
Osborn, C. W. ... 403
Patchell, G. W. ... Facing 462
Pomeroy, Phinehas ... 325
Puckett, Tyre T. ... 355
Reed, Nathan ... 323
Reeder, M. A. ... 323
Reeve, J. L. ... 460
Richardson, John ... 356
Rickert, George ... 494
Routh, Isaac ... 481
Seamans, H. T. ... 325
Sheppard, J. J. ... 403
Sheeley, A. ... 389
Shaw, R. C. ... 511
Shreev, Joseph ... 494
Smith, Jere ... 357
Smith, W. K. ... 461
Smith, A. J. ... 357
Stone, W. D. ... 357
Stone, Gen. A. ... 324
Stakebake, A. J. ... Facing 315
Starbuck, E. ... 462
Stevenson, Charles ... 404
Study, L. W. ... 326
Thompson, W. A. ... 327
Thornburg, J. J. ... 473
Thornburg, Job ... 473
Trine, Charles ... 495
Tucker, E. ... 172
Van Pelt, John ... 354
Vorhis, Alexander ... 423
Wallace, Mrs. F. ... 473
Ward, Thomas ... 327
Watts, I. P. ... 328
Watson, E. L. ... 328
Way, Moorman ... Facing 217
Williams, J. W. ... 465
Ward, Isaac ... 482
Worth, Daniel ... 404
Worthington, W. T. ... 464
Wright, Edward, etc. ... 354

LITHOGRAPHIC VIEWS.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

Butterworth, Joseph, Residence ... Facing 410
Coons, J. N., Residence ... Facing 405

GREEN TOWNSHIP.

Read, Sarah H. C., Residence ... Facing 497

GREENSFORK TOWNSHIP.

Hill, Levi, Residence ... Facing 359
Jennings, S. J., Residence ... Facing 371

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Byrum, Lucinda, Residence ... Facing 173
Clough, E. C., Residence ... Facing 483
Rickert, George, Residence ... Facing 173
Shrev, Emily Residence ... Facing 494
Trine, Charles, Residence ... Facing 495

MONROE TOWNSHIP.

Davis, J. S., Residence ... Facing 509
Macy, William P., Residence ... Facing 505
Shaw, R. C., Residence ... Facing 511

NETTLE CREEK TOWNSHIP.

Canady, M. L., Residence ... Facing 479
Franks, H. P., Residence ... Facing 480
Routh, Isaac, Residence ... Facing 478
Wood, Isaac, Residence ... Facing 475

STONY CREEK TOWNSHIP. Page.

Amburn, Samuel, Residence ... Facing 467
Merryweather, William, Residence ... Facing 323
Thornburg, J. J., Residence ... Facing 473
Wallace, Frances, Residence ... Facing 472

WARD TOWNSHIP.

Vorhis, Alexander, Residence ... Facing 415

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Bales, I. N., Residence ... Facing 386
Hinshaw, Uriah A., Residence ... Facing 387
Lasley, Jacob, Residence ... Facing 375
Sheeley, Abraham, Residence ... Facing 387

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

Bowen, E. H., Residence ... Facing 454
Chenoweth, Celia H., Residence ... Facing 425
Morris, D. T., Residence ... Facing 432

WEST RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Barr, E. M., Residence ... Facing 396
Botkin, W. M., Residence ... Facing 402
Haynes, J. G., Residence ... Facing 400
Jenkins, John, Residence ... Facing 401
Sheppard, J. J., Residence ... Facing 403
Stevenson, Charles M., Residence ... Facing 391

WHITE RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Almonrode, Alex., Residence ... Facing 307
Bolander, Lewis, Residence ... Facing 330
Butts, Nathan T., Residence ... Facing 352
Cox, George, Residence ... Facing 307
Demory, W. H., Residence ... Facing 296
Monks, William, Residence ... Facing 353
Smith, A. J., Residence ... Fabing 306
Van Pelt, John, Residence ... Facing 330
Wright, Mrs. Edward, Residence ... Facing 331

WINCHESTER.

Beeson, A. C., Residence ... Facing 354
Christian Church ... Facing 146
County Infirmary ... Between 296–7
County Jail ... 297
Court House ... 297
Fountain Park Cemetery (double page), view, Between 306–7
Fountain Park Cemetery (double page), plat, Between 328–9
Guthell, Charles, Residence and Tannery ... Facing 174
Hirsch, Adam, Block ... Facing 299
Jaqua, Dr. Charles, Residence ... Facing 174
Lewis, C. L., Residence ... Facing 298
Public Schools ... Facing 175
Randolph County Bank ... Facing 146
Richardson, John, Residence ... Facing 298
Stone, Gen. A., Residence (double page) ... Between 298–9
Stakbake, Andrew J., Residence ... Facing 174
Thompson, W. A., Residence ... 305
Winchester Wagon Works ... Facing 314

UNION CITY.

Cadwallader, Nathan, Residence ... Facing 454
Commons, William ... 461
Fisher, R. S. ... Between 462–3
Knapp, Alex. A. ... Between 462–3
Masslich, Bentley ... Facing 465
Reeves, J. L. ... Facing 463
Patchell, G. W. ... 462
Smith, W. K. ... 461
Stone, W. D. ... 455
Worthington, W. T. ... 464

PORTRAITS.

Aker, Hon. Andrew ... Facing 355
Aker, Mrs. Andrew ... Facing 355
Bales, I. N. and wife ... Facing 386
Barr, E. M. and wife ... Facing 396
Beeson, A. C. ... Facing 354
Berry, J. S., M. D. ... Facing 370
Blair, James S. ... Facing 369
Bolts, B. F. ... Between 214–15
Bousman C. and wife ... Facing 369
Bowen, E. L. ... Facing 368
Bowen, Squire ... Facing 368
Branham, S. and wife ... Facing 437
Branson, Joseph B. ... Facing 510
Browne, Gen. Thomas M. ... Facing 58
Butler, E. H. ... Facing 215
Carter, Samuel L. and wife ... Facing 460
Cheney, John J. ... Facing 218
Chenoweth, J. T., M. D. ... Facing 308
Chenoweth, A. J. and wife ... Facing 425
Clough, E. C. and wife ... Facing 483
Colgrove, Gen. Silas ... Facing 238
Commons, John and wife ... Facing 219
Converse, J. N. ... Facing 74
Cotton, James ... Facing 67

PORTRAITS—Continued. Page.

Daly, W. A. W. ... Facing 250
Demory, W. H. and wife ... Facing 296
Diggs, Mark ... Between 480–81
Diggs, Susannah ... Between 480–81
Digg, John W. ... Facing 328
Edger, Edward ... Facing 328
Edger, George M. ... Between 214–15
Engle, J. S. ... Facing 218
Engle, William and wife ... Facing 369
Fisher, Robert S. ... Between 462–63
Gaddis, Elisha P. and wife ... Facing 397
Garrett, Nathan ... Facing 481
Garrett, Malinda ... Facing 481
Goodrich, John B. ... Between 214–15
Hall, Amos ... Facing 251
Hamilton, Robert W. ... Facing 251
Haynes, J. G. and wife ... Facing 400
Haynes, Stephen ... Facing 397
Heaston, David ... Facing 331
Heaston, Mrs. David ... Facing 331
Hill, John W. ... Facing 251
Hirsch, Adam ... Facing 299
Hodson, J. M. ... Facing 214
Hunt, H. C. and wife ... Facing 397
Irvin, George W and wife ... Facing 329
Jenkins, John and wife ... Facing 401
Knapp, Alex. A. ... Between 462–63
Kizer, W. D. ... Between 214–15
Kizer, T. W. ... Facing 328
Lasley, Peter and wife ... Facing 329
Lasley, David ... Facing 368
Leavell, R. A. ... Facing 250
Lenox, A. ... Facing 369
Luellen, Oliver F. ... Between 214–15
McKew, Arthur ... Facing 42
Macy, J. W. ... Between 214–15
Macy, W. W. and wife ... Facing 239
Markle, Dr. J. E. ... Facing 309
Marsh, A. O. ... Facing 250
Masslich, Bentley and wife ... Facing 465
Miller, Judge P. S. ... 510
Miller, M. B. ... Facing 218
Miller, D. B. ... Facing 355
Miller, Mrs. Nancy A. ... Facing 355
Monks, G. W. ... Between 214–15
Monks, William (deceased) ... Facing 353
Monks, Mrs. Catharine A. ... Facing 353
Monks, Miss Mary A. ... Facing 353
Monks, L. J. ... Facing 216
Moorman, John A. ... Facing 510
Moorman, James ... Facing 35
Murray, W. E. ... Between 214–15
Murray, R. V. ... Facing 250
Neff, H. H. ... 322
Neff, J. L. ... 322
Patchell, George W. ... 462
Pomeroy, Phinehas ... Facing 355
Puckett, Tyre T. and wife ... Facing 329
Reed, Nathan ... Facing 328
Reeder, Martin A. ... Facing 328
Reeve, Dr. J. L. and wife ... Facing 463
Semans, H. T. ... Between 214–15
Sheppard, J. J. and wife ... Facing 403
Shreev, Joseph ... Facing 494
Shreev, Mrs. Emily ... Facing 494
Smith, Jere ... Facing 436
Stakebake, A. J. ... Facing 315
Stevenson, C. M. and wife ... Facing 391
Stone, Gen. A. and wife ... Between 82–83
Stone, W. D. and wife ... Facing 455
Study, L. W. ... Facing 218
Thompson, W. A. ... Facing 314
Thornburg, J. J. and wife ... Facing 473
Thornburg, Job ... 510
Trine, Charles and wife ... Facing 495
Tucker, E. ... Facing 172
Vorhis, Alex. and wife ... Facing 415
Wallace, Mrs. Francis ... Facing 472
Ward, Thomas ... Facing 51
Way, Moorman ... Facing 217
Watts, Isaiah P. ... Between 214–15
Watson, E. L. ... Facing 218
Wood, Isaac and wife ... Facing 475
Worth, Daniel ... Facing 368
Worthington, W. T. and wife ... Facing 464
Wright, Edward ... Facing 331
Wright, Mrs. Edward ... Facing 331

MAPS.

Franklin Township ... Facing 404
Jackson Township ... Facing 482
Green Township ... Facing 496
Greensfork Township ... Facing 358
Monroe Township ... Facing 504
Nettle Creek Township ... Facing 474
Randolph County (outline map) ... Page 9
Story Creek Township ... Facing 466
Ward Township ... Facing 414
Washington Township ... Facing 374
Wayne Township ... Facing 424
West River ... Facing 390
White River Township ... Between 330–31
Winchester
Union City (Ind.) ... Facing 433

INDEX.

PAGE.

Abolitionists..... 82, 150, 168, 169, 173, 194, 195, 222
Abshire, Albert R..... 384
Abshire, James..... 378, 379
Abstract of Titles..... 71
Acona..... 12
Adamson, William..... 395
Adcock, Travis..... 55, 379
Addington, Elihu..... 396
Addington, Mrs. Jesse..... 109
Addington, Mr. Jesse..... 408
Addington, Thomas, Sr..... 333
Addington, Benjamin..... 410
Addington, Rev. Thomas..... 98, 110, 163, 164, 289, 290
Addington, Thomas L..... 421
Additions..... 296, 297
Administration..... 77
Adventures..... 235
Advice..... 234
Afflictions..... 105
Agent, County..... 53, 75, 76
Ages..... 233
Agriculture..... 199, 209
Aker, Andrew..... 109, 396
Aker Family..... 341
Alexander Cemetery..... 121
Alexander, Clement F..... 369
Alexander, W. L..... 453
Alexander, Isaac..... 136
Alexander, James..... 427
Alexander, Thornton..... 73, 136, 190
Algonquins..... 16
Alliance..... 190, 191
Allensville..... 484
Allen County..... 29, 235
Alligators..... 241
Almonrode, Alexander..... 345, 421
Amusements..... 48, 49, 449
Ancestral Account..... 342, 343
Anderson, Branson..... 108, 427
Anderson, E. L..... 453
Anderson, Harrison..... 369
Anderson, John..... 427
Andersonville..... 279, 280, 291, 311, 379
Anecdotes..... 114, 115, 233, 236
Animals..... 32, 111
Antioch..... 159
Antiquities..... 14, 50, 84, 999
Anti-Slavery..... 82, 97, 161, 165, 169, 171, 194-99, 214, 222, 223, 292, 338, 391, 393.
Apprentice..... 70, 71, 76, 77, 345
Arba..... 121, 147, 183, 361, 362
Area..... 233
Armstrong, Archibald..... 369
Armstrong, James D..... 369
Army Life..... 289, 293
Arnold, Celia..... 80
Arnold, Elijah..... 57, 101, 391
Arnold, Elizabeth..... 363
Arnold, Nathan..... 363
Arrest..... 293, 324
Article Thirteenth..... 195, 198, 215
Assembly..... 52, 216
Associate Judges..... 57, 216
Associations..... 162, 176, 181, 229, 230
Atlanta Campaign..... 250, 290
Atlixco..... 242
Attorneys..... 216, 218-21, 307, 310, 319, 326, 328
Auditors..... 217
Away from Slavery..... 115, 116
Bailey, E. T..... 103, 221, 410
Bailey, William..... 508
Bakery, ——..... 214
Baldwin, Cyrus H..... 395
Baldwin, Nercus B..... 384
Bales, Isaac N..... 384
Bales, James A..... 384
Bales, Martha J..... 384
Ball of Fire..... 103
Ball, Uriah..... 89, 90, 164
Banks..... 228, 229, 300, 302
Banta, David..... 57
Baptists..... 106, 141, 142, 151
Barger, Philip..... 113, 114, 501
Barnes, James..... 378, 385
Barnes, Adolphus..... 454
Barnes, Stephen..... 363
Barnes, William..... 379
Barr, Edward M..... 396
Bartholomew, Rev. C. G..... 164, 288
Bartonia, ——..... 122, 153, 426
Barton, Leven..... 427
Barrax, W..... 479
Barge, P..... 499
Base Lines..... 30
Bates, Edward..... 308
Bates, Jesse J..... 308
Bates, President S. D..... 185
Battalion, Randolph..... 275

PAGE.

Batteries..... 275
Battles..... 277, 278
Baxter, Joseph..... 379
Bear Story..... 86, 87, 92, 100, 343
Beard, Elkanah..... 164, 165
Beard, Irena..... 164, 165
Beard, Levi..... 385
Beard, Paul, Sr..... 221
Beard, Paul, Jr..... 85, 379, 385
Beard, Mrs. Paul, Jr..... 85
Beary, John..... 421
Bedstead..... 84
Bee Line Railroad..... 451
Bee Culture..... 201, 382
Beeson, A. C..... 290
Beeson, Milton H..... 395
Bell-Making..... 87, 381, 391
Bennett, Jacob..... 427
Benson, Michael..... 137
Benson, William..... 136
Bethel Chapel..... 161
Bethphage..... 144
Berkheim, M. W..... 491
Berlin..... 497
Beverly, Dr. J. E..... 39, 190, 222
Bill of Sale..... 69, 70
Biography..... 136-140, 163-175, 236-237, 289-293, 306-329, 333-359, 363-374, 378-389, 393-468, 476, 485, 507
Birney, James G..... 93
Births, Early..... 38
Black Bird..... 22
Black Hawk..... 20
Black Hoof..... 17
Blacksmiths..... 300
Black Swamp..... 103
Black Wolf..... 16
Blair, Dr. J. S..... 384
Bloomingsport..... 84, 153, 377
Blue Jacket..... 16, 17
Blue Ridge..... 105
Bly, Jeremiah..... 395
Boating..... 35, 94-96, 104, 109, 112, 113, 306
Bolander, Lewis..... 346
Boltz, Benjamin F..... 308
Bond, Benjamin..... 379-380
Bond Family..... 380
Bond, John H..... 47, 165, 180, 198
Bond, Pelatiah..... 96, 97
Bonds, The..... 379, 380
Bond, Joseph..... 468
Bond, Zimri..... 468
Bonnets..... 48
Boots..... 102
Boots and Shoes..... 299
Boots, Nancy A..... 318
Bookout, John..... 476
Botkin, Hugh..... 83, 393
Botkin, J. A..... 395, 396
Botkin, John W..... 307, 308
Botkin, Thomas W..... 395
Botkin, William M..... 83, 393, 396, 397
Botkin, William T..... 396
Botkin, S. T..... 508
Boundaries..... 28, 29, 52, 331, 359, 376, 390, 391
Bounty..... 75, 247
Bowen, Ephraim, Sr..... 36, 38, 81, 363
Bowen, Ephraim L..... 369
Bowen, James C..... 38, 81, 363
Bowen, James D..... 369
Bowen, Squire..... 36, 38, 80, 363-369
Bowers, Henry Willard..... 308
Bowers, A. J. S..... 454
Bousman, George W..... 346
Bousman, Cyrus..... 421
Boyd, Margaret..... 22
Boys Sliding..... 85
Boy Taken Aback..... 176
Braddocks' Defeat..... 17
Brandon, Rev. Thomas A..... 166
Brandriff, Rev. R..... 333
Branson, Isaac..... 83, 97, 98
Branson, Aunt Patsy..... 97, 98
Branson, Joseph B..... 508
Breeches..... 47
Brickley, Simeon..... 333
Brick..... 109
Brickmaking..... 108, 320
Bridges..... 61, 63, 64, 94
Bright, Horn..... 18
Broderick, W..... 507
Brown, Edward J..... 385
Brown, Ethan A..... 346
Brown, Joseph..... 491
Brown, Thomas..... 341
Brown, Mrs. Joseph W..... 99
Browne, Gen. Thomas M..... 124, 269, 270, 305, 305
Browne, Kent..... 135, 137
Bryant..... 24

PAGE.

"Buck"..... 93
Buckongaheias..... 21
Buckskin..... 47
Buena Vista..... 18, 22, 147, 148, 158, 204, 211, 221, 394
Buffum, Arnold..... 194
Buggies..... 102, 234
Building and Loan Associations..... 230
Buildings..... 43, 230
Bullard, Dr..... 296
Bunch's (Ishmael) Sale..... 77
Burden, Lewis, Sr..... 137
Burgess, Rev Prof..... 288
Burial of Soldiers..... 286, 287
Buried Money..... 103
Burket, Henry..... 428
Burning at Stake..... 23
Burscar, William Tell..... 396
Burying Grounds..... 14, 26, 121-132
Business..... 298-300, 302-305, 332, 343, 362, 377, 380, 443, 444
Butler, Prof. E. H..... 13
Butler, John H..... 396
Butts, Baxter Bill..... 166, 192
Butts, Rev. Nathan T..... 166, 192, 345, 346
Butts, Thomas..... 166
Butterworth, James..... 343
Butterworth, Joseph..... 410
Butler, James..... 468
Byrum, Eli..... 491
Burroughs, J..... 476, 479
Burroughs, W..... 479
Butcher, John..... 454
Cabin Creek..... 15, 34, 92, 132, 135, 136
Cabinet Shop..... 109, 299
Cabins..... 43, 101, 104
Cadwallader, Abner..... 364
Cadwallader, Nathan..... 106, 177, 454
Cadwallader, Thomas..... 363, 364
Cain's Saloon..... 191
Cammack, Elihu..... 38, 85, 428
Cammack, John..... 364
Campbell, Lieut..... 26
Campbell, William M..... 364
Campbell Family..... 123
Campbeld, Aaron G..... 310
Camp Life..... 367
Camp Meetings..... 100, 104, 152, 153, 155
Camps..... 43, 99
Canada, Jesse..... 310, 311
Canada, Silas A..... 310
Canada, W. W..... 310
Canady, Jonathan..... 476, 477
Canady, M. L..... 476, 480
Candles..... 43
Canfield, A..... 471
Captain Johnny..... 17
Captain Logan..... 17, 18
Captain Mann..... 18
Captain Pipe..... 21
Captain White Eyes..... 21
Carding Machines..... 67, 299
Carlisle..... 407
Carpets..... 85
Carriage Making..... 445
Carter, E. B..... 341
Carter, Henry..... 342
Carter, L. D..... 310, 311
Carter, W. B..... 508
Carter, J. D..... 309, 310
Carter, Mary E..... 454
Cases in Court..... 73, 74
Catey, John B..... 397
Catey, Jonathan..... 397
Catholic Cemetery..... 122
Catholic Churches..... 142
Cattle..... 200, 201
Cavalry, Seventh Indiana..... 306, 307
Caylor, S..... 501
Cedar..... 122, 147
Celebrations..... 134
Cemeteries..... 121-132
Centennial..... 173
Chamness, William..... 393
Chamness, M. H..... 480
Chapman, Ferd. B..... 308
Charles, Daniel..... 393
Charles, John..... 393
Chavous, Hillry..... 137
Cheesman, Davidson..... 347
Cheney, J. J..... 308
Chenoweth, N. T..... 222, 471
Chenoweth, William T..... 364
Chenoweth, A. J..... 428
Cherry Grove..... 122, 143
Cherry Valley..... 173
Chickamauga..... 289, 290
Child Lost..... 91
Cholera..... 82, 87, 99, 103, 338
Chopping Wood..... 83

PAGE.

Christian Churches.....142-144, 163, 166
Christmas.....23, 96
Churches.....135-175, 331, 360, 361, 377
Circuit Court.....55,72, 73
Circuit Judges.....216
City Belle.....245, 246
Clark, James.....91, 115
Clark, James W.....100, 364
Clark, John W.....501
Clark, Reuben.....364
Clark, S. S.....501
Class Instruction.....179
Clark, Thomas H.....421
Clark, R. J.....454
Clay, Henry.....338
Clayton, Abigail.....342
Clayton, James.....333
Clayton, James J.....347
Clayton, John M.....347
Clayton, Stephen.....333
Clearing.....45, 58, 80, 88, 95, 101
Cleny, Curtis.....380
Clergymen.....143, 161, 162, 163-175
Clerks, County.....57, 217
Clevenger, John.....476, 480
Clevinger, Thomas.....333, 334
Clevinger, William.....100
Clevinger, Benjamin.....417
Cline, William.....127, 239, 477
Clothing.....47, 48, 88
Clough, E.....485, 491
Coats Family.....334, 335
Coats, Gilbert.....347
Coats & Pants.....84
Coddington, Ezra R.....429
Coddington Genealogy.....428
Coffin, Levi.....198
Coffin, Milton.....392
Coggeshall, Dr. William R.....385
Colclazer, Thomas.....454
Colgrove, Silas.....290
Collett, J. M.....421
Collier, Rev. J. L.....184, 185
Colored People.....133—141, 173, 290, 292, 373, 374
Commandment Eleventh.....99
Commissary General.....293
Commissioners, Drainage.....217
Commissioners, County 54, 55, 56, 57, 74-76, 216-217, 333, 334, 366, 385, 393
Common Pleas Judges.....216
Common Pleas Court.....216
Commons, Mrs. Clara.....93, 190, 191
Commons, Dr. William.....290, 291
Community.....338
Complaint.....198
Congregationalists.....144
Congressmen.....215
Conklyn, Jacob.....429
Conklyn, Washington.....429
Conner, David.....20, 22, 23, 29, 54, 95, 96, 111
Conner, Leander E.....385
Connor, John.....45, 51, 54, 111, 235, 342
Conner, William.....54
Connor, John.....509
Constitutional Convention.....216
Contractors.....299, 310, 323, 324
Converse, Dr. Joel N.....222
Conway, Charles.....54, 57, 69, 337
Conyers, Moses E.....397
Cooking.....45, 46
Cook Stoves.....42, 102, 112
Cook, Victor.....370
Coon Skins.....20
Coons, J. M.....410
Cooper, A. D.....454
Coraling Chickens.....295
Cordwood.....97
Covp, Jacob.....114
Corner Stone.....58
Cornstalk.....16, 17, 21, 24, 81, 91
Coroners.....217
Cotman, Abraham.....137
Cottom, John H.....308, 309
Cottom, James S.....309
Coulter, Rev. William.....166
Counterfeiters.....57, 109, 391
County Bounty.....246, 247
County Clerks.....57, 217
Counties.....23, 29, 36, 52
County, Randolph.....23, 29
County Relief.....246
County Seat.....58
County Seminary.....177-179
Course of Study.....186
Court, Circuit.....56, 57, 73
Court House.....57, 58, 76, 334, 366
Courts.....234
Cow.....109
Court, Probate.....76
Cowbells.....391
Cox, Andrew.....347
Cox, Benjamin.....54, 335, 347
Cox, Elisha.....397
Cox, George.....346, 347
Cox, Simon.....95
Cox, William.....98, 394
Cox, William Riley.....347
Cradles.....83
Cranmer, Charles.....385
Cranor, Col. Jonathan.....309
Crawford, Steamer.....295
Criminals.....93
Cripple.....106, 309
Crist, Charles.....103, 370
Cropper, Allen S.....397
Cropper, Edward T.....397
Cropper, David A.....397
Cropper, Rev. Bela W.....167
Crops.....204, 205
Crossing, Ohio.....80

PAGE.

Crossings.....34
Crouse, I.....477
Crouse, Jacob.....477
Cruelty, Circumvented.....296
Crusade, Womens'.....190
Cumberland Gap.....295
Current, A.....501
"Cutent be get".....177
Dakotah Indians.....13
Daly, George W.....55, 380, 381
Daly, William A. W.....291, 381, 385, 386
Darke County History.....22, 23
Dates.....330
Daugherty, Jacob.....501
Davenport, D. S.....429
Davis, Alexander.....196
Davis, J. S.....509
Davis, Squire.....347
Davisson, Elze L.....397, 398
Dawes, Case.....196
Dayton & Union Railroad.....451
Deadening.....44
Dean, P. H.....312, 313
Dearborn County.....28
Death of Jesse Parker.....367
Death of Soldiers.....283-286
Death Rate.....262, 280
Debolt, George.....74
Debolt Family.....486, 491
De-coo-dah.....13
Decoration Day.....288
Deeds.....69
Deer Hunters.....48, 87, 92, 97, 98, 99, 102, 111, 365
Deerfield.....51, 66, 111, 153, 159, 210-212
Deerfield Road.....63
Deerskins.....91
Delawares.....21
Democratic Row.....378
Democrats.....190, 213, 214, 215
Demory, John.....137, 347
Demory, William H.....135, 137, 138, 347
Denny, James M.....698
Dentists.....221, 445
Description.....375
De Soto.....16
Destiny.....26
Detroit.....18
Dick, P. K.....471
Devor, T.....486, 491
Devoss, Joseph C.....501
Diet.....79
Dick Davis.....209
Diggs, Armsbee.....55, 311
Diggs, Calvin W.....278, 311
Diggs, Hannah.....342
Diggs, John W.....311
Diggs, Littleberry.....335
Diggs, Mark.....477
Diggs, M. W.....509
Diggs, William.....55, 85, 86, 347
Diggs, John.....469
Diggses.....86
Dill, Cynthia A.....501
Dirt-box Fire.....81, 85, 363
Discharge.....239
Disciples.....144-146, 174, 175
Discipline, School.....106, 177
Distances.....232
Ditches.....203
Divides.....34
Dixon, Silas.....113
Dixon, Benjamin.....429
Doctor Duck.....108, 111
Dodgers.....45
Dog Licking Meal.....95
Doty, W.....417
Down the Dam.....293
Downing, Samuel.....429
Drainage.....32
Driver Joab.....96
Droving.....94
Drug Stores.....299
Drunkenness.....193
Drunken Brawl.....135
Dunkards.....151
Dunkard Cemetery.....123
Dunkirk.....123, 148, 331
Durham Stock.....200
Dutch Reformed.....151, 152
Eagle.....226, 227
Early Business.....54, 440
Early Births.....88
Early History.....35-51, 298-301, 415, 437
Earthquake.....90, 505
Eastern Army.....253, 254, 292
Edger, Edward, Sr.....236
Edger, Joseph.....408, 410
Edger, Edward, Jr.....17, 111, 112, 312
Edger, George N.....312-313
Edgewood.....183
Education.....175-189
Edwards, Eli.....348
Edwards Family.....335
Edwards, George W.....398
Edwards, James.....398
Edwards, Jonathan.....55
Edwards, Henry.....335
Egg Smashing.....324
Eisenhour, A.....455
Election.....52, 53
Electric Light Company.....445
Electoral Vote.....307
Elk Tribe.....13
Elzroths.....335
Elyria.....197
Embankments.....13-15
Emery, Samuel.....109, 417
Emigration.....86, 89, 90, 92, 100, 107, 115, 364
Emmettsville.....160, 497
End, The.....27

PAGE.

Engineering.....275, 326
Engle, Daniel H.....386
Engle, Edmund.....312
Engle, Isrom H.....113, 167
Engle, J. S.....312
Engle, Josiah.....398
Engle, William.....386
Entry, First.....97
Entries.....37, 38, 42, 47, 94, 97, 104, 330, 331, 332, 339, 340, 360, 361, 375, 376, 377, 390-392, 407, 417, 425, 467, 475, 483, 496, 505
Episode.....214
Estates.....31-32, 78-79
Evangelical Association.....151
Evans, C. S.....223
Evans, Minerva.....501
Examination.....179
Expenditures.....182
Expense.....231
Explosion.....343
Express Office.....445
Factory, Handle.....304
Factory, Wagon.....304, 305
Factory, Woolen.....304, 399
Fairs.....206-209
Fairview.....123, 143, 153, 210, 211, 498
Faith Cure.....164, 165
Fallen Timber.....83, 89, 98, 101, 391, 392, 394, 475
Farmland.....143, 148, 153, 210-212
Farmland (north of).....128, 506
Farquhar, Isaac and William T.....398
Farson, Rev. J. T.....167
Fast Horses.....201
Fashion.....48
Fawn.....93
Fencing.....203
Fennimore, Elizabeth.....398
Ferguson, Dr. David.....223
Ferris, Charles E.....313
Fidler, Nathan.....348
Fisher, S. G.....455
Fields, Obadiah.....348
Fields, Perry.....110, 418
Finances.....231
First Newspaper.....320
First Meeting.....81
First Settlement.....329, 359, 367
First Things.....40, 43, 298, 391, 392, 439
Fish.....46
Fisher, Jacob.....335
Fisher, Jane.....84
Fisher, John.....37, 83, 84, 335, 336, 455
Fishing.....110, 112
Fitzgerald, William E.....126, 238, 239
Fitzmaurice, William.....313
Flat Boating.....35, 94, 96, 104, 109, 112, 113, 306
Flax Mill.....446
Fleming.....20, 21, 91, 96
Flemingsburg.....475
Flood and Field.....235
Flood, F. V.....509
Flouring Mill.....(Mills) 303
Food.....45, 46
Ford, Dr. R.....421
Ford, John.....499, 502
Ford, James H.....501
Ford, George.....501
Foreman Puzzled.....307
Fort, George.....24
Fortieth Ohio.....309, 275, 276
Fort Loudoun.....24
Fort Sumter.....290
Fort Wayne.....17, 18, 29, 68, 80
Foster, H. S.....455
Foundry.....445
Fountain Park.....123, 124
Fouse, Enos D.....348
Frank, J. L.....455
Franks, H. P.....480
Franklin Township.....14, 15, 61, 76, 405
Frazee, John.....348
Fraziers.....381, 391
Frazier, Francis.....429
Freedom.....138, 139
Freemasons.....212
Free Labor.....196
Free Papers.....71
Free Soilism.....214
French Explorers.....16
French, John R.....411
Friend Methodists.....149, 172
Friends.....91, 146-150
Friends, Anti-Slavery.....150, 194
"From Under Your Thumb".....153
Fruit.....91, 201, 371
Fudge David.....313
Fudge Jacob.....313
Fulghum, Frederic.....364, 365, 370
Fulk, Samuel L.....480
Fun Alive.....100
Funds.....181, 182, 281
Funeral Rites.....24, 96
Furniture.....45, 79
Gaddis, Elisha P.....398, 399
Gaffey, Michael C.....314, 315
Gaines, Alden L.....398
Gard, Hugh.....470
Garfield, James A.....309
Garnet, Rev. H. H.....173
Garretts, The.....381
Garrett, Elisha.....343
Garrett, Miss Lillian.....93
Gazette.....226
Gegner, George L.....411
Genealogical Data.....50
Gen. Jackson.....19
Gen. St. Clair.....19
Geology.....33
Georgia, Through.....267
German Churches.....151, 152
German Baptists.....151

PAGE.

Gess, Joseph ... 63
Gist, Jefferson ... 455
Georgetown ... 468
Gettysburg ... 292
Gilbert, Gen ... 296
Giffe, Prof. William T ... 188
Gilead ... 124, 145
Gill, John H ... 315
Gittinger, Jacob ... 486, 492
Gittinger, B. F ... 486
Gittinger, John ... 492
Gingerbread ... 102, 103
Ginger Pop ... 99
Girl Apprentice ... 77
Gittinger, Paul ... 430
Gleanings ... 73
Glendale, Steamer ... 295
Gobbled Up ... 289
Godfroy, Chief ... 16, 17, 18, 25, 235
Godwin, N. & T ... 500
Going to Mill ... 81, 83, 93, 96, 104
Going Security ... 300
Goodrich Family ... 313, 314
Goodrich, Edmund B ... 218, 313
Goodrich, Carey S ... 219
Goodrich, John B ... 314
Goodrich, John D ... 313, 314
Good, Rudolph ... 348
Good Templars ... 193
Graduates ... 187
Grahs, G ... 455
Grain Dealers ... 299
Grand Army Republic ... 213, 288, 289, 383
Grand Council ... 192
Grangers ... 205, 206
Gravel Banks ... 14, 15
Graves, B. F ... 430
Gray, Absalom ... 336
Gray, Bayard S ... 219
Gray, Pierré ... 219
Gray, Isaac P ... 219
Gray, Nathan ... 509
Gray, Simon ... 336
Gray, Jesse ... 20, 21, 418
Gregory, George ... 456
Green, Hillery ... 386
Green, Johnny ... 17, 27, 88
Green, Jonathan ... 500
Green, Thomas ... 502
Green ... 15, 60, 75, 113, 114, 183, 496
Greenbackism ... 214
Greene, Levi ... 348
Greenman, Rev. Almon ... 167
Greensfork ... 59, 359, 374
Green's Fork ... 375
Greenville Settlement ... 133
Greenville Treaty ... 17, 25
Grierson Raid ... 269
Grocers ... 446
Gordon, O. C ... 455
Griffin, Orpha ... 365
Griffis Cemetery ... 124
Griffis, James ... 430
Grist Mills ... 298, 299, 303, 446
Grubbs, Rev. John ... 167
Gulf Squadron ... 290
Gullett, Ezekiel ... 430
Gullett, Samuel ... 431
Gutheil, Charles ... 314
Gwynn, Oliver P ... 398
Hagerman, Rev. R. S ... 349
Hall, Amos ... 349
Halliday, E. F ... 509
Halls ... 450
Hammer, A ... 507
Hamilton, Capt. Robert W ... 386
Hams ... 242
Hand Mills ... 83, 95
Handschy, H ... 492
Hanscomb & Bro ... 480
Harbour, Rev. Elijah ... 167
Harbour, D. C ... 509
Hard Cider ... 213
Hard Times ... 80
Hardware ... 299
Hardy, C. S ... 456
Harker, D. S ... 418, 422
Harlan S ... 342
Harlan, J. V. L ... 431
Harmar, Gen ... 18, 19, 25
Harness Making ... 306, 324
Harris, W ... 456
Harris, Aaron ... 502
Harris, David T ... 400
Harris, Emily Jane ... 343
Harris, Henry E ... 399–400
Harris, Jesse ... 336
Harris, Stephen ... 336
Harrison, Campaign ... 213, 214
Harrison, James M ... 370
Harrison, Gen. W. H ... 19, 24, 213, 214
Harrison's Treaty ... 24
Harrison, Thomas ... 502
Harrison, Thomas ... 411
Harrisville ... 142
Harshman, E. J ... 456
Hart, James H ... 370
Hartman, Solomon ... 531
Hartman, Leander ... 492
Hartman, John ... 431
Hartman Family ... 487
Hawkins, Hawkins ... 370
Hawkins, Joseph ... 16, 17, 20, 26, 48, 108
Hawkins' Station ... 378
Hawkins, William ... 350
Haworth, Eli ... 350
Hayesville ... 427
Haynes, Stephen ... 394, 399
Haynes, Jesse G ... 399
Haynes, Matilda ... 399

PAGE.

Haynes, Willard ... 400
Heaston, Abram ... 343
Heaston, David ... 348
Heaston, Catharine ... 348, 349
Heaston, Lewis L ... 349
Heat Fender Company ... 447
Hedrick, Simon ... 457
Heikes, J. E ... 471
Heiner, Dr. John ... 223
Helms, George W ... 315
Helpers Work ... 174
Helpless ... 105
Hinchman, H ... 509
"Herald" ... 226
Hewitt, Joseph ... 469, 507
Hewitt, William ... 469
Hiatt, Adam R ... 370
Hiatt, Christopher ... 411
Hiatt, Amos ... 350
Hiatt, Eli ... 507
Hiatt, Elwood ... 349
Hiatt, Enos R ... 316
Hiatt, George ... 349
Hiatt, Jehu ... 223
Hiatt, Jonathan ... 336
Hiatt, Jonathan S ... 315, 316, 336
Hiatt, Milton R ... 411
Hidden Well ... 15
Hidden Money ... 103
Hides ... 82
Hill, Aaron ... 115, 365
Hill, Benoni ... 431
Hill, Daniel ... 167, 168
Hill, Fanny ... 38, 86, 431
Hill, Henry ... 431
Hill, John W ... 371
Hill, Levi ... 370
Hill, Mathew ... 431
Hill, Samuel G ... 372
Hill, William ... 115, 365
Hinchy, Joseph ... 112
Hindsley, H ... 492
Hinkle, H ... 487
Hinkle, Squire ... 492
Hinshaw, Amos A ... 387
Hinshaw, Arminius ... 387
Hinshaw, Edmund ... 350
Hinshaw, Elkanah ... 387
Hinshaw, Elwood ... 387
Hinshaw, Elza ... 387
Hinshaw, Jacob A ... 381
Hinshaw, Jacob B ... 387
Hinshaw, Jesse ... 350
Hinshaw, John ... 387
Hinshaw, Job ... 350
Hinshaw, Nancy ... 381
Hinshaw, Silas ... 387
Hinshaw, Uriah B ... 387
Hirsch, Joseph C ... 315
History, Allen County ... 18
History, Delaware County ... 21
History, Early ... 35–51, 298–
History, Township ... 297–
Hobbick, Lewis ... 350
Hoffman, Daniel E ... 315
Hogs, Wild ... 46, 98, 100, 101, 363, 351, 352
Hoke, A ... 457
Hoke, John ... 112, 411, 487
Hoke, S ... 457
Holiness Band ... 162
Holland, Sylvester ... 141
Hollinger, C ... 431
Holman, Rev. William ... 38
Holowell, George W ... 411
Holowell, Hale ... 411
Homespun ... 91
Homesteads ... 30
Hoofland, Alpheus ... 400
Hook, Bros ... 457
Hoover Cemetery ... 124
Hoover, Isaac ... 493
Hoover, Martin ... 400
Hoover, Peter, Sr. and Jr ... 110, 431
Hope of Glory ... 167
Hopewell ... 125, 159
Horn, Henry W ... 22, 372
Horn, Mrs. H. W ... 22
Horn, Henry D ... 412
Horn, Jeremiah ... 365
Horse Killing ... 87, 102
Horse Strayed ... 104
Horticulture ... 201–202
Hose Company ... 447
Hospitals ... 294
Hotels ... 300, 316, 332, 244, 447
Hough, Thomas ... 372
Hound ... 81, 95
Houses ... 44
Howard, J. S ... 493
Howe, Joel ... 175
Howell, William H ... 400
Hubbard, Thomas ... 113
Hubbard, T ... 507
Huffman, Henry D ... 336
Huffman, Christian ... 349
Hull, Gen ... 18, 103
Hull, Joseph B ... 349
Hull, Matthew R ... 190
Hunts ... 391
Hunt, Miles ... 478
Hunt, Rev. William ... 149, 168, 194, 361, 395
Hunt, Cornelius A ... 350
Hunt, Barnabas ... 336
Hunt, Hon. Miles ... 391
Hunt, William S ... 168
Hunnicutt, Daniel ... 394
Hunnicutt, John T ... 394, 400
Hunt's Schoolhouse ... 153
Huntsville ... 125, 141, 183, 212, 392
Hunt, Jesse ... 400

PAGE.

Hunt, Henry C ... 400
Hupp, S ... 472
Hurricane (Fallen Timber) ... 98
Hurst, William Y ... 350
Hutton, A ... 431
Ice, Baptism ... 175
"I caught mineself" ... 67
"I cotch him" ... 98
Implements ... 46, 47, 102, 199, 209
Incidents ... 197, 287, 289–293
Indentures ... 76
Independent Temperance ... 193
Indiana ... 35, 234
Indian Burying Ground ... 26
Indian Chiefs ... 16–22
Indian Christmas ... 23, 25, 96
Indian Council ... 24
Indian Guide ... 285
Indian History ... 16–28
Indian Jim ... 21, 82, 182
Indian Murder Trials ... 67
Indian Poetry ... 22
Indian Races ... 16
Indian Reserves ... 25
Indian Towns ... 25
Indian Traders (D. Conner, etc.) ... 22, 24, 29
Indian Trails ... 24, 63, 94
Indian Treaties ... 24
Indian Tribes ... 16, 90
Indian Troubles ... 22, 91, 95
Indian Villages ... 18
Indian Wars ... 24, 29, 51, 289
Indians, 16–28, 80, 81, 85, 90, 91, 92, 93, 96, 103, 108, 136, 334, 337
I. B. & W. R. R ... 452
Indictments ... 73
Infirmary, County ... 59
Inland Waters ... 33
Institute, Union Literary ... 133, 165, 171, 172, 173
Institutes ... 181
Insurance ... 229, 230
Interest ... 109
Inventories ... 77, 78, 79
I. O. O. F ... 209–212
I. O. O. R ... 213
Iron Bridges ... 64
Iron Brigade ... 292
Iroquois ... 16
Irvin George ... 316
Irvin Robert ... 350
Irvin Sylv. O ... 316
Jackson, Emsley ... 372
Jackson, Joseph R ... 457
Jackson, James M ... 372
Jackson, John W ... 372
Jackson, Samuel ... 394
Jackson, William ... 26
Jackson Township ... 60, 75, 482
Jaqua & Co ... 457
Jail ... 58, 59, 73
Janes, Elizabeth ... 409
Janes, W. M ... 412
Jaraegan, John W ... 350
Jarrett, George W ... 401
Jay County History ... 20, 23, 29
Jenkins, John ... 50, 401
Jenkins, Mrs. Frances C. S ... 401
Jennings, Samuel ... 381
Jennings, Samuel J ... 371
Jericho ... 125, 149
Jogs ... 31
Johnny Cake ... 97
Johnny Green ... 16, 17, 27
Johnson, Antony ... 478
Johnson, Daniel ... 478
Johnson, L. W ... 478
Johnson, Jacob ... 487
Johnsons ... 125, 377
Johnson, George ... 336
Johnson, Isaac V. D. R ... 387
Johnson, Jacob ... 108
Johnson, John ... 109, 381
Johnson, Joshua M ... 381, 382
Johnson, Jesse ... 55, 82, 381
Johnson, Joshua ... 350
Johnson, Levi ... 401
Johnson, Ruth M ... 382
Johnson, Peyton ... 394
Johnson, Silas ... 82, 382
Johnson, Thomas ... 336
Johnson, William ... 382, 387
Johnson, Wesley ... 493
Johnny Appleseed ... 201
Jolly Boatmen ... 35
Jones, Endsley ... 197, 336
Jones, Lydia ... 38, 336, 337
Jones, Hiram B ... 350
Jones, Joshua G ... 401
Jones, Thomas ... 457
Jones, J. J ... 480
John, C ... 509
Jordan, Robert ... 372
Journal ... 226
Joy in Sorrow ... 105
Judges ... 216
Julian, Hon. George W ... 134
Julian, Mrs. Rebecca ... 236
Jurors ... 39, 40, 45
Justices ... 217, 218, 372
Kabel, Nicholas ... 351
Kabel, Peter ... 351
Kabel, Philip ... 67, 73–74, 351
Kanawha, Battle ... 16, 17, 24
Kaylor, Josiah ... 431
Kekionga ... 16, 25, 29
Kelly, James ... 114
Kern, William ... 352
Kemp, Isaiah W ... 337
Kemp, Joseph S ... 316
Kemp, Nathaniel ... 337

PAGE.

Kemp, Robert N. 488
Keener, James M. 510
Kennedy, William 387
Kennedy, Nancy Thorpe 387
Kennedy, P. G. 458
Kennedy, C. S. 458
Kennon, Thomas S. 201, 432
Kennon, William 432
Kerr, W. 458
Kesler, Samuel 372
Kever, George 401
Keys, John 352
Keys, Josephus 351–352
Keys, Lost 118
Key, John 101, 422
Key, Andrew 155
Killbuck 21, 23, 96
King, W. O. 421
King, J. W 498
Kirschbaum 458
Kitselman, H. T. 412
Kitselman, D. S. 412
Kizer, Elias 20, 50, 351
Kizer, Thomas W 351
Kizer, William D. 351
Kizer, Henry 419
Klinck, Thomas, Sr. 316
Knapp, A. A. 458
Knights of Pythias 212
Know-Nothingism 214
Knoxville Campaign 259, 267
Koons, John 458
Kunkle, John 432
Kuntz, P. 458
La Fontaine 16, 17
Lamber, Lorenzo D. 219
Lambert, G. 458
Lands 29, 30, 44, 111
Lane, Jonathan O. 387–388
La Salle 16
Lasley, Andrew J 353
Lasley, Daniel 352
Lasley, David 95, 352
Lasley, Henry H. 401
Lasley, Jacob 353
Lasley, Moses 388
Lasley, Peter 352
Ladd, S. H. 458
Leader 227
Leavell, Richard A. 316
Lebanon 153, 154
Lectures 189
Lee, Ephraim 401, 402
Lee, Minus W 401, 402
Lee, William R 402
Lee's Surrender 292
Leggett, George E 317
Legislation 192
Lending Money 109
Lenkensterfer, William 317
Lewallyn, Meshach 39, 55, 95, 96
Lewellen, Rev. A. J. 168
Lewis, William 422
Lewis, N. B. 459
Lewis, C. W. 510
Lewis, Charles L. 316, 317
Leaky, George 478
Leaky, C. 478
Leaky, H. 478
Leaky, Anna 478
Lenox, Alfred 459
Leverton, A. J. 459
Liberty 74, 126, 160
Liberty Chapel 142
Liberty Township 60
Liberty Party 213
Liberty Chapel, north of 148
Life, Christian 502
Libraries 186, 189
Licking, Meal 65, 81, 95, 97
Licenses 56, 93
Light in Darkness 105
Lights 46
Limekilns 32, 332
Linzy, Levi J. 141, 378
Liquor Chicanery 193
Liquors 18
Liquor Selling 300, 301
Little Creek 126, 141
Little Turtle 18
Living 43
Local Option 166
Location 28, 121
Locke, William M. 103, 365
Locust Switch 99
Logan 16, 18, 24
Locking Forewheel 99
Log Rolling 342
Log Way 95
Lollar, Elisha L. 422
London Yearly Meeting 150
Longnecker, George 317
Lord, J. H. 502
Losantville 141, 210, 211, 475
Losantville, south of 126
Lost 241
Loss 94
Lost Child 91
Loyal 242
Luellen, Oliver F. 317
Luka, E. A. 472
Lumpkin—Lewis Case 293
Lumpkin, Robert 394
Lumber 299, 448
Lundy, Benjamin 196
Ludwick, A. 502
Lutheran 152
Luxuries 295
Lykins, Philip 353
Lynn 126, 142, 149, 154, 183, 184, 204, 211, 212, 277

PAGE.

Lyons, J. B. 493
Maccotybinassee 22
Machinery 64–67, 199
Macy, Albert 394
Macy, Connection 292, 508
Macy, John W. 319
Macy, William 394
Macy, William A. 366, 432
Macy, W. P 510
Macy, William W. 291, 292
Mackinaw 36
Madison Township 61, 75
Magee, Charles E. 320
Mail Routes (John Connor) 45, 50, 111
Mann, Abel H 402
Mann, Isaac 366, 367
Mann, John 95, 365
Mangas, Emanuel 493
Mangas, Caspar 493
Mangas, John 493
Mangas, Eli 493
Mangas, Absalom 493
Mann, George W 373
Manner of Living 43
Marble Works 300–303
Marks, Moses 508
Marquette Avenue 22
Marquis, Dr. W. K 432
Marriage Dowry 229, 230
Marriages 71, 72
Marsh, Benjamin F. 320
Marsh, William 459
Marsh, Capt. Albert O. 319
Martin, Elisha, Sr. 108, 337
Martin, Elisha, Jr. 320
Martin 203
Martin, John 337
Martin, John K. 320
Martindale, Moses 390
Mason Family 432
Mason, Thomas 432
Massasoit 26
Masseys 39, 40, 55
Masslich, Bentley 226, 227
Mass Meetings 214
Mastodon 13, 15
Maulsby, I. 480
Maulsby, R. J. 481
Maxville Cemetery 126, 154
Maxville Region 33
Maxville 332
Maxville (west of) 126
Maxwell, Lydia 402
McCartney, Andrew 419
McClellan, Gen. 247
McConnell, Andrew 432
McDonald, Henry 135, 138
McFarland, N. 493
McGuire, Thomas B. 355
McIntyre, Henry 135, 138
McIntyre, Robison 337
McKee, Thomas J. 402
McKee, R. B. 459
McKew, Arthur 15, 104, 409, 412
McKenzie, Charles 459
McKenney, A. 500
McKenney, J. B 500, 502
McKew, William E. 412
McNeal, James 355
Meal Licking 65, 81, 95, 97
McNees, Joab 469
McNees, H. A. 510
McNees, J. M 469
McProud, James 500, 502
Meck, Rev. H. J. 168
Medical Societies 225, 226
Meeks, Joseph 511
Meetings, Friends 91, 147
Meetings, Mass 214
Meeting House, First 362
Memory, Famous 366
Mendenhall Family 342, 343
Mendenhall, Hiram 196, 338
Mendenhall, Nathan 338
Merchants 115, 298, 299, 371, 374, 448
Meridians 28, 30, 31
Meranda, M. 502
Merryweather, W. 469, 472
Meshoningia 25
Meted 18
Methodists 106, 152–158
Metzger, D 478
Mexican War 241, 242, 356, 380
Miamis 16
Miami Valley 34
Miami Villages 26
Michaelis, Rev. A. G. H 168
Middleton, John F. 373
Middleton, Samuel H. 365, 366
Middleton, Thomas A. 103, 366
Militia, Randolph 240, 241
Military 238–296
Mills, Jacob R. 472
Milk Sickness 370
Milner, I. C. 412
Mikesell, Andrew 432
Mikesell, J. J 432
Miller, Benjamin 388
Miller, Daniel B 97, 318
Miller, John 388
Miller, Martin B. 318, 319
Miller, Peter S. 510
Miller, William T 388
Miller, William W. 402
Millers 308
Millerism 93
Miller's Cemetery 126
Milling 47, 81, 86, 88, 101
Mills 64–67, 81, 83, 91, 92, 93, 95, 97, 98, 101, 332
Mills, Isaac A 388

PAGE.

Mills, Joel 388
Mills, John B 402
Mills, Morgan 338
Mills, Moses A 321
Mills, Rufus K. 394
Millspaugh, Oliver H. 402
Minerals 32, 33
Ministers 147, 163–175, 162, 189
Minnesota 14
Minouquet 22
Miscellany 29, 228–238, 331
Missionary Work 164, 165
Mississinewa Valley 33, 39
Mississippi, Down the 295
Mississippi Valley 16
Missouri, Trip to 294
Mock, John 101–103
Mock, J. L. 409, 419
Mock, Daniel 419
Money 48, 91, 246
Money Lending 109
Monks, Christopher C 318
Monks, Catharine 353
Monks, George W 317, 318
Monks, John 317
Monks, Joseph 355
Monks, Mary Ann 353
Monks, William 353
Monopoly 38
Monroe Township 61, 504
Montgomery, Prof. W. S 188, 204
Montgomery, William 422
Moody, Isaac 382
Moody, Samuel 382
Moore, Cyrus S. 511
Moore, J. M 472
Moore, James 343
Moore, George 402
Moore, Daniel A. 355
Moore, Thomas J. 422
Moore, Anna M. 343
Moorman, James 200, 319
Moorman, John, Sr. 382
Moorman, John, Jr. 382
Moorman, Rev. John A. 168, 510
Moorman, Stephen 353–354
Moorman, Tarleton 353
Moorman, Luther L. 502
Moqui Towns 12
Morris, D. T. 432
Morton, W. S 433
Morton, John W 433
Moulton, W. G 422
Morgan, Charles 23, 27
Morgan, Frank G. 366
Morgan, George 366
Morgan, Mecajah 236
Morgan, Robert H. 223, 224, 292, 293
Morgan Raid 267, 268
Mormons 93
Morris, Brigadier General 248, 293
Morristown (Parker) 183, 505
Morton, Gov. O. P. 233, 234, 244, 245, 249, 255, 289, 294
Moser, Abram 355
Moss 43
Mound Builders 13, 14, 15
Mound Elephant 13
Mounds 13–15, 354
Moyer, John 402
Mount Carmel 211
Mount Holly 485
Mount Pleasant 154, 160
Mount Zion 126, 154, 160
Murder 135, 140
Murphy Movement 191
Murphy, Robert 110
Murphy, Nelson 433
Murphy, Robert 433
Murphy, Martin 459
Mullen, Thomas G. 422
Murrain 91
Murray, Ralph V. 320
Murray, William E. 354, 355
Murray, W. S. 460
Music 133, 134, 189, 309
Myers, James St. 373
Narrow Escape 336
Napoleon's Tomb 288
National Action 240
National Bounties 247
National Pensions 247
Nat Turner's Insurrection 138, 347
Naval Service 290, 291
Needham, W. P. 323
Neely, Thomas S. 23
Neff 468
Neff Cemetery 127
Neff, Capt. James I. 332, 333
Neff, Capt. John 242, 321
Neff, Col. Henry H. 321, 322
Neff, John, Sr. 321
Neff, John E. 221
Negroes 292
Negro Registry 198
Nelson Trusler Post 289
Nettle Creek 60, 75, 474
Newburg 362
New Corydon 29
New Dayton 127, 154, 332
New, John C. 293
New Lights 163
New Lisbon 127, 145, 485
New Middletown 484
New Pittsburg 127, 485
Newman, Joel A. 388
Newport 198
Newtown 35
Nicholas 16, 24
Nichols, Henry D. 382
Nichols, Isaac 367

PAGE.

Nichols, Malachi 363
Nichols, William D 367
Niggering 44
Normal Schools 180, 181
Northwest Territory 51, 52
Norwich 127, 149
Nursery 201
Nurses 296
Noftsker, S 481
Noffsinger, Sarah E 494
Noffsinger, Eli 494
Oakerson, W 481
Oberlin 172
Office Holding 215
Officers 57, 215–218, 281, 282
Official History 54, 215–218, 301, 302, 442
Ohio 13, 14
Ohler, Henry 433
Old, but Happy 106
Oldest Citizen 393
Old Men 110
Old Persons 110, 117, 119–121
Old Pledge 190
Old Settlers 116–121
Olive Branch 14, 143, 212, 407
Old Town 23
Oneida Institute 173
Orchard 42, 113
Orcutt, Amos 114, 419
Orcutt, Joseph 419
Orcutt, Amos 413
Order Withheld 296
Ordinances 51
Oren, Aaron 388
Oren, John F 388
Organization 51–69
Origin Mound Builders 13
Orphan Boy 83
Osborn, Charles 168–169
Osborn, Charles W 169, 403
Osborn, Isaiah 169, 403
Osborn, Mr 205
Oxen 80
Overman, Ephraim 36, 367
Oyler, Henry 388
Oyler, John 388
Oyburn, Jakey 388
Oyburn, John 472
Pacific Cruise 291
Page Liquor Case 190, 290
Painters Gravel Bank 14
Pan Handle Railroad 451
Parker 143, 149, 155, 204, 210, 211, 505
Parker, Jesse 79, 367
Parker, Jesse 367
Parker, Margaret 367
Parker, Thomas 367
Parker, Thomas W 36
Parks 449
Parsons, Robert H 224, 419
Past Business 298–301
Patchell, George W 227
Patriot 226, 321
Patrons of Husbandry 205, 206
Patty, Alonzo H 323
Patty, Harvey 323, 343
Paxson, Jesse 115, 460
Place, Coming 27
Peacock Cemetery 127
Peacock, William 91, 433
Peacock, Amos 433
Peacock, Abram 433
Peacock, E. H 433
Pea Ridge 294–295
Peelle, Hon. W. A 85, 236
Pegg, John 356, 382
Pegg, Martin 356
Pegg, Valentine 382, 383
Pegg, William 356
Peirson, L. F 388, 389
Penalty 106
Pensioners 240
Pensions 247
Perkins, George W 373
Perkens, Burrell 481
Perseverance 309
Personal 215–228
Perry, Willis 123, 135, 138
Peters, Samuel 93
Petosky 22
Petticoat 213
Pfisterer, John W 356
Phantaz 226
Phillips, John R 356
Phillips, Thomas 383
Photography 311
Phrony 235
Physical Geography 28–35
Physicians 221–225, 300, 307–308, 384, 386
Pierce, Burgett 23, 24, 95, 96
Pierce, Burgett 420
Pierce, Uriah 422
Pierce, Elwood O 422
Pierce, C. W 460
Pickett, William 98, 99, 433
Pickett, Mary 99
Pickett, John 356, 433
Pigeon Roost 27, 89, 363, 391
Pigeon Roost Massacre 23, 27
Pike, John 433
Pike, Benjamin 433
Pikes 67, 68, 361, 362, 449,
Pinhook 184
Pinwound 367
Pikes 67, 68, 361, 362, 449
Pike, John 433
Pike, Benjamin 433
Pioneer Preaching 174, 175, 333
Pioneers 39, 117
Pioneer Times 199, 200, 234, 235

PAGE.

Pittsburg 143, 154, 204, 212, 295
Pirkens, Burrell 481
Plain Dealer 225, 227
Pleasant Grove 143, 144, 155, 206
Pleasant Hill 127, 144, 155
Pleasant Ridge 128, 158
Pleasant View 476
Plows 83
Poetry 22, 206, 235, 322, 323
Pogue, Robert 169–170
Pogue, David 422
Pole, Cabin 91, 101
Polly Family 433
Political 213, 215
Pomroy, Phinehas 223
Pomme de Terre 13
Pone 45, 46, 84
Pontiac 16, 21, 24
Poor Boys 83
Poor House 59
Poorman, James 488
Poorman, John 494
Poorman, Peter 494
Poor Support 59
Poplar Run 128, 147
Population 233
Porter Lodges 193
Porter, James 104, 488
Post Offices 43
Post Office 449
Poultry 201
Pounding Corn 85
Powder Horn 394
Powder Keg 20
Powers' Station 15
Preacher 93, 349, 379, 382
Prehistoric 11–15
Premiums 207–208
Present Business 303–305
Presbyterians 106, 158, 159, 298
Presidents, Justices 57, 217
Presidential Elections 84, 86
Press 226–228
Prices 30, 81, 83, 85, 91, 99, 103, 105, 200, 201, 205
Price, James 389
Price, John 389, 403, 434
Primary Elections 214
Prisoners 280, 291, 311, 379, 385, 386
Private Schools 188
Privations 104, 290
Prisons, Rebel 278, 281
Probate Court 74, 76
Probate Judges 216
Problem Surveying 31
Prohibition 192
Prominent Men 300, 441
Prominent Ministers 163
Promiscuous 132
Prophet, The 16, 19, 20
Prophet's Town 26
Prospect 128, 155
Protestant Methodists 159
Providence Church 141, 142
Provisions 289, 290
Public Buildings 57, 58, 59, 76
Public Lands 29–32
Puckett, Calvin 356
Puckett Family 80, 338
Puckett, Isom 170
Puckett, Joseph 338–339
Puckett, Nathaniel 356
Puckett, Tyre T 21, 355
Pueble 242
Pump-making 109, 112, 306
Pupils 187
Purchasers 78
Purcell, Dr. J 422
Pursley Family 339, 403
Putnam, Ernestus, Sr 344
Putnam, Ernestus, Jr 344
Puzzled Foreman 307
Pyramid of Ghizeh 14
Quaker Graveyard 368
Quaker Trace 29, 61, 63, 80, 81, 97, 359, 361, 362
Quarries 32, 332, 333
Quartermaster General 293
Quilting 94
Quinlan, Rev. J. H 170
Rafting 35, 94
Rail Pen 108
Railroads 220, 301, 331, 378, 450, 499
Rail Splitting 357
Randle, Nathan 141
Randle, John 139
Randolph County 29, 52, 53
Randolph (Old) 427
Rarick, H. A 413
Rariden, James 57, 153
Rash, William 383
Rattle Snakes 105
Razors 391
Reapers 114
Rebel Prisoners 278
Recaptitulation 212, 276
Recorders 57, 217
Records 69–79
Recovery 51
Red Hawk 16, 24
Red River Expedition 293
Reece, Eli 383
Reed, Nathan 323, 324
Reed, Clark 503
Reed, Cyrus A 503
Reeder, Martin A 43, 48, 97, 323
Reeder, Mary A 344
Reeves, John L 224
Reformed Church 152
Regiments' Account 244, 247
Regiment, Eighth, Three Months 247, 276
Regiment, Sixth, Three Years 248, 276

PAGE.

Regiment, Seventh, Three Years 248, 276
Regiment, Eighth, Three Years 249, 276
Regiment, Ninth, Three Years 250, 276
Regiment, Eleventh, Three Years 251, 276
Regiment, Twelfth, Three Years 251, 276
Regiment, Thirteenth, Three Years 251, 276
Regiment, Sixteenth, Three Years 252, 276
Regiment, Seventeenth, Three Years 252, 276
Regiment, Nineteenth, Three Years 252, 276, 388
Regiment, Twentieth, Taree Years 254, 276
Regiment, Twentieth, Reorganized 255, 276
Regiment, Twenty-first, Three Years 255, 276
Regiment, Twenty-seventh, Three Years 256, 276
Regiment, Twenty-eighth, Three Years 256, 276
Regiment, Thirty-first, Three Years 256, 276
Regiment, Thirty-third, Three Years 256, 276
Regiment, Thirty-fourth, Three Years 257, 276
Regiment, Thirty-sixth, Three Years 257, 276
Regiment, Forty-seventh, Three Years 257, 276
Regiment, Fifty-third, Three Years 388, 276
Regiment, Fifty-fourth, One Year 257, 258, 276
Regiment, Fifty-fifth, Three Months 258, 276
Regiment, Fifty-seventh, Three Years 258, 276
Regiment, Sixty-ninth, Three Years 260, 262, 276, 387, 394
Regiment, Seventy-first, Three Years 262, 263, 276, 277
Regiment, Seventy-fifth, Three Years 263, 276
Regiment, Seventy-seventh, Three Years 263, 276
Regiment, Eighty-fourth, Three Years 263, 276
Regiment, Eighty-ninth, Three Years 266, 276
Regiment, Ninetieth, Three Years 266, 276
Regiment, Ninety-seventh, Three Years 266, 276
Regiment, Ninety-ninth, Three Years 266, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Fifth, Minute Men 267, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Sixth, Minute Men 268, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Ninth, Minute Men 268, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Seventeenth, Six Months, ... 268, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Nineteenth, Three Years, ... 268, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Twenty-first, Three Years, ... 271, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, Three Years 271, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth, Three Years 389, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Thirtieth, Three Years, ... 273, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Thirty-first, Three Years, ... 273, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth 274, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth 274, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Fortieth 274, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Forty-seventh 274, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Fifty-fourth 274, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth 275, 276
Regiment, Fortieth Ohio, Three Years 275, 276
Regiment, One Hundred and Tenth Ohio 309, 389
Regiment, Fifth U. S. Colored 141
Regiment, Eighth, U. S. Colored 141
Regiment, Twenty-second U. S. Colored 141, 276
Regiment, Twenty-fourth U. S. Colored 141
Regiment, Twenty-eighth U. S. Colored 141
Regiment, Forty-second U. S. Colored 141
Regiment, Forty-fifth U. S. Colored 141
Regiment, Seventy-second U. S. Colored 141
Registry, Negro 198
Reinheimer, Peter 344
Rehoboth 128, 155
Relics 13
Religion 38, 49, 50, 141, 175, 376
Religion in Army 287, 288
Religious People 50
Reminiscences, 27, 70, 79–116, 171, 175, 194, 198, 234, 236, 241, 242, 333, 365. 380
Re-organization 276, 277
Representatives 216
Republic, Grand Army 288, 289
Republicanism 214
Residents 392, 393
Retrospect 26
Retz, Anna 83, 394, 403
Re-unions 237, 288, 334
Revolutionary War 238
Reynard, Jesse 339
Reynard, Nathan 357
Reynard, Solomon 339
Reynolds, E. B 190
Reeves, W. M 460
Reeves, Mrs. E 460
Reeves, James 488
Richardson, John 356
Richmond, Ky 295, 296
Richmond, Ind 80
Richmond & G. R. Railway 451
Richardville 16, 17, 18, 29, 81
Ridgeville 20, 35, 128, 142, 153, 155, 184, 185, 211, 212, 227
Ridgeville College 35, 184, 407
Ridgeville "Leader" 227
Ritenour Cemetery 128, 155
Ritenour Church 155
Road-Laying 61, 62, 63, 93
Roads 61–63, 416, 483
Road-Work 62
Robbins, Richard 139, 140
Robbins, E. R 511
Roberts, John 134, 140
Roberts, Milton A 133
Robinson, Jehu 339
Robinson, Ruth (Test) 94
Robinson, William 93, 339
Rocks 32
Rockingham 498
Roe, Abraham 413
Rickert, H 494
Rickert, G 494
Rogers, Isaiah 383
Rogers, John H 472
Romantic Trip 329
Rope Bridle 175
Ross, G. W 460

PAGE.

Ross, James B. 293
Rossman, Alfred 324
Routes, Travel 331
Routh, I. 481
Routh, C. W. 481
Rook, Joseph 469
Royston 507
Ruble, Walter 339
Ruble, William 357
Ruby, James 224, 460
Ruby, Eleanor 489
Ruby, James B. 373
Ruby, John C. 373
Runaways 196, 197, 198
Rural 378
Riddlebarger, Jesse 422
Saddle 300, 324
Salamonie 61, 75
Salem 129, 145, 155, 156, 158, 427
Sally, Aunt 21
Saloons 190, 191, 193, 194
Sampletown 53, 332
Sanitary 244–246
Saratoga 129, 160, 185
Sasser, William 373–374
Sasser, Ollen 434
Save the Buttons 92
Sawing Wood 113
Saw-Mill 66, 300, 453
Saw-Mill Medicine 171
Scared Boy 49, 79, 80
Schedule 69, 70, 77
School, 79, 82, 92, 93, 96, 97, 100, 102, 106, 113, 114, 133, 175, 189, 177, 182, 360, 361, 376
School Books 176, 183
School Examiners 217
School, First 38, 79, 80, 362
School, Graded 182
Schoolhouses 182, 187
School, Private 178
School, Select 178
School, Sunday 189, 193
Scioto River 13
Scott, Edward 383, 423
Scott, Gen. 25, 26, 51, 242
Scott, James 140
Scott, Mrs. James 140
Scott, Miles 423
Scott, Martin 140
Scott, Robert 140
Scott, Simpson 357
Scott, John R. 511
Sea Voyage 138, 291
Secession, War of 242–206
Secret Societies 209–213
Sedgwick Fence 203
Select Schools 178
Semans, David 367–368
Semans, Henry T. 325, 326
Semans, Solomon 325
Seminary, County 177–179
Senate 265, 266
Separation 93, 169, 171, 172, 195
Settlement 28, 36, 38, 39, 133 [settlers], 496
Settlers 38, 39, 79, 82, 88, 96, 98, 101, 102, 108, 112, 114, 335, 336, 359, 376, 390
Shafer, William W. 141
Shaler, Thomas 104, 108
Shaw, Benjamin 374
Shaw, Gideon 344
Shaw, Joseph 374
Shaw, R. C. 511
Shawnees 16
Shedville 144
Sheep 84
Sheep-Killing 115
Sheep-skin Saddle 175
Sheely, Abraham 389
Sheets 129, 441
Shell Heaps 13
Sherman, Larmon W. 357
Sherman, Mrs. Pardon 113, 409
Sheriffs 57, 217
Sheriffs' Deed 71
Shiloh 144
Shipwreck 167
Shockney, Theodore 219
Shoemaker, William 140
Shoemaker, Evan 394, 395
Shoemaker, Daniel 383
Shoemaker, William J. 224, 225
Short-Horns 201
Shortridge 23, 27
Shrubs 88
Sick Man 103
Sickness [Cholera] 106
Simmons, Aaron 489
Simmons, Benjamin F. 293
Simmons, Nathan C. 324
Simmons, Nathan William 420, 494
Singer, Francis M. 357
Single File 23
Sinking Fund 337
Sioux Indians 13
Six Sons in Army 367
Six Nations 13
Skeletons 14, 15
Sketch of Officers 281
Slander 57, 73
Slave Cases (Anti-Slavery, etc) 290
Slaves 82, 83, 95, 136, 137, 138, 139, 197, 292
Slave Whipping 82
Slick, William 374
Smith, Benjamin 389
Smith, Clinton D. 326
Smith, Andrew J 357
Smith, Durant 340
Smith, Gabe 189
Smith, Hon. Jere 29, 39, 53, 56, 87, 89, 219, 390
Smith, Hon. Oliver H. 234, 235

PAGE.

Smith, Priscilla 84
Smith, Samuel 383
Smith Shops 391
Smith, Temple 84, 420
Smith, William W 344, 434
Snedeker, W. B. 326
Snow Hill 15, 120, 134, 378
Societies, Medical 225
Soldiers' Burial 286, 287
Soldiers' Deaths 283–286
Soldiers, Colored 141
Soldiers, Continental 368
Soldiers, 1812 340, 341, 379, 380
Soldiers, French Army 346
Soldiers' Home 246
Soldiers Old Wars 240
Soldiers with Wayne, etc 337
Soldiers' Re-unions 288
Sons of Liberty 215, 293
Sons of Temperance 193
Sorghum 222
Spanish Discoveries 12
Sparrow Creek 129, 149, 160, 161
Spartansburg 107, 129, 142, 145, 156, 159, 185, 210, 211, 362
Specie Circular 48
Speculation 38
Spelling Matches 103
Spellman, Rev. R. P. 170, 171
Spilling Milk 275, 276
Spinning 99, 367
Spiritualists 162
Split Log 17
Splitting Machine 48
Spring, Andersonville 279, 291
Springboro 175, 378
Squatter Law 44, 45
Squaw 23
Squirrels 99
Stakebake, John L. 326
St. Clair, Governor 51, 52
Starbuck, Edward 171, 462
Starbuck, John 340
Starbuck, Leroy 340
Starbuck, William W. 357
Sarbuck, Walter R. 357
Stanton, William 115
Stars, Falling 92, 103
State Line Road 63
Statistics 230–233, 280
State Relief 244
Steamer W. W. Crawford 295
S. S. V. and E. L. 194
Steele, William 196
Steubenville 129, 156
St. Helena 288
Stillwell, Obadiah 389
Stine, James H. 288, 383
St. Louis Hospitals 294
St. Mary's Treaty 17, 24
Stockdale, Nancy 237
Stock Improvements 200, 208, 209
Stone, Asahel 124, 293–296, 324, 325
Stone, Ezra 324
Stone, Mrs. Lydia B. 325
Stone, William D. 171, 241, 242
Stone Station 142, 204
Stony Creek 60, 144, 466
Stone Wall 15
Store, First 55
Stories 115
Storms, Philip 41, 108
Streams 33, 34, 35
Street Meetings 192
Stubbs, Ephraim 368
Study, L. W. 326
Style 85
Subscription Schools 178
Sugar Creek 144
Sugar Grove 145
Sugar Making 98, 99, 199, 367
Sultana, Steamer 280, 281
Summers, Samson 357
Summers, Charles 357
Sumption, R. H. 20, 409
Sunday Schools 292, 293
Superintendent of Poor 59
Supreme Court 166
Surface 32
Surgeon 296
Surprises 237, 381
Survey of Lands 28, 29, 30, 31, 68, 69, 93, 105
Surveyors 217
Swain, Ira 82, 392, 393, 395
Swain's Hill 393
Swapping Pants 80
Swear 'em Through 115
Swine 200, 201
Swingly Cemetery 129
Swingly, Joshua 473
Sword Captured 242
Shank, M 489
Shepherd, J. J. 403
Stevenson, James 404
Stevenson, Charles M 404
Stine, Charles M 404
Seany, John W. 413
Slusher, Anderson 413
Smithson, J. E 413
Stratton, I. N 414
Sipe, J. B. 420
Sipe, J. H. 420
Sipe, Samuel 420
Sipe, James A. 423
Smiley, John 423
Slick, William 423
Sheets, John 434
Shelley, W. 434
Shockney, W. 434
Shockney, S. H 434
Shultz, P. M. 434

PAGE.

Stove Stores 452
Shrontz, Joseph L. 461
Sawyer, J. 481
Shaw, J. T. 461
Smith, C. C. 461
Smith Brothers 461
Smith, Amos 488, 490
Smith, G. W. 461
Smith, N. S 494
Smith, W. K 461
Smith, H. B. 462
Smith, J. D 462
Smith, L. J. 472
Stafford, D. A 481
Smithers, C. H. 481
Shugars & Brother 461
Snodgrass, H. 478, 481
Snodgrass, J. 479
Snodgrass, W 479
Skinner Family 488
Symons, A. 473
Snook, J. H 462
Stahl, I. G. 462
Starbuck, J. S. 463
Starbuck, J. W. 463
Stewart, B. F. W. 463
Stumpf, Gottfried 463
Swain, W. H 463
Sutton, G. W. 463
Smithson, P. 470, 481
Sample, Elizabeth 472
Studebaker, H 472
Shreev, Joseph 494
Spitler, E 495
Shedville 498
Sites, G 503
Sumwalt, W. H 512
Stanley, C. H 512
Talbert, Lewis 196, 197
Tampico 135
Tannery 392
Tan Trough 82, 83
Tanning 91
Tanyard 332
Taxes 75, 230, 231
Tax Payers 231, 232
Taylor, Gen. 242
Taylor, John H. 374
Taylor, William 107, 368
Teachers 93, 103, 185, 186
Teaming 80, 85, 104
Tecumseh 16, 18, 24, 27
Tecter, Hannah 434
Telephones 452
Temperance 135, 162, 166, 189, 194, 222, 346, 385
Temple Mounds 14
Tenure of Office 214
Territories 52
Terrell, W. 473
Testimonials 239
Tharpe, Jeremiah 366
Thirteenth Article 195, 198, 215
Thomas, Mrs. Ann C. 171, 172
Thomas, Benjamin 172
Thomas, George and Asenath 91, 434
Thomas, Nathan 171, 172
Thomas, John W. 368
Thompson, Esq. 14
Thompson, David 239
Thompson, P. M. B. 141, 374
Thompson, William A. 327
Thompson, Elihu 435
Thornburg, S. 383, 384
Thornburg, (Wm.) Armfield 23, 99
Thornburg Chapel 156
Thornburg Cemetery 129
Thornburg, Isaac 470, 512
Thornburg, Jesse 389
Thornburg, John 172
Thornburg, Richmond 327
Thornburg, J. J. 473
Thornburg, Joab 473
Thornburg, Job 473
Thorpe, Joseph H. 374
Thoke, W. 463
Threshing Machines 102
Tight Fit 234
Tied Jury 57
Tile Making 203, 204, 320, 357
Tillson, Rev. Hosea 174, 175, 378
Tillson, Luther 374
Times 226
Tinker 139
Tisor, John 357
Tobacco 82
Tombstone 13
Tools 102
Tornados 391
Towns 25
33, 68, 331, 332, 377, 378, 392, 393, 407, 419, 467, 475, 484, 497
Townships 25, 32, 59, 60, 61, 68, 69
Township Histories 297
Trader 23, 29, 94, 99, 109, 112
Trails, (Indian Trails) 24, 94
Transfer Regiments 276, 277
Transmission Money 246
Traveling 16, 94, 102, 104, 107, 112, 138, 234, 331, 348
Treasurers 57, 217, 442
Treaties 24
Trees 88
Trenton 210, 211, 392, 393
Trendley, F. 465
Trial, Dick Davis
Trial, Dodd, etc 293
Trials 40
Triangular Stone 15
Trine, C. 495
Trip to Fort Wayne 80
Trip to Missouri 294
Tripp, Ira 326, 327

PAGE.

Trist 106
Tritt, Jos 463
Tritt, Tilghman 464
Tritt, C. G 464
Trustee 180, 183, 188, 371, 373, 382, 386, 393
Tub and Pail Factory 452
Tucker, Rev. Ebenezer 43, 133, 172, 173, 179, 180
Tucker, G. Clarkson 237
Turner, Randolph 340
Turner, William 435
Turpen, Mrs. Enos H 191
Turpen, Enos H 464
Turpen & Harris 448
Turner, James H 246
Twelve Mile Boundary 28, 29
Ullom, Washington 327
Uncle Jake 21
Underground Railroad 97, 165, 174, 195, 196, 198, 393, 394
Undertaker 311
Union Baptist Cemetery 130
Union Cemetery 130
Union Chapel 130, 156
Union City 130, 131, 190, 192, 208, 209, 210, 226, 436
Union City Churches 142, 144, 145, 146, 156, 157, 158, 159, 161, 162
Union City Schools 185, 186
Union City, Ohio 160, 187, 439
Union Church 288
Union Literary Institute 133, 165, 167, 172, 179, 195
Unionport 144, 157, 392
Union Township 61, 76
Union & Bluffton Railroad 452
United Brethren 159–161
United States Mail (Mail Routes, John Connor) 342
Universalists 159
Upper Crust 85
Uprising, Grand 244
Uses of Streams 35
Vajen, Gen. John N 293
Valleys and Divides 33, 34
Valley, Miami 34
Valley, Mississinewa 33
Valley, White River 33, 34
Valley, White Water 34
Van Cortlandt, P 488
Van Pelt, John 358
Van Nuys, J. C 464
Vardeman, Rev. John T 173, 174, 481
"Varmints" 89
Vegetation 32
Vernon 332, 333
Veteran Engineers 275
Vicksburg 293, 296
Vincennes 16, 17, 24
Vinegar Hill 157
Virginia 51
Vision 106
Votaw, Jonas 25, 235
Voting 84, 86
Vorhis, Alex 423
Wade, Stephen 140, 141
Wages of Schools 187, 188
Wagon Factory 298, 305
Wagon Making 300, 310
Wagons 84, 101
Walnut Log 15
War Anecdotes 233
War, Indian 1811–1813 ..... 239, 240
War, Indian 1789—1795 239
War, Mexican 241–243
War, Secession 242–296
Ward, Joab 20, 21, 35, 96, 409, 414
Ward, Thomas 21, 35, 94, 327, 328
Ward Township 17, 24, 59, 60, 414
Warrell, Chester 279, 280
Warrell, William 279, 280
Warren, Family 490
Warren, John R 111, 420, 423

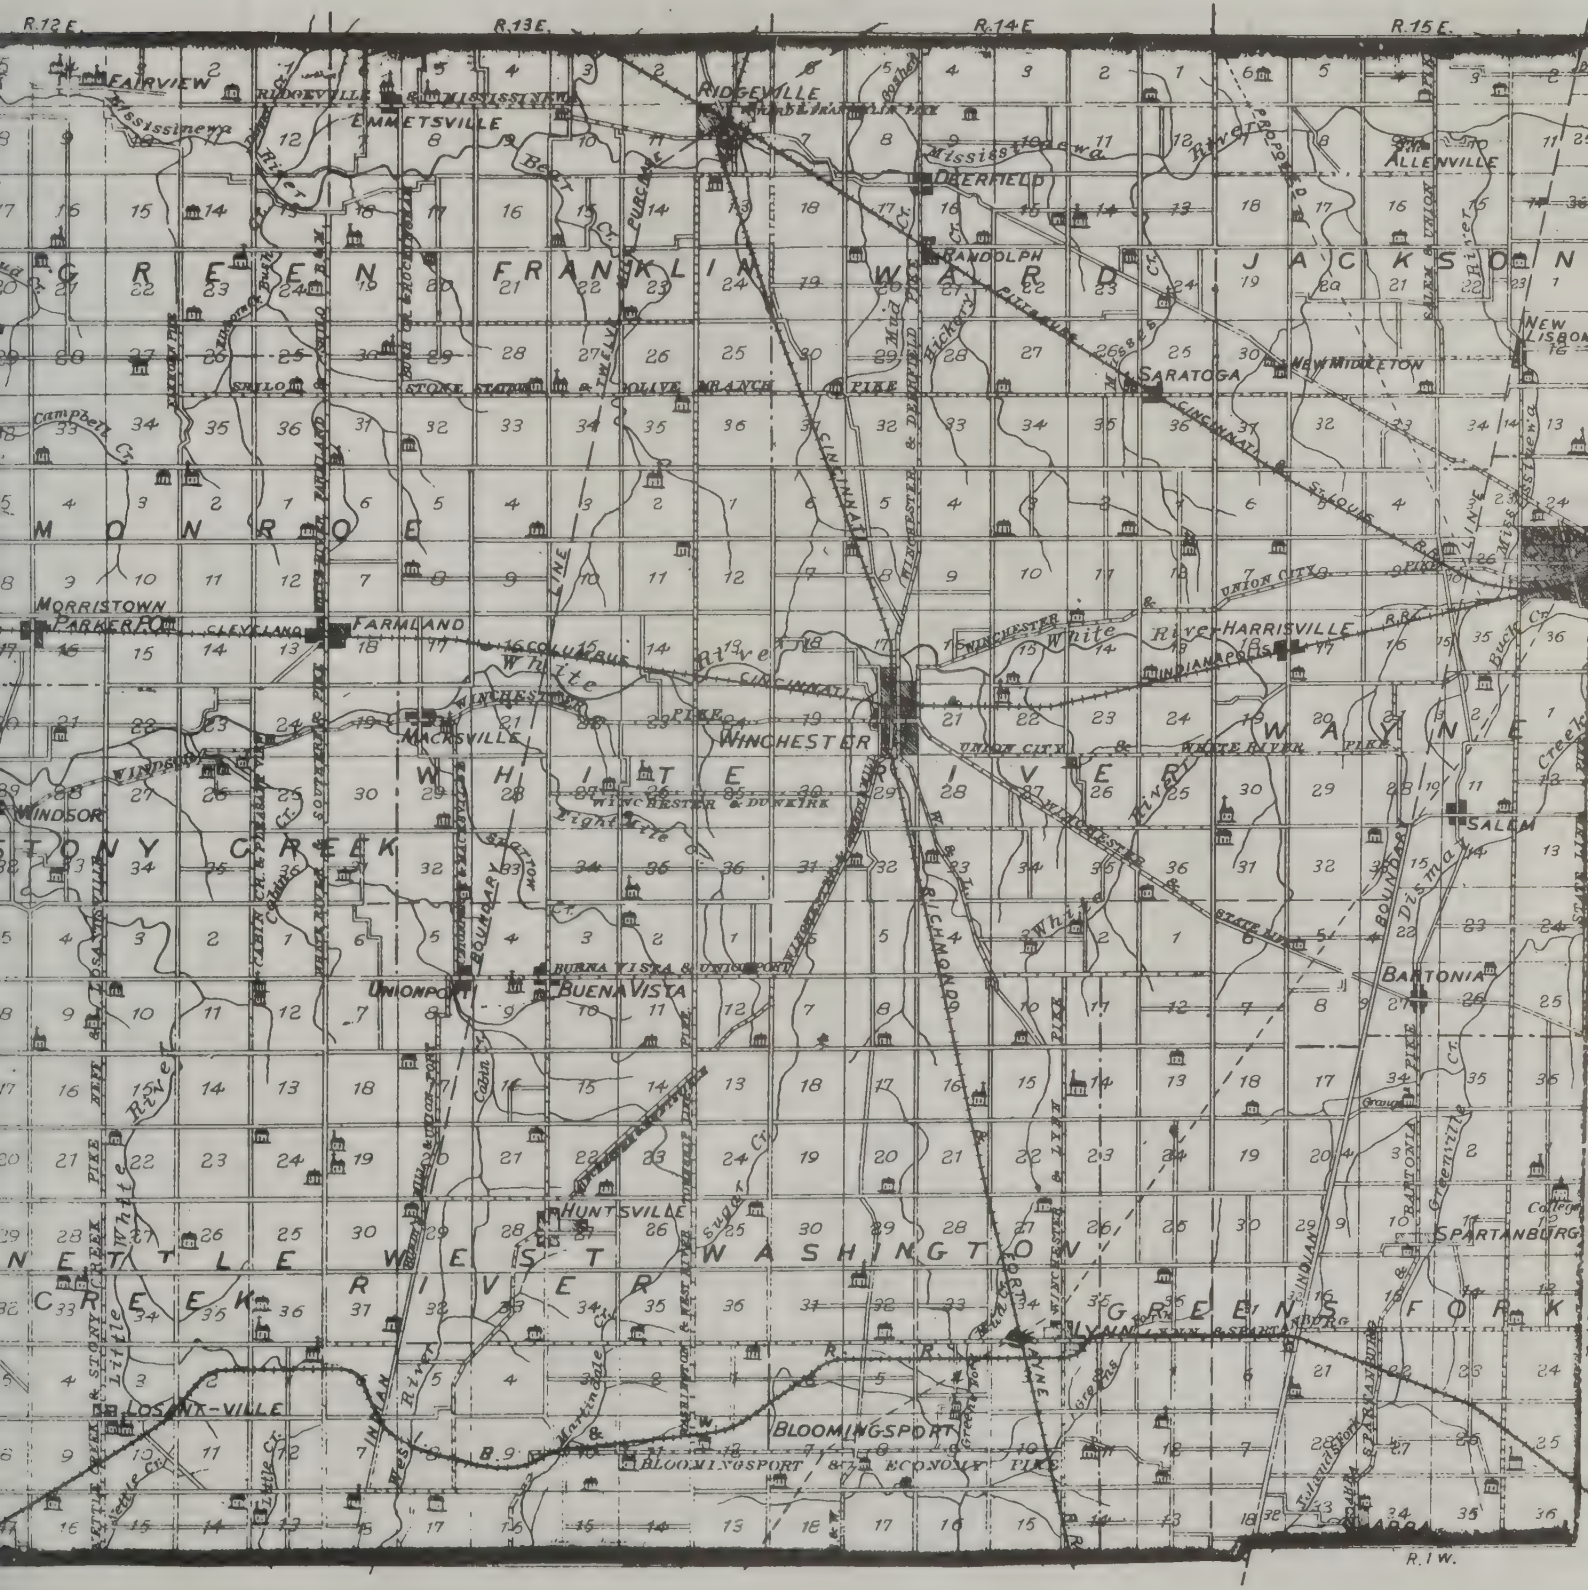
PAGE.

Warren, James M 423
Washingtonianism 190
Washington's Tomb 288
Washington Township 60, 375–389
Waters, Inland 33
Waubunsee 16, 18
Waukoon 25
Watson, Hon. Enos L 328
Watts, Isaiah P 328
Wax, Chewing 100
Way Family 38, 39, 55, 329, 330, 340, 341
Way, Mrs. Amanda M 190
Way, Frances M. Way 283, 328
Way, Henry H 198, 340
Way, Jesse 198, 344
Way, John 55, 329, 340
Way, Judith 90
Way, Moorman 39
Way, Paul W 38, 55, 86, 340, 341
Way, Robert 344, 345
Way, William 341
Wayne, Anthony 29, 51, 239
Wayne Fort 16, 17, 18, 19
Wayne Township 26, 60, 61, 74, 76, 424
Wayne's Treaty 24, 25
Wayne's Victory 24, 88
Weather 204, 205
Weaving 99
Weddings 84, 237, 238
Weeds and Grasses 32, 88
Week of Prayer 63
Well, Hidden 15
Well, Deep 105
Wentworth, Stephen M 227
Wells, Benjamin F 358
Wesleyan Church 161
West Lynn 378
West River 142
West River Township 39, 60, 74, 360
West River Valley 390
West Virginia Campaign 294
Wheatley, R. T 174
Whipsaw 85
Whistling Bill 107
White Chapel 161
White Jacob 341
White, Mr. and Chief 26
White River Chapel 149, 150, 161
White River Cemetery 131
White River Encampment 211
White River 33, 38, 59, 149, 211
White River Valley 33
White, Sylvanus 345
White River Township 33, 297–359, 329, 331
Whitesell Cemetery 131
Whitesell, James 435
White Water 364
White Water Valley 34
Whitten, Seth M 220, 221
Whisky 102
Wiggs, Felix G 100
Wiggs, Sarah (Barefoot) 368
Wiggs, Windsor 368
Wickersham, J 490
Wilkerson Girls (Slaves) 290, 195, 197, 198
Will, First 77
Williams, Grear N 359
Williams, John W 465
Williams, Joel H 358, 359
Williamson, John W 345
Wiley, William A 446, 464
Wiley, Rev. Thomas 170
Willow Spring 288
Willson, George T 341
Wilmore, Benjamin F 359
Wilmore, David W 389
Wilmore, Jesse W 359
Wilmore, Rev. Willis C 105, 174

PAGE.

Wind-mills 300
Winchester, 14, 23, 36, 53, 72, 73, 93, 95, 101, 102, 132, 142, 144, 146, 150, 151, 157, 158, 159, 187, 207, 208, 209, 211, 212, 226, 297–329, 333, 341–345
Windsor 14, 132, 145, 157, 211, 467
Wire Fence 203
Wise, Henry 374
Wolf, William 341
Wohl, G. W 474
Wolves 81, 87
Wood Chopping 85
Wood, Joseph T 378, 384
Woodbury, P. N 221
Woodlawn Cemetery 126
Women's Crusade 190, 191
Women's Work 99
Wood Station 378
Woolen Factory 393
Woolen Mill (Factory, Woolen) 310, 393
Woolverton, Charles W 328, 329
Work 80, 91
Worth, Rev. Daniel 174, 404
Worth, Thomas 395
W. C. T. Union 191
Wright Family 39, 51
Wright, Edward 358
Wright, Isaac 358
Wright, Israel 358
Wright, Mary Ann 358
Wright, Solomon 37, 39, 51, 92, 471
Wright, W. G 404
Wright, William 465, 474
Wright, John D 474
Wright, H. K 479
Wright, Samuel 512
Wysong, David 341
Wysong, Harvey 341, 358
Wysong, Valentine 341
Warner, G 495
Wall, Allen 420
Warwick, S. D 482
Wallace, Thomas 473, 508
Wallace, Mrs. Frances 473
Warren, W 495
Warren, D 495
Water Works 437, 452
Webb, A. B 503
Welch, Thomas 435
Wesler, G. W 414
Whipple & Harker 423
Whipple, Mrs. A 413
Whipple, Jason 421
Wiggs, Elizabeth H 435
Wiggins, L 479
Williamson, L. C 435
Williamson, J. W 435
Willson, R. A 464
Willson, T. T 464
Witham, Anderson & Co 447
Wine, G. W 479
Wirt, I 501
Wimer, J. W 495
Wood, Alex 413
Wood, Andrew J 413
Wood, Isaac 482
Wood, Francis H 512
Wood, William H 512
Woodbury, E. R 435
Woodberry Family 435
Woodbury, James 435
Woodberry, Robert 435
Worthington, W. T 464
Worthington, Mrs. W. T 464
Yawl 242
Yergin, H. H 225
Y. M. C. A 162, 163
Zimmerman, Frederic 395
Zion 161

MAP OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.



HISTORY OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.

CHAPTER I.

PRE-HISTORIC.

GENERAL—SPANISH EXPLORATIONS—RELICS—ANTIQUITIES.

ABUNDANT evidence exists to show that North America, (and South America as well), was inhabited hundreds, possibly thousands, of years ago by a swarming human population. Even though we possessed no written records of the doings of men upon the Eastern Continent during the ages that are past, yet the ruins that still remain of the works which they left behind them would attest their presence and their power. In the stirring words of the poet,

> "These ages have no memory, but they left
> A record in the desert; columns strewn
> On the waste sands; statues fallen and cleft,
> Heaped like a host in battle overthrown;
> Vast ruins where the mountain's ribs of stone
> Were hewn into a city; streets that spread
> In the dark earth where never breath has blown
> Of heaven's sweet air, or foot of man dares tread
> The long and perilous ways; the Cities of the Dead!"

The immense walls and towers, the stupendous temples, the wondrous pyramids, the burnt and molten mounds filled with bricks and pottery—the caves hewn from the solid rock, the tombs excavated into the sides of cliffs, the marble slabs and huge pillars covered with writing made by human hands; Pompeii and Herculaneum, deep buried, or dug from the bowels of the earth; the roads and highways remaining still to show to us in these later days how those old nations practiced locomotion in those by-gone ages; the marble pillars, the fallen statues, the gigantic sphinxes, the ruins of Thebes and Athens and Palmyra;—all these, and a myriad other things declare the certain fact that, long generations ago, human inhabitants dwelt in numbers and in power upon those spreading Eastern lands.

It happens, indeed, that we possess legible written records of human actions as performed by a few men who belonged to some of the ancient nations who once occupied portions of Europe and Asia and Africa. We have histories telling us somewhat of the things which some of the ancient peoples did; telling us of the Jews, the Phœnicians, the Egyptians, the Assyrians, the Chaldeans, the Greeks, the Romans.

But these histories are (as all histories must be) merely fragmentary. They name a few men, a few cities, a few rivers, and describe some of the actions of a small number of persons out of the mighty multitude who once swarmed along those plains and mountains and valleys. But the great mass of human deeds of even the historical periods, so called, must for ever lie inextricably hidden beneath the mist of the unknown and unrecorded past.

So of these Western plains. The written history for unknown ages is wholly lacking—intelligible records, made as such by human pen or pencil or chisel, are not to be found; but the unconscious record shown in earth, in mounds and embankments, in burial-grounds and human skeletons, is abundant on every hand. The ancestral remains scattered far and wide throughout the Western Continent incontestably prove the fact that, before the stubborn Briton, the jolly Frenchman, the bluff Dutchman, the stern and haughty Spaniard; before Gilbert and Hudson, before De Soto and La Salle, before Columbus and Cortez and Balboa and Pizarro; before even the wandering, wigwam-dwelling red man, there dwelt throughout this vast Mississippi Valley a thronging race of men: a race, moreover, neither feeble as to power, nor lacking in knowledge and in skill.

These ancient peoples would seem indeed to have labored under some great and serious drawbacks to their power, since no proof has been found of an acquaintance with iron or with iron implements, and little or none, moreover, of the existence of domestic animals of draft or burden.

Yet their achievements, despite these serious drawbacks, as shown by the remains of their works, by the ruins of what they once possessed and dwelt in and of what they constructed, are indeed wonderful. And would it be too much to affirm that,—were the proud Anglo-Saxon race, and the other European races as well, to be swept during the next century from the American Continent, leaving no written records preserved and handed down to following ages, and (say) two or ten thousand years were to pass, while the tooth of time should gnaw remorselessly upon the dwindling remnants of their fading glory—would it be too much to declare that, after such a lapse of time, those who should then tread the American shores, would behold, in that far-off future time, fewer and less striking proofs of the former presence and power of these boastful "white men" than do now appear to attest the prowess of the "Mound-Builders" and "Fort-makers," of the Palace-dwellers of Central America and Yucatan, the "Cliff-dwellers" of Colorado, or the Sun-or-Devil-worshipers of Tetzuco?

All over this great valley, and among the mighty mountains and yawning cañons of the far-off West, once lived and moved a mighty race of men. The works which they have forsaken, the ruins which "Old Father Time" himself has been able neither to deface nor destroy, yet stand, and raise their heads beneath the canopied sky, and say—"Whose works are all these?"

Mystery hangs over the story of these people, darkness deeper than the darkness of the catacombs covers them, yet they were here!

As England was peopled before the Normans, the Saxons, the Danes, so was the American Continent peopled before the white man or the red man. And not merely were such races scattered far and wide upon our mountains and over our plains, but here, in Randolph County, Ind., here, on these lands which we now own and hold and till, they dwelt. On these rivers and streams they paddled their canoes, the animals of these forests they slew for food. Here they ate, they drank, they toiled, they dwelt, they fought, they died and were buried. Here, even like heroes of other lands and times, recorded or otherwise, they tried in battle fierce and stern defense, to beat back their ruthless foes; but alas! like other hapless races, they failed and dwindled, and disappeared from the earth! Whence they came, how long they and their ancestors had been domiciled on these lands, and in what manner was the process of extinction; who were and whence came their strong invaders conjecture can only imagine.

The world has been full of hostile migrations, and of the absorption or the destruction of the nations dwelling upon the invaded lands; and had not the history of such inroads been written, no mortal could now supply the lack.

They were here, and they are gone! And now, as we gaze sadly on their fortifications and on their bones exhumed from the places of their sepulture, and, as the sighing west wind gently whispers "Whence and what were these?" echo mournfully repeats "whence and what?" but the answer never comes!

A race so numerous, so intelligent, so skillful, so laborious, so brave, must have had dwellings, towns, clothing, implements of labor and of warfare. But of their manner of life we know little. It is strange, indeed, that amid all the remains of their works so little is left to give a clew to their life, their habits, their dwellings, their towns, their civilization.

Some tokens indeed there are, but these indications are not many. In Europe, among the lake dwellings and elsewhere, are found matting, stone arrow heads, copper and stone knives and axes, shell heaps, fragments of woolen cloth, bones of oxen, horses and cattle, of sheep, dogs and goats; seeds of strawberries, raspberries, etc., loaves of bread, and many other things.

In America also have been found matting, pipes, hammers (made of stone) large enough for two men to wield, and in heaps sufficiently large to be hauled away in cart loads, and in quantities enough to be used in walling a well; stone-axes, stone, wood and copper tools in mines worked by those primeval races; pottery of curious construction and various device, figures supposed to have been idols; cups, bowls, and dishes of divers shapes and designs, etc.

In the northern and eastern portions of the United States, few remnants of stone-work have been found. But in Yucatan, Central America, and Colorado, ruins of great towns remain, nearly rivaling the desolated cities of Asia and Africa, while in New Mexico, Colorado and the adjacent regions, stone dwellings and fortresses and towns built upon inaccessible heights, and reached by flights of steps or by ladders, are found, and aboriginal tribes of men still dwelling in them.

SPANISH DISCOVERIES.

The history of Spanish explorations in New Mexico and California reveals a wonderful state of things; and modern travelers discover present remnants of those ancient peoples and of their wondrous towns.

Bryant's History, speaking of Spanish explorers in 1581–2, says:

"Traveling up the valley of the Rio del Norte, * * * a journey of ten days brought them to villages containing ten thousand people. The houses were well built, four stories high, with good chambers, most of them having fire-places for winter. The people were well dressed in cotton and leather, with good shoes and boots, such as the Spanish had not seen in America before. After four days the travelers went on to another tribe, called the Tiguas, of sixteen towns. In two days they came to a country of eleven towns, of which the natives said the population was more than 40,000. They next visited the Quires and found five towns with 15,000 people. Fourteen leagues farther they found the Cunames, who had five towns with 20,000 people. Their houses were built of stone and lime and were the best the Spaniards had seen. Next were the Amejes, 30,000 in number. Fifteen leagues westward they found the town of Acoma with 6,000 people.

"This town (Acoma) is still in existence, peopled probably with the same race of inhabitants. It was on a high cliff, which was more than fifty platforms in height, and could be ascended only by steps cut out of the rock itself. All the water the people had was in cisterns. The arable land was two leagues away, being watered by artificial means from a little river in the neighborhood."

Judge Cozzens thus describes the town of Acoma as it was in 1860:

"Acoma stands upon the top of a rock at least 350 feet above the plain. The Pueblo can be reached only by means of a staircase of 375 steps, cut in the solid rock. At the upper end of this [staircase] is a ladder eighteen feet long, made from the trunk of a tree, from which notches have been cut for the feet."

Bryant continues: "Twenty-four leagues farther west, Espejo and his companions came to Zuni, where they found the crosses, etc., left by Coronado half a century before. The Zuni live there still."

It appears then, that our western regions, New Mexico, Arizona, California, etc., were, at the time of their exploration by the Spanish, inhabited by a cultivated people, clothed, dwelling in houses, with cities, in some respects, the most remarkable in the world.

J. W. Powell, in Scribner, December 1875, says:

"Thus, in this desert land, we find an agricultural people, dwelling in stone houses, with walls laid in mortar, and plastered within; houses two, three, four, five and six stories high; skilled in pottery, weaving, dyeing; with picture-writing, mythology and religion; with no beasts of burden and no knowledge of metals, their tools being bones, stone and wood."

He says further that there were found, when the region was discovered by the Spaniards and explored by them in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, about sixty towns, and that some thirty of these towns still remain; that nearly all were semi-Christianized by the Spanish Catholics, but that seven exist now as in ancient days.

These seven towns are in what is called the province of Tusayan, and are named as follows: O-rai-bi, Shi-pau-i-luv-i, Mi-shong-i-ni-vi, Shong-a-pa-vi, Te-wa, Wol-pi, Si-choam-a-vi: the last three called the Moqui towns. They are all built on high rocks or cliffs, with houses of several stories, entered by ladders, or steps, or both. Before 1540 the clothing was cotton; but between 1540 and 1600 they were supplied with sheep through the Spaniards, and since that time they have used woolen and now employ it largely. The men wear moccasins, leggings, shirts and blankets (which they make themselves); the women wear moccasins with long tops, besides short petticoats and a shawl over the right shoulder, a belt around the waist and an outer garment.

These seven towns have at present 2,700 inhabitants, though they are much dilapidated, and when in their glory they doubtless contained a far greater number.

Mr. Powell says further:

"The ruins of towns are found in great profusion throughout Nevada, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California, on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, on the western slope as well; * * * over all this vast territory, in every beautiful valley and glen, by every streamlet and every spring, on the high mountains, on the cliffs, away out in the deserts of drifting sand, and down in the deep cañon-gorges are found ruins, stone implements or fragments of pottery."

Mr. Powell thinks the Navahoes, the Apaches and kindred tribes have swept down in past ages from the north and gradually uprooted these ancient races, leaving only the feeble remnants that are now existing.

The Mexicans and Peruvians, when visited and conquered by Cortez and Pizarro, were far advanced in many arts of domestic life—in building, weaving, road-making, tilling, etc., etc.

The Natchez, a tribe of great intelligence but of limited numbers, and dwelling on the Lower Mississippi, claimed to be descendants of the ancient inhabitants and declared that their progenitors had occupied that land for unknown centuries.

The traditions of the Indians of the northern lake region extend back for "thousands of moons," even to the time, as these traditions declare, in which the Mastodon, whose remains abound throughout the region, still dwelt in those wilds.

And now, interesting questions press themselves upon our notice: Who are they—whence came they—how long dwelt they—whither went they—how came they to leave the region—are any traces of them still remaining—and if so, where and what and how many?

WHENCE CAME THESE RACES?

Conjecture is idle. But opinions are rife and diverse—and fruitless. Baldwin thinks they came from the southward—gradually extending through the great valley farther and still farther toward the North. This conjecture may be true. But even this would be only an approximation.

How came they in Central America? Was that the grand center from whence the conquering hordes came northward to the great lakes and over the vast land of the Western Cordilleras, and spread southward to Peru? And if so, we repeat, how came they in Central America? Echo answers, how? Or did they come from the North, going southward, still and ever southward? The settled opinion seems to be that the invaders who swept those older races from the face of the country came from the North; and, if so, why not the former occupants as well? And then again the question arises, whence came those northern invading hordes if such there were? That portion of the continent could not now nourish such hosts of men, nor furnish such a birthplace of nations—how could it in ancient times?

Some insist upon an American center and originating point for the race, or rather for "one of the races," as they say. Be it so—but that only multiplies the miracle of the creation of man, requiring not one but many "Edens." The sad fact appears to be that much, very much of our opinion upon such subjects is bare conjecture—simply "guess-work" and nothing more. It is granted that races other and older than the Indians of Columbus's, or at least of De Soto's time, have filled the land; but who they were, whence they came, how long they dwelt, who swept them away, and when and how the dread result was accomplished we may imagine, we may guess, but the world will be none the wiser therefor; and these questions, though full of interest, can probably never find an answer.

There might, indeed, be some apparent ground for an opinion that the ancient inhabitants of Mexico, Yucatan, Peru and Colorado, as found by the Spanish explorers and conquerors in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, are the descendants of the same people who built the "mounds" and "forts" and "embankments" of the central regions; yet even this is only a "may be so."

And, where history is utterly wanting, conjecture is wholly unable to supply the lack. Volumes might be written, as they have already been, and doubtless will be in time to come, but who will know any more of the matter through their means?

But not to dwell. This ancient people (or succession of peoples) must have been numerous, intelligent, skillful, enterprising and of long continuance; and the loss of their history to the world is a misfortuue that can never be regarded otherwise than with profound regret.

The scant and meager remains that still exist from their numerous and widely scattered works, make us wish only the more that we could know who and whence were this wondrous and mysterious race of men.

A book is extant, indeed, written some thirty years ago, containing an account, apparently authentic and sincere, of the travels and explorations of the author in the Mississippi Valley, as to the mounds in that vast region, which declares as a fact that he found among the Dakota or Sioux Indians, a venerable chief of great age, named De-coo-dah, who claimed to be the last surviving member of the Elk tribe, who were the remnants of the ancient Mound-Builders. The author affirms that the old chief traveled with him in the explorations of the ancient relics; and, moreover, that he made abundant statements, giving the traditions handed down from his ancestors, of the reason and purpose of the different kinds of structures visited by them. The work is now very rare, only three copies being known to exist. One belongs to Prof. E. H. Butler, of Winchester, obtained, after much time and trouble spent in search of it, through Clarke & Co., publishers, of Cincinnati. Another was found in some old library in the southern part of Indiana by Daniel Hough, Esq., late of Fountain City, Ind., and now in the library left by him at his decease. That copy was obtained by Mr. Hough by exchanging therefor $20 worth of other books. Another one is known to be in existence in the United States but its exact locality cannot now by us be given. The title and description of the book is as follows: "Traditions of De-coo-dah, and Antiquarian Researches, comprising extensive explorations, surveys and excavations of the wonderful and mysterious remains of the Mound-Builders in America; the Traditions of the last Prophet of the Elk Nation relative to their origin and use; and the evidences of an ancient population more numerous than the present Aborigines, by William Pigeon. Published at New York by Horace Thayer, 18 Beekman street, New York, 1858. Entered in the Southern District of New York, 1852."

If space could be spared for the purpose, which, however, cannot now be done, it would be of deep interest to give a resume of the contents of the treatise in question. Whether the book be a true recital or not, we cannot tell. It seems to have every mark of authenticity, and no appearance of fraud or trickery of any kind. The announcement of the chief fact, that the author had discovered a descendant of the Mound-Builders, may strike many as being strange; yet such a thing would be in itself no more strange than the fact that the Welsh are descendants of the ancient Britons.

RELICS.

Numerous indeed and wonderful are the relics of these unknown races of men, scattered through the length and breadth of the Mississippi Valley and elsewhere; some of which also are to be found in the county of Randolph. In Ohio alone, more than 10,000 mounds, and 1,500 inclosures and embankments are said to have been found, all presumably the work of these races. These mounds, etc., are found often covered by trees from five to eight centuries old.

Shell heaps, apparently gathered by human hands, abound all along the coast from Nova Scotia to Florida—some of them are very extensive. One heap upon Stalling's Island in Savannah River, 200 miles from its mouth, is 300 feet long, 120 feet wide, and 15 feet high. Doctor Koch of St. Louis states that in 1839 he dug up, in the bottom lands of the Bourbeuse River (in Missouri), at eight or nine feet deep, the bones of a mastodon, with legs standing erect and sunk in the deep tenacious clay. Fires had been kindled around it, and, in the ashes, from two to six inches deep, were found half-charred wood, half-burned bones, stone arrow-heads, stone axes, rough stones, etc.

A year later the same gentleman discovered, in the bottom of the Pomme de Terre River, Benton County, Mo., a skeleton of a mastodon, almost entire, with two arrow-heads underneath it. They lay in a bed of vegetable mold covered by strata of sand, clay and gravel, hitherto undisturbed, and on the surface stood a forest of old timber.

The works which have been discovered are of different kinds in different regions. In Ohio, Indiana and Illinois the mounds are round, square, or having many angles, re-entrant or otherwise. In some regions, mounds are found in the shape of animals.

In Wisconsin, a few miles below the mouth of the Wisconsin River, is one called the "Big Elephant Mound," from its shape like an elephant. The length is 135 feet, and its width is in proportion.

Many of the works were probably for defense, many for burial, some, perhaps, for worship, while to some no apparent purpose has been assigned. Many of them are very large.

On the Scioto River are embankments, the aggregate length of which is twenty miles! The walls, in some cases, are twenty-five feet high, with an outside ditch fifty to eighty feet wide.

Some inclosures contain 150 acres of ground. They are arranged in groups of squares, circles, squares in circles, circles in squares, etc.

The mounds are of various shapes—pyramids, circles, truncated, terraced, approached by inclined planes and what not. Avenues between embankments appear, extending, in one instance, near the Ohio River for sixteen miles.

The squares, circles, etc., are perfect, and, in some cases, more than a mile in circuit. Their shape and measurement are so accurate as to show a high degree of geometrical knowledge and skill.

There are some Temple Mounds, so-called because they appear like the Mound Temples in Mexico. Altar Mounds occur, containing layers of ashes, etc.

In many of them are found relics of various kinds—pottery, arrow-heads, axes and hammers (made of stone), copper tools, pipes, images, and sometimes human bones, though mostly the sand banks and the gravel banks alone seem to have been used for places of burial.

The copper mines of Minnesota would appear at some remote period to have been extensively worked by some ancient unknown people. Trenches, twenty feet deep, have been found by modern miners, containing tools made of stone, of copper and of wood, and covered by centuries of vegetable and forest growth. In one deserted mine in Minnesota there was found, eighteen feet down, a mass of copper ore weighing six tons, raised up on a frame of wood five feet high, apparently for removal. How they did these things, moved this mass, worked their copper, made their tools, etc., is entirely unknown. Whether they used fire and molds, or pounded the tools into shape with their ponderous stone hammers, or otherwise, will always remain a fathomless mystery. Some of the mounds were of immense size. One at Cahokia, Ill., covered six acres of ground, and its truncated top measured 200 by 450 feet, and its cubical area equaled one-fourth of that of the great Pyramid of Ghizeh in Egypt. There are graded roads leading from terrace to terrace, evidently for easiness of access.

In Ohio has been found a work combining a square with two circles. Each square measures exactly 1,080 feet to a side, and the circles are precisely 1,700 and 800 feet. Implements have been discovered made of polished porphyry, of granite, of jasper, of quartz and of obsidian.

ANTIQUITIES.

[NOTE.—All kinds of curious antiquities are given promiscuously in the following sketch, whether strictly pre-historic or not, and even though not pertaining to the "Mound-Builders."]

RANDOLPH COUNTY.

There are many antiquities in Randolph County, mounds, embankments, etc., some of which are described below:

1. One of the best known is to be seen (partly) in the fair grounds northwest of Winchester. It is an inclosure of forty-three acres in the form of an exact square. The embankment was from seven to ten feet high, with openings east and west eighty feet wide; as also having a mound in the center of the area fifteen feet high. The whole inclosure and the embarkment also, when found by the first settlers was covered with large forest trees exactly like the adjacent regions. The eastern opening was unprotected, the western one was surrounded outwardly by an embankment shaped like a horse shoe open toward the gate, joined on the north side to the main embankment, but left open at the south side of the gate for a passage to the outer grounds.

The embankment has been considerably lowered throughout the greater portion of its extent by cultivation, by the passage of highways, etc., but it is still several feet high, and is very plainly traceable along its entire extent.

Some of the bank on the south side toward the southeast corner still remains as it existed at the first settlement of the country. That part is now some six feet high, and perhaps twenty-five feet wide. A large portion of the eastern bank has lately been dug away for the purpose of brick-making, and it is said that charcoal is found scattered throughout the mass of clay composing the embankment.

On the side of a creek not very far distant were gravel banks containing great quantities of human bones, which are said to have been hauled away by wagon loads. These skeletons were many of them large, but the bones were much decayed, and crumbled readily when disturbed and brought out to the air.

2. Another embankment exists on the Heaston farm west of Winchester, near the crossing of Sugar Creek, inclosing perhaps an acre—not very high.

3. There are mounds in Washington Township. One is near the Hogback Pike on the right of the Winchester and Lynn road. It covers two acres and is forty or fifty feet high.

4. Up Sugar Creek on the Huntsville pike, a burial place was excavated, throwing out bones and other things.

5. A remarkable hill or mound, forty or fifty feet high, comprising several acres, round like a flattish hay-stack, is in the southeast corner of Washington Township.

6. In Painter's gravel bank in the bluffs of Bear Creek, near Elder Thomas Addington's (Section 32, 20, 14), were found (in 1879) fifty or sixty skeletons of human frames. Some had been buried separately and some were in a trench three feet deep. Those buried singly were in a sitting posture with the lower limbs extending horizontally. Those in the trench appeared to have been thrown in promiscuously, some of them crosswise. Some of the graves had been eight feet deep, others only three or four. In the trench was surface earth mixed with the gravel, elsewhere the gravel was pure. Whether the gravel diggers have uncovered the whole trench is not known.

Many, perhaps most, of the skeletons were of unusual size. One jaw was so large as so pass readily outside when applied to an ordinary man's face. One thigh bone was so long that, when put beside the thigh of a man six feet high, the lower part of the bone reached four inches below the knee.

The teeth in the jaws were perfectly sound, some were much worn but none were decayed. No hair was found, nor any woody nor fibrous material, such as cloth, etc. The bones were brittle but the teeth were firm and solid. Elder Thomas Addington saw these things personally, helping to take the gravel from the bank, and the bones from the gravel. He is a sober-minded, intelligent, truthful man. Mr. Painter put the bones in a box, and buried them on his farm.

Mr. Addington said one of the skeletons had high cheek bones and long, thin skull like an Indian, and beside it were a pipe and dog. The others were not so.

7. Skeletons have been found in, and taken from a gravel bank near Joseph Mills's, on the Windsor pike, two miles southeast of Farmland.

8. Two skeletons were found in Jones's bank near Olive Branch.

9. East of Windsor and north of the Pike, on Esq. Thompson's farm, may be seen a large oval mound, covering an acre, and twenty-five or thirty feet high. It is 450 yards round the base and longer than it is wide. When dug into, it shows clay mixed with ashes, and coal more or less. A chunk, seeming to have been a sod of grass, was thrown up from the bottom of a hole twenty feet deep, dug from the top vertically downward. A red oak tree, four feet through, was standing (forty years ago) near the top of the mound, but no other trees of much size were on its surface. The ground around the mound was then covered with large forest trees. There are now many trees growing along the sides of the mound, from six to fifteen inches through.

An excavation of considerable size appeared (forty years ago) perhaps twenty rods from the base of the mound, which is thought to be the place whence the earth for its construction was taken.

Another smaller mound lies across the river not far away.

Esq. Thompson has preserved many fine specimens of arrow heads, hatchets, hammers, pestles, etc., picked up on his farm. The hatchets and hammers have hollows cut around them for withe handles. The relics are all of stone. Many of them are worked smooth and highly polished.

10. There was found on Section 34, Town 20, Range 12, on Bear Creek, Franklin Township, by George Addington, on the farm upon which he resides, a hidden well. He was digging in a low but not boggy place on his farm for stock-water. About three feet down he struck some puncheons lying flat, and upon removing them he found below a hollow "gum," and a well, inclosed by the gum, ten or twelve feet deep. He put in an oil barrel to complete the "curb," and the well is there now, and he uses it to water his stock.

11. Arthur McKew, of Ridgeville, a prominent and reliable citizen of the county for nearly fifty years, says that, when he was taking the assessment of Greensfork Township (say thirty-five years ago), a light-colored mulatto man who lived apart from the "settlement" and who had a white wife, showed him, not far from his house, what seemed to be a sort of a sunken well, filled with logs set endwise in the earth, the ends of the logs reaching to the top of the ground. The well (if it was a well) was in the center of a brush-pond, with more or less water around it. The roots of the trees for some distance around had been "blazed," the blazes pointing from several directions toward the well as a central point.

Mr. McKew saw the well and the sunken logs and the blazed trees, and it was his understanding that none of the settlers had dug the well, nor filled it up nor had done the blazing, and that none of them knew anything about how the thing came there.

[NOTE.—The country in the region had been settled some thirty years, and it is possible, though hardly probable, that the work had been done by some of the settlers.]

12. There is a large, whitish, mound-like hill or knoll, round and smooth, with neither trees nor grass, not far from Snow Hill Station, north of Lynn, on the Grand Rapids Railroad, east of the railroad and west of the pike. This knoll, covered in the winter with snow, is thought to have given the name to the old town, or hamlet, of Snow Hill.

13. The graveyard in Jericho (Friends) seems to have been an ancient burial ground, and human bones have at different times been thrown out where none were known to have been buried. The graveyard is a large gravelly knoll, of an acre or more, ten or fifteen feet high, at a distance from any stream of water.

14. The gravel bank which forms the graveyard at Arba is an ancient burial ground.

15. Bones have been taken from a gravel bank northwest of Spartansburg.

16. Human bones were found in a gravel hill north of Stocksdale's, east of the pike, and southeast of Bartonia.

17. In a gravel bank on the west side of White River, west of Mt. Zion Church, near Nathan Butts's, were found several skeletons; and, with nearly every one, coals of fire seem to have been thrown in. They were three or four feet below the surface, lying horizontally, and mostly large. The teeth were solid, though some were worn.

[Rev. N. T. Butts, who lives near and helped take them out, is our informant.]

18. There is a considerable knoll, or mound, in Washington Township, west of the railroad and of the wagon road that passes along west of the railroad and parallel thereto. It is southwest of Snow Hill station, located in Cal. Johnson's field, and in sight of the large clayey knoll (No. 12).

19. There are some circular embankments on the Bales farm (now owned by Mr. Branson), not far from Cedar (Friends) Meeting House, in Stony Creek Township, a little north of Cabin Creek. In one place there are two circular embankments together. The circles cut each other. A mound is in the center of each circle, higher than the embankment. The earth for both the wall and the mound would seem to have been taken from the space between the two. The embankments are now about three feet higher than the level of the ground outside. The central mounds are perhaps ten feet across and four feet high. The ground inclosed in both is about three acres, two acres in the larger and one acre in the smaller. There is an opening like a wagon-way on the east side of each inclosure.

20. Another on the same farm (Bales's) and on the other side of Cabin Creek, is a semi-circle opening to the west. The opening is nearly closed by a curved bank, except a space about twelve feet wide at each end of the bank. There are depressions leading through the passage ways. In the center is a mound fifteen feet across, and the inclosure is about two feet high (1880), containing two acres. South and near by, is another mound fifteen feet across and four feet high.

The fields have been tilled thirty or forty years (or even longer.) At first they were covered by the forest and their height was much greater than at present.

21. Near Buena Vista a stone wall was found near the surface at the base of a hill, extending downward into the earth. How deep it went or how long the wall was, our informant does not know. The part he saw was a rod or so long. It was between Buena Vista and Unionsport, on the south side of the road, on land owned by Elliott, about one-half mile south of the road.

22. Temple Smith (now living near Stone Station) picked up a stone (triangular, six inches to a side) an inch thick, scooped hollowing in the middle on both sides, very smooth, and highly polished, of a dark, yellowish cast.

23. On Mulligan's farm east of Stone Station, Mr. Lewis found (ten or twelve years ago), a dark, streaked stone, very smooth, long and round, two inches through, with a smooth, round hole drilled nearly through lengthwise; one end had been broken off, the other was smooth and flat.

24. Zimri Moffat, east of Winchester, found a tombstone with part broken off, 144 years old. [When it was found was not told].

25. When digging a well near Solomon Wright's, not far from the mouth of Cabin Creek, the diggers found, at the depth of twenty-five feet, a walnut log six inches thick. They cut the log out as long as the width of the well, and brought it to the top. This was thirty years ago. The log lay at least ten feet below the channel or bed of Cabin Creek near by.

26. A Mr. Osborn, who was at Amos Smith's, one-half mile south of Powers' Station, Jay County, Ind., told as follows [1880]:

In a ditch dug by Joseph Stevens, in the northeast part of Green Township, nearly south of Powers' Station, to drain a pond, great numbers of human bones were taken out, many being of unusual size. The jaw bones were full of teeth.

The jaws were brittle, and the teeth, though sound and solid in texture, were yet so loose as to shake readily in the sockets.

There was found also what seemed to be a shriveled hand, like the hand of a little child.

[NOTE.—Whether any remains of mastodons or other huge animals have come to light in Randolph County, we are unable at present to say. No such discovery has ever come to our knowledge].

CHAPTER II.

INDIAN HISTORY.

GENERAL—INDIAN TRIBES—RACES—CHIEFS—MISCELLANEOUS—REMINISCENCES—TROUBLES—WARS—TREATIES—RESERVES—TOWNS—BURYING GROUNDS—RETROSPECT—DESTINY—WHITE AND CHIEF—PEACE COMING—TECUMSEH'S WAR—THE END.

GENERAL.

FROM its first discovery by De Soto in 1540, as also at and after the time when La Salle and the French pioneers explored the great river in 1680, down to the period of which we intend more especially to treat, there had been existing through the whole Mississippi Valley a somewhat dense Indian population. When De Soto reached the Mississippi (as related by his chronicler), "A great cacique, Aquixo, came to meet the strangers with an imposing array of 200 canoes, filled with armed men, a part of whom stood up to protect the rowers with feathered shields, but all with their bodies and faces painted, and their heads adorned with plumes of many colors. The caciques and other chiefs were sheltered under awnings. The canoes were most neatly made, and were very large, and, with their pavilions, feathers, shields and standards, looked like a fleet of galleys. They brought presents of fish and fruit and bread; and came, they said, to welcome and do homage to the strangers."

And when the French explorers floated down the river to Akansea, and when La Salle after them and 140 years later than De Soto, guided his adventurous canoe along the current of the mighty Father of Waters downward to the Gulf of Mexico, and set up the cross and the flag of France, as a token of the proud claim that this whole vast region belonged by right of discovery and exploration to the haughty monarch of that proud kingdom,—they found, at every point, abundant evidences of a numerous population.

INDIAN TRIBES.

At that time and long before it, the region now composing the territory of Indiana was occupied by the tribes of Indians belonging to the Miami confederacy.

That confederacy consisted of several Algonquin tribes, and it had been formed many years before for mutual protection and defense, especially against the fierce and powerful Iroquois, or Five Nations, who had made frequent and fatal incursions into the beautiful valley against the Indians dwelling therein. Prominent among these Western tribes were the Miamis, the Pottawatomies, the Weas, the Piankeshaws, etc.

KEKIONGA.

At the junction of the St. Mary's and the St. Joseph's, near what is now the city of Ft. Wayne, stood, as the key to the grand thoroughfare from the lakes to the Ohio, Kekionga, the ancient and venerated capital of the Miamis. It had been visited by white men at least as early as 1676 (and perhaps even much earlier than that, as late researches into the French accounts of the explorations of those times would seem to indicate). Says a narrator, Judge ——, given in Tuttle's History of Indiana:

"The ancient route between the Ottawa (Maumee) and the Wabash, and onward to the Ohio and the Mississippi, was first made known to the French in Canada by a visit of one of their priests from the mission on Lake Michigan to Kekionga about the year 1676. Nor can there be any doubt that Baron La Salle was at Kekionga in the year 1680, as his letter to the Governor General of Canada states that fact, and also mentions that the route alluded to had already been traversed by French traders from Canada."

La Salle is said by some to have built a stockade fort at Kekionga in 1680. Vincennes was at the place in 1705, and found there several Indian traders from Pennsylvania. Perhaps Vincennes at that time (1705) built the French stockade, the dim outlines of which were still visible when Gen. Wayne built Ft. Wayne in 1794.

INDIAN RACES.

A brief account may here be given of the Western Indians, and of their Eastern enemies.

Two great confederacies had been formed.

1. The Iroquois in the East. 2. The Miamis in the West.

The Iroquois confederacy is supposed to have begun with the Mohawks, that tribe uniting at first with the Oneidas. Afterward the league was enlarged by the accession thereto of the Onondagas, the Senecas, the Cayugas; and, after many years, finally by the Tuscaroras (in 1712). Their territory was at first in New York and Canada, but they enlarged their hunting grounds by conquest, till at length they roamed over parts of New England, over New York, Kentucky, Virginia and Illinois. They had warred against the tribes in the Ohio region, and obliged them also to combine for the common protection and defense.

The Algonquins, consisting of many tribes, occupied portions of the country from Massachusetts and New Jersey on the east to the Mississippi on the west. The chief nations were the New England Indians, the Mohegans, Delawares and Powhatans in the central East, and the Ottawas, Chippewas, Sacs and Foxes, Miamis, Shawnees, etc., in the Mississippi Valley.

The Algonquins were a splendid race, rivaled only by the Dakotas in the West and the Iroquois in the Lake Regions. The Miamis were perhaps the leading Algonquin nation, at any rate, among the ablest belonging to that race.

The tribes mainly inhabiting Indiana were the Miamis, the Pottawatomies, the Weas and the Kickapoos.

The Shawnees were chiefly in Southern Ohio and Kentucky and the Illinois between the Wabash and the Mississippi.

The tribes in the Mississippi Valley, northwest of the Ohio, had been greatly weakened by their fierce conflicts with the powerful Iroquois, yet they still had considerable strength. For many years after the coming of the French, they were able to muster a large array of armed warriors, equipped for attack or for defense, and, even up to the beginning of the second decade of the nineteenth century, continued to cause much fear and suffering, and great calamity upon the encroaching and aggressive white man.

INDIAN CHIEFS.

Miamis, Me-che-cun-na-quah, or Little Turtle, 1747–1812. Jean B. Richeville (Richardville), 1761–1841. Francis La Fontaine, 1810–1847. The Godfroys, Francois and Lewis, lived at Godfroy Farm, and then at the mouth of the Mississinewa.

Pottawatomies, Metea, died 1827; Waubunsee, war of 1812.

Delawares, Red Hawk, battle of Kanawha.

Cayuga or Mingo, Logan, battle of Kanawha.

Shawnee, Spemica Lawba (High-horn) or Capt. Logan, born on Mad River, Ohio, 1788; friendly to the whites; gave great aid to the whites; killed near Fort Wayne, 1812.

Cornstalk, battle of Kanawha, 1774; treacherously murdered by the white soldiers in a fort which he had entered peaceable and friendly.

Shawanose, Blue Jacket, at Wayne's victory, 1794; chief spirit among the tribes. Black Wolf, born in Florida, of high rank; cunning, graceful, brave; was at Braddock's defeat, and so on to 1794; was mild and merciful; died at Wapokonetta, one hundred and ten years old. Tecumseh, born on Mad River, Ohio, 1768; killed on the Thames, Canada, 1813. The Prophet, brother of Tecumseh, confederate with him; survived the war; pensioned by British Government.

Wyandots, Nicholas; conspiracy of 1747–48.

Ottawas, Pontiac, war of 1763, near Detroit.

BIOGRAPHIES.

Mr. Hawkins says: (Joseph Hawkins, of Jay County, Ind.) "I was well acquainted with Johnny Green, the old Indian warrior mentioned by Jere Smith.

"The Indian chiefs were Cornstalk, Blue Jacket, Split Log and Capt. Johnny, Shawnees or Delawares; Richardville and the two Godfroys, François and Lewis, Miamis.

"This Cornstalk was not the chief who led the Indians in the battle of the Kanawha, 1774. That Cornstalk (as also his son) was basely shot while in a fort by the soldiers therein, into which he and his son had gone in a peaceable and friendly manner."

Mr. Hawkins was intimate when a boy with the Godfroy chiefs and their families. He gives the following incident concerning Poqua Godfroy (son of Chief François):

"Poqua Godfroy (son of Chief François) got into an affray at Hamilton. He was about twenty-one years old. He was frightened, and thought the white folks were going to kill him, and so he tried to be beforehand with them, and slashed away right and left himself. He was arrested for assault and battery, but was at length released on bail, and suffered to depart. On his way home, the first man he saw whom he knew was my brother, Samuel Hawkins, at Winchester, after the mail. The boy was wild with joy; he cried out, 'O, you my friend; you shall go home with me. They try to kill me, but you my friend!'

"And Samuel took his mail that way, and went home with Poqua and stayed overnight at the house of the old chief, much to the delight of the frightened Indian boy and his aged father also." Chief Godfroy afterward moved to the mouth of the Missinewa, and died there not far from 1840. His stately monument is still to be seen on the north side of the river near the mouth.

Godfroy was the home chief, and Richeville was the war chief of the Miamis. Godfroy was an honest, upright, reliable man, esteemed by the whites and beloved by the Indians.

Black Hoof [Cat-ahe-kasa], a Shawnee chief, was born in Florida, while his tribe sojourned in the South. They returned to Ohio and he with them.

The time of his birth is not known, but he was a leading chief at Braddock's defeat, in 1755, and in all the Indian wars for forty years afterward.

He felt keenly the encroachments of the whites, and fought them with the bitterness of desperation. But, seeing at last the utter hopelessness of the struggle, he yielded, and ever afterward he stood for peace. Tecumseh tried to draw the old chief into his conspiracy, but tried in vain. Black Hoof had fought the whites long enough, and bade the fierce Tecumseh go his way. He opposed polygamy, living forty years with a single wife and rearing a large family of children. He died at Wapokonetta, aged one hundred and ten years.

Blue Jacket [Wey-a-pier-sen-wah], a Shawnee chief, was the Indian leader at their defeat by Gen. Wayne in 1794. In the council held before the battle, the decision would have been for peace, but his voice changed the day, and they made the attack and were routed.

He was at the treaty of Greenville, spoke for peace, signed the treaty and kept his word.

Cornstalk (the elder) was a Shawnee chief of bravery and distinction, and one of the leaders of his tribe at the battle of the Kanawha (Point Pleasant), Va., in 1776. He had tried before that disastrous engagement to induce his people to bury the hatchet, but in vain. After that, however, his efforts were crowned with success. He submitted in good faith to the whites, joined in the treaty and observed it faithfully, and lived quietly and at peace. Some of the Indians, however, remained hostile, and such was the temper of the times and so ready were the whites to commit atrocities against the helpless "red men," that, in 1777, when Cornstalk and his son, Enilipsco, both of excellent character, of kindly disposition, and entirely and sincerely friendly and peaceable, entered, in amity and good will, the American fort at Point Pleasant, they were murdered in cold blood. Cornstalk himself fell pierced by seven or eight bullets. His grave is said yet to be visible at Point Pleasant near the site of the ancient fortress.

Some of the descendants of the old chief are thought to be still living, residing on the Kansas River. One of his sons lived to a greatly advanced age.

"Johnny Green" was a chief who dwelt in the region of Randolph, and was well known to many of the settlers of that time. Several mention him in their "Reminiscences." He was somewhat noted in the Indian wars, being present at "Wayne's victory" in 1794. He is supposed to have been concerned in the killing of Morgan in Wayne County. He had much provocation to the deed, since Morgan was a bitter "Indian hater," and had, not very long before, undertaken treacherously to procure the murder of the old Indian. At Brookville (perhaps), "Johnny" had obtained leave to accompany some whites in a trip they were making. Soon after they started, Morgan, among others, tried to induce the crowd to kill Green, and succeeded in getting a vote to that effect. One of the party took Johnny under his protection, and got him safely away.

A white man was burned at the stake by the Indians somewhere east of Muncie, but the particulars of the fact, whether as to reasons, time or parties engaged, we have never learned.

[NOTE.—Whether this "Johnny Green's tribe" (mentioned below) belonged to the "Johnny Green" already named, we are not able to state. There may have been more than one "Johnny Green," as there were two "Cornstalks" and two "Killbucks."

Johnny Green's Tribe.—They emigrated to the West and settled in Iowa, and they now live in Story County, near Marshalltown, on the Iowa River, above Iowa Rapids.

Johnny Green, the old chief, is dead, and his son, "Buck Green," is now chief. The number of the tribe is about 350. They own a reserve of land; have good houses and dress mostly like whites, though the women go bareheaded and wear blankets and moccasins, Indian-fashion.

The men spend most of their time in hunting; the women make baskets and beadwork and other curious things. The tribe is harmless and peaceable. The squaws may often be seen riding by on ponies, with pannier baskets laden with trinkets for sale, and having, besides, a child in each basket, the whole cavalcade presenting a sight comical to behold. [This account is given by a friend of the author's, who resides in Iowa in the vicinity of the tribe in question].

Francis La Fontaine, Miami Chief.—His Indian name was To-pe-ah. His father was French and his mother a Miami woman, and he was born near Ft. Wayne, in 1810. In 1832, he married Catharine (Po-con-go-qua), daughter of Chief Richardville, and upon the old chief's death was chosen principal chief. He moved to the forks of the Wabash, and lived there till the removal of his tribe west of the Mississippi, in 1846.

He spent the Winter with his people, but returned in the spring; was taken ill on the journey, and died at La Fayette, April 13, 1847, aged thirty-seven years. In person, he was tall, corpulent and robust, a man of wonderful size and strength, his usual weight being 350 pounds. He presented, when dressed in Indian costume, a splendid specimen of manly dignity.

He had seven children, only two of whom are now living.

His body was embalmed at La Fayette, brought to Huntington and buried there.

Edward Edger, long time a dealer in furs, etc., with the Indians, says that one chief La Fontaine, was living there ten or twelve years ago, on the Indian Reserve, that he visited that chief at that time, at his house in that region.

John B. Richardville (Pe-che-wa), was the son of the sister of Little Turtle, Taucumwah, by a French trader, Joseph Drouet de Richeville, born about 1761. Pe-che-wa became the recognized chief by a daring act of humane valor when but a young man. He was present at Harmar's defeat in 1790; signed the treaty of Greenville in 1795, of Ft. Wayne and of Vincennes in 1809, and of St. Mary's in 1818.

In 1827, he built a fine dwelling on his reservation, five miles from Ft. Wayne. He was an extensive trader, having an establishment in Ft. Wayne, but moving, in 1836, to the Forks of the Wabash, he died at his house at St. Mary's, August 13 ,1841, aged about eighty-one years. He was of middling height and weight, quiet, modest and retiring, but genteel and manly in his deportment with the whites, and having a large influence over his people and, moreover, highly respected and confided in by the white settlers. His daughters erected a marble monument over his remains.

He was succeeded by Francis La Fontaine, who had married Catharine, daughter of Richardville.

Captain Logan (Spemica Lawba—High Horn), a Shawnee chief, was born on Mad River, Ohio, in 1778. He was captured when a lad by Capt. Benjamin Logan, of Kentucky, in 1786; was adopted by him, and afterward returned to his tribe, continuing, however, to be the friend of the whites. This friendship he showed in a most remarkable manner, finally sealing his fidelity with his blood.

He was one of Gen. Hull's guides to Detroit in 1812. Afterward he conducted twenty-five women and children from Ft. Wayne to Piqua, through the wilderness, with signal kindness and humanity, making the entire journey without sleep, and treating his helpless charge with the utmost gentleness and the most delicate attention.

During the siege of Ft. Wayne by the Indians, after the surrender of Detroit by Hull in August, 1812, it was determined to send relief from Piqua, and it became necessary to convey the information to the beleaguered fort. Two white men with Capt. Logan and some friendly and faithful Shawnees undertook the perilous task. They passed the besiegers and reached the fort in safety, and Capt. Logan, with Capt. Johnny and Bright Horn, two of his Indian companions, retraced their steps to their comrades, who were waiting outside the besiegers' lines. The re-enforcements reached the fort, and the Indians finally withdrew and abandoned the siege. Subsequently he met his death in a most affecting manner, which can be best related by quoting (substantially) from "Kingman Bros.' History of Allen County, Ind."

On the morning of November 22, 1812, a subordinate officer charged him with unfaithfulness. Stung by this charge and to prove its falsity, he started with Capt. Johnny and Bright Horn down the Maumee to reconnoiter. Suddenly they were surprised and captured by a company under Winamac, a Pottawatomie chief, and Elliot, a half-breed in the British employ. Seizing the opportunity, they attacked their captors, killing two and wounding three more. Logan, however, received a fatal wound, and Bright Horn was also wounded. Capt. Johnny mounted the two wounded men, each upon one of the enemy's horses, and started them toward the camp, which they reached about midnight. He stayed long enough to secure Winamac's scalp, and came in on foot, reaching camp by daylight. Capt. Logan lingered two days in intense suffering, and died. He was buried with the honors of war, but his death cast a gloom over the entire army, and especially caused great grief to him whose bitter words had impelled Capt. Logan to the act by which he met his untimely death at the early age of thirty-four.

Metea, a Pottawatomie chief, was a brave, skillful and athletic warrior, reaching the acme of his power during the war of 1812. He undertook to ambush Gen. Harrison's army as they were marching to the relief of Ft. Wayne.

He might perhaps have succeeded, but his party were discovered by Capt. Mann of the American forces. Metea was behind a tree, but his left arm was exposed. Capt. Mann instantly took aim, crippled the arm, and rushed forward in hot pursuit. Metea fled and escaped.

The chief's arm never recovered, and Metea often recounted the incident, giving Capt. Mann great praise for his bravery. He was remarkably intelligent, a fine orator, and an acute reasoner. He died in 1827 from poison by some hostile Indians.

Little Turtle (Me-che-cun-ne-quah) was the son of Aquenac-que, a great Miami war chief, who represented his nation at the treaty of Lancaster, Penn., in 1748. Little Turtle was born in 1748. His mother was a Mohegan, and a superior woman. They lived at the Turtle village on Eel River, sixteen miles northwest of Fort Wayne. He showed remarkable power and skill even from boyhood, and, on the death of his father, was chosen chief of his tribe. He proved the wisdom of the choice by his wonderful prowess. He led the savages at Harmar's and St. Clair's defeats; he was at the attack on Fort St. Clair, near Eaton, Ohio, in November, 1792, as also at the action at Fort Recovery, Ohio, in June, 1794. He took part in the fight at Wayne's victory in the fall of 1794, though he protested against attacking Gen. Wayne and advocated peace with the whites.

The Government built him a house on his reservation at Eel River in consideration of his efforts for peace, and he lived like a white man. In 1802 (or 1803), he appealed to the Legislature of Kentucky to stop the sale of liquors to the Indians, and likewise to that of Ohio, but without success. He said: "They [the traders] strip the poor Indian of skins, guns, blankets, everything, while the squaws and children lie shivering and starving in his wigwam,"—a picture true to the life, and a burning shame to the white race.

He firmly opposed Tecumseh in his schemes for a general war, and, January 25, 1812, wrote to Gen. Harrison pledging himself to do all in his power to preserve peace. But shortly afterward he died. He had the gout and went to Fort Wayne to obtain medical aid, but without avail, for he died July 14, 1812, at the "Old Orchard," in his tent. He was buried with the honors of war, and his Indian ornaments and accouterments, including a sword, given him by Gen. Washington, and a medal having upon it Gen. W.'s likeness, were buried with him.

Some years afterward Coesse, his nephew, who was himself a chief, came to Fort Wayne and pronounced a most eloquent and pathetic oration over the grave of his uncle, which was listened to with deep interest by many of the citizens of Fort Wayne.

Waubunsee, Pottowatamie, was a cruel and vindictive savage. He often became drunk, and was then more of a devil than a man; yet he was reckoned a brave and daring chief. He was one who added to the awful savagery of the terrible massacre after the surrender at Fort Dearborn by his ferocious brutality.

Francois Godfroy was a Miami chief; he lived on the "Godfroy Reserve" till about 1839, when he sold out and moved to the mouth of the Mississinewa, where he died about 1840, and where his monument is still to be seen on the north side of the river, near the mouth. He had three sons—Francis, Poqua and James.

There were several Indian villages in that region—White Woman's Village, Deaf Man's Village, Blind Man's Village, and Cote Sippon's Village. Meshomingia's Village was farther up the Wabash.

Godfroy was a fine specimen of Indian character, as were also several of the other chiefs of the region—Cornstalk, Richardville, La Fontaine, etc.

Tecumseh, Shawnee chief, was born near the Indian town of Piqua, on Mad River, Ohio, in 1768. His parents moved from Florida about 1750. His father was killed in the famous battle at Point Pleasant, on the Kanawha in Western Virginia. Tecumseh became leader of the tribe, being declared chief some time before 1795, living then near Deer Creek, Urbana, Ohio. In 1798, he is supposed to have changed his residence to White River, Indiana. Judge Wharry, of Greenville, whose memory extends back to those times, says that Tecumseh and his brother came to Mud Creek, near Greenville, and took up their residence there not far from 1799. He says that their tribe had driven them away, and that they were still living near Greenville at the first settlement of Darke County, and that the place where they had their dwelling is still called Tecumseh Point. If this be so, and Judge Wharry would seem to have the means of knowing the facts, the statement explains their whereabouts between 1798 and 1809. His brother, Lau-le-wa-si-kau, announced himself as a "Prophet" by the name of Pems-quat'a-wah (Open Door.) Tecumseh was five feet ten inches high, stoutly built, and of great endurance, of superior shrewdness and skill, and large intelligence for an Indian. He is stated to have been able to read and write. He is said also to have occupied the first dwelling on the site of Chicago. Tecumseh, in 1809, was at Harrison's treaty at Fort Wayne, and would not sign that treaty, severely denouncing also those who did so. In 1810, he traversed the Southern regions, stirring up the Indians of the whole eastern Mississippi Valley to vengeance and a war of extermination; and with much success, though many, especially in the Northwest, refused to join him.

He traveled incessantly, haranguing his dusky countrymen with wonderful eloquence, and amazing power and effect. He opposed land grants by the Indian tribes, declaring that they should give no more foothold to the white intruders. The excitement among the Indians was very great, though Tecumseh failed to carry the whole body of his race to his views and plans. If he had been able to do so, the disastrous results would have indeed been terrible beyond conception. Even as it was, they were fearful enough. Tecumseh was greatly enraged at his brother the Prophet, because he had precipitated the conflict between the Indians and the whites before he (Tecumseh) was ready. The result of the battle at Tippecanoe (Prophet's Town), so disastrous to the Indians, disconcerted their plans, and greatly discouraged the haughty leaders and their wild and savage followers; but the contest was still kept up for some two years, till the death of Tecumseh at the battle of the Thames, in Canada, in 1813, crushed the hopes of the warriors, and a lasting peace was made.

Gov. Harrison from Vincennes had tried to conciliate the chieftain and his brother before the war opened, but in vain.

He marched at length to Tippecanoe, and November 7, 1811, resisting a terrible night attack of seven hundred Indians, routed them in the morning, burned the Prophet's Town, and marched back to Vincennes triumphant.

Tecumseh was in the south at the time, and on his return, finding the Indian power broken, attached himself to the British, betaking himself and the braves who still clung to him to Canada for the purpose.

Tecumseh, though stern and savage, had yet some noble traits. He was less cruel than some of the British officers. Like the Mohawk chief, Thayandanega [Brant], in the Revolution, who was far less cruel than Col. Walter Butler, the Tory partisan, and many times saved prisoners when Butler would have slain them, so Tecumseh, though fierce and furious, yet interfered in behalf of mercy against the relentless Proctor, the British commander.

Tecumseh was active with the English in Canada after he joined them till he was killed at the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813. His death utterly crushed the hopes of the native confederacy. A large portion of the Indians had held out against all the efforts of Tecumseh and his brother, and now the "hostiles" submitted, and for this region Indian war was forever at an end.

In several battles soon after, in the south, the Indian power in that region also was demolished. At Emuckfau, January 22, 1814, the Creeks were defeated by Gen. Jackson. March 27, 1814, at Tohopeka [Horseshoe Bend], a bend in the Tallapoosa, the Creeks, a thousand strong, besides their women and children, in a strong fortification awaited the final onset of the whites. Gen. Jackson led his men to the attack, storming the breastworks and killing the whole number. The chiefs who were not at the battle submitted, and the power of the nation was at an end.

Maj. Adams, who was in Harmar's defeat, and who was in later years Judge of Darke County Court, had five balls shot into him in that terrible battle, which he carried to the end of his days, as a continual reminder of Indian prowess.

Gen. St. Clair was utterly unfit for the command of such an expedition into the wilderness against fierce and unruly savages. He was bed-ridden and helpless with the gout. He could neither mount nor dismount his horse without help, and his second in command, Brig. Gen. Richard Butler, was killed in the fatal battle resulting in St. Clair's defeat.

Harmar's army is said to have been in a wretched condition, lacking supplies and almost in mutiny. St. Clair's men, it is stated, were much in the same condition, the troops worn out with forced marches, and half starved with great lack of rations. Both armies were badly supplied, badly fed, badly led, badly handled; and bad, shameful, disgraceful defeats were the wretched result. The efforts of the Indian braves at various times since the intrusion of the European invaders to rid the country of their hated presence have indeed been heroic; and, in any other race of men, would have challenged and commanded the admiration of mankind. Opecancanough, Philip of Po-kan-o-ket, Pontiac, Tecumseh, Osceola, Capt. Jack, and others like them, struggled bravely, as much so, perhaps, considering the fearful odds against them, as any people under the sun, but ever in vain. They saw the wave of invasion rolling fiercely and ceaselessly over the land, and put forth herculean and sometimes frantic attempts to check its progress and destroy its power, but their cunning and their fury were alike for naught.

Tecumseh was an orator of wonderful power, and his speech in reply to Gov. Harrison, at Vincennes, was one of the most remarkable ever delivered. The chief was straight, athletic, manly, dignified; and in a most impassioned appeal he described the wrongs of his race by the white man, and declared his unconquerable determination to submit no longer, but to stand to the death, and crush the white man's power or be crushed thereby.

That interview between the two chieftains, Gov. Harrison and Tecumseh, is historic. It was the stern defiance of the red man, and his bitter challenge to a grand, final and exterminating conflict.

Tecumseh was bold, intrepid, arrogant. As the Governor was speaking, "Tell him he lies," broke from the Indian warrior, which ended the interview. The next day, at the final conference, Tecumseh said, "The whites must not cross the 'old boundary.'" Replied Gen. Harrison, "The United States will enforce the treaty, by the sword, if need be." "So be it," was the reply of the warrior, and they parted, to meet in person during life no more.

Tecumseh hasted southward, and, by heroic and almost superhuman exertions, he undertook to arouse the native tribes to relentless hostility. While he was absent, the battle of Tippecanoe had occurred, contrary to his express orders, and frustrating all his plans. Still, however, he kept a bold front, striving constantly to maintain the conflict against the United States. In 1812 or 1813, he joined Gen. Proctor at Malden, and took part in the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813, in which the famous chieftain was killed. By whom the act was done has been reckoned uncertain. Most have supposed that Col. R. M. Johnson, of Kentucky, was the fortunate personage, but a statement is made in a "History of Indiana and of Elkhart County," Charles C. Chapman & Co., Chicago, 1881, as follows, page 108:

"Tecumseh was killed at the battle of the Thames, October 5, 1813, by a Mr. Wheatly, as we are positively informed by Mr. A. J. James, now a resident of La Harpe Township, Hancock Co., Ill., whose father-in-law, John Pigman, of Coshocton County, Ohio, was an eye witness." Col. Johnson never positively claimed the honor of having killed Tecumseh, but his simple statement of the circumstances of that battle seemed to render it probable that he had done so, and most people have thought he did.

As has been stated, the death of Tecumseh crushed among the Indians every possible hope of success, and they succumbed to fate.

Lau-le-was-i-kaw, the Prophet, who called himself Pems-quat-a-wah (Open Door), was a Shawnee warrior, and the brother of the celebrated Tecumseh; was a good orator, and ingratiated himself with the tribes by denouncing witchcraft, the use of liquor, mingling with white men in marriage, dress, etc. He pretended to cure all diseases and to make his tribes victorious. He leagued with his brother, Tecumseh, establishing himself at a town near La Fayette.

In the battle of Tippecanoe, he stood on a hill singing a favorite war song, assuring them of an easy victory. Their defeat broke their faith in the Prophet and crushed the confederacy.

The Prophet took up his abode with a few Wyandots, on Wildcat Creek, his town being destroyed November 8, 1811.

In 1812, the Prophet and some warriors moved to Detroit and were received as friends and allies of Great Britain.

At the close of the war he retired to Canada, returning afterward to the Shawnee settlement in Ohio, and still again emigrating westward beyond the Mississippi, where he died in 1834. The British Government allowed him a pension till his death. Judge Wharry (often mentioned in these sketches) says that he, when a lad, saw the "Prophet," in 1813, at Franklinton, near Columbus, Ohio.

He seems to have been far inferior to his brother, the famous chieftain, in the elements of greatness; and to his incompetence as a leader, Tecumseh always charged the defeat of his plans and the crushing failure of all his schemes for the conquest of the whites; although it is, of course, true, that no possible combination among the Indians could have achieved success against the superior intelligence and power of the redoubtable white race.

Black Hawk, Sac chief, was a famous warrior and chieftain (born at the mouth of Rock River, 1767), who led his nation in the struggle of the savages against the whites about 1832. After a few months of conflict he was taken prisoner and carried to Washington and elsewhere, to let him realize by veritable eyesight the actual and wondrous superiority of the whites over his own people. He saw, and was convinced, and submitted to terms of peace and amity.

He died about 1837 or 1838, on the banks of the Des Moines, in Iowa, in what is now the county of Davis, where his remains were deposited above ground in Indian style. [Another account says he was buried in a grave six feet deep.] They were stolen and carried away, but were recovered by the Governor of Iowa, and placed in the museum of the historical society at Burlington, Iowa, where they were finally destroyed by fire.

David Connor, Indian trader and chief [white man], came to Greenville in 1811 or 1812, and opened a small store and trading house, from which he dispensed blankets, calico, powder, lead, flints, tobacco, whisky and what not, to the "noble red men." He was married, but his wife remained in Greenville, refusing to accompany him in his wild life among the Indians. Although a rough, hard man in many respects, yet he had some good traits. He wielded a great influence over the Indians, which he sometimes employed for good purposes. In about 1824 (so says Judge Wharry, of Greenville, Ohio, who knew Connor all his life) some New York Indians, traveling to Green Bay, were murdered by some white villains in Indiana. Connor succeeded in securing justice and keeping the peace, and the Miamis on that account made him a "chief" of their tribe, with all due ceremony. He established himself at Fort Recovery soon after the war of 1812 had closed in the West, probably in 1814. He had used his influence in securing the treaty of peace, and had made some enemies thereby. Several Indians came to his store one day, and told him they had come to kill him. "All right," said he "give me a few minutes to fix things up." They granted his request and sat down. Suddenly he took a keg of powder, poured it on a deer skin, and seizing a fire brand, swore in strong, rough Miami, that he and they "should go to h—ll together." They "got" in a "heap hurry." The Indians never molested him again. One of them told Judge Wharry: "Connor one devil of a man; he care no more for Indians than he care for himself."

He next built a shanty above Deerfield (1820–21). After a few years he moved down the river to three miles below Wheeling and twenty miles above Marion. Still again he moved three miles below Marion, bought land, built mills, grew rich, and died some years ago.

[NOTE. Some will have it that he had a station at Mississinewa crossing, near Allensville, and also one at Ridgeville, but the residents along the river do not understand the matter thus.]

At Greenville, the understanding was that he had a wife and two boys, and that she would not go with him in his wild, roving border life, and he "took up" with Polly Voorhees, by whom he raised a large family. He was a very rough, outbreaking man, so passionate that few dared to cross him. R. H. Sumption taught school near him, and six of his children attended the school. He did not call for his pay till the middle of the second term. The bill was large, and Mr. S. feared he might not take the matter kindly. Connor happened to be in good humor and paid the bill without a word. At one of his "posts," the Indians got "ahead" of him. He had a shed at the side of his cabin, and a log out on the side next the store-room, and as he bought bundles of skins, he would toss them through the "crack" into the shed. By some means the Indians made or found a hole from the outside into the shed, through which they got out parcels of skins. First one would get out a parcel and take it in and sell it to Connor, then another, and so on, till Connor began to wonder where they got so many coon skins. Polly had noticed the game of the "red skins," and at last she said, "Connor, you fool, how long are you going to buy your own coon skins?" "Why?" said he. "Because," said she, "those tarnal Ingins have been stealing your coon skins and selling them to you over and over." What he did then and there is not told, but we may easily guess that there was a "rumpus," or danger of one about that time. [Burgett Pierce and others mention Connor in their recitals.]

The "Jay County History" says "that a pioneer family lived for a considerable time in a cabin built at Fort Recovery, Ohio, by David Connor, for a trading house at that point. So that most probably Mr. Connor traded at one period with the Indians near Fort Recovery. Judge Wharry, of Greenville, who knew Connor well, states that he went from Greenville to Fort Recovery in 1814, and stayed and traded at that location for several years.

DEATH OF FLEMING.

We subjoin an account of the death of "Fleming," an Indian (not indeed a chief), which occurred near Ridgeville, soon after the settlement of that vicinity, given by Joseph Hawkins, Esq., of Jay County, Ind., as told him by parties acquainted with the transaction. Some account of the same tragedy may be found in the reminiscences of Thomas Ward, George Thomas, and perhaps others. One Smith, a mulatto, had a white wife. She told the Indian, Fleming, that if he would kill Smith she would marry him. The Indian shot Smith through the body, but did not kill him. Out of this in some way grew the fact that some half-drunk Indians (Fleming and others) made an attack on Joab Ward. He was at breakfast, and they came in armed with butcher knives. He arose, seized a gun from the hooks, and sprang backward to the outer door, and into the back yard, pointing his loaded gun at one and another of the gang. Elias Kizer managed to get another loaded gun, and joined Ward in the yard. Then Fleming began to run, and Ward told Kizer to shoot him, which he did, the bullet striking his foot, as it was raised in running, passing in at his heel and up his leg to his knee. The other Indians begged so hard that they were let go. Fleming got across the river and lay down in the bushes, remaining there some time. Jesse Gray, the famous "Indian hunter," hearing the fact, came with his brother John (a lad of sixteen), to shoot the Indian. He told his brother to shoot him. The Indian lay on his belly, and as the boy went to shoot, he bent his body upward from the ground; and as the boy shot, he drew himself suddenly down, hugging close to the ground, and the bullet only grazed his back. But he acted as though he had received a fatal shot, and they thought him killed and went off. After the poor fellow had been wounded (in all) three days, Lewallyn, from pity, took him in. Some days after, Jesse Gray and Smith came to Lewallyn's and shot Fleming in the bed as he lay, and killed him. The Indian saw them come, and turned over to the wall and wrapped his head in the blanket, and Smith put his gun against Fleming's back and shot him through the heart as he lay there in bed.

[NOTE.—Joab Ward told Hawkins as to the attack, and Charles Simmons, an employe of David Connor, told him as to what Gray and Smith did].

DEATH OF FLEMING—By Thomas Ward.

"A white man brought whisky and sold it to the Indians. That white man fell out with my father, Joab Ward, one morning, and told him he should 'smell h—l' in less than an hour. Within an hour's time three Indians, Fleming, Killbuck and another, came to father's house as they were eating breakfast, armed with big knives and partly drunk. Elias Kizer and Thomas Andrew were there. All three managed to get their guns. Fleming tried hard to kill father; but when the men got the guns, Fleming ran, and the other Indians began to beg. Elias Kizer shot Fleming as he ran, the ball striking his heel when his foot was raised, and running up his leg to his knee. He managed to cross the river, but fell in the weeds on the north bank, and lay there several days. Jesse Gray and his brother came and undertook to kill him as he lay in the weeds, and thought they had done so. They, however, did not injure him. Lewallyn, who lived near, took him in out of pity, but Smith, the mulatto whom Fleming had shot through but had not killed, came with Jesse Gray to Lewallyn's house and shot him dead in his bed, as he lay upon a pallet of deer skins. Before Fleming was killed, he kept on threatening to kill Joab Ward and my father."

It seems that the Indians were not much offended at the death of Fleming. He was vicious, and they had turned him off, and he skulked around, getting his living from place to place among the whites as he could. They came and buried him, but said, "He no good—Fleming bad Indian."

Jesse Gray, however, was afraid of the vangeance both of the Indians and the whites, and he fled the State, taking up his abode in Ohio, near Hill Grove, Darke County, and resided at that place several years.

Tyre T. Puckett, residing west of Winchester, relates, concerning the poor Indian, that Fleming lay wounded on a deer-skin at Lewallyn's cabin. The Indians, though they had banished him from their tribes, nevertheless took pity on him. In particular, "Aunt Sally," wife of "Uncle Jake," and mother of "Indian Jim," came and doctored him, and said he would get well. Gray and Smith came to the cabin. Gray undertook to get Mrs. Lewallyn out of the house; she resisted, and he pulled her out, she crying out meanwhile, "Don't do any murder here." Almost instantly she heard the shot, and, struggling back, she saw Fleming lay dead upon his pallet.

The grand jury (of which Mr. Puckett's father was a member) indicted Jesse Gray (and probably Smith) for the homicide, and a "true bill" was found against them. They fled the county and the State, and no special pains were taken to find them, since everybody was glad the "vicious Indian" was out of the way. Mrs. Lewallyn was the witness, of course, for the State, because she was the one (and the only one, perhaps) who saw the "deed," except indeed Smith and Gray themselves.

OTHER CHIEFS.

In the "History of Delaware County," by Kingman Brothers, may be found sketches of several other chiefs of the Delaware Indians, viz.: Tamanend, Capt. White Eyes, Capt. Pipe, Buckongahelas and Killbuck, Jr., for whose history we have no room. A brief mention must suffice. Tamanend was a mighty chief, brave, illustrious, patriotic and virtuous. The scene of his exploits was on the eastern seaboard, near Philadelphia, and he died about 1685.

Capt. White Eyes [Ko-gue-tha-gech-ton] was a distinguished Delaware Chieftain, and a firm friend of the Americans. During the Revolution, he steadfastly refused to be drawn into the struggle between England and America. He died at Philadelphia in 1780, supposed to be 120 years old.

Capt. Pipe [Hop-o-can, tobacco-pipe, and Ko-giesch-qua-no-hei, maker of daylight], was a noted war-chief of the Wolf tribe of the Delawares. He was an active partisan of the British, dying about 1818.

Buckongahelas was a more famous chief than Logan. He favored the English, but after Wayne's defeat he disdained their favor, and was firm in his friendship to the Americans. On his death-bed he adjured his people to desert the British, and remain steadfast to the United States. He was brave and truthful. His death occurred in 1804.

Killbuck, Jr. [Gelelemend] was the son of the elder Killbuck; was firmly attached to the United States, and was specially protected by them in a treaty made with his nation. He died in 1811, aged about eighty years.

Delawares.—Kithawenund, or Capt. Anderson, Peo-kee-lund, Magh-pi-way, or Red Feather, Pit-che-ke-ka-pou, The Beaver, Hock-ing-pom-skow, Lah-pah-ni-hi, or Big Bear, James Nanticope, Ne-te-ho-pun-a, Capt. Tu-nis, Capt. Ketch-um, The Cat, Ben Beaver, The War Mallet, Capt. Cagh-Koo, The Buck, Petche-nau-a-las, John Quake, Que-nagh-to-oth-mait, Little Jack.

Miamis.—Pucan, The Owl, Little Turtle, Wa-pe-mau-qua (the Loon), Silver Heels, Sha-wa-pe-no-mo.

The above signed the treaties made with their tribes in 1804, 1809 and 1818.

Other Indians.—Mont-see (Monsie) was chief of the Miamis and resided at Mont-see town (Muncie). An account of him is not at hand.

"Uncle Jake" resided at the Indian town near Muncie long after the rest of the natives had emigrated westward, and till his death, as did also his wife "Sallie," and his son "Jim." "Aunt Sally" died first; she was buried in the old Indian graveyard near their town, and her husband, "Uncle Jake," watched over her grave, keeping his lonely vigil for two weary days and nights, and when he died, "Indian Jim," their son, did the same for him; but when "Jim," poor fellow, died, he was the last of his race, and none was at hand to perform the solemn, sacred watch over his lonely grave. "Jake" was well known to the early settlers, a fine specimen of his nation; "tall, straight and stout, clever and nice when sober, but vicious when drunk,—" much like white people in that. "Sally" was very small, but active and sprightly; she, too, loved the bottle, and, like her husband, got drunk. "Jim" lived with the white settlers and became civilized, working and earning his livelihood in a friendly, peaceable manner. It is not many years since his death took place. (See History of Delaware County, 1881.) This family seem to have been dwellers in Randolph County in the early time, since Ira Swain, coming to the region when a small lad, used to know them, and used also to play with the Indian boy "Jim." (See Account of Ira Swain.)

Cornstalk, the younger, was a chief in later times after the war of 1812. He was friendly, and a fine, stately, noble Indian. He used to come to Randolph County to hunt, spending more or less time among the settlers. A striking incident is related of Cornstalk and his wife by Squire Bowen, which occurred soon after the settlement of his father, Ephraim Bowen, in the county. We have no detailed statement of the life of this chief at our command.

Pontiac, Ottawa chief, was in 1761, a great friend of the French. He was tall in person and dignified and stately in demeanor, fifty years of age, and civil and military ruler of the Ottawas, Ojibways and Pottawatomies. He formed his celebrated conspiracy suddenly in 1763. Many tribes were joined in that movement; Chippewas, Ottawas, Wyandots, Miamis, Delawares, Mingoes, etc. Nine British posts fell; Detroit was saved; the war was short; the conspiracy was soon crushed, the struggle ending in 1764.

REMINISCENCES.

Statement of Mrs. Henry Horn, of Arba, Indiana: "I traveled during the summer of 1880 in Northern Michigan. There are Indian Reserves in that region, and I became acquainted, among other persons, with an educated and talented Indian lady of the Ottawa tribe. Margaret Boyd, by name (she has also a long and difficult Indian name, Oqabegijiqokwe). She was educated when young, by the Catholics, they intending her for a missionary; she now lives near Petoskey, Northern Michigan; is seventy-two years old, and supports herself, in Indian fashion, by making various curious and useful articles for sale, baskets, moccasins, pin cushions, slippers, etc., of most exquisite workmanship and surpassing artistic skill. One of her brothers (Maccoteybinassee, Black Bird) went to Rome for education as a Catholic priest. An Indian comrade was the companion of his journey and was to remain with him while at Rome; but alas! erelong her poor, lonely brother sickened and died in that far-off foreign land, alone, except that one faithful comrade and friend. She commemorated her brother's death by composing a poem in English, of rare beauty and exquisite pathos, a copy of which is here given:

DEATH OF WILLIAM MACCOTEYBINASSEE.

(THE BLACKBIRD.)

[Of the Ottawa tribe of Indians, who was sent (with a companion of the same tribe) to Rome, for his education, and died June 25, 1833.]

COMPOSED BY HIS SISTER, MARGARET BOYD.

The morning breaks! See how the glorious sun,
Slow wheeling from the East, new luster sheds
O'er the soft climes of Italy. The flower
That kept its perfume through the dewy night
Now breathes it forth again.
Hill, vale and grove,
Clad in rich verdure bloom, and from the rock
The joyful waters leap! O meet it is
That thou, Imperial Rome, shouldst lift thy head
Decked with thy triple crown, where cloudless skies,
And lands rejoicing in the summer sun
Rich blessings yield.
But there is grief to-day!
A voice is heard within thy marble walls,
A voice lamenting for the youthful dead,
For o'er the relics of her forest boy
The mother of dead empires weeps, and lo!
Clad in white robes, the long procession moves.
Youths throng around the bier, and high in front,
Star of our hopes, the glorious cross is reared,
Triumphant sign! The low, sweet voice of prayer,
Flowing spontaneous from the spirit's depths
Pours its rich tones, and now the requiem swells—
Now dies upon the ear.
But there is one
Who stands beside my brother's grave, and though no tear
Dims his dark eye, yet doth his spirit weep.
With throbbing heart he gazes on the spot,
Where his young comrade shall forever rest;
For they, together, left their forest home,
Led by the man who to their fathers preached
Glad tidings of great joy. My brother dear
Who sleeps beneath the sod his labors blessed.
How must his spirit mourn, the bosom heave
Of the lone Indian boy! No tongue can speak
The accents of his tribes, and as he bends
In melancholy mood above the dead.
Imagination clothes his tearful thoughts
In rude and plaintive cadences of woe!
"Soft be thy peaceful sleep, my brother loved.
At Nature's call the branches here shall wave,
The wailing winds lament above his grave!"
The dewy night shall weep;
And he, the lonely youth, my cousin sad,
O, he shall come to shade with moss the grave;
To plant above his head the mystic cross;
To hope, to pray, to mourn in silent grief!
No marble here shall grand and stately rise,
But o'er thy tomb I'll teach the forest tree
To lift its pensive head and point to thee
Rejoicing in the skies.
And when the breeze stirs soft its waving boughs,
I'll think thy spirit wakes the gentle sound,
Such as my fathers thought when all around
Shook the old forest trees.
Dost thou forget the hour, my brother dear,
When first we heard the Christian's hope revealed,
When fearless warriors felt their bosoms melt
And yield beneath the power of mighty love?
The heavenly Truth persuasive moved our souls
Whilst on the flowery mount the preacher stood.
The gentle messenger of Christ proclaimed
The dying love of Jesus to an outcast race,
And through the listening silence of the wood
His gentle, solemn words like spirits passed;
And oh! hadst thou been spared, my tender boy,
We two had gone to bless our fatherland,
To spread rich stores of grace, and, hand in hand,
Each holy labor would in love have shared;
But there the relic of my brother lies
Where Nature's flowers shall bloom o'er Nature's child,
Where ruins stretch and classic art has piled
Her costly monuments on high.
Sleep on, sleep peaceful here in quiet rest;
The traveler from thy far-off land shall come
And claim this spot, and give to thee in grief
What kingly tombs have not—the tribute of
An honest tear shed o'er thy lonely grave!

The woman who wrote the foregoing lines is now living at Little Traverse City, in Northern Michigan, with a remnant of the Ottawa tribe, to which she belongs. Mrs. Horn visited her at her own home, had with the Indian lady a most interesting and instructive interview, and brought away several beautiful and curious ornaments wrought by the skillful hand of the worthy poetess. Some of the articles were a basket, a paper-receiver and lamp mat, all made of birch bark, wrought with porcupine quills; a pin-cushion made of velvet, ornamented with beads in a unique manner, and other things besides. Mrs. H. had also a mat purchased of Petoskey's son, who is a merchant in the village of the same name. All the specimens are wonderfully rich and nice.

Chief Petoskey lives there still among his tribe, near the town. He is ninety-eight years old, but strong and hearty, standing straight, tall and vigorous, like a tree in their forests. He was at the door chopping wood when they called for a friendly visit; he led them into his dwelling, and entertained his guests like a prince, as he is. He is an Ottawa chief, living with his tribe upon their reservation.

Mr. Henry W. Horn has a photo of the old chief, which he says is a most striking likeness. The picture looks like that of a white man of striking appearance; yet Petoskey is a full-blood Ottawa Indian. They brought also the photo of Minonquet, an aged Indian woman (103 years), living at the old Mission Farm, some miles from Petoskey. She is bowed with years, but vigorous still, remarkably so considering her wonderful age.

At Petoskey, in the suburbs of the town, is a natural park of two acres, covered with a young growth of sugar trees, inclosed with a plain fence. Through the park runs a narrow path between the trees, and at the head of the path stands a post with a board put up, and on the board this inscription:

MARQUETTE AVENUE,

Original Trail between Grand Traverse Bay and Mackinac. Traveled for hundreds of years by the Indians, and more than two hundred years ago by Father Marquette, the famous missionary and explorer.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

As a specimen of treatment of Indians by white men, and as the "spark which set the magazine on fire" in this region at the beginning of the war of 1811–13, we give the following from the history of Darke County:

"A squaw, with her husband and son, was coming to Greenville to purchase supplies at David Connor's. They camped over night by Irvin's Spring, a mile out of Greenville. A white man, who had traveled with them, went on into town and told that some Indians were up by Irvin's Spring. The commander was absent, and a villain by the name of Fish was exercising authority at the time. He went out and killed the Indian and his wife, and wounded the boy. The lad fled like the wind, and, in an incredibly short space of time, Fort Meigs, 100 miles distant, was besieged by 2,000 savages bent on revenge for wrongs that were past, and for the utter extermination of the cruel white men."

David Connor came to Greenville in 1811, or early in 1812, and with him came a man by the name of David Thomson, who had been a soldier with "Mad Anthony" in the Indian wars of twenty years before, being with Gen. Wayne at Rouge de Bout and elsewhere.

D. T. died in 1840, aged eighty years. His oldest daughter, the widow of Judge Beers, one mile north of Greenville, died in August, 1881.

Shortridge was killed and scalped by the Indians near where Cambridge City now stands. Shortridge had on clothes belonging to an "Indian hater," and the Indians thought he was the other man.

Charles Morgan and his two brothers were killed by the savages at a sugar camp in the northern part of Wayne County, where they were boiling sugar water. Morgan resisted powerfully, but was overcome and tomahawked. One boy was killed by the tomahawk and the other was shot as he started to run. All three were scalped. This took place before 1811. Morgan was a leader in the band that tried to murder Johnny Green, an Indian warrior residing in the region, and many thought at the time that Morgan's death was accomplished by Green in revenge for his bitterness against the Indians.

"PIGEON ROOST" MASSACRE, SCOTT COUNTY, 1812.

A settlement was formed in 1809, five or six miles from any other white residents, on about a square mile of land. Jeremiah Payne and Mr. Coffman, two of the settlers, were hunting on the afternoon of September 3, 1812, two miles north of the Pigeon Roost settlement, and they were surprised and killed by a party of Indians. The savages then attacked the settlement (about sunset), and in one hour had killed one man, five women and sixteen children, also burning the cabins with some of the dead bodies of the victims. Those slain were as follows:

Henry Collins and wife, Mrs. Jeremiah Payne and eight children, Mrs. Richard Collins and seven children, Mrs. John Morrill and one child and her mother; Mrs. Jane Biggs and three children slipped away, and, before daylight, got to Zebulon Collins's, six miles distant.

William Collins, an old man of sixty years, with Capt. John Norris, defended themselves against the Indians for three-quarters of an hour; and, after dark, escaped with two children, and arrived at Zebulon Collins's the next morning. The militia gathered and went to the settlement, and found the smoking ruins with some of the charred bodies of their slaughtered friends.

BURNING AT THE STAKE.

In the Indian village of Old Town, five miles above Muncie, many victims were tortured to death by a slow fire. They were tied to a stake, which was of oak, and ten or twelve feet high. A ring of ashes was round the stake, and the dancing in a circle by the Indians had tramped the ground as hard as a brick. The stake remained for many years to be seen and shuddered at by the passing traveler.

Mr. Thomas S. Neely, of Muncie, Ind., and a pioneer of that region (in history of Delaware County also elsewhere quoted from), says: "On the farm of Samuel Cecil, in Section 25, Center Township, in 1839, was a piece of ground near the then Richmond State road, now the Burlington Pike, on which tradidition says one Col. Winchester was burned by the Indians. The stake was visible when I came, and was charred. Around it for about fifty feet the ground was level and smooth, and the spot was round like a circus ring, only not thrown up on the circle. This tradition had gained considerable credence at the time, and all believed it to be true."

Who this Col. Winchester was, when the act was done, or why in particular they subjected this prisoner to that fate we have no information. This method of putting to death was but common among the Indians, and many wretched captives both of Indians and whites perished in that way.

INDIANS.

Indians always traveled in single file. Hundreds of them in a company would move in this way, and the line would extend perhaps for miles. They would approach a house by stealth. The first one would know, a dozen Indians, all armed and painted, would be standing at the door, with guns, tomahawks and scalping knives, looking frightful enough.

Mr. W. C. Smith says: "Killbuck, a noted Indian, came to father's cabin when the family were all abed and demanded admittance. Father gave no answer. He struck the door several sharp blows with his tomahawk, declaring he would split the door down if it were not opened. Father said to him, 'I'll put a rifle ball through you if you don't clear out.' Killbuck said he was cold and hungry, and wished to warm himself and get something to eat.

"Father being afraid he was drunk, would not let him in, but told him 'go up to "Sal's" wigwam (a squaw who had lived not far off), and come back in the morning.' He went and came back in the morning, saying, 'white man heap brave, he no coward.'"

Another incident. Some Indians came to a cabin to purchase provisions. The man was absent. The woman went to the smoke-house to get them some bacon. One squaw seized a large piece and went to carry it off. The white woman wrenched it from her, striking the squaw to make her let go of the flitch of bacon.

The other Indians were greatly pleased at her boldness, patting her on the shoulder, saying, "white squaw heap much brave, heap much fight."

The white traders used to practice all sorts of tricks upon the natives. One trader told the Indians that the needle-maker was dead, and that after his supply on hand was gone, there would be no more. He sold his needles for a coon-skin apiece, worth fifty to seventy-five cents.

DEATH OF INDIAN "CHRISTMAS."

He was shot by young Lewallyn as related in Burgett Pierce's reminiscences. The Indians were greatly excited by his murder, and were with difficulty pacified by promises of a fair trial, and assurances that the guilty one should be punished. Mr. Lewallyn the elder, is related to have walked all the way to Muncie to tell the Indians that his son should be given up for the proper course of justice. But he was tried and acquitted, and the Indians were more dissatisfied than before. It is said that "Christmas's" horse ran all night saddled and bridled, reaching the home of his owner at Muncietown early next morning. The body of the Indian was buried on the bluff just west of the crossing below Deerfield, between the road and the river, perhaps 100 yards west of the crossing. Skeletons were so much in demand in early times that a certain physician is stated to have dug up his bones for an "anatomy."

Armfield Thornburg, of Windsor, says that the three Indians who killed Morgan and the two lads were "trailed," and were killed on the banks of Stony Creek, three miles south of Windsor, just in Delaware County.

"Jay County History" mentions the killing of Christmas thus: "One day one of the men shot an Indian whom he caught stealing cabbage from his garden. This aroused the anger of the Indians, and the settlement were very much alarmed lest they should all be murdered. They made a fort of Lewallyn's house, and the four families lived in it for two weeks in constant fear of an attack. But their enemies did not come, and they again ventured forth to their usual avocations."

Burgett Pierce says of this same Indian that they came in a large company to bury their murdered comrade, and that they performed over his remains a most affecting ceremony, one aged chief making a feeling oration, the tears streaming down his cheeks as he did so.

Our understanding is that Burgett Pierce himself witnessed the burial rites, and beheld the tears coursing down the cheeks of the dusky orator, while he stood recounting in mournful eloquence the virtues of their deceased comrade.

SPECIAL ACCOUNTS OF INDIANS, ETC.

"Johnny Green," spoken of by Jere Smith; "Charles Morgan," by Jesse Parker; "Fleming," by Hawkins, Ward, Thomas, etc.; "Cornstalk" (elder), J. Hawkins; "Cornstalk" (later), Squire Bowen; "Killbuck," by Burgett Pierce.

Indian traders were David Conner, on Mississinewa; Joseph Gess, south of Winchester; and Goldsmith Gilbert, in Delaware County, etc.

Indian "trails" were from Muncie to Greenville, passing south of Winchester and of Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal Church on White River, and also not far from Spartansburg. From Muncie to Fort Wayne; from Godfroy's to Fort Wayne; from Muncie to Godfroy's; along the Mississinewa River; along the White River, etc.

A prominent Indian trader and fur dealer was Edward Edger, of Deerfield, Randolph County, who is living in a cheerful old age at Winchester, Ind.

FORTS.

Forts were built by setting upright split timbers, eighteen or twenty feet high, fast in the ground and close together, with large gates, strong, thick and heavy, made of hewn timber from three to six inches thick. In each fort was at least one block-house, two stories high, with the upper story projecting two or three feet over beyond the lower, and having port-holes to shoot down from. The Indians could make no headway against a block-house, except, indeed, by setting it on fire. At the beginning of the war of 1812, a fort was built at the cabin of George Smith, near Richmond.

One day when the men were out at work, the dogs barked and the women thought the Indians had come. They formed a troop, made one of their number captain and marched out, leaving one to care for the children, and to open the gate for their return. Each woman took her husband's gun as bold as a warrior. The alarm proved false, the dogs were barking at some stray ponies; but the women had proved their bravery, and came back almost sorry that they had found no Indians.

People sometimes got lost, and the trumpet (or the tin horn) would be blown to call the settlers together to hunt for the lost one.

INDIAN WARS, TREATIES, ETC.

In 1747–48, a deep conspiracy was laid, under Nicholas, a famous Huron (Wyandot) chief, for the destruction of Detroit and other posts, and to crush the French. The attempt failed, and Chief Nicholas abandoned his home near Sandusky, having burned his villages and his fort, and sought a resting-place farther west. On the 8th of April, 1748, he departed for White River, Indiana. He is thought to have died in the White River Valley, near the Wabash, in 1748, aged fifty-eight years.

Fort George, near the head-waters of the Savannah, and Fort Loudoun, near the sources of the Tennessee, were built by the English, for defense against the Indians in that quarter.

Pontiac, a famous Ottawa chief, in 1763, formed a powerful confederacy, consisting of the Ottawas, the Chippewas, the Pottawatomies, the Sacs and Foxes, the Menomonees, the Miamis, the Wyandots, the Shawnees, and still other tribes, which were crushed in 1763–64.

Bryant says: "Pontiac was chief of the Ottawas, whom he is said to have led at Braddock's defeat. * * * His mother was an Ojibway. * * * He was now fifty years of age, unusually dark in complexion, of medium height, of powerful frame and haughty bearing; subtle, patient, cruel, and of more than ordinary capacity. He possessed all of the few good qualities of his race, and most of their bad ones. He incited a rising of the Indian tribes from the Lakes to the Lower Mississippi."

Pontiac submitted at length, attended the grand Indian Council held at Oswego, 1766, made his great "peace speech," and returned laden with presents to his Western home, living on the Miami like an ordinary hunter.

At the battle of the Kanawha, in 1774, the Indians were led by Cornstalk, a Shawnee chief; Red Hawk, a Delaware chief; and Logan, the celebrated Cayuga or Mingo chief and orator.

The battle resulting in "Wayne's Victory" was fought in November, 1794. The number of Indians engaged in that fight has been thus stated: Delawares, 450; Wyandots, 275; Shawnees, 275; Miamis, 175; Ottawas, 225; and of the Senecas, Pottawatomies and Chippewas from 200 to 300. There were also perhaps 100 Canadians.

The battle was fought against the advice of Little Turtle, who told his people that they would better make peace, for, said he, "The Americans are led by a General who never sleeps." Blue Jacket overruled Little Turtle in the Council, and the battle was fought and lost. Little Turtle and Blue Jacket both were ready for peace after this defeat, and they continued faithful to the treaty, resisting the whole force of Tecumseh's power and eloquence, and holding many of their people from joining in his scheme of extermination against the whites.

The famous Tecumseh and his brother, the Prophet, who jointly incited the tribes, from the Lakes to the Gulf, to relentless hostility, were Shawnees. Tecumseh was born on Mad River, Ohio, 1768. The Prophet fixed his headquarters at the mouth of Tippecanoe, on the Wabash, and for several years (1811–13) a terrible Indian war was waged, which was ended by the battle of the Thames, in 1813. Tecumseh was killed in that battle, and the hope of the savage confederacy was crushed.

In May, 1812, a great Indian Council was held on Mississinewa River, at which the Wyandots, Chippewas, Ottawas, Pottawatomies, Delawares, Eel Rivers, Weas, Miamis, Piankeshaws, Winnebagoes, Shawnees and Kickapoos were present. The council seemed for peace, but Tecumseh was furious for war, and many joined him.

Fort Wayne was besieged by Tecumseh in the summer of 1812, but he failed. The massacre at Fort Dearborn took place August 15, 1812. Mackinaw was surrendered to the British July 17, 1812. Detroit was given up to the British in 1812.

The treaty of Fort Harmar (Marietta) was made January 9, 1789, and agreed to by the Wyandots, Delawares, Ottawas, Chippewas, Pottawatomies and Iroquois (under Governor St. Clair).

Wayne's Treaty, made at Greenville in 1795, was signed by the Chippewas, Ottawas, Pottawatomies, Wyandots, Delawares, Shawnees, Miamis, Eel River Indians, Weas, Kickapoos and Kaskaskias.

Gen. Harrison's treaty at Fort Wayne, in 1809, was entered into by the Delaware, Eel River, Pottawatomie and Miami tribes, and was sanctioned by the Weas at Vincennes, October 26, 1809, and by the Kickapoos, about the same time, ceding the 12-mile strip, etc. Gen. Harrison concluded a treaty at Fort Wayne in 1803, with the Delawares, Shawnees, Pottawatomies and Kickapoos, and the Eel Rivers, Weas, Piankeshaws and Kaskaskias.

In 1818, Messrs. Jennings, Cass and Parke, as United States Commissioners, made a treaty at St. Mary's, Ohio, with the Miamis, who ceded all their land in Indiana, with reservations.

Other treaties besides the ones mentioned above have been entered into by different tribes, till, at present, but a single band remains (near Peru, Miami County).

INDIAN RESERVES.

As a specimen of reservations and exceptions, those made by the United States in the Indian country, in the treaty of Greenville, 1795, are here stated, to wit:

A tract of land at Loramie's store, six miles square; Girty's Town, two miles squire; head of Auglaize, six miles square; Fort Defiance, six miles square; Fort Wayne, six miles square; eight miles west of Fort Wayne, two miles square; Ouatenon, six miles square; Maumee, foot of Rapids—old British fort—twelve miles square; mouth of Maumee, six miles square; Sandusky Lake (old fort), six miles square; Lower Rapids, Sandusky, two miles square; Detroit, irregular tract; Mackinaw, mainland and island and Isle Bois du Blanc; Fort Dearborn, six miles square; mouth of Illinois, twelve miles square; Peoria, fort and village, six miles square; Clark grant, 150,000 acres; Post Vincennes and French lands; Fort Massac and lands adjacent near mouth of the Ohio River.

As an example of reservation to the Indians, we give the following at the treaty made at Fort Wayne, 1818:

Ten miles square, opposite the mouth of the River A. Bouette [Aboite]; three sections to Jean B. Richardville; two sections to the same; to Joseph Richardville and son Joseph, two sections; two sections to Francis La Fontaine and his son; one section to the son of George Hunt; one section to Little Turtle; one section to Josette Beaubien.

In the different treaties made in later times, certain tracts were reserved for Indian occupation by various tribes, as the Pottawatomies, the Wyandots, the Miamis, the Shawnees, etc.

On these "reserves" the Indians dwelt for a longer or shorter time. The tribes sold out, however, by and by, one by one, until none are now left in this region, except a single band (Me-shingo-me-sia). The rest of the Miamis ceded their lands about 1840, and left about 1846. François Godfroy, a Miami chief, had a "reserve" partly in Jay County. He died between 1837 and 1840, at the mouth of Mississinewa.

MESHINGOMESIA BAND.

When the Miamis made their final cession [1840], the band above named refused to leave, and they were allowed to remain and hold their lands.

The territory was held in common till 1873, in which year a distribution was made (by United States law) among the members of the band. Each person received an equal amount in value (of unimproved land). The division was made by Commissioners appointed by the United States, of whom one was Jonas Votaw, Esq., of Jay County, who furnished the information here given.

The transaction excited much interest. The commission met on the Indian land, and sat from day to day till the work was completed. The basis of the award was the tribe as it existed in (about) 1840, (including those who had intermarried into the tribe since that time), and the descendants of such. It was for the interest of the tribe to have the number of shares as small as possible, of course, since the fewer the shares, the more each one would get.

The greatest dispute arose as to an Indian named Waukoon. He was a Pottawatomie lad who would not go with his tribe, but hid himself till his people were gone, and then lived with the Miamis, and with this band, and in the family of the chief, Meshingomesia. Upon these facts he claimed membership in the band. He had a wife and seven children, besides which he had cleared out a large farm.

The commission decided in his favor, and his family got their shares with the rest.

Meshingomesia died a very old man in 1878; Waukoon is living yet (1880). There is still quite a settlement of that band living chiefly as farmers, having churches, schools, etc. The preaching and teaching are done mostly by members of the band.

Originally, a large "reserve" was held by the Miamis, some thirty miles square, between Eel and Salamonie Rivers. That Reserve lay in Howard, Tipton and Grant Counties. The Indians left in (about) 1846, and it was opened to settlers in 1847. Filling rapidly with eager emigrants, it has become a flourishing and populous region. Sixty-six persons were recognized by the Commission as members of that "Indian band," and the division was made among those sixty-six persons, averaging about eighty acres to each. Waukoon and his family got over 600 acres (with his improvements thrown in).

These shares were to be exempt from taxes for five years, as also to be entirely free from any previous claim on the owners of the land, and moreover incapable of alienation for the same period.

INDIAN TOWNS, ETC.

The various tribes had their hunting-grounds, their fields, their dwellings, their towns.

Kekionga, at the head of the Maumee, as already stated, was a celebrated Miami town at the time of the first French exploration. Later, there were several more in that vicinity, belonging to different tribes. An article in the Philadelphia Register in 1791 states as follows:

"There were at that time [it does not say when, though probably not long before that date] seven towns near the confluence of the three rivers—St. Joseph's, St. Mary's and Maumee: The principal village of the Miamis, called Omie Town, containing also several French traders. It stood on the east bank of the St. Joseph, or on the north side of the Maumee, directly opposite the mouth of the St. Mary's. Another village (Miami) of thirty houses, stood on the opposite bank, across the river from the Omie Town.

The Delawares had three villages, two on the St. Mary's, three miles from its mouth, of forty-five houses. There was one also on the east bank of the St. Joseph's, two or three miles from its mouth, with thirty-six houses.

The Shawanoes [Shawnees] had two villages, two miles down the Maumee: one was Chillicothe, on the north bank (fifty-eight houses); another was on the south bank, opposite Chillicothe, having sixteen houses."

The army demolished all these towns and burned 20,000 bushels of corn, so that it would seem that the troops, though defeated, had destroyed the villages and the property of the Indians.

Ouatenon was a large and important Wea town, eight miles below Lafayette. [Note—A town on White River above Muncie was called Ouat-i-nink.]

Prophet's Town was built at the mouth of Tippecanoe River, as the headquarters of the famous brother of Tecumseh.

Mont-zee-town (Muncie) was originally an Indian town on White River. There were many others scattered through the region.

As late as 1820, and also since that time, Indian towns were to be found scattered along White River in Delaware County and below. Old Town, Montzee Town, Yorktown, Bucktown, Strawtown, Andersontown, etc., were Indian villages on the banks of White River. No towns are known to have existed in Randolph County. They hunted here, their trails passed through this region, they had wigwams and huts and cabins scattered here and there through the woods, but their villages, so far as are now known, were located elsewhere.

Many, perhaps most, of the towns belonging to the Indians have at one time or another been destroyed by the whites. Whenever, since the first white settlement, hostilities would arise, the villages of the savages would be the first and chief objects of attack.

Gen. Harmar, in 1790, undertook to demolish a Shawnee town near Chillicothe, and also a Pickaway town in the same region, and Kickapoo and Miami towns in Indiana were burned the same year.

In 1791, Gen. Scott utterly demolished the Wea town, Ouatenon, said to have contained 5,000 people, and Gen. Wilkinson carried the same fate to Kickapoo towns on Eel and Wabash Rivers. In the same year, Gen. Harmar, though badly defeated, burned all the towns (seven in number) near the junction of the St. Joseph's and the St. Mary's.

In 1811, the "Prophet's Town," at the mouth of Tippecanoe River, was destroyed by Gen. Harrison.

In 1812, the Miami villages on the Mississinewa (near its mouth) were taken and burned by Lieut Campbell. They marched from Dayton December 4, 1812, and came early on the morning of December 17 upon a town of Delawares and Miamis on the Mississinewa. In taking it by surprise, eight warriors were killed, and forty-two persons taken prisoners. The place was burned outright, as were also three other villages, and the soldiers returned, hungry and frost-bitten, to Greenville, Ohio. Their route in returning, and probably in going, passed through Jackson Township, in the northeast part of Randolph County. As they were going to Greenville, they camped on Army Branch, in the west part of that township, near land afterward settled by James Simmons. They were detained upon the expedition longer than they had expected, and were, moreover, incumbered with prisoners, and the troops were at the point of starvation. Runners were sent ahead to the settlements near Eaton, and provisions were sent forthwith for their instant relief. Joseph Hawkins, now of Collett, Jay Co., Ind., whose father was one of the band of young men who went to the relief of the suffering army, gives the following account:

"When Lieut. Campbell was coming back with the expedition which had gone against the Indians on the Lower Mississinewa, they had been detained so long and had so many prisoners that they were nearly worn out, and well-nigh starving, their provisions being gone. Runners were sent ahead to inform the settlements, and to ask for instant succor. The people were aroused at once, and young, light-footed men (soldiers at Fort Nesbitt) took biscuits hastily baked by the women, and went forward at full speed to find and feed their starving countrymen. They found the soldiers camped on Army Branch, Jackson Township, Randolph Co. It was an affecting sight, and many cried for joy. The older men went on later with pack-horses laden with provisions. One man sold his load, and when he got back to Fort Nesbitt, the soldiers there 'rode him on a rail.'

"My father was one of the young men who went forward for the relief of the troops."

Mr. Hawkins further says: "There was a line of forts along the frontier. Forts Jefferson, Black, Nesbitt, Greenville, Recovery, Auglaize, Defiance, Loramie, Wayne, St. Clair, etc., were erected for the defense of the pioneer settlers."

INDIAN BURYING GROUNDS.

Mr. Neely (of Muncie) says: "When I came here, an Indian graveyard was in a good state of preservation, located on the north bank of the river, and about three hundred yards west of the Greenville road. A great many graves were visible, and some had been and were then being exhumed by the curious relic-hunters and others. This was the principal burial-ground of the Delaware Indians at this point."

Mr. William Jackson (in the same history) says: "The old Indian village and graveyard stood on the north bank of White River, a little west of the bridge on the Muncie & Greenville Pike. When I came (1835), many distinct features were still visible. The graves, in many instances, were surrounded with pens of poles piled round them. Many skeletons were exhumed, and several skulls have been preserved which were taken from this burial-ground."

RETROSPECT.

From the beginning of European occupation the savages were so treated by the whites for the most part as to provoke bitter and relentless hostility. Cruelty was returned for kindness, and treachery for generous confidence. The history of European intercourse with the Aborigines is crowded with accounts of uncalled for severity and needless cruelty. It is small wonder, therefore, that the American natives should be hostile. For ages they beheld a strong and cruel race of men invading their country, taking possession of their lands, encroaching upon their hunting-grounds, destroying their dwellings, laying waste their corn-fields, and burning their villages; and with the genuine instinct of universal humanity, they strove to defend their homes, and to beat back and destroy the fierce invading hordes. It has been indeed a gallant, though a fruitless struggle, which the Indians have waged. It has been weakness against strength, poverty against wealth, bows and arrows and hand-missiles against firearms, tomahawks against cannon, footmen against horsemen, untutored cunning against cultivated skill, savagery against civilization. They fought with a bravery and resolution worthy of a less hapless destiny, but the struggle has been ever in vain.

Nearly four hundred years have fled since Columbus landed at Guanahani, and what a conflict has the world beheld on these Western shores during the ages that have passed since that momentous era! The struggle has been long and fierce and bitter, cruel and remorseless alike on the one side and on the other, but ending ever in defeat, utter and hopeless to the poor, untutored red man.

DESTINY.

From the moment when the haughty Spaniard under the leadership of the Genoese navigator set foot on the shores of Guanahani up to this very hour, a conflict, stern, bitter, relentless, has been going on. Now active and wild, now lulled and hushed for a time, now bursting into an awful explosion of massacre and conflagration, followed by fierce retaliation, and blank extermination of the particular tribes then engaged, and now given up as if in utter and hopeless despair; quieted for brief spaces as in case of the Quakers and of the French Catholic missionaries, but breaking forth anew with each succeeding generation. Well nigh 400 years have witnessed this fearful spectacle, and even yet in some remote regions it is taking place.

But through the whole cycle of centuries, the aborigines of the American Continent, whether gentle Mexicans, civilized Peruvians, or more savage North Americans, have been alike, a doomed race. And for most of the descendants of the ancient dwellers—the hapless offspring of the native races on these Western shores—that doom has come to be an accomplished fact!

Yet they were verily worthy of a gentler fate. And had they been met from the outset with the kind and faithful spirit of justice and mercy and truth, the history of the new world need not have been as now it has been, and must be, written in blood!

Had the white race reciprocated even the kindly advances made by the aborigines, a lasting friendship might have been the result.

There were fifty years of peace between the noble old chief, Massasoit, with his braves, and the Massachusetts colonies. The Indians and Quakers, under the mild and just treatment set on foot by William Penn, walked on the broad pathway of love and good will for seventy long and happy years. The French, for the most part, had peace and friendship, because, in the main, their treatment of the savages was fair, kindly and humane.

Cases are numerous in private life where justice, truth and confidence by the white man have begotten a like spirit in the Indian.

There is a case which, by the way, has perhaps never yet been put into print, so fully in point that we cannot forbear to state it:

MR. WHITE AND THE CHIEF.

Just after the Revolutionary war had come to an end, a gentleman, Mr. White, the founder of Whitestown, Oneida Co., N. Y., moved with his family into the forest a few miles from where Utica now stands. He built a cabin and moved into it. A Mohawk chief, who during the war had been an ally of the British, lived not far off. Mr. White sent for the chief, and he came. Said Mr. White, "The war is over, let us be friends." The red man scarcely spoke, and was non committal. But, spying with his eagle eye a boy, the son of a widowed daughter of his host, he said to Mr. White: "That boy, me take him—three days." The mother sprang to her child, wild with affright; but her father hushed his daughter, and said calmly, "Take him." The chief took the boy. And on the third day, just as the sun was sinking into the tree-tops, a whoop was heard, and as they looked, they saw the chief and the child—both dressed in royal style, the boy dancing with glee as he came—emerge from the shadow of the woods. They entered the cabin, the chief gave the boy to his mother, and said, "There, white man trust Indian; now Indian trust white man." And he did; and ever after there was friendship between the two.

PEACE COMING.

For ages long, since the coming of the European across the mighty deep with his winged ships and his weapons of fire, war had been between the incoming strangers and the natives of the soil. But for these regions that war was at length well-nigh over. Indian conflict had ceased in these parts before the first dweller had touched the soil of Randolph. The last battle had been fought with these Indians, and final and hopeless defeat had crushed the fierce and bitter spirit of the savage foe.

Tecumseh, perhaps the ablest and the bravest chieftain that ever roused the warriors of his race to conflict, had formed his league and rallied his dusky hosts, and, after weary and bloody years of mortal warfare, had been slain on the banks of the Thames, not one short year before (1813). The prophet, deceitful and cruel, but not noble nor brave, had, upon the death of his heroic brother, sunk into his native nothingness; nearly all the other great chiefs had, even before Tecumseh's career, despaired of any hope of success against the omnipotent white men, and were, though sullen and morose, yet disposed for peace. There had been war, and massacre, and battles, and destruction of cornfields, and burning of towns and villages, through the sad, eventful years of 1811, 1812 and 1813. But the Indians were crushed; and they gave up the struggle in hopeless despair. Great numbers indeed had stood aloof, and refused to join Tecumseh's league, convinced that success against the whites would be impossible. Little Turtle, the famous Miami chief, even before Wayne's victory in 1794, advised peace. Said he, "We cannot succeed; the foe have now a chieftain that never sleeps." He fought in that battle, but ever after, he was on the side of peace. Yet Tecumseh's influence was great, and he drew away many into the war. But his eloquent voice was hushed in death; his famous league was broken, and the tribes sued for peace.

TECUMSEH'S WAR.

The pioneers of Dearborn and Wayne, of Clark and Harrison, and of Knox and Jefferson Counties, on the eastern border of Indiana Territory, and along the valleys of the Ohio and the Wabash, who had made their homes in Indiana forests between 1793 and 1811, lived for two eventful years in mortal apprehension. Says one aged lady, a resident of Wayne County in writing some "Reminiscences" of that fearful time: "After the battle of Tippecanoe (1811) we lived in constant fear, and passed many sleepless nights. Well do I recollect how I kept my head raised from my pillow to listen for the Indians to come and take our scalps. They were often seen scouting round, but harmed none that were peaceable; still we feared and trembled." Another says (after the Pigeon Roost Massacre September 3, 1812, in Scott County, Kentucky, by some Shawnees): "The way I lived was this: On all occasions I carried my rifle, tomahawk and butcher knife, and a loaded pistol at my belt. When I went to plow I laid my gun on the ground, and stuck up a stick by it for a mark, that I might get it quick if I needed it. I had two good dogs; at night (or by day either) I kept one outside to bark and give the alarm, and one inside to bark and waken us (if in the night), to be ready if there was any danger. My weapons were always loaded and ready to my hand. I kept my horses in a stable close to the house with a port hole so made that I could shoot from inside the house to the stable door. During two years I never went from home with any certainty of ever returning, not knowing the day nor the hour nor the minute that I might receive a fatal bullet from some unknown, hostile hand; but by Divine mercy I was preserved, and am now alive to tell the tale." And yet, through all this fear and peril, candor compels the statement that, throughout this region at least (to quote from the narrative again), the Indians "harmed none who were peaceable." The pioneers in general seem to agree to that fact that the Indians molested only hostile white men.

Charles Morgan who (with his two half-brothers) was killed at a "sugar camp" near Washington March 10, 1813, was a bitter "Indian hater." It seems that Johnny Green, an Indian warrior, but at peace with the whites, was at an Indian town on Blue River, also at peace. He asked leave to go with some whites to the settlements; they let him go with them, and agreed not to harm him; as soon as they had him fairly among them, however, the party bound him, and many of them wished to take his life. He was conveyed to Esquire Hunt's, seven miles south of Centerville, where a vote was taken, and a large majority called for his immediate death. Morgan was present, and was very eager for the death of Green. It came to pass, however, that Thomas McCoy, a stout Irishman, cut the ropes, took him on the horse behind him, and carried him away from danger. Green was fierce and revengeful, and, for this dastardly attempt upon his life by Morgan and others, Green is thought to have killed Morgan.

Shortridge also had on clothes belonging to George Ish, another violent "Indian hater," and the Indians thought they were killing Ish. Thus stood the times while the fierce Tecumseh and his cruel, but cowardly brother, were gathering their warrior clans, and cheering them to the bitter, deadly conflict.

THE END.

But in 1813 these scenes were forever ended, and the settlers of Randolph, after their coming hither, saw no Indian war. The men who came and pitched their camps, and reared their cabins, and made their homes within these borders from and after 1814, had the Indians only for quiet, friendly neighbors, who would bring them deer, and turkeys and squirrels, and help at raisings and log-rollings, and whose pappooses would gambol and play with the children of the white pioneers.

But even this was not to be of long duration. In a few years the red men forsook their huts, and left their wigwams tenantless, and passed on gradually, and ere a long time had fled, came back no more.

For a brief space, dusky-faced men, warriors no longer, their women, mayhaps, keeping them company, would go trooping on foot, or on their little ponies, or leading their pack-horses along the old time-beaten trail from north to south, or east to west, or the opposite. For a few years the humble remnants of these once haughty and powerful forest tribes would pass meekly and peaceably by, bring buckskins, and baskets, and moccasins and paltry trinkets, and timidly ask an exchange for corn, and salt, and meal, and powder and whisky.

And the trader, or mayhaps the settler would take their "truck," and give them in return what they wished, but especially the whisky. And that curse of human kind, that foe of the universal human race, would do its devilish work upon these poor red men, and they would get drunk and fight, and stab and kill, or lie helpless and besotted till the horrid debauch was over, and then—they would "seek it yet again!" And now this whole drama is past, and it has become to us like the fitful changes of a forgotten dream. Perhaps not one in a hundred of the dwellers of Randolph County ever set eyes upon an Indian. Be it so! Be it so! Two such races as the fierce, ambitious, domineering, insatiable European, and the savage, bold, wily, revengeful Indian could never dwell together in the same land; and since the European came to stay, there was nothing left for the Indian but to go; and from these regions, for the most part, HE HAS GONE!

CHAPTER III.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.

LOCATION—BOUNDARIES—INDIAN BOUNDARIES—COUNTIES—SECOND BOUNDARY—KEKIONGA—MISCELLANY—PUBLIC LANDS—MERIDIANS AND BASE LINES—SURFACE—VEGETATION—ANIMALS—DRAINAGE—MINERALS—INLAND WATERS—MISSISSINEWA—WHITE RIVER—WHITE WATER—MIAMI—DIVIDES—USES OF STREAMS.

WE have thus far treated somewhat at length the pre-historic state of the county and the region, and spoken briefly of its Indian history. We now propose to proceed in a somewhat regular way, describing Randolph County in systematic detail. First, then, as to her material and physical features:

LOCATION.

Randolph County, as at present constituted, lies in the eastern part of the State of Indiana, directly upon the Ohio line, somewhat midway of the State from north to south. It is about twenty-one and three-quarter miles in extent from east to west, and about twenty-one miles from north to south, containing nearly 457 square miles, or about 292,000 acres. It may be properly enough described by stating first its boundaries and matters connected therewith.

BOUNDARIES.

Randolph is bounded north by Jay County; east by Mercer and Darke Counties, Ohio; south by Wayne County, and west by Henry and Delaware Counties. It lies wholly inland, and has no lakes nor large navigable streams on its boundaries. The fortieth parallel of north latitude extends through the southern part of the county (running east and west), near Arba. Winchester is not very far from this parallel, and is thus within one or two degrees of the latitude of several of the great cities of the world—New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Lisbon, Madrid, Rome, Constantinople and Pekin. That fact does not prove, indeed, that Winchester is a great city like the places just named, but only that our latitude round the habitable globe is favorable for the growth of towns.

The eighth meridian of longitude west from Washington (or the eighty-fifth west from London), passes through the county north and south near and west of Ridgeville and Winchester. Thus the difference of time with New York is 40 minutes, with Chicago about 12 minutes, with St. Louis about 20 minutes, and with San Franscisco about 150 minutes.

INDIAN BOUNDARIES.

Two old Indian boundaries pass through the county, both in a southwesterly direction, and, except in the northern portions, exactly parallel to each other.

1. Wayne's boundary, agreed on in a treaty made at Greenville, Ohio, in 1795, between Gen. Anthony Wayne and several tribes of Indians. (See Indian History.) This boundary (as to that part of it which extends through Indiana) begins at Fort Recovery, and passes southwest to the mouth of Kentucky River. It extends through Jay, Randolph, Wayne, Union and Franklin, between Dearborn and Ripley, between Ohio and Switzerland Counties, and through Switzerland County. This line enters Randolph near the northeast corner of Jackson Township (and of the county, and passes through Jackson, Wayne and Greensfork Township. It strikes the north line of Wayne Township about 1½ miles west of the Ohio line—of Greensfork about 3 miles, and the Wayne County line about 4½ miles west from the State line. (See maps.) It passes near and a little west of New Lisbon, Union City, Bartonia, Salem, Spartansburg and Arba.

The surveys on the east side of this boundary were made by the United States Government soon after 1795, certainly between 1795 and 1803. The surveys extended from the State line westward to the boundary, making fractional sections on the east side of the boundary, and on the west side as well, when the land on the west side was surveyed. "Jogs" also are found in the sections at the boundary, on both sides, of course.

The system of survey now in vogue (by meridians, ranges, townships and sections) was instituted by the national Congress, May 25, 1785, and May 18, 1796, and from its excellence and supreme convenience it has been retained continuously from the time of its adoption. The surveys and plattings made before that day of patents granted under the kings of England, and by other sovereigns, and also of grants made by our own government to persons as a reward for meritorious service, were effected without regard to meridians. As, for instance, in the State of New York under English and Dutch grants—and in Louisiana Territory and Indiana, Illinois and Missouri under French grants, and in Ohio and elsewhere in the case of grants to soldiers and others—other and widely varying systems of surveying prevailed. (See chapter on Public Lands.)

When the first settlement of eastern Indiana after the Revolution began, only the land east of the old (Wayne's) boundary had been surveyed, and persons who settled had to stop on the east side of that line, e. g., some of the early settlers near Newport (now Fountain City) that came in before 1809 have stated that they went into the woods just as far as they could get, entering their land directly on the boundary.

COUNTIES.

The counties in the southeastern part of Indiana (Territory) that were formed before the "twelve-mile strip" had been surveyed extended at first westward only to the old boundary. And Randolph (laid out in 1818) reached, when first created, only to the twelve-mile boundary. Afterward the limits of the counties were altered so as to make them stand as at present.

Dearborn County at first embraced all the territory between the Ohio line, the Ohio River and Wayne's boundary. And this whole region was for a time known as the Territory (or even State) of Dearborn.

Settlement was begun there in 1796 by Adam Fluke the year after Wayne's treaty was made, and, of course, before the land had been surveyed. The county (Dearborn) was created (by the Territorial Government) seven years afterward, in 1803. Dearborn was the third county in the Territory, Knox (around Vincennes) being the first, and Clarke (on the Ohio) the second. The fourth county was Harrison, on the Ohio, west of Clarke. The fifth county was Wayne, taking the northern portion of Dearborn. Whether Wayne County, when it was created, extended across the "twelve-mile strip," we do not know. It may have done so, since that strip was ceded by the Indians in 1809, and the county was erected in 1810. When the first settlers came into Randolph (1814), the land between the two boundaries had been surveyed, and was open for settlement. But the land west of the "twelve-mile strip" was not ceded by the Indians till 1818, and not surveyed till 1821–22.

Randolph was the next county organized east of the "boundaries," viz., in 1818, two years after Indiana became a State. A more detailed account will be given hereafter.

SECOND BOUNDARY [TWELVE MILE].

About fourteen years after the first boundary had been established at Greenville by Gen. Wayne (1795), a second boundary was drawn according to a treaty which will now be described, viz.:

The second boundary (already mentioned) passing through the present limits of Randolph County, is the twelve mile boundary in the western part of the county. It was agreed on in a treaty made with the Indians by Gen. Harrison, Governor of Indiana Territory, in 1809 (at Fort Wayne, September 30, and at Vincennes, October 26). It was called the twelve mile boundary because, in that treaty the Indians ceded (along with other lands perhaps) a strip twelve miles wide west of the old boundary already described. This twelve mile line begins at Fort Recovery (at the same point with the other), and, proceeding in a straight line, but at a greater angle than the old boundary till it reaches a point not far from, and a little west of Ridgeville, and twelve miles west of the old boundary; it runs thence parallel with the said old boundary to the Ohio River.

This second or new, or twelve mile boundary passes a little west of Ridgeville, and a little east of Unionsport. It crosses the Mississinewa River in southeast quarter Section 11, Town 21 north, Range 13 east, Franklin Township, and White River in White River Township about one mile east of the northeast corner of Monroe Township, southeast quarter of Section 16, Town 20, Range 13. The surveys might seem to have been made without reference to this twelve mile boundary. At any rate, there appear to be full sections lying across the boundary without "jogs" on either side of the line. The ranges are numbered from the second meridian, which is about ninety miles west of the west line of Ohio. The fact seems to be that the second meridian was located and the base line established, and the ranges measured and marked on the base line, and then the land between the boundaries was surveyed before the land on the west of the "twelve-mile strip," and, after the cession in 1818, the survey was completed. As to this latter purchase and session, Judge Jere Smith, in his Civil History of Randolph County, (manuscript) says: "In the month of October, 1818, a treaty was made by the United States Government with the several tribes occupying the territory of the State of Indiana. The council was held on St. Mary's River, somewhere near Shane's Prairie, not far from where Willshire now stands. Lewis Cass, then Governor of Michigan Territory, and Jonathan Jennings, Governor of Indiana, were appointed by President Monroe, Commissioners to make the treaty. At that treaty, all the country lying west of the twelve mile purchase and south of the Wabash, and up it to the mouth of Little River, and up that river to its head, and to the Fort Wayne Reservation made by Gen. Wayne in 1795 (with certain reservations specified), was ceded to the United States. This cession embraced the whole central part of the State. The land was all surveyed in 1820–21–22, and settlers flowed in rapidly."

When Randolph County was first created (as already remarked) it embraced only the land east of the twelve mile boundary. But at the session, commencing December, 1819, the Legislature laid out, in advance, much of the ceded territory into counties, and in so doing fixed the final boundaries of Randolph County as they now stand, but attached thereto for judicial purposes, all the territory north of it to the State line, as also Delaware and Grant. Blackford, Jay, Wells, Adams, Allen, etc., were vacant land for years afterward, and all that territory was, for the time, attached to Randolph County; and the Commissioners, at their session, August, 1820, made all that territory into a single township and named it Wayne, and ordered an election to be hold at Fort Wayne for the choice of two Justices and one Constable. Rather an extensive township that! large, indeed, as to size, but weak as to population. And for some five years the courts of Randolph had jurisdiction over that region.

KEKIONGA (FORT WAYNE), ETC.

The Miami capital, Kekionga, had stood for ages near the present location of Fort Wayne, and it was first visited by white men at least as soon as 1676, and probably much sooner. A French missionary from Michigan visited the Indian capital in that year, and Chevalier La Salle is thought to have been there about 1680, and, about 1705, the French planted a fort there, Fort Miami. In 1745, the Hurons burnt this fort. The French built another there in 1748. In 1759, with the fall of Canada, all the French posts fell into the hands of the English. Ensign Holmes, of the British Army, built a fort on the east bank of the St. Joseph in 1760–61.

In 1763, in Pontiac's war, Ensign Holmes was betrayed and slain, and the Indians captured the fort. However, Pontiac's war was soon ended, and the English again garrisoned the fort in 1764.

The war of Independence followed, and the peace of 1783 was accomplished; yet the British, though their government had agreed to withdraw their troops with all convenient speed, seem to have held for years several posts, as Detroit, Niagara, Michilimackinac, and also one near Fort Wayne. When "Mad Anthony" marched against the Indians in 1794, he found the British occupying a fort on the Maumee River, and some rather sharp correspondence took place between the two commanding officers. Fort Wayne was built by order of Gen. Wayne after his victory over the savages at the rapids of the Maumee. For many years after its erection, Fort Wayne was a principal center of dealings with the Indian tribes occupying the forests of Indiana.

Greenville, too, was a place of Indian payment from 1795 to 1815. From that time onward Fort Wayne was the place of meeting for the payment of Indian annuities.

A great deal of trade was carried on, chiefly with the Indians, at Fort Wayne at the times of payment. Still no permanent settlement was made there till about 1815. Fort Wayne was evacuated as a military post in 1819, but it became a depot of trade in furs, provisions and whisky.

Richardville, one of the Miami chiefs, grew immensely rich by dealing in furs and by his sales of land. At the Indian payments traders would come from Ohio and Michigan and even New York, to peddle their wares and cajole the Indians.

MISCELLANY.

When Indiana was admitted as a State (1816), Allen County was a part of Knox. The seat of justice for Fort Wayne remained at Vincennes till about 1819, when that was attached to Randolph County; and it so continued, with Winchester for the county seat, till about 1823, at which time Allen County was created. Fort Wayne was laid out as a town in 1823, and the plat is recorded in Winchester.

David Connor had a trading post at various locations on the Mississinewa River, and elsewhere. He stationed himself at Fort Recovery, then above Deerfield, afterward below Wheeling, and finally below Marion. An Indian trader was at La Gro, on the Salamonie, and another at the crossing of the Wabash, by the "Quaker trail," near New Corydon, Jay County, Ind.

A trader had been (probably for a short time) at the crossing of the Wabash, near New Corydon, Jay County, much earlier than the time of David Connor's operations on the Mississinewa, perhaps before the war of 1812. His name was Miller, his goods were furnished him by Vanausdal, of Eaton, Ohio. Miller was murdered by parties unknown.

Allen County was created in 1823, and embraced at first also what is now Wells, Adams, Huntington and Whitley, leaving Jay, Blackford, Delaware and Grant still belonging to Randolph. Huntington was organized in 1834, Adams in 1836, Wells in 1837, and Whitley in 1830, Delaware in 1827, Grant in 1831, Jay in 1836 and Blackford in 1839, leaving in that latter year both Allen and Randolph at their final and permanent size.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The system of rectangular survey for public lands was proposed by a committee of the Continental Congress, viz.:

Messrs. Jefferson, Williamson, Howell, Gerry and Reas, who reported, May 7, 1784, by Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, their chairman.

"An ordinance for ascertaining the mode of locating and disposing of land in the Western Territory, and for other purposes therein mentioned."

The ordinance was considered, debated and amended, and on motion of Mr. Grayson, of Virginia (May 3, 1785), seconded by Mr. Monroe, the size of the township was reduced to six miles square, and May 25, 1785, the bill became a law.

Under this ordinance, that part of Ohio called "The Seven Ranges," was surveyed into ranges of townships extending northward from the Ohio River, and numbered toward the north.

The sections were not surveyed, but "mile corners" were established in the exterior lines of the townships, and the "mile lots" were numbered from one to thirty-six, beginning with the southeast corner of the township.

The area of the "Seven Ranges" was 1,641,724 acres. By act of Congress, May 18, 1796, a Surveyor General was appointed (the year after Wayne's treaty at Greenville had been made with the Indians).

Under this act, one-half the townships were divided by "running" lines each way, two miles apart, through the townships, and making "mile marks" on these lines. The sections were numbered from one to thirty-six, beginning at the northeast corner of each township, and proceeding west and east alternately, ending with thirty-six in the southeast corner. Fractional townships were numbered exactly as though they had been full size. This method of numbering is still employed and has been used ever since its adoption. The act of May 10, 1800, directed the subdivision of townships into half-sections of 320 acres. The act of February 11, 1803, directed the subdivisions into quarter-sections (160 acres). The act of April 24, 1820, subdivided into half-quarter sections (eighty acres). The act of April 5, 1832, directed the survey of quarter-quarters, i. e., forty acres.

No further reduction has ever been made. The price of the public lands also has varied somewhat as follows:

At first not less than a section could be "entered," and the price was $2 per acre, the purchaser paying in four equal annual payments. Afterward, "floating claims" were allowed, i. e., if a man failed to complete his payments he might have a patent for as much as the money he had paid would cover, and let the rest go.

After awhile the price was set at $1.25 cash, with the privilege of buying 160 acres, and then of eighty, and by and by forty acres. In (about) 1840, the right of pre-emption was secured by act of Congress; and in 1862, the "Homestead" act was passed.

In 1872, an act was passed for "soldiers' homesteads," allowing their term of service to count on their homestead time. At some time a provision was made, graduating the price of the public lands according to the time they had remained unsold in market, coming down at the lowest point to 12½ cents per acre. And it is a noteworthy instance of the public benefit of a judicious railroad system, that, while millions of acres had been standing for years unsold at the minimum price in Central and Southern Illinois, in the route of the Central Railroad; after the road had been built under a grant of immense quantities of land to the railroad, the part retained by the Government was sold by it at $2.50 per acre (twenty times the former price), yielding a net income of over $9.000,000.

The land in Indiana east of the "old boundary" was surveyed from 1799 to 1802. The "twelve-mile strip" was surveyed in 1811. The land west of the "twelve-mile strip" was surveyed from 1820 onward.

The following statement concerning meridians and base lines, is condensed from the report of the Commissioner of the Land Office for 1875; pages 37–38.

MERIDIANS—BASE LINES.

Certain north-and-south lines, called meridians are established as initial lines of reckoning. Certain other lines extending east and west are designated, called base lines, crossing the meridians at right angles.

From the meridians the ranges are numbered east or west, or both, as may happen. From the base lines the townships are numbered north or south, or both, as the case may be.

MERIDIANS.

During the course of ninety-six years (May, 1785), the following meridians have been designated:

The first meridian is the west line of Ohio, commencing at the Ohio River, at the mouth of the Miami River, being 84° 51′ west from Greenwich (or about 7° 49′ from Washington).

The lands in Ohio and those in Indiana east of the "old boundary," are numbered east and west from the first meridian. The base in this case is the Ohio River.

The second meridian is located ninety miles west of the western Ohio line, and extends northward to the Indiana State line. [86° 28′ west].

All the lands in Indiana west of the "Old Boundary," are controlled by this meridian, and also that part of Illinois included by fifteen ranges west; and the ranges are numbered eastward fifteen ranges, or ninety miles, to the State line (or a less distance to the "old boundary"), and westward fifteen ranges, or ninety miles, extending some distance into Eastern Illinois. The base line is an east and west line crossing the meridian twenty-four miles north of the Ohio River.

The third meridian extends northward from the mouth of the Ohio River to the northern boundary of Illinois. This meridian regulates the land between it and those subject to the second meridian, and westward to the Illinois River. It is the line of 89° 10′ 30″ west from Greenwich.

The fourth meridian extends from the mouth of the Illinois northward from latitude 38° 58′ 12″ through Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

This meridian controls all the lands in Illinois, west of the Illinois River, or of this meridian north of its intersection therewith; all the lands in Wisconsin, and all in Minnesota lying east of the Mississippi and of the third guide meridian (west of the fifth principal meridian) and north of the river.

The fifth meridian extends northward from the mouth of the Arkansas River, with a base line westward from the mouth of the St. Francis River. It controls Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota west of the Mississippi and the third guide meridian, and Dakota east of the Missouri. [90° 58′ west].

The sixth meridian [97° 22′ west] extends from latitude 37′ to the Missouri River. Its base line is the 40th degree of latitude.

This meridian controls Kansas, Nebraska, Dakota south and west of the Missouri, Wyoming and Colorado (except the Rio Grande Valley).

These are the six principal Meridians. Besides these there are others, as follows:

The Michigan meridian for Michigan, the Tallahassee meridian for Florida, the St. Stephens meridian for parts of Alabama and Mississippi, the Huntsville meridian for Northern Alabama, the Choctaw meridian for Northern Mississippi, the Washington meridian for Southwestern Mississippi, the Louisiana meridian for Louisiana west of the Mississippi, the St. Helena meridian for Southeastern Louisiana (east of the Mississippi), the New Mexico meridian for New Mexico and Colorado in the Rio Grande Valley, the great Salt Lake meridian for Utah, the Boise meridian for Idaho, the Mount Diablo meridian for Central and Northeastern California and all of Nevada, the San Bernardino meridian for Southern California east of the meridian and some west of it, the Humboldt meridian for northwestern California, the Willamette meridian for Oregon and Washington, the Montana meridian for Montana, the Gila and Salt River meridian for Arizona, the Indian meridian for Indian Territory.

[NOTE. It may be remarked that the Texas Lands are not mentioned. They were left in the ownership of the State, and hence, are not included in the United States Surveys. Thus it is seen that twenty-four meridians of survey have been designated by the Government.]

Randolph County land is numbered from two meridians, first and second.

The first meridian is the line between Indiana and Ohio. The second meridian is ninety miles west of the first.

The land east of the old (Wayne's) boundary is surveyed and numbered westward from the first meridian.

The second meridian begins at a point on the Ohio River in Perry County, Ind., ninety miles west of the Ohio line. It extends north between Perry and Crawford, through Crawford, Orange, Lawrence, Monroe, Morgan, Hendricks, Boone, Clinton, Carroll and Cass, between Pulaski and Fulton, between Stark and Marshall, and through St. Joseph to the north line of Indiana.

The land west of the old boundary and to the second meridian, is surveyed and numbered eastward from the second meridian.

One range in Randolph County (fractional), and four ranges in all, are counted from the first meridian, and fifteen ranges in all are reckoned eastward of the second meridian to the Ohio line.

Randolph County embraces Range 1 west of the first principal meridian (east of the old boundary), and Ranges 12, 13, 14 and 15 east of second principal meridian.

It embraces townships 16, 17, 18 and (south half of) 19 west of first meridian, and townships (north half of) 18, and (the whole of) 19, 20 and 21, east of the second principal meridian, in Ranges 12, 13, 14 and 15 aforesaid.

The base of the survey on the east side of the old boundary would seem to be the point where the boundary touches the Ohio River. At any rate the townships number thence toward the north. Hence the south line of Randolph County is about ninety miles north of the point where the old boundary strikes the Ohio.

[It is however only about sixty miles from the nearest point on the Ohio.]

The base line of the survey on the west side of the old boundary crosses the second meridian about 24 miles north of the point at which that meridian touches the Ohio River, there being four townships south of the base line to the Ohio on the east side of the second meridian.

On the west side there are fourteen townships in Indiana south of that base line.

The whole of Indiana west of the second meridian is surveyed and numbered westward from that second meridian and also more or less of Illinois.

There are "jogs" on both sides of the "old boundary," the surveys on the two sides of that boundary having no connection with each other. There are no "jogs" at the "twelve-mile boundary." The surveys west of the "old boundary," and on both sides of the "new boundary" were all made from the second meridian eastward, although the land east of that second boundary contiguous thereto was surveyed before the land on the west side.

One thing may be of interest, and not universally known, as to the survey of the public lands, viz: The townships are square, six miles on a side, while the meridians are not parallel (of course). This disagreement causes fractional sections, which are made to occur at the side which is at the close of the survey. The range lines were first established six miles apart, and then the townships, six miles square, were measured off, and afterward the section lines were run each way, one mile apart. The section corners were established by corner trees, as also by witness trees, all marked with descriptions of size, measurements, distances from corner, etc.

By these section-corners the section is afterward divided into halves, quarters, eighths, sixteenths. The original surveys are described as they were taken, in the "field notes," which are deposited in the office of the County Auditor, and are accessible to all who wish to consult them. Owing to various obstacles and difficulties and possibly sometimes to carelessness, the original surveys were not always accurate and sometimes seriously wrong. The corners, however, established in such survey, when they can be determined, must stand. It is true, indeed, that some sections contain more than others, and the lines between corners are not always regular; but certainty and stability are of paramount importance, and far more so than mere quantity. Legal methods have been established by the State for completing the survey of a section, and for ascertaining and fixing any desired corner, line or boundary; and when done according to law, the work of the "lawful surveyor" has to stand.

It may or may not be known by all although it is nevertheless a certain fact, that surveying is for many reasons a most delicate and difficult operation; and the fewest number, even of professional surveyors, are able to execute an extensive survey with even approximate accuracy. It is true also that "disputed boundaries" are a fruitful source of quarrels between neighbors, and not seldom fierce enmity and permanent and bitter personal hatred, will grow from such a dispute.

A very curious instance, showing both the difficulty in the subject matter, the fierceness of strifes arising from such sources, and the need of accurate knowledge and superior practical skill in execution, as also the advantage, nay, the absolute necessity of possessing the confidence of the contending parties, occurred many years ago; and, as the case has never been in print, so far as we are aware, it may be well to preserve a statement of the case for the advantage of posterity.

A certain large landed estate with many heirs was to be divided. The attempt was made by different surveyors, but no two came out alike, and none was satisfactory. At last a surveyor was sent for a hundred miles away. He came, knowing nothing beforehand of the trouble in the matter. He found, perhaps, a hundred men on hand, and saw that he had a doubly-difficult task to perform—to make a survey difficult in itself, and to satisfy the parties concerned of the correctness of his work. He soon found that the chief trouble grew from the fact that a line had to be ascertained that extended through an impassable swamp. He felt that the essential thing to be done was, to satisfy that crowd of men that he could measure a line exactly without going near it; so, ordering two stakes to be set at an unknown distance apart, he, without himself going near either one of them or upon the line between them, by measurements and calculations of triangles, found the distance between those stakes, and announced it to an inch. "Now," said he, "go measure it." They did, and to their amazement found that he was right, "to a shaving." "There," said he, "are you satisfied that I can tell the exact length of a line without passing over it or being upon it?" "We are," was the universal reply. "Well then, don't you see that I can tell how far it is across that swamp without crossing it?" "Yes, we do," was the answer. He then went on with his work, and completed the survey; and, though his results were unlike all the rest (which was natural enough), all were satisfied, and the bitter controversy was forever at an end. They felt that he was "master of his business," and that if the survey could be made at all, he could do it, and that he had done it. The other surveyors might have been near enough correct, but they had not secured the confidence of the parties concerned in advance.

Another actual case equally curious, though of another sort, we state, both of the instances showing, among other things, how matters that occur in actual life are more difficult than any problems found in textbooks.

A man died leaving a widow with ten children, all minors, and also a considerable estate. A final division could not be made till the youngest came of age. Before that time, seven of the children had died, one by one, so that the final distribution of the estate had to be made to the widow and the three surviving children. The law was this: The widow was entitled by statute to one-third, and the children, collectively, to the other two-thirds. If a child died, half its portion went to the mother, and the other half in equal shares to the surviving children: How much is the final share of the widow, and of each surviving child? This problem in fractions the court had to solve, and "seas of figures" were made by experts in attempts to make the calculation and to determine the result.

SURFACE.

There are no mountains nor even high hills in Randolph County. The center between the Mississinewa and White Rivers is largely low and mostly level, much of the land needing draining. Farther from the sources of the streams the surface becomes more rolling. And in the southern part of the county it is still more so. On Nolan's and Green's Forks, Martindale's Creek, West River and Little White River, the gentle hills and sloping valleys present a very picturesque appearance. In early times much of the level portions were difficult of occupation, but, of late years, extensive ditching has been done and the low portions make the very best farms.

VEGETATION.

Occasionally, when the settlers first came, a low, wet prairie would be found; but, for the most part, a thick, heavy woods covered the soil, and they were filled mostly with an abundant underbrush. Jere Smith, in his "Reminiscences," says:

"The country was thickly timbered with a tall, heavy forest, having a wonderful undergrowth of shrubs and wild grass and weeds. The trees were beech, sugar tree, ash (gray, blue and swamp), oak (white, red, burr, pin and river), poplar, walnut (white and black), elm (red or slippery, and white or hickory), hickory (black or pignut, and shell bark), buckeye, linn, wild maple, hackberry, coffeenut, honey locust, cottonwood. The undergrowth was spice-bush, ironwood, water-beech and hornbeam, prickly-ash, dogwood, kunnekanic (Indian name, now extinct), red-bud, paw-paw, wild plum, red and black haw, sassafras; in swamps, black alder, willow, thorn, crab-apple, young cottonwood.

WEEDS AND GRASSES.

"Nettles, peavines, may apple, ginseng, ferns (two kinds), snake-root (black and seneca), silkweed, ramps (soon extinct), bear-grass, file-grass, skunk-cabbage, cat's tail. In clearings, butter-weed, thistles, mullein, dog-fennel (may-weed); in tilled lands, spanish needles and touch-me-nots."

ANIMALS.

The same authority says: "The game were deer, squirrels (gray, black and red), turkeys, pheasants and bears. Other wild animals were wolves, raccoons, ground-hogs, possums, porcupines, wild-cats, foxes, panthers, otter, minks and pole cats."

There were, in many parts, especially after the country had been partially settled, great numbers of wild hogs, the offspring of animals which had been tame, but that were grown wild by ranging in the woods. These wild hogs were often very fierce and savage, and considerably dangerous. And it is curious how quickly the tame swine themselves would become wild by running in the forest. These droves of hogs would sometimes remain unmolested for two or three years, since they would fatten only in the "mast years," and the mast would occasionally fail for a year or two, or even more, and the herds of swine would greatly increase during those years, and become vastly formidable to persons passing through the forest. In some places autumnal fires had killed the undergrowth and left the forest beautifully open. In a few cases, also, hurricanes had passed and prostrated the timber, leaving the ground covered with trunks of trees lying in every direction. One such tract existed near Spartanburg. Another was caused a few years later by a terrific storm that tore through the southern part of the county. A history of it will be found in "Reminiscences by Jere. Smith," in another part of this work. Mr. Smith was a terrified witness of the fearful scene.

DRAINAGE.

The surface of Randolph County rises to a considerable height. The land on which Union City stands, is said to be, with one exception, the highest land in the State, being not far from 1,000 feet above the level of the Gulf of Mexico. Of the State itself, the northeastern part slopes to the northeast, the water passing through the Maumee to Lake Erie. The center slopes to the west and southwest, being drained by the White, the Wabash, etc., into the Ohio. The southeast and south portions slope directly to the Ohio, and the regions of the northwest and north are drained into Lake Michigan. A small portion of the east drains eastward to the Miami. The chief valleys in the State are the Maumee (and its affluents) in the northeast, the Wabash in the center, the Whitewater in the east and southeast, the Kankakee in the northwest, the St. Joseph in the north, the Ohio in the south, the Miami in the east. The county itself embraces parts of the Wabash, the Whitewater and the Miami Valleys, as will be more fully seen hereafter. There were originally a few swamps or marshes, mostly at the head of the streams, as the swamp between Nolan's Fork and Greenville Creek, in Greensfork Township, and some others. These two creeks run in opposite directions from the same marsh. Nolan's Fork flows south into Whitewater, and Greenville north and then east toward the Miami. But these old-time swamps, by the clearing of the forests and the draining of their surface, are mostly changed to dry land.

During late years, and especially at the present time, an immense amount of ditching has been, and is being done by the farmers of the county. It is considered that the high and rolling ground, even, is vastly improved by thorough draining; and, while the low marshy land, utterly useless otherwise, has been, by a thorough system of ditching, transformed into excellent farms, the more rolling land has in many cases been ditched also and greatly improved thereby. Many of the artificial drains are immense ditches, deep and wide, and extending for miles through scores and hundreds of farms. Their construction is regulated by law, and, though costly, they are of immense benefit, and, in fact, indispensable to the prosperity of the farming interest. Though it is regretted by many, that the legal regulations require so great an amount of attending cost, causing the ditching of the country to be exceedingly expensive; still, the owners of low lands cannot do without the ditches. Yet, a system is greatly to be desired that shall result in the construction of the largest and most serviceable ditches at the lowest practicable cost.

MINERALS, ROCKS, ETC.

Gravel is somewhat abundant, being found in drift heaps like knolls, covered in most cases with surface-earth several feet deep. Often these gravel deposits are very large. Some of them are in the bluffs of the creeks, but many also are at a distance from any stream. Sand is found in many places but is not so plentiful as gravel. Lime is burned on the banks of the Mississinewa River near Ridgeville, and on the White River near Macksville, and also near Farmland. There are two kilns near Maxville and one near Farmland. The proprietors of the two kilns near Maxville burn, on an average, twelve times a year, 400 bushels at a time. The demand is large and rapid, the whole of a kiln being sold often as fast as it can be loaded. The lime is said to be of an excellent quality. These quarries furnish also rock for foundations, etc., and experts say that, by digging deeper, excellent building stone might be obtained in abundance. In some places within the county, rock-boulders are found quite plentifully. Across the southern part of Randolph occurs a remarkable deposit of loose rocks on the surface. The tract is, perhaps, a mile wide, and is supposed to extend eastward over most of the county. In some parts of the tract the stones lie so thick as nearly to cover the ground. Sometimes immense rocks weighing many tons are met with, boulders also, some of them very large, are found in various parts of the county. In some cases farmers take pains to gather the rocks from their lands, and utilize them by walling a well or by laying them into the foundations of a barn. In some places also the huge rocks have been blasted by powder, so as to become available for walling purposes.

MAXVILLE REGION.

The following sketch contains some facts furnished by I. M. Branson, Esq., of Maxville, Randolph County. His article has been somewhat condensed to correspond to the narrow limits of the space available for its insertion: A tract of land containing eighty to one hundred acres lying north of Maxville, and extending both eastward and westward from that town, constituting at the present time a portion of the valley of White River, seems to present striking evidences of the action thereon of the forces of the Glacial Epoch, during which, after the prevalence for unknown ages of fire and water, ice became for a season monarch of the world-wide waste, producing, as the result of its power, a condition of things described as the Drift Period, such as loose, unstratified deposits of clay, sand, gravel, and stones or rocks familiar to the sight of every man in the Northern States, which, by the way, are said not to be found much south of forty degrees north latitude. In some places, the drift deposits form only a slight covering above the solid rock while elsewhere the deposits are piled up in hills and ridges. This latter state of things exists in the locality mentioned. Apparently the drift or avalanche came southwest, leveling by its mighty power hills and ridges, filling ravines and hollows in its onward course. The melting of the ice has left these vast deposits of boulders, gravel, fossils, etc., scattered everywhere.

The whole region was previously a surface of limestone. In some places the lime rock is still uncovered, though lying mostly from a few inches to several feet below the surface. Over the whole ground are scattered many kinds of material—stone, clay, soil, sand, loam and alluvium in a mass together. The boulders are of all sizes, from small rubble stones to rocks weighing several tons. The masses are rounded as if water-worn, and possess a structure entirely different from the layers of rock upon which they rest. These boulder rocks have evidently been transported to their present location by some wonderful force, presenting as they do marks of parallel grooves or striæ, so-called, caused, as supposed, by the scraping of the boulder masses upon the solid stone-layers lying below. The bedrock at the surface is polished and grooved in the same manner. The locality in question might seem to have been the spot at which the huge glacier stopped its motion and melted away, thus leaving its entire burden of drift. There have been found petrified fish, beech nuts, hickory nuts, wood, worms, etc., all transformed into solid stone. The chief evidences of the approach and resting-place of a glacier are moraines, erratic blocks, polished surfaces, striæ, etc.

The river flows west and northwest through this tract. The hills are low and gradual in ascent. The ravines extend north and south with the ends running into the river "filled up." In excavating for limestone, different strata of earth and soil, sand, gravel, loam and clay are discovered in a conglomerate mass. In the river valley, below this region, none of the features named are noticed. Some of the boulders are monsters. The surface of the limestone is level; extending from the river, toward the highlands on each side upon this ground, are situated the Maxville lime-quarries. The bottom of the river is a solid bed of limestone. Many fossils have been found, such as the imprint of leaves, twigs and plants, shells, nuts and small grades of animal life upon the surface of the lime rock. This whole tract possesses great interest for a geologist and would bear a far more careful and extensive exploration.

INLAND WATERS.

There are no lakes, nor even ponds of any size in Randolph County. The rivers are the Mississinewa and its branches in the north (flowing, i. e., the main stream, nearly west); the White River and its branches in the center, the main stream flowing west; the branches of the Whitewater (but not the Whitewater itself), in the south, flowing southward; and one or two branches of the Miami in the east, tending eastward.

MISSISSINEWA VALLEY.

This valley embraces the entire northern part of the county. It rises in the State of Ohio and enters Randolph County in the northeastern part of Jackson Township, flowing nearly west, veering, however, slightly north through the northern parts of the northern tier of townships, Jackson, Ward, Franklin and Green; it enters Delaware County near the northwest corner of Green Township. It is a considerable stream, flowing into the Wabash, through Randolph, Delaware, Grant and Miami Counties, a little above Peru. The towns near it (in Randolph County) are Allensville, Deerfield, Ridgeville, Steubenville and Fairview, and (out of Randolph) Albany (Delaware County), Jonesboro and Marion (Grant County). Allensville, Steubenville and Deerfield are south of the River, and Ridgeville is north of it. None of these towns except Ridgeville are of much importance, though it is a thriving little town. Allensville is in Jackson Township, nearly north of Union City. Deerfield is in Ward Township, north of Winchester; Ridgeville is in Franklin Township, northwest of Winchester. Steubenville and Fairview are in Green Township, the most northwestern part of the county. The chief branches of the Mississinewa are on the south side, Bush, Bear, Mad, Hickory and Massie's Creeks, and Little Mississinewa River. On the north side, Goshen, Dinner and Day's Creeks. Bush Creek rises in White River, and flows through Franklin, Monroe and Green, entering the Mississinewa a little east of Steubenville. Bear Creek heads in White River, flows through White River and Franklin, emptying three miles below Ridgeville. Mud Creek (there are several) rises in White River, flows through White River and Ward, emptying just west of Deerfield. Hickory Creek heads in White River, flows through White River and Ward, and reaches the Mississinewa, east of Deerfield. Massie's Creek rises in Ward and empties between Allensville and Deerfield. Little Mississinewa River heads in Wayne Township west of Salem, flows nearly north and just west of Union City, through Wayne and Jackson, and meets the Big Mississinewa a little east of Allensville. Goshen (north side) flows from Jay County into Ward Township, emptying near Deerfield. Day's Creek is mostly in Franklin Township, emptying east of the mouth of Bear Creek. Dinner Creek flows southwest through Green Township and empties west of the mouth of Bush Creek. Some of these streams are of considerable size, and themselves have affluents; Bush Creek has Elkhorn and several others, Bear Creek has Tiger Branch. The towns in this region (not yet mentioned) are, or have been, New Lisbon, Jackson Township east of Little Mississinewa; Mount Holly, west of New Lisbon in Jackson; New Pittsburg, in Jackson, north of the Mississinewa near the Jay County line; New Middletown, Jackson, between Union and Deerfield on the Deerfield State road; Saratoga, on the railroad between Union City and Ridgeville, in Ward Township; Harrisville, on the "Bee Line," between Union and Winchester in Wayne; Randolph, on the railroad south of Deerfield, Ward Township, Salem, Wayne Township, near the head of Little Mississinewa; Union City, near the Little Mississinewa, at the junction of several railroads.

WHITE RIVER VALLEY.

Is in the center of the county, extending from east to west.

White River is the largest stream in the county. It rises in the east part of Washington Township, flows northeast several miles through Washington, White River and Wayne, then turning westerly (in Wayne) it passes out of Wayne and through White River and Stony Creek, across a very small corner of Monroe, leaving Randolph near Windsor; thence through Delaware, Madison, Hamilton, Marion, Johnson, Morgan, Owen, Greene, between Daviess and Knox, and between Knox and Pike, and Gibson Counties, with a general southwesterly course, it enters Wabash opposite Mount Carmel (a town in Illinois) a long distance below Vincennes.

The towns near White River (in Randolph) are: Snow Hill, Washington Township; Harrisville, Wayne Township; Winchester, White River Township; Maxville, White River Township; Farmland, Monroe Township; Windsor, Stony Creek Township. These towns are all south of the river but Snow Hill, Harrisville and Farmland. Snow Hill and Farmland are north, and Harrisville east, of White River. White River takes its westerly course near Harrisville in Wayne.

Winchester is a considerable town, and a railroad center; the others, except Farmland, are small and of little importance. Harrisville is on a railroad and so are Farmland and Winchester.

The towns (out of Randolph) on White River are: Muncie, county seat of Delaware; Anderson, county seat of Madison; Noblesville, county seat of Hamilton: Indianapolis, county seat of Marion and capital of the State; Martinsville, county seat of Morgan; Spencer, county seat of Owen; Bloomfield, county seat of Greene.

These towns are railroad towns also, and more or less active and flourishing. They are important centers of business and trade for the region around them.

Indianapolis is one of the greatest railroad centers in the world, is by far the largest town in the State, and rapidly reaching its older rivals throughout the country.

The chief branches of the White River are on the south side, the water on the north draining mostly into the Mississinewa.

The affluents are: Stony, Cabin, Eight Mile, Sparrow, Spring Branch, Sugar and Salt Creeks.

Stony Creek is mostly in Delaware County, entering Randolph south of Windsor, and emptying not far from that town.

Cabin Creek rises west of Huntsville in West River, flows northwest through West River, White River and Stony Creek, emptying midway between Maxville and Windsor.

Eight-Mile Creek begins in Washington, flows through Washington, West River and White River, and empties into White River (stream) in the northeast corner of Stony Creek, a little west of Maxville.

Spring Branch is wholly in White River, between Sparrow and Sugar Creeks.

Sparrow Creek heads in West River, flows through White River, and empties a mile east of Maxville.

Sugar Creek rises in Crane Pond in Washington; flows through Washington and White River, and empties a little northwest of Winchester.

Salt Creek begins in Washington, flows north through Washington, White River (and the town of Winchester), and empties a short distance north of Winchester.

Stony Creek has a large branch, Little White River. It rises in Nettle Creek, flows through Nettle Creek and Stony Creek, and enters Stony Creek (stream) in the west part of the township.

The towns in this region are: Losantville, Huntsville, Pleasant View, Unionsport and Buena Vista.

Losantville is in Nettle Creek at the head of Little White River.

Unionsport is in West River and White River on Cabin Creek.

Huntsville is in West River at the head of Cabin Creek.

Buena Vista is east of Unionsport in West River and White River.

Pleasant View is in Stony Creek and Nettle Creek, northeast of Losantville.

WHITE WATER VALLEY

Embraces most of the southern portion of Randolph County, though no part of the river itself is found therein. Its chief branches in Randolph are: Nolan's Fork, Greensfork, Martindale Creek and West River.

Nolan's Fork drains the southern part of Greensfork Township.

Greensfork drains the west part of Greensfork and the south part of Washington Township.

Martindale Creek and West River drain the south part of West River Township.

Arba is on the west side of Nolan's Fork in Greensfork Township.

Lynn is on the west side of Greensfork in Washington Township.

Bloomingsport is near one of the western branches of Greensfork in Washington Township.

These branches of White River, in Randolph County, flow chiefly southward.

MIAMI VALLEY.

The only affluents of the Miami in Randolph County are Greenville and Dismal Creeks. Greenville Creek rises in Greensfork Township, southeast of Spartansburg, flows north and northeast through Greensfork and Wayne, near and east of Spartansburg and Bartonia, and enters Ohio in the northeastern part of Wayne; Dismal heads in the north part of Greensfork, flows northeast through Wayne, and enters Ohio a mile south of Union City. Spartansburg is on the west side of Greenville Creek in Greensfork Township. Bartonia is also west of Greenville Creek and in Wayne Township.

"CROSSINGS."

The streams are crossed by the numerous highways extending in all directions. Large bridges are required over the White and Mississinewa in several places. The chief crossings of the Mississinewa are: 1. North of Allensville, a pike. 2. South of New Pittsburg, a pike. 3. North of Deerfield, a pike. 4. South of Ridgeville, an iron bridge. 5. Midway between Ridgeville and Deerfield, a ford. 6. South of Fairview, an iron bridge.

The main crossings of White River are: 1. Near Mount Zion Meeting-house, southeast of Winchester. 2. East of Winchester on the Greenville State Road. 3. Two or three crossings in the region of Harrisville. 4. East of Winchester, near White River Friends' Meeting-house. 5. Not very far from Winchester, northwest of the fair grounds. 6. Not far from Stephen Moorman's in the region where Sampletown used to be. 7. Near Maxville. 8. Just south of Farmland. 9. South of Morristown. There is a large bridge over Stony Creek just east of Windsor.

VALLEYS AND DIVIDES.

The Mississinewa Valley embraces the northern part of the county, chiefly Jackson, Ward, Franklin and Green Townships. White River Valley is in the center, taking (parts of) Wayne and White River, Stony Creek, Nettle Creek, and (parts of) Washington and West Rivers.

The Whitewater Valley includes most of Greensfork, Washington and West River. Miami Valley takes (parts of) Greensfork and Wayne. There are three "divides," mostly low and marshy—(1) between Mississinewa and White Rivers; (2) between White and Whitewater Rivers; (3) between White and White River and Miami. The "divide" between Mississinewa and White begins near the center of Wayne southwest of Salem, and passing near Harrisville, extends on the north side of, and not very far from White River stream, through White River and Monroe Townships.

The "divide" between White and Whitewater begins in the west part of Greensfork, and, passing into the north part of Washington and bending southward, it extends near the center of West River Township, and through the south part of Nettle Creek. The "divide," setting off the Miami waters from those of the White and the Whitewater, commences in Wayne south of Union City, extends southwest through Wayne into Greensfork, and thence south and southeast to the southeast part of Greensfork.

James Moorman

USES OF THE STREAMS.

Many of these streams were in early times used for water-power for grist-mills, saw-mills and other machinery.

The most important in these respects were Mississinewa River, White River and Cabin Creek, the last being in some respects the best of the three for water power.

In the latter days the amount of water is much more variable and uncertain than of old in all the streams. The clearing of the timber and the drainage of the low lands seem to have greatly lessened the quantity of water in the rivers and creeks. And for these, and perhaps other reasons, steam has almost wholly superseded the use of water as a power for the propelling of machinery in this county.

There is still a water mill on White River at Maxville and one at Windsor, one on Mississinewa at Ridgeville, one on Cabin Creek near its mouth, and perhaps one or two others. The slope of the streams is very slight, and water has to be conveyed a long distance to secure sufficient fall for the requisite power.

In earlier times many more mills, both for sawing and grinding, carding machines, etc., were to be found, most of which are now discontinued.

Mississinewa and White were at first (especially the former) used during the spring floods for boating, rafting, etc.

Wayne and Randolph were settled before the main portions of the White River, the Mississinewa and the Wabash valleys; and, when these latter named regions began to be settled, about the only way to reach them with supplies of fruit, potatoes, flour, pork, etc., was to haul the merchandise to the Mississinewa at Ridgeville, build or buy a flatboat, load it, and guide the awkward, unwieldy thing down the current of the river to the settlers below. Sometimes a number of boats would be taken down together.

Mr. Joab Ward, of Ridgeville (see Thomas Ward's reminiscences), built many boats and sold them to parties who wished to convey their produce down the stream. Generally the man who owned the commodities would purchase a boat and do his own boating, or hire some person for that special trip.

Mr. Ward would furnish a boat, all complete, forty feet long, for $25. Many stories are told by the early settlers of the incidents of boating life, and of the dangers and the losses incurred during the voyage down the stream. Sometimes the owners of the "crafts" would have to "run the mill-dams," and the boats would be broken and wrecked, and some men were drowned. In a few instances the owners of the mills would forbid the passage of the dams by the boats, and one mill-owner drew his rifle to his shoulder and threatened to shoot the boatman. The boat passed the dam, however, and the man did not shoot.

Once a man from Deerfield, Mr. Searl, gathered several boatloads of charcoal and started down, but near Fairview the cargoes were wrecked and lost.

This business of boating continued for several years; but, before very long, those valleys became settled and raised their own supplies and, of course, that put a stop to the flat-boating on the Mississinewa.

This kind of craft could only "float," and of course could not be brought back up stream; and therefore a boat never went but one voyage, and frequently (as already stated) did not even accomplish that. When the boatmen had made their downward trip, the boats were disposed of in some way, and the gallant fellows came on shore and went home by land, and, of course, on foot. A group of jolly chaps would frequently have a merry time (and sometimes a hard one) in "footing" it in company, from Marion or the mouth of the Mississinewa or somewhere else in that region, to their homes near Ridgeville. It was not uncommon for persons who were expert boatmen to hire out to take a boat down the stream to the Wabash and then walk back.

It seems hard now, but the brave, stalwart fellows thought it no special hardship then. In fact, the flatboatmen on the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans had to come home from that far distant market on foot. One thing sometimes gave special trouble to the footmen on the Mississinewa. The boating could be done only in time of the spring floods, and the creeks and bottoms would be flooded too, and the footmen in returning were in danger of of having to wade and almost to swim. One old boatman stated that he was obliged on coming home from one of his trips to wade up to his neck. But dear me! What did they care? It all went in a life time, and life was dull without adventures and mishaps.

It would seem a wonder that no town grew up at Ridgeville. Lewellyn's mill and Ward's "boat-buildery" (to coin a word) both were there, and surely less than that would start a town now-a-days. But the "boating" would only last for a single trip—and not every year at that. And a mill alone will not make a town even now. It will help somewhat but cannot make one, and much less could it do so then. And Lewellyn's was not very much of a mill. So Ridgeville had to wait fifteen or twenty years for its first laying out, and sixteen or seventeen years more for another start, and then some twelve years longer before it really took to growing in earnest.

It was first platted in 1837, twenty years after Meshach Lewellyn first settled on the tract. But the town was a failure and the lots were never sold. "Newtown" was laid out in 1853, when the railroad from Union City was in process of construction. The place made a beginning, but the road "flatted out," and the town hardly "got out of the shell." But in 1867 the Logansport road became a fact and Ridgeville began to become a reality. Not very long afterward the north and south road was built, giving the embryo town a crossing, and Ridgeville seems at last to be making a somewhat important center of trade. But its real and certain growth as a permanent thing only began to be on the completion of the Grand Rapids track, full fifty years from its original settlement and the building of its first mill.

About fourteen years ago the Free Will Baptists founded Ridgeville College, which has been struggling on with more or less efficiency and success ever since.

[It is a curious fact as to the name of the new town at Ridgeville, that a soldier who died there during the war, is said, upon the "Company Roll," to have died at "Newtown," Ind., showing that by some the town was still called by the name given at the new laying out, which name, however, seems at the present time to have entirely disappeared.]

CHAPTER IV.

EARLY HISTORY.

General—Settlement—First Things—Manner of Life—Building, Clearing, Lands, Furniture, Food, Cooking, Work, Clothing, Money, Amusements, Religion, Etc.

GENERAL HISTORY.

WHEN Indiana was made a State, in 1816, Wayne County embraced all the territory north of her south line and east and south of the outer boundary of the "twelve-mile strip," (probably).

All west of the "twelve-mile strip" to Vigo, Knox and Sullivan, was Indian land. There had been no white inhabitants in Indiana north of the settlers in (what was then) Wayne County, except a few soldiers and some two or three white families on the present site of the city of Fort Wayne, and the soldiers had been removed from that post the year before (1815). There was nothing anywhere else north but forts at Green Bay, Detroit, Fort Dearborn (Chicago), and Mackinaw (the last named on the Straits of Michilimackinac, and a far northern region with a bleak and inhospitable climate). In this respect, indeed, the present town of Mackinaw is a worthy successor of the old village and fort. Not many years ago, perhaps in the spring of 1871, ice was still found solid and unbroken in the Straits of Mackinaw to the depth of four feet. That cool and breezy region makes, however, a delightful summer resort, and many from the country in general, and from Randolph County as well, find health and pleasure combined amid the picturesque scenery of that rugged country.

The two Indian boundaries cut off from the territory occupied by the savage tribes, only a small portion of the east side, widest at the south, and running to a point at Fort Recovery, Ohio.

It will be seen that almost the whole State was at that time a dense wilderness. The settled portions comprised a small, narrow tract in the southeast part, and "patches" along the Ohio and Wabash Rivers, at Vevay, Corydon, Evansville, Vincennes and Terre Haute. The French had settled Vincennes more than a century before, and the Swiss had colonized Vevay in 1803.

Other emigrants were flocking in and pushing settlements forward, and numbers of Carolinians, Virginians, Tennesseeans, Kentuckians, etc., had located in the State (or Territory, rather) in Dearborn, Franklin and Wayne Counties, before the purchase of the twelve-mile strip (1809), and the settlers' wave had reached Randolph in 1814. The State was admitted to the Union in 1816, and in 1818 emigrants enough had entered the region to entitle the people thereof to form a county. The settlers had occupied Nolan's Fork, Greensfork, Martindale Creek, West River and White River with some of its creeks east of the "boundary."

The new county was named Randolph from old Randolph County in North Carolina, because many of the residents within its limits had come from that county in the "Old North State;" and because a member of the Legislature, living within its bounds, was also a native of the same.

Its boundaries at first were only from the present north line of Wayne County, and east of the twelve-mile boundary.

In 1824, the State capital was permanently located at Indianapolis, then a mere hamlet in the woods. The Indian title to the lands in the central and northern parts of the State was mostly extinguished in 1818.

Winchester was located as the county seat of Randolph in 1818 (the same year that the county was established, and some years before Indianapolis was founded), in the unbroken forest, and for a considerable time Winchester was the seat of justice for all the white people north, including those who were making their homes at Fort Wayne.

The counties now comprising the territory which had been, at some previous time, included in either Wayne or Randolph Counties, are as follows, with the date of their respective creation:

Wayne, 1810; Randolph, 1818; Allen, 1823; Delaware, 1827; Grant, 1831; Henry, —; Huntington, 1834; Adams, Wells, Jay, 1836; Blackford, Whitley, 1839.

[NOTE. Other northern counties are not here mentioned. Theoretically, Randolph extended northward to the northern line of Indiana; practically it is not known that she exercised any jurisdiction beyond the vicinity of Fort Wayne].

SETTLEMENT.

The first settlement in Randolph County was made in April, 1814, by Thomas W. Parker, with his wife and three children, a Quaker family from North Carolina. He selected his land, brought his family to the place he had chosen, built a "camp" and lived in it four weeks, till his cabin was raised and covered, and then they crawled in, the first night, under the end logs of the cabin, dragging their scanty furniture inside after them. The cabin was like ten thousand others built before and since, made of poles or small trees, and covered with clap boards, i. e., short boards split from a straight, smooth-grained oak, and about four feet long, to be used in place of shingles. How long the cabin remained without door or floor is not known. Probably the door hole was cut out the next day. But as to floor, the cases are numerous, where settlers have lived for years without floors or windows either; and some have been with neither fireplace nor chimney, the fire being built on the ground in the middle of the house, and the smoke spreading all through the room like a smoke-house. Instances have been known where families have lived through the winter with not even chinking between the logs. Indeed, the fifth settler in Randolph County, as we shall presently see, lived from November till the next fall in a "camp." How or why human beings in a civilized land should do such things is hard for us to understand, but some of the settlers did it. Yet, it is to be recollected that every thing had to be made by hand. There were no saw-mills, no boards, no plank, no anything, and very little money to buy anything from elsewhere. And there were very few wagons, and no roads at all to travel from place to place.

Thomas Parker had come from Carolina with five other families, and in the course of the summer two of them had come and settled in his neighborhood, viz.: John W. Thomas and Clarkson Willcutts. Thomas Parker entered a part of the fractional section, on the east side of Wayne's boundary where it crosses the Wayne County line, and the other two settled farther north. John W. Thomas located on the same section with Parker, a large fractional quarter, 168 acres, (since owned by Mr. Lewis). Clarkson Willcutts lived on the south half, southeast quarter, Section 28, Town 16, Range 1 west, (land since owned by P. Heiner).

October 22, 1814, Ephraim Bowen came from Pennsylvania, and settled still farther north, (northeast quarter, Section 18, Town 16, Range 1 west), entering the farm so long occupied since by his son Squire, and now by Squire's son, James D. Bowen, northwest of Arba. Mr. Bowen had a considerable family, six children, and was pretty well off for those times. He lived long in the county, dying in 1858, aged eighty-nine years. His wife died in 1849.

The fifth family was that of Ephraim Overman, who took the land where Joshua Thomas now resides in Section 27. He is thought to have come in November, 1814. What seems to be very remarkable, he is stated to have kept his family in a "camp" from November, 1814, to the fall of 1815. What need there could be for such a thing we cannot tell. One would think that with a lot of boys, some of them large enough to work, Mr. Overman need not have been so careless as it would seem that he was. It may not be safe to judge so harshly, however, for he would appear to have been a man of sense and judgment, as Wayne County sent him to the Legislature in two years from that time, 1817. Mr. Overman had five children, all boys. [The father of Joseph Hawkins of Jay County, who emigrated thither in 1829, dwelt in a "camp" all summer].

Thus far the record is clear. From this point, however, we cannot be certain as to the exact times of settlement.

Squire Bowen (who was a boy nine years old when his father moved here) gives the list of settlers as follows: "The other settlers who came in 1814 were these—James Cammack, west of Arba; Eli Overman, where Henry Horn now lives, west part of the village of Arba; Jesse Small, near where Isaac Jordan now lives, Section 22." He does not remember any others, though there may have been some, but could not have been many. Squire Bowen says: "David Bowles, Jesse Johnson, James Frazier and Hodgson, came in 1815. They settled near Lynn. John Peale took the land south of Ephraim Bowen. Several Smalls came in 1815. Obadiah Small occupied the site of the present town of Spartansburg. John Small had the Hough place just north of that village."

Mr. Bowen cannot tell exactly who came in 1815, but he thinks not very many. He says that he believes the tide of emigration did not get under full headway till 1816. John Fisher thinks that when he came to Wayne County, just south of Randolph (December, 1816), there were no settlers in Randolph, except those on and near Nolan's Fork; and that William Wright was the first settler on White River, and that he came from Ohio, on his way to White River, two or three weeks after that, say December 15, 1816.

Mr. Fisher was then twenty-four years old, and his memory now seems quite strong and clear, yet he is, perhaps, in error. [He has died since the writing of the above paragraph].

Solomon Wright says he came here in March, 1816, and that the Ways and Diggses had come the year previous, as also two or three Wrights and a Haworth.

If Solomon Wright is correct, White River was begun in 1815. But the tradition is firmly held among the Ways and the Diggses, that their advent to this country for settlement was in March, 1817, which would seem to set Solomon Wright's coming in 1818. He may have come in 1817; but there are points about the whole matter of early dates which seem hard to understand or to reconcile.

LAND ENTRIES.

So far as land-entries are concerned, a considerable amount of it was done in both 1814 and 1815. Land was often entered months and even years before the owners occupied it, and not seldom the patentee never personally took possession. And often on the other hand, persons would live in the new country months, or even years, before they could succeed in entering land.

Many came with no money, and had to work and rent or live out, or do some other way to earn the money to pay for what they bought. The records of the land office show that the entries in the county, during 1814, were as follows in order of date:

Clarkson Willcutts, Greensfork, southeast quarter of Section 28, Town 16, Range 1, 160 acres, January 19, 1814.

James Cammack, Greensfork, east half of Section —, Town 16, Range 1, 323.16 acres, January 22, 1814.

Ephraim Bowen, Greensfork, northeast quarter of Section 28, Town 16, Range 1, 160 acres, April 13, 1814.

Travis Adcock, Washington, northwest quarter of Section 14, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, May 14, 1814.

John Thomas, Greensfork, northwest quarter of Section 33, Town 16, Range 1, 156.58 acres, July 21, 1814 (fractional).

Thomas Parker, Greensfork, northwest quarter of Section 32, Town 16, Range 1, 156.88 acres, August 16, 1814.

Ephraim Overman, Greensfork, northwest quarter of Section 27, Town 16, Range 1, 160 acres, October, 1814.

Travis Adcock, Washington, southeast quarter of Section 10, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, October 19, 1814.

Shubael Ellis, White River, northeast quarter of Section 18, Town 20, Range 14, 160 acres, November 30, 1814.

Eli Overman, Greensfork, southeast quarter of Section 33, Town 16, Range 1, 156.58 acres, December 13, 1814.

Thus there were in 1814 ten entries by nine persons, comprising about 1,750 acres. Seven were in Greensfork, with about 1,273 acres, two in Washington with 320 acres, and one in White River with 160 acres.

In 1815, there was in Greensfork only one entry, Nathan Overman, southwest quarter of Section 27, Town 16, Range 1, 159.50 acres, September 13, 1815.

There was but one in White River, to wit, George W. Kennon, southeast quarter of Section 26, Town 20, Range 13, 160 acres, September 10, 1815.

In 1815, there were in West River seven entries, as follows:

William Blount, southwest quarter of Section 8, Town 18, Range 13, 160 acres, April 10, 1815.

Lot Huddleston, northwest quarter of Section 17, Town 18, Range 13, 160 acres, May 3, 1815.

John Jones. Town 18, Range 13, 325.68 acres, May 3, 1815.

John E. Hodges, northwest quarter of Section 8, Town 18, Range 13, 160 acres, July 6, 1815.

Isaac Barnes, Section 7, Town 18, Range 13, 186 acres, July 6, 1815.

Arny Hall, east half southeast quarter of Section 17, Town 18, Range 13, 80 acres, October 12, 1815.

Cornelius Shane, northeast quarter of Section 8, Town 18, Range 13, 160 acres, July 6, 1815.

Seven entries, about 1,230 acres.

In 1815, there were, in Washington, entries as follows:

Curtis Cleny, southwest quarter of Section 11, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, January 7, 1815.

Obadiah Harris, southwest quarter of Section 10, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, May 8, 1815.

John Ozbun, southeast quarter of Section 8, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, August 9, 1815.

Paul Beard, northeast quarter of Section 10, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, August 9, 1815.

Paul Beard, northwest quarter of Section 11, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, August 9, 1815.

Obadiah Harris, northeast quarter of Section 15, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, October 14, 1815.

George Frazier, northwest quarter of Section 9, Town 18, Range 14, 160 acres, October 17, 1815.

Seven entries, equaling 1,120 acres.

The total entries in Randolph County for 1815, were sixteen entries, and 2669.50 acres, all but two being in Washington and West River Townships.

The entries in Washington were in Sections 8, 9, 10 and 11, of Township 18, Range 14.

The entries in West River were in Sections 7, 8, 17 and 18, Township 18, Range 13.

The total entries to the close of 1815 (1814, 1815) were twenty-six entries, with 4,420 acres, in four townships, Greensfork, Washington, White River and West River.

The year 1816 saw a great increase of entries, and of settlements also.

The total for 1816 was 6,109 acres, in the following townships:

Greensfork, four entries, 830 acres; Washington, thirteen entries, 2,080 acres; White River, eighteen entries, 2,880 acres; Ward, one entry, 640 acres; West River, three entries, 400 acres.

The great rush that year seemed to be to Washington and White River; 1,600 acres were entered in the latter township in three days, December 4, 5 and 7; and in Washington six entries were made in October and four in November, or 1,600 acres in the two months.

The years 1817 and 1818 saw a greatly stronger movement, in so much that the entries for the two years amounted to 25,200 acres, those for each year being somewhat nearly the same.

The entries in 1817 were in Greensfork, Washington, White River, West River, Franklin, Ward and Wayne.

Washington, eighteen entries, 3,439 acres; White River, thirty-five entries, 5,337 acres; Greensfork, seven entries, 1,178 acres; Ward, eight entries, 1,280 acres; West River, twelve entries, 1,832 acres; Wayne, five entries, 800 acres; Franklin, two entries, 360 acres. Entries, 87; 14,226 acres.

The entries in 1818 were in the same townships.

Washington, twenty-four entries, 3,060 acres; White River, forty-one entries, 8,437 acres; Greensfork, five entries, 437 acres; Ward, one entry, 160 acres; West River, nine entries, 1,440 acres: Wayne, seven entries, 1,280 acres; Franklin, one entry, 154 acres. Entries, 88; acres, 11,968.

Total entries up to the close of 1818, were, in Washington, 64; White River, 96; Greensfork, 24; Ward, 10; West River, 31; Wayne, 12; Franklin, 3. 240 entries, with 36,729 acres.

Emigration to Randolph after 1818 fell off greatly, so much so that during the nine years from 1820 to 1828 inclusive, a smaller quantity of land was entered than in 1817 alone.

The following statement will show the amounts of land entered year by year to 1840:

1812, 160 acres; 1814, 1,744; 1815, 2,512; 1816, 6,109; 1817, 14,226; 1818, 11,968; 1819, 3,623; 1820, 1,779; 1821, 1,654; 1822, 2,084; 1823, 1,496; 1824, 530; 1825, 789; 1826, 2,047; 1827, 882; 1828, 1,445; 1829, 2,477; 1830, 4,320; 1831, 10,890; 1832, 8,225; 1833, 16,833; 1834, 10,430; 1835, 10,909; 1836, 77,368; 1837, 48,308; 1838, 7,293; 1839, 894; 1840, 700.

Thus it appears that the rush of settlers to Randolph was at first in 1817 and 1818, and then again from 1833 to 1837 inclusive, especially the two years 1836 and 1837. The amount of land entered in these two years last named, reached the amazing quantity of 125,676 acres, and, including 1833, 142,509, which is almost exactly half the area of the entire county. The land entered in 1836 and 1837 exceeded all the previous entries during thirty-five years from 1812 to 1836, by some 8,000 acres.

By the close of 1838, almost all the land had been "taken up." Except the "school sections," little remained for original entry, and what was yet unentered lay in scattered parcels here and there throughout the county. By that time, therefore, Randolph had been bought of "Uncle Sam," and the public title was transferred to private hands.

"Speculators," however, here, as elsewhere, had extensively "got in their work," and in various localities, vast tracts lay unoccupied for years because the speculator's title covered it.

It has been said by some of the early pioneers, that most of the land on both sides of the road between Winchester and Deerfield was owned by one man, and after his death that vast body of land remained still vacant for many years.

As a specimen of the evil work of entering land for "speculation," a single person, residing at Cincinnati, appears to have "entered" many tracts in several different townships comprising we know not how many acres. Another, from Cincinnati, also engaged largely in the same speculative work. Still a third individual, yet living, and now a resident of the county, appears as having entered tract after tract, scattered here and there.

Thus the curse of the ownership of land in vast amounts began in the county in its early history, and the same evil has continued among us, still increasing its huge proportions, eating up the substance of the body politic, and sapping the very vitals of the community.

A people who do not own the land they live on, must be, in the very nature of things, a subject class, dependent not alone for the means of livelihood, but for a domicil (not to say a home) itself, upon the mere whim of another. Whether any practicable method exists to prevent the permanent accumulation of lands in the hands of a few "lords of the soil," is hard to say. The "Law of Moses" in the old Jewish commonwealth, undertook to fight the old demon of "land monopoly" in those ancient times, by forbidding the soil ever to be sold in fee, requiring it to revert, every seventh, or at most, every fiftieth year, to the original ownership. But this is not history, but a bit of a treatise on land ownership, and may be considered to be, in the midst of a history of Randolph County, out of its place. Perhaps so. However, facts are facts and cannot be ignored. Whether present evils can be remedied in coming time, those future years and ages must determine for themselves.

FIRST RELIGIOUS MEETING, ETC.

Squire Bowen says the first religious meeting was held in his father's cabin (probably in 1815), and that Stephen Williams (local preacher) exhorted at that meeting.

The first sermon was preached also in Ephraim Bowen's cabin by Rev. Mr. Holman, of Louisville. Text from Isaiah, "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is the hurt of the daughter of my people not recovered?"

James C. Bowen, who was at the meeting, says it was an excellent discourse, and that it greatly edified the assembly.

EARLY BIRTHS.

The first person born in the county was Robert Thomas, son of John W. Thomas. His birthday was December 18, 1814. He now resides in Huntington County, Indiana.

The second was Thomas Willcutts, son of Clarkson Willcutts, born February 14, 1815 (St. Valentine's day). He now resides in Grant County, Ind.

The oldest person born in this county, and now residing therein, is thought to be Elihu Cammack, son of John Cammack, and born near Arba (in Greensfork Township) April 15, 1817, and residing (mostly since 1846) on the State road east of Bartonia. [Elihu Cammack married his second wife in Iowa in 1881, and removed thence in the fall of that year. Who is now the oldest native living in the county we do not know.]

Lewis Cox, son of Jesse Cox, of West River Township, claims to have been born in August, 1817.

Fanny (Diggs) Hill was the first child born on White River, and her birth was September 11, 1817.

Lydia (Wright) Jones, sister of Solomon Wright now (1881) residing in Stony Creek Township near the mouth of Cabin Creek, and wife of Endsley Jones, was born October 5, 1817, a few days after her parents came from Ohio to the settlement upon White River.

Matilda Hunt, daughter of Rev. William Hunt (familiarly called "Old Billy Hunt"), and sister of William S. Hunt, Esq., was born in June, 1819.

John W. Botkin, son of Hugh Botkin of West River Township, was born southeast of Huntsville, September 1, 1819.

FIRST SCHOOL.

J. C. Bowen says that the "Friends" built a cabin for school and meetings at Arba in 1815, and that a school was kept in that house during the winter of 1815–16 by Eli Overman; and Jesse Parker says that he was at that school the first day with his "primer," and that he attended during the whole term.

That school, taught by Eli Overman, was the first in the county, and, moreover, in 1818, this same Eli Overman was elected a member of the first Commissioners' Board.

A much larger number of settlers came in 1816. Settlements were probably planted in this year (1816) on Martinsdale Creek, West River and White River, and additions were made to those on Nolan's and Green's Forks. On Green's Fork, about 1816 or 1817, came several families. Silas Johnson, now living, who was fifteen years old at the time, states that his father, Jesse Johnson, moved to Randolph County in the fall of 1817, that Paul Beard came in the spring (1817), and John Moorman, Francis Frazier (uncle to the "bellmaker"), and John Barnes, came perhaps the year before (1816). Curtis Cleny says that he entered his land February 13, 1817. [The Land Office record says his patent is dated January 7, 1815.] Travis Adcock entered his land May and October, 1814.

Obadiah Harris entered his land May, 1815; Paul Beard's entry is dated August 9, 1815; Jesse Johnson's patent is dated November 28, 1816; John Baxter entered his land January 9, 1817; Isaac and Stephen Hockett's patents bear date February 8, 1817; Daniel Shoemaker and David Kenworthy were very early settlers, perhaps in 1817; Francis Frazier, the bellmaker (fifteen years old at the time), says his father, James Frazier, also a bellmaker, came in 1817, and settled one mile east of Lynn.

WHITE RIVER.

Early in 1816, Paul W. Way, Henry H. Way, William Way, Jr., Robert Way (a lad sixteen years old), and William Diggs, came from South Carolina and located land four miles west of Winchester. Paul Way returned for his parents and his family, and, coming back with them and several families besides in the spring, arrived in March, 1817.

The same fall, John B. Wright, David Wright, William Wright, and Judge John Wright, settled from Salt Creek west.

In the summer of 1817, William Way returned on horseback alone, to South Carolina, to bring his father, William Way, Sr., to the new country, which purpose he successfully accomplished. With them came, among others, Mrs. Beverly, mother of Dr. Beverly, now of Winchester, and Moorman Way, then a lad of a few years old, but for many years a shrewd, active and successful lawyer, well known to the bar and the courts of the surrounding region for nearly half a century [died 1881.]

The emigration of that period would now be a sight to behold. Many came on horseback; not a few made their weary way on foot, having a single pack-horse to carry their few household goods. One man, long a prominent resident of Randolph, says that his father came with two one-horse carts, and that he, a boy of seven years old, rode one of the horses all the way from Carolina.

Some could boast a two-horse wagon, while few, very few, possibly one in a hundred, came through with a huge old fashioned Carolina wagon, drawn by four horses. But even when the settlers had wagons, the men and the larger boys were obliged to walk, since the women and the girls, together with the household stuff, were even too much for the awful roads over which they must pass. People who should travel now as those old pioneers came to this country, would be the town talk and the laughing stock of the whole region round. Yet it is a fact that in this very way, rough and uncouth as it may seem to the exquisites of the present day, came into these western wilds the "cream and substance" of the Southern land, and of this western world. A prophet's eye could have descried in those motley groups and cavalcades of men and boys, or even of women and girls, on foot, of pack-horses piled up with all sorts of goods, and surmounted with the woman and the baby, of carts drawn by little "plugs" of ponies or by mules, and loaded to the utmost capacity; of men on horseback with their wives or mothers on a pillion behind them; of capacious wagons of the ancient style, almost as roomy as Noah's ark, and nearly illimitable in capabilities of containing children and goods and furniture; that in these various methods, now regarded as so uncouth and so outlandish as to be impossible and unimaginable for any but the very scum and outcasts of humanity, came to this land the men and the women who should be, and the children who should grow up to become the strength and the glory of the land. Many of the proud and haughty dames and maidens of the present luxurious days, were they to behold, filing past their palatial mansions, the procession in which their own ancestors made (though not proud yet) successful entry into the woods of the great northwest, would well-nigh faint with mortification and almost die with chagrin at the barest hint that they could by any possibility be connected by even the remotest tie of relationship or consanguinity to such a group. Yet such were our fathers and our grandfathers. These stalwart old pioneers were our progenitors, and we have no occasion to blush to acknowledge the fact. Those noble sons and daughters of hardship and toil have more cause to feel ashamed of us, their posterity, than we of them. They heroically performed their part, and grandly hewed their way from poverty and want to comfort, and even to opulence. God grant that their descendants may as patiently, as worthily and as successfully accomplish the labor assigned to their lot in life! God grant that the generation now upon the stage of action may leave to their children a heritage as nobly enlarged and as greatly increased in all that is useful and excellent and of good report, as did those strong-limbed and bold-hearted (and gentle souled as well) men and women who, amid difficulties and obstacles insurmountable to any but the hardiest and the sturdiest, pressed their resistless way into the forests of Randolph and made her wilds to bud and blossom as the rose.

As to settlements up to the close of 1818. Jere Smith says, in his "Civil History:" "In the year 1818, when Randolph County was erected, there were fifty or sixty families on White River and Salt and Sugar Creeks, fifty or sixty families on Green's Fork and Mud Creek; thirty families on Nolan's Fork, including Joshua Foster on the Griffis farm, near the State line; eight or ten families on Martindale's Creek, and twelve or fifteen families on West River, above the Wayne County line." So that, by Mr. Smith's estimation, there were, at the time of the election in 1818, about 180 families in the present boundaries of Randolph County. Of course, at that time, the population was wholly east of the western boundary of the "twelve-mile strip," since the land west of that line was still Indian Territory, on which white men were bound by treaty not to settle. In 1818, the tribes ceded those lands, and in eight or ten years the county west as well as east of the boundary was settled. In fact, that territory began settlement in 1821, but emigration was slow to push in for several years.

It would be interesting to find the "election returns" for August, 1818, the first in Randolph County, to learn how many and who were, at that time, the free and independent electors here. Those returns, however, have not been discovered.

On West River, in August, 1817, there were eleven settlers, all living east of the boundary and on Sections 7, 8, 17 and 18, the first and the last being fractional sections against the boundary. William Blount (and his two sons-in-law) on Section 7; James Malcom, Section 17; Henry Shoemaker, Section 17; Samuel Sales, Section 17; Arny Hall, Section 17; David Jones, Section 17; Evan Shoemaker, Section 18; Griffin Davis, Section 18; William Smith, Sections 5 and 6; Isaac Barnes, Section 7, came in 1818; John E. Hodge, Section 8, came in 1818. The sections lie on both sides of West River but on the east side of the boundary, and William Smith (father of Hon. Jere Smith) went highest of the river, taking land in Sections 5 and 6, the latter section having but a small fraction east of the boundary.

MISSISSINEWA VALLEY.

The Mississinewa had a few settlers, but how many Mr. Smith does not know. Meshach Lewallyn (an old man with a large family) came near Ridgeville in 1817, and Joab Ward in 1819. He says also, (in substance), that in 1819 there was a large emigration.

West River settlement received four new families, and many came to the other settlements; 1820 also witnessed a good growth. But from and after 1820, the population began to flow into the "new purchase," which movement took many settlers from Randolph. Still the continual net increase was considerable. Henry Kizer, father of Elias Kizer and grandfather of Thomas W. Kizer, settled near Stone Station in 1820. The settlement on that river was, in fact, but sparse. Meshach Lewallyn entered land [parts of Sections 1 and 12, Town 21, Range 13], July 19, 1817.

Benjamin Lewallyn, son of Meshach Lewallyn, entered southeast quarter of Section 7, Town 21, Range 14 [in Ward Township], June 10, 1817, and on the same day five more quarter sections in Ward Township were entered by Messrs. Kite, Jacobs, Canady, Reed and David Connor. Several Masseys came at about that time, as one of them, James Massey, was juryman in 1818, and Hon. Jere Smith says of him: "James Massey was an old man, and died soon after. He lived in (Jackson, or) Ward Township. His son-in-law, James Smith, was Commissioner two or three terms, and one of his sons was Associate Judge of Grant County a term or two." It appears that they left that region early. When Daniel B. Miller came [in 1822] the Masseys had gone.

Two of the petit jurors also were from the Mississinewa, Meshach Lewallyn from Ridgeville, and James Jacobs from the settlement east of Deerfield.

The names of the Masseys appear among the patentees of the Land Office. They entered land and lived there a while, but seem to have moved away before 1823. Another entry had been made in that region several miles east of Deerfield and south of the Mississinewa River. Mr. Strain entered a whole section in 1816, which was by months the earliest entry on the Mississinewa. He does not appear, however, ever to have lived there. He entered it probably for speculation. The section lay just west of the west line of Jackson Township. Joab Ward, and Joel Ward his brother, settled at Ridgeville in April, 1819. Joab Ward did not enter land at that time, but bought a small tract (forty acres) of Meshach Lewallyn. Elias Kizer moved into that region in 1820, and was one of the prominent citizens of that part of the county for a considerable time, changing his residence to near Winchester, and dying there some years ago. Joab Ward stood as a bulwark of society during more than the average duration of human life.

The settlers of course endured great hardships, such as persons without any experience of the kind can neither comprehend nor believe. In fact, brought up as they have been to buy every thing they need, the present generation can hardly conceive how it would be possible for a family to move into a gigantic forest, with nothing but an axe, an auger, a frow, and a drawing knife; a few kettles, some pewter plates, a log-chain or two, etc., and with these scant materials and a little corn to make into bread, and a gun to shoot game for meat; and yet that they could, in a comparatively short time, come to be good livers. And yet it was so. Scarcely anything was bought except iron and salt, and powder and lead. Caps and hats were made of deer skins, or coon skins, or straw; cloth was spun and woven out of linen, or linen and wool combined, or clothes were made of deer skins. Shoes also were made from buckskin. Buildings were constructed from the logs of trees, with no outlay but labor; clapboards were in the place of shingles, and pins or weight poles for nails; puncheons for floors, and doors, and benches, and chimney backs, and tables; two auger holes in the wall and a post at the corner, driven into the ground, to receive the ends of the rails, with elm bark would be just the thing for a bedstead; puncheon stools would hold a man up more firmly than the nicest chair that ever was made. Chimneys were built of sticks and clay, and fireplaces and hearths of puddled clay: even the "lug pole" and trammel and hooks were made of iron-wood, and when any of them burnt down, another could be put in its place, just as easy as anything. The truth is that a dextrous, active family, in a very few years would make around them an amount of conveniences that many households of high pretensions would find it difficult to match at the present day. If anything was needed, from a doorlatch or a hoe-handle to a new house or barn, all that was to be done was to take hold and make it. And it is true, moreover, that families who were moral and religious, and who were free from vices, enjoyed more true, heartfelt comfort, and more solid happiness than they have ever done since; or than their children or their grandchildren, pampered with all the luxuries that were ever invented to make people helpless and shiftless, are able to compass for themselves in these days.

But small space will be given in this place for either their pleasures or their sorrows. It is believed the story of the old pioneer himself, as told by his own lips, will give a more pleasing, as well as a more vivid picture; and hence the feature has been adopted to introduce the personal statements of the ancient sojourners, taken from their own mouths, if living, or from some cherished friend of the dear departed one, if the aged veteran breathes no longer the health-giving vital air. The description of the trials of those times will be left to be given chiefly in the "Reminiscences," which are a peculiar feature of this work, and which will be of surpassing richness, to refresh the memory of the old, and to inform the minds of the young as to what their fathers and mothers, and their parents, did to open this county to sight and labor and enjoyment for the sons of men.

FIRST THINGS.

The first settler was Thomas W. Parker, on Nolan's Fork, in Greensfork Township, west of Arba, in April, 1814.

The first boy in the county was Jesse Parker, son of Thomas Parker above, eight years old. He lived long at Bethel, Wayne County, Ind., a jovial, hearty old man, honestly earning his living by the constant "rap, rap, rap of his well worn hammer." (Died near Lynn, fall of 1881.)

The first girls were Celia and Sarah Parker, daughters of Thomas and (Anna) Parker above; Sarah was burned to death when a girl; Celia was married to Benjamin Arnold, and now resides, an aged widow, at Arba.

The first woman was Anna Parker, wife of Thomas Parker above. Thomas and Anna Parker died more than fifty years ago.

The first county formed in what is now Indiana, was Knox County, created in 1790, under Governor St. Clair, with Vincennes as the county seat, and including all Indiana and Michigan. The settlements were few: Vincennes, possibly a few settlers along the Ohio, a fort and garrison at Fort Wayne, and one at Detroit.

The first settlement in Indiana was at Vincennes, by the French (perhaps) in 1702. A post was established by Sieur Juchereau and Missionary Meret at that date.

When General Gage, a British officer, demanded of the French settlers at Vincennes that they should leave their homes and their lands, the French protested that they had held them by charter from the French King for seventy years, and that to drive them away now would be unjust and cruel, and they were allowed to remain.

The first county east of the "Old Boundary" (Wayne's), agreed on in 1795), was Dearborn, erected by Indiana Territory in 1803, settled in 1796, before any surveys had been made except the "gore" between the Ohio line and the "Old Boundary" line, which was surveyed in 1800, three years before, and embracing the whole region west of the Ohio line and east of Wayne's boundary.

Wayne County was organized in 1810, embracing all the territory east of the "New Boundary," and north of the southern boundary of the county.

Randolph County was organized in 1818, at first extending westward only to the west boundary of the twelve mile stop. It was first settled in 1814.

The first organization of the Northwest Territory was by the (old) Congress of the Confederation in 1787.

The first Governor was Gen. Arthur St. Clair, October 5, 1787.

The first capital of the Northwest Territory was Marietta, established by Gov. St. Clair shortly after his appointment.

The first capital of the State of Indiana was Corydon in Harrison County, in the southern part of the State, almost exactly south of Indianapolis.

The first Governor of Indiana was Jonathan Jennings, elected in 1816.

The first Representative for Randolph County is not known.

The first Senator was Patrick Baird, of Wayne County.

The first two townships in Randolph County were Greensfork and White River, established in 1818 by David Wright, Sheriff, and embracing the entire county.

The first road opened through the county was the "Quaker Trace," from Richmond to Fort Wayne, in 1817.

The first "public road" established was from Winchester to Lynn in 1819, at the May session of Commissioner's Court.

The first Justice of the Peace may have been John Wright. At any rate he officiated at the first wedding in February, 1819.

The first marriage license was issued by Charles Conway, Clerk, to Jacob Wright and Sally Wright, February 2, 1819.

The first licensed store was opened by William Connor, November, 1818, on Sections 10, 18, 14, two or three miles northwest of (Old) Snow Hill, in Washington Township. (Jesse Connon, son of John Connor, and nephew of this William Connor, says that he was born in that first store, and that the place was where Lynn now is, and not as above stated. Mr. Jesse Connor was born, however, not before 1831, thirteen years after this store was licensed. This William Connor was a bachelor, and unsettled in residence and business).

The first town laid out was Winchester in November, 1818.

The first house in Winchester was built in the spring of 1819. It was a round log-cabin, one-story, "scutched down" with clapboard roof and stick and clay chimney. It stood on Inlot No. 9, North Front, and was owned and occupied for many years by Martin Comer.

The first steammill was built at Winchester by Elias Kizer, in about 1835.

The first steam engine brought to the county was for that mill.

The first dwelling in the county was erected by Thomas Parker, in the spring of 1814, on Nolan's Fork, west of Arba.

The first meeting house was built by the Friends, at Arba, in the fall of 1815.

The first school was taught in Friend's meeting house at Arba, during the winter of 1815–16, by Eli Overman.

The first Methodist meeting was held at the dwelling of Ephraim Bowen, northwest of Arba, in 1815.

The first Methodist sermon was preached by the Rev. Holman, of Louisville, Ky., at the cabin of Ephraim Bowen, in the year 1815.

The first white child born in the county was Robert Thomas, son of John W. Thomas, the second settler in the county. The child was born near Arba, December 18, 1814.

The second child was a son of Clarkson Willcutts, who was the third settler, and it was born February 13, 1815.

The oldest person born in the county, and now living therein, is supposed to be Elihu Cammack, son of John Cammack, near Arba, born April 15, 1817. [Elihu Cammack moved to Iowa, fall of 1881].

The first child born in White River is thought to be Fanny (Diggs) Hill, daughter of William Diggs, Jr. (now "Old Billy Diggs," living in Iowa), wife of Matthew Hill, of Jericho; she was born September 11, 1817.

Lydia (Wright) Jones, sister of Solomon Wright now living near the mouth of Cabin Creek, was born October 5, 1817, three weeks after the arrival of her parents from Clinton County, Ohio.

The first sheriff was David Wright, appointed by Governor Jennings to organize the county in 1818.

The first county election was held in August, 1818.

The first officers elected were Wm. Edwards, John Wright, Associate Judges; Charles Conway, Clerk and Recorder; David Wright, Sheriff; Solomon Wright, Coroner; Eli Overman, Benjamin Cox, John James, Commissioners.

The first Commissioners' Court was held in August, 1818.

The first Circuit Court was held at the house of William Way, October 12, 1818, by Associate Judges Edwards and Wright.

The first attorney admitted to practice law in Randolph County Circuit Court was James Rariden, who was also appointed first Prosecuting Attorney.

The building of the first court house was let to Abner Overman, for $254.50, December 6, 1818.

The building of the first jail was undertaken by Albert Banta, for $125.00, December 6, 1818.

They were both accepted by the Commissioners October 6, 1820.

The first bill by the grand jury was John P. Huddleston versus James Frazier, for an affray, found June, 1820.

The first trial in the Circuit Court was Conway versus Conner.

The first judgment rendered by the court was in the same case. The judgment was for the plaintiff, and the amount $135.00. Time of rendering judgment April, 1820.

The first criminal case was State versus James Frazier. Acquittal.

The first divorce granted was in favor of Huldah Way from her husband, Nathan Way, August, 1823.

The first settler in Greensfork Township was Thomas Parker, west of Arba, April, 1814.

The first settler on White River was William Diggs, Jr., who came during the summer of 1816, with Paul, Henry H., William and Robert Way. He married during the winter of 1816 or 1817, and settled, perhaps, February, 1817.

The first settler in West River may have been William Blount. He first entered land, and may have been the first settler. His entry is dated April 10, 1815. It was afterward the Zimmerman (Retz) farm, on West River.

The first settler in Ward Township is not now known. James Strain entered a section of land in 1816, but he is said never to have lived on the land. Fifteen entries were made in 1817, the first being Daniel Richardson, May 21, 1817, southwest quarter of 12, 21, 14, on Mississinewa River, northeast of John Key's.

The first settler in Nettle Creek was probably John Burroughs, southwest of Losantville, in 1822. His widow is living there still.

The first settler in Stony Creek may have been Isaac Branson. "Aunt Patsy" Branson, now living at Muncie, says that she came with her husband to Stony Creek Township in 1819. She is perhaps mistaken. He entered his land November 28, 1822. Yet, he may have resided in the county some years, and he entered land in that township November 28, 1822.

However, David Vestal made the first entry October 31, 1822, four weeks before Isaac Branson did his. Yet Mr. Branson is said to have come in February, 1819, and "Aunt Patsy" thinks they were first, and perhaps they were so.

The first settler in Green Township may have been Martin Boots. His entry was made August 18, 1832, six entries being made in that year.

The first settler in Monroe Township was perhaps John Rody. At least, he entered the first land April 10, 1833, one mile south of Morristown.

The first settlers in Wayne Township were probably Benoni and Henry Hill and Amos Peacock, in the spring of 1818.

The first resident of Jackson Township is thought to have been Philip Storms. He lived at a very early day at the Allensville crossing of the Mississinewa, and still before that in the southern part of the township. He was poor and not able to purchase land, and once or twice had land entered from under him, which greatly provoked him, as well it might, since that was justly enough reckoned a very serious breach of "squatter unwritten law." He resided in the region in 1830.

The first settler in Washington Township may have been Travis Adcock. At any rate, he made the first land entry in that township, 1814, and he was residing there at a very early date.

The first settler in Franklin Township was Meshach Lewallyn, during the summer of 1817.

The first framed bridge (probably) was made over White River north, toward Deerfield.

The first railroad through the county was the Indianapolis & Bellefontaine (now Bee Line) Railroad, completed in 1852–3.

The first wagon-shop, so far as now known, was owned by Thomas Butterworth, before 1840, now living two and a half miles southeast of Winchester.

The first blacksmith shop may have been John Way's, at Winchester, (not known). James Frazier, father of Francis Frazier, the bellmaker, was a bellmaker and blacksmith. He came in 1817 (in the spring). Jere Smith's father came in August, 1817, and he was a blacksmith and worked at his trade.

The first brick may have been burned by David Wysong, south of Winchester. He burned the brick for the court house, built in 1826.

The first lime kiln was probably at Maxville.

The first orchard is thought to have been set out by Henry H. Way, near Sampletown, about 1817 or 1818. Some of the trees are still standing, two to two and a half feet through, and in a bearing condition.

The first reaping machine was owned (owner unknown).

The first brick house in Winchester, and perhaps in the county, was built by Martin Comer, where the National Bank now stands [year not now known].

One of the oldest brick dwellings in the county now stands on the Brickley farm, one mile southwest of Dunkirk meeting house. The brick were burnt on the farm for the purpose.

The persons who have been longest in the county now residing in it are James C. Bowen and Squire Bowen of Greensfork Township, who came with their father to Randolph County, October 22, 1814, nearly sixty-eight years ago.

The person who has lived longest in White River Township is probably Jesse Way, who came to White River in the early spring of 1817. Moorman Way perhaps is the next, having come later in the same year. [See below].

The persons who have lived longest in Winchester are Hon. Martin A. Reeder and his aged mother, Mrs. Mary A. Reeder, the latter now eighty-one years old. They came to Winchester in 1822, and have been residents of the town during sixty years. The next is Moorman Way, Esq., who came in 1831, and the next is Jesse Way, who came in 1832 [Mr. Way died in the fall of 1881].

The first frame house in the county was built in Winchester, by Judge John Sample, in 1820.

The first penitentiary sentence was rendered in the August term, 1824, against David Banta, for hog stealing. The prisoner escaped into Ohio and was never captured, and so the sentence remains not carried out to this day.

The first conviction was David Banta's.

The first slander case was tried August, 1826.

The first slander conviction was February, 1828.

The first water-mill in Greensfork Township may have been Jessup's on Greenville Creek, east of James Rubey's, on land now owned by Rubey. It was built as early as 1820, and perhaps earlier.

The first mill in the county may perhaps have been Lewallyn's, near Ridgeville, as early as 1819, and probably sooner than that.

The first mill on White River was probably Sample's mill, west of town, or Jeremiah Cox's mill near Jericho. Cox's mill was built in 1825, five or six miles east of Winchester. No mill is found there now.

The first carding machine in the county was owned by Daniel Petty, east of Winchester, very early, exact date not known.

The first carding machine in Winchester is supposed to have been built by Moorman Way, Esq. It was run by ox-power, and was built about 1832.

The first grist mill in Jackson Township is thought to have been a corn-cracker, built soon after 1833 by Jacob Johnson.

The first water mill in Jackson Township is thought to have been built on the Mississinewa by Hinchey. The exact date is not known.

The first school in Jackson Township was taught by Mrs. Beach in 1838, in her own house.

The first pike in Randolph County is thought to have been the Greenville and Winchester pike, still unfinished (or a pike near Bloomingsport).

The first two-story hewed log cabin in Winchester was built in the fall of 1819, on Inlot No. 1, west front, by James McCool, a blind man. It was good and substantial, and was occupied by him as a hotel in 1819, and stood until not long ago.

The first cook stove brought to Randolph County was by Edward Edger, of Deerfield, about 1838 or 1839. It cost $50 in silver at 10 per cent premium, equal to $55 in currency, besides the cost of hauling it from Cincinnati.

Another cook-stove was brought to the county at the same time for Mrs. Kinnear, south of Deerfield. It was just like Mr. Edger's and cost the same amount.

The first entry in Randolph County was by Jeremiah Moffatt, in Wayne Township, northwest of Harrisville, December 1, 1812, northwest quarter Section 18, Town 20, Range 15. He never occupied the tract.

The first entry in Greensfork Township was by Clarkson Willcutts, January 9, 1814, southeast quarter Section 28, Town 16, Range 1.

The first entry in Washington Township was by Travis Adcock, May 14, 1814, northwest quarter Section 14, Town 18, Range 14.

The first entry in West River Township was by William Blount, April 10, 1814, southwest quarter Section 8, Town 18, Range 13.

The first entry in White River Township was by Shuball Ellis, November 30, 1814, northeast quarter Section 18, Town 20, Range 14.

The first entry in Ward Township was by James Strain, October 16, 1816, Section 13, Town 21, Range 14. He never lived on it.

The first entry in Jackson Township was by John Abercrombie, October 16, 1816, southwest quarter Section 7, Town 21, Range 15. Jackson Township was not settled till long afterward.

The first entry in Stony Creek was by David Vestal, October 31, 1822, southwest quarter Section 8, Town 19, Range 12. Two more entries were made the same day by John Connor, and five more in the month of November following, or 880 in all in less than a month.

The first entry in Nettle Creek Township was by John Burroughs, October 21, 1822, southwest quarter Section 15, Town 18, Range 12. Within less than a month 760 acres were entered in that township.

The first entry in Franklin Township was by Meshach Lewallyn, July 19, 1817, Sections 1 and 12, Town 21, Range 13.

The first entry in Monroe Township was by John Rody, April 10, 1833, southeast quarter of southeast quarter Section 17, Town 21, Range 12.

The first entries in Green Township were made by John Michael and Martin Boots, August 18, 1832, northwest quarter Section 8, Town 21, Range 12, and northeast quarter Section 9, Town 21, Range 12.

The first carding machine in Randolph County was on Salt Creek, east of Winchester, owned by Daniel Petty, date not known.

The first tan-yard was probably set up by Hugh Botkin southeast of Huntsville. Mr. B. came very early. The first one may have been at Sampletown.

The first death is not known.

The first burying ground was probably at Arba. Arba, Lynn, Cherry Grove, Jericho, White River and Dunkirk meetings were all established shortly after the settlement of the county; Arba being almost certainly first.

The first drain-tile made in the county, as also in the State, were manufactured by hand by John K. Martin in a machine made by himself in 1856. He made 200 rods and burned them in a brick-kiln in his father's yard.

The first woolen factory in Randolph County is thought to have been at Unionsport by Hiram Mendenhall. The date cannot be stated.

The first teacher's institute was held at Winchester under the direction of Prof. E. P. Cole, Principal of Randolph County Seminary, about 1850. Those early institutes were full of interest and profit, and would compare very favorably with many held in later times.

Arthur McKew

The first session of the Union Literary Institute commenced June 15, 1846, with Rev. Ebenezer Tucker as Principal, in a two-story hewed log house, upon ground cleared from the heavy green woods for the purpose. A huge tree-trunk, four feet through, lay for years not twenty feet from the door, that had just been felled "in the green," and the boarding house erected the next year had several green stumps under the floors.

The first hotel in Winchester was kept by James McCool, a blind man. It was set up in 1819.

The first hotel in the county may have been kept by Joseph Gass, between Economy and Winchester. At least it was there in the spring of 1817, when the "Way Company" came through from Carolina to White River.

The first store in Winchester would seem to have been kept by Esquire Odle, at what date is not now known.

The first hatter's shop was owned by James Oldham, which was begun perhaps in 1819.

The first County Treasurer was perhaps Jesse Johnson, appointed by the Commissioners, November, 1818.

The first assessor (lister) was George Bowles, appointed February, 1819. He made his report in May and was allowed $10 for assessing the county.

The first Treasurer's report was made May, 1819; sum received $10; expenditures, $20.

The first grist-mill on the Mississinewa, above Lewallyn's, was built by Mr. Parsons, who came there in 1829, and built it soon after.

The first murder in the eastern part of the State was done in Wayne County, in 1816. A man by the name of Criss killed his son-in-law, Mr. Chambers. He was tried, convicted and hung at Salisbury, then the county seat of Wayne County.

The first post offices in the various townships were probably as follows: White River (and in the county), Winchester, Ward, Deerfield; Greensfork, Spartanburg; Washington, Bloomingsport; Franklin, Ridgeville; Wayne (old) Randolph; Stony Creek, Windsor; West River, Trenton; Nettle Creek, Losantville; Jackson, New Lisbon; Green, Fairview; Monroe, Farmland.

MANNER OF LIVING.

Some articles have been furnished by Hon. Martin A. Reeder, who has been a resident of the county for about sixty years, the substance of which is given below, with also some additions from other sources:

BUILDINGS.

Many would put up a "camp," and live in that for some weeks or months, and wait to build a cabin until the large trees had been cleared from a place extensive enough to prevent danger from the tree trunks falling on the house. Others would put up their cabins in the dense woods, with perhaps a dozen trees near, any of which might, in a storm of wind, have crushed the dwelling and all its inmates. And yet, though scores of cabins were erected thus, it is not known that a solitary tree ever threw its huge trunk upon the roof of a single settler's dwelling.

CABINS.

Cabins were built of round logs from eight to ten inches through, and covered with clapboards. They were of all sizes;—some perhaps twelve by fourteen feet, and some eighteen by twenty-five feet, with one seven or eight feet story and a loft above in the roof.

A small cabin would have one door and one window. A large one might, perhaps, possess two of each. The chimney and fireplace would be wholly outside, opening of course into the house.

At the "raising," the neighbors for miles around were expected to come and lend their aid (who at first, were not many), and they went. No "shirks" were there. "Help me and I will help you," was their motto, and the rule was faithfully practiced.

On the "raising day," the body of the house would be completed and the roof put on. Cutting out the door and window holes, and the opening for the fire-place, putting in the doors and windows, building the fire-place and chimney, laying the puncheon floors, chinking and daubing the cracks between the logs, laying the loft, etc., were done by the owner at his pleasure as he had opportunity. Barns and outhouses were raised from time to time, so as not to tax the settlers too heavily.

These cabins, though not elegant, were, when properly completed, solid and substantial, and warm to boot; and many, many years of happy, contented, prosperous life have been spent within their lowly walls. And many who lived all their youthful years in such a humble domicile but who have since become able to abide in stately mansions, can now truthfully declare that their happiest days were spent nevertheless beneath the shelter of those mighty, overshadowing forest trees, under the lowly roof of that old- time log-cabin. How true the words of the poet:

> "'Tis not in titles, nor in rank,
> 'Tis not in wealth like London bank,
> To make us truly blest."

NOTE.—Many of the early-built cabins had no windows at all. The door and the big open-mouthed fire-place were the only avenues for light. It is within the knowledge of the writer of this sketch that families who emigrated from Carolina to Randolph County in 1847, had never seen any glass windows, and had no idea what they were for. Some houses dwelt in in 1846 had no windows.

The ideas of convenience then were not just like our own. In about 1850, the daughter of one of the earliest settlers said of a certain new house that she occupied (with her large family), "the room is so convenient [the house had but one room] we can set up six beds in it."

HOW TO BUILD A "CAMP."—BY JOSEPH HAWKINS.

"Have a big log, cut notches up and down the log fourteen feet apart, set double stakes fourteen feet out from the log, cut small logs six to eight inches thick, 'scafe' off the ends so as to fit the notches in the log, put one end in the notch and the other between the stakes; in the notch let the ends touch, but put blocks between the other ends, so as to make the upper one slant enough for the roof, put some logs atop of the big log and some across the front above; put on the roof, and stuff the cracks with moss.

Moss was plenty on the old logs, as thick as a cushion and as soft as a sheepskin; you could tear off a sheet as long as a bed-quilt if you wished. We often used sheets of moss for blankets to ride on instead of a saddle. The front of the camp was open six feet high, and logs were across above. A log heap fire was built in front on the ground. At first we left it unprotected, but the smoke would sweep into the camp and choke us so that we could not stay. Then we took puncheons and set them upright in a semi-circle around (outside of) the fire, leaving passages next the camp to go in and out at. This mended matters greatly. We lived in this camp from March until November, 1829. We cleared that summer nine acres—five for early corn and four for late corn, potatoes, turnips, etc.

The men had built three camps side by side against the same log, expecting to have three families. Only two came, and that left two camps for us. There were eight in our family, and the two older boys fixed a bed in the extra camp, and the rest of us slept (in three beds) in our own proper camp."

CANDLES.

Candles were made by taking a wooden rod ten or twelve inches long, wrapping a linen or cotton cloth around it, and covering it with tallow pressed around the stick with the hand.

Lamps were made by digging the inside from a large turnip, sticking up a stick in the center, about three inches long, with a strip of cloth around the stick, and turning melted lard, or deer's tallow, in until the rind was full.

Often the great blazing fire-place gave light enough, and many an evening's work has been done with no other means of vision.

HOUSES.

The houses were made strong in this way. The loft was constructed of split logs, and the doors of split timbers three or four inches thick, with battens fastened across and hung on strong wooden hinges, having also a strong wooden bar across the door inside, fastened at each end by the fork of a tree put into the door casing by a hole bored with a large auger.

To break into such a house as that would be by no means easy, yet the dwellings were seldom locked Such a thing as entering a house unlawfully, was well-nigh unknown.

CLEARING.

After the cabin-building or along with it or even before it, for great numbers lived in camps all summer, would come the "clearing."

One piece would be cleared entirely, for an orchard, and the fruit trees would be planted as soon as they could be procured. And some (though few) of those orchards thus planted in the fresh clearing are still standing after the lapse of more than half a century. But where are the hands that set their tiny infant trunks and straightened their branching roots within the opened earth? Alas! alas! They will be seen on earth no more! Ask of the memorial stones that stand in melancholy sadness to tell the inquiring person—by the names, the ages, mayhaps the virtues, but never the vices, nor the failings of those whose ashes lie beneath the sward! Besides the orchard was opened an additional clearing for a corn field. The undergrowth and small trees were cut down and piled and burned, the larger trees were deadened, the "grubs" were taken out, and the ground planted in corn, etc. Then ten to twenty acres or more would be deadened "in the green," and year by year the process of clearing up this "deadening" would go on, till, in the lapse of time, every old tree-trunk would have fallen and been consumed; the stumps themselves would be burned out by the roots, and the result would be, after untold hard work, night and day, winter and summer, a clean, bright, beautiful field.

"DEADENING."

The manner of clearing up a deadened field was somewhat tedious and quite curious. The girdled trees were left to dry standing, and to fall at their leisure. Every spring and autumn several trees would be found prostrate upon the earth. Men in those days loved to make wind, water and fire work as well as they do now, and some of their ways of doing so were quite ingenious.

These huge trees lying on the ground were not chopped up by the axe—that would be too hard work. But limbs and broken fragments would be laid crosswise on the trees at proper lengths, and a fire built upon the body of the trunks, which would be kept up till the trunk was burnt completely through. The fires had to be tended and replenished for days and sometimes for weeks. This work was black and dirty but it saved untold labor, and the ashes produced by the burning greatly enriched the land where they lay. This method of cleaning was called "niggering," and taking care of the fires was said to be "tending the niggers." It was no small pleasure and amusement for a lot of jolly lads to take a round over a clearing at night, and "right" up the waning fires across the massive tree-trunks, shouting, hallooing, laughing and singing, making the echoes ring through the surrounding woods as they went running and dancing from fire to fire in mutual rivalry as to who should fix up the greatest number.

The shadows of the night made bright and splendid by the blazing piles as the flames burst forth afresh under the process of replenishment, the flying sparks from the brands as they were broken and thrown anew into the fires, and all the hurry and excitement of the scene, made the work of "tending the niggers," at night, a time of jolly and boisterous merriment hardly to be surpassed.

Sometimes after a deadening had stood for several years, a heavy storm of wind would sweep over the field and bring down immense numbers of those decaying trunks to the ground in a single night. Then would come work indeed. Hundreds and hundreds of smoking, blazing fires would cover the whole area, and the process would go on for days and weeks, till at length the huge logs would all have disappeared, the last pile of "brands" would be consumed, and the field would be found—like Solomon's beloved in the Canticles—"black but comely;" covered with coals and ashes, but the delight of the settler's heart, and waiting for the upturning plow, the springing seed, and the laughing crop.

LANDS.

There were no pre-emption laws at that day. A considerable time passed after the treaty with the Indians ceding the public lands before the survey was completed and they were thrown into market. During this intermediate time, many persons "squatted," as it was termed, i. e., moved upon the unsurveyed land and made greater or less improvement. And, also, after the lands were thrown into market and became subject to entry, many persons came to the county who, though unable to enter land, would select a tract, move upon it and intend it for their own.

The settlers would respect the presumptive right of the "squatter," for, while there was no public law, the pioneers "were a law unto themselves;" and, if any heartless speculator should venture to "enter" a tract thus occupied, neither he nor any other man under his authority dared take possession; but if any such ventured to show themselves, they were hunted from the land like a wolf or a panther, and might feel thankful if they kept their heads safe on their shoulders.

It was "squatter law"—and that law was most sternly obeyed and enforced—that he who had built and begun an improvement, should have the right to buy at first hands as long as he might choose to claim it. And many a poor fellow, penniless at first, and utterly unable to buy a foot of land, made a location nevertheless, opened out a "clearing," built a cabin, and contrived, "by hook and by crook," to raise money to enable him to become the proud possessor of a homestead, monarch (not indeed of all he could survey, but) of one little piece of earth's genial surface, enough to constitute that dearest of all places, a home. And not a few who now have spread themselves like a green bay tree, began life in the woods, or their fathers before them or along with them did, in exactly that humble and lowly way. Not seldom the poor emigrant would accept the offer of one who had made an "entry," to purchase "on time," giving, sometimes, 50 per cent in advance, or maybe more, hoping to make the money for payment out of the land by the time his notes fell due.

This living by sufferance, the state of uncertainty, the danger that one's cabin and clearing would be "entered" over his head, was decidedly unpleasant, however, and no one did so except by the force of sheer necessity. Those who could possibly do so, made an "entry," so as to put their homestead beyond contingency. And it could not be expected that a "squatter" would "improve" much beyond what was absolutely needful to enable him to live, and certainly not more than enough to furnish him the means of raising the funds for the purchase of his coveted spot. Yet, still improvement went on, and, where the settler, as was mostly the case, had actually entered his land and obtained his "patent" under the broad seal of the nation, he went to work with a will; and the amount of clearing, of cabin building, of deadening, of burning, of fencing, of planting and of harvesting, which was accomplished from year to year, was something wonderful to behold. The statistics of the quantity of land entered during each respective year, from the time of the first patent till the last tract of land had been hunted out, show how steady, and in some years how rapid, was the current of emigration flowing over these lands, and filling all the region with a thoroughly active and intensely earnest population. Of one family composed of stalwart and enterprising boys, some of whom are still living to enjoy the fruits of their labor, it is said that they surpassed all others in the county for the amount of "clearing" which, for themselves and for others, they accomplished during the years in which these giant forest trees were being prostrated to the earth, and the fruitful soil was being opened to the genial sunshine. Hundreds and hundreds of acres did that single heroic group subdue by their conquering prowess; and the tokens of their valor still remain in the fruitful fields, yielding, ever since that triumphant hour, their abundant harvests for the comfort and the sustenance of man and beast.

There were few in those early times but actual settlers. Some there had been in various places, the advance guard of pioneerism, who would "squat" down for a brief period till permanent settlers would commence to take possession, and who would almost instantly "pull up stakes," and "shove ahead" to some still unsettled region.

But the body of settlers had "come to stay," at least to make an actual and bonafide commencement, and intended substantial business. These felt all on an equality with each other, and each and all stood ready with might and main, with hand and heart, to uphold the right of every other, and to render every possible assistance in the struggle for establishment and prosperity. Hospitality and sociability were everywhere. The latch-string was always out, and every neighbor bade every other freely welcome. And great comfort and much enjoyment was experienced by these rude settlers. And almost perfect security existed, moreover, locks and bars and bolts were things wellnigh unknown. Stores were fastened with a pin outside the door, like an old-fashioned stable; the dwellings were left open, or at least unlocked through the watches of the night, or, if fastened at all, it was through fear, not of man, but of the prowling wild beasts.

It is an interesting reminiscence of those pioneer days that, as late as 1837–40, John Connor, the veteran mail carrier for nearly thirty years on the route northward from Winchester, used to take, upon a horse led by his side, a heavy sack of silver money, sometimes to the amount of $5,000 or $6,000 at a time, for payment at the Fort Wayne land office, for land entries at that point. He would "camp out" one night as he went, yet he was never molested; and, to the honor of the old veteran be it said, no man ever lost a cent by unfaithfulness of his. Night and day, summer and winter, through mud, snow and rain, whether sweltering in a July sun or shivering beneath a December snow storm, swimming the swollen streams booming during the freshets of the spring months; faithfully, untiringly, heroically, did that conservator of the United States mail press onward from south to north and from north to south alternately, growing old but not rich, in his country's service; and only leaving that department of work to enlist in the army at the commencement of the war of 1861.

May the day be long deferred when such integrity, though found among the poor and lowly, shall fail to receive its due meed of honor in the hearty approbation and esteem of the public, in whose behalf such untiring faithfulness has been exerted.

All honor to him who thus, through many long years of weariness and privation and toil, faltered not in the path of public duty, heroically performing what was then so indispensable to the public welfare, and, for accomplishing which needed result, no better and easier method had then been discovered.

FURNITURE.

This country lies far interior, away from all water-courses, those old time channels of inter-communication. Emigrants could reach this county only by a long and tedious stretch of wagon road and forest trail. Hence the settlers brought with them commonly only the most necessary things, and especially those for which no substitute could be found in the new land; kettles, ironware, etc., must be brought, since nothing could be found in the West to take their place. Bedsteads, chairs and tables were useful, but they were also heavy and bulky, and awkward to move, and substitutes could be found, and they were, in many cases, left behind.

Feather beds, bedding, pewter ware, cooking utensils, etc., were brought. But for bedsteads, the settlers made something which answered the purpose. Two rails with one end inserted in the side and end logs of the cabin, meeting in a post at the inner corner driven into the ground, with clapboards laid across from the side rail to a strip pinned upon the log, would do for a bedstead. One active young wife made one for herself by boring holes in some poles and making two benches, and laying eight large, thick clap-boards upon them, and lo! she had a bedstead; and on went her straw bed, all the bed she had and her sheets and bed quilts; and she was never prouder of anything in her life than she was of her bedstead and her bed, nice and good and brand new.

Sometimes, for an extra nice "fixing," men would split out pieces from a straight-grained oak, and make bed rails, and prepare other pieces for the slats, boring auger holes in the side rail and in the side house log, and putting the slats in these, and that was good and solid. Four high posts would stand at the corners, and rods or wires be strung from top to top of the four posts, and curtains would be hung on the rods; and who could wish a neater curtained bed than that? Often two of these would be made for a single cabin, one in each farthest corner; one for the father and mother, and the other for company; and the children—why, they had to go into the loft, and sleep under the rafters to the music of the rain falling on the roof, or of the snow rattling on the clapboards. And that was a jolly place to sleep. And instead of chairs were made puncheon stools, and puncheon benches, which last were better than chairs or stools either, since half a dozen urchins could sit upon one. And as for chairs or stools at the table, they were not needed, inasmuch as all the half-grown boys and girls had feet, and they stood up at the table, like folks at a modern Sunday-school celebration picnic dinner; and almost every article of convenience that settlers had they made for themselves. Door hinges and latches were made of wood, and a string sufficed to raise the latch; and to pull the string inside was better than a lock, because no false key could pick the lock or unbolt the door. A poking stick answered for tongs, and some stones on the hearth did instead of andirons; and, as for stoves, those articles had not been invented yet, or, if they had, it would cost so much to haul the bulky things of the sort which were called stoves in those days into these Western wilds, that when here, the cost would be more than that of a forty-acre lot.

FOOD, COOKING, ETC.

The people of the present time will doubtless be glad to learn how the pioneers managed (not merely to raise or earn, but) to make their bread in those days when stoves and ranges, and all the modern paraphernalia of baking and cooking were not.

Bread was made mostly of cornmeal, and in three forms, viz.: "Dodgers," "Pone," and "Johnny Cake."

To the people now all these three are reckoned as one; but to the pioneer, they were entirely distinct, yet all excellent of their kind, and either or all good enough to make "a pretty dish to set before the king."

"Dodgers" were made of meal with pure water and a little salt, mixed into a stiff dough, and molded with the hand into a kind of oval cake, and baked in a "bake-pan" or "Dutch-oven," viz., a round iron vessel as wide across as a half-bushel or less, and six or eight inches deep, with legs, of course, and a lid with a raised rim to hold coals on the top.

The coals were put in abundance underneath the "oven," and on the top as well; and when the bread was done there came out the "dodgers," as moist, as sweet, as nice as epicure ever saw.

"Pone" was made with meal, water and salt, with the addition of milk or cream and yeast, thinner than dodgers, and was baked in the same way.

"Johnny Cake" was made with lard and butter, water and salt of course, and baked in a loaf or cake, say six inches wide and an inch thick, upon a board perhaps two feet long set up before the fire. When one side was baked enough the other side of the cake was turned to the fire till it was done, and then you would have perhaps the sweetest and best corn bread ever made. Besides these there were grated corn, pounded hominy, lye hominy, green corn (roasting ears), etc. Corn has been well said to be the poor man's grain, and on account, among other things, of the ease with which it can be made into food, the variety of which it is capable, and the general excellence of the different kinds. Lye hominy and green corn, the two simplest forms of its preparation, are at the same time well-nigh the best and most delicious food that ever passed the lips of man.

After wheat had been raised, of course, some flour was used, but still for a long time corn was the chief source of bread. The mills were but poor, many of the first for grinding wheat having only hand bolts, and the flour would be none of the best.

But you are not to think that the settlers were destitute of meat. On the contrary, they had abundance, and that of the best and rarest kinds. Deer, turkeys, pheasants and what not were plenty; and a good rifle would bring some of them down at almost any hour. To shoot turkeys standing in his cabin door was no uncommon exploit for the pioneer; and to bring down on an average, one deer a day, besides a full day's work, was what many a backwoods man succeeded in doing.

Almost every settler (and settler's son) was a hunter as well, and those who did not care themselves to shoot deer could readily get all the venison they wished of their sportsman neighbors, and that almost for a song.

Then there were hogs, at first or very soon afterward. There were many "wild hogs," that were the offspring of such as had strayed from older settlements, or from the Indians, some of whom kept swine. These hogs were called "elmpeelers," and were long-legged, long-bodied, long-headed, sharp-snouted, with short, straight, pointed ears, and as nimble nearly as a wolf; and, when very wild, more savage than the bears themselves. They would make but a poor show (except as a curiosity) at one of our modern fairs, but at that time they were highly valued, even above the fat, unwieldly, helpless things called improved stock.

When a "Yankee man" was trying to sell some improved breed to the western "hoosier" (or "sucker" it may be) and mentioned as an advantage that they could not run, "Can't run?" said the settler. "No," said the Yankee. "Don't want 'em," replied the "sucker." "My hogs have to get their own living and look out for themselves, and I would not give a snap for a hog that can't outrun a dog."

So "improved stock" was then and there at a discount.

These woods-hogs would get fat only during "mast years," and sometimes the herds of hogs would get to be three or four years old and would become thoroughly wild and very savage, fleet of foot and almost as fierce as a tiger, so that hunters would be obliged to take to a tree to get beyond their reach.

During the non-mast years these troops of swine would subsist upon roots, etc., such as hickory roots, sweet elm roots, slippery elm bark and such like. There was no hog-cholera then. Swine even now peel elm trees, eating the bark as high as they can get at it, and in such cases they seem clear of cholera. This habit of eating the bark from elm trees is what probably gave hogs in those days the name of "elmpeelers." When fatted on hickory and beech mast the meat was very sweet but oily, and would not make good bacon. Hunting wild hogs was grand sport, though somewhat dangerous withal.

Besides pork, as above described, and wild game, the streams abounded in fish; bass, salmon, pike, buffalo, red horse, white and black suckers, silver sides, catfish, etc., were plentiful in the streams, and men could have all they pleased to catch. Besides bread and meat, potatoes were soon raised, so as to furnish a full supply; as also pumpkins, squashes, cabbages, and other garden vegetables. But wheat, for several years, proved nearly a failure, so that flour, if used, had to be brought from the Miami or some other older settlement; and only a few could afford to take the trouble to get it, or cared to obtain it if they could.

But how was cooking (other than baking bread) done? This way: A stiff bar of iron-wood (or of iron itself) was fastened in the chimney lengthwise the fire-place, about midway from front to rear, and perhaps eight feet high, called the "lug-pole." On this bar were suspended several hooks of different lengths, made of small iron rods (or sometimes of wood). These hooks extended far enough downward so that the pots and kettles of various sizes would hang above the fire and close enough to it to receive the needful amount of heat. Thus, boiling of all kinds was done.

For roasting (or basting), a wooden pin was fastened over the fire-place, and from this pin the turkey, venison saddle, or what not, was hung by a string or a wire in front of the blazing fire-place. The side next the fire would soon be cooked, and, by turning it round and round, the whole would be done "to a turn," the gravy dripping out into a dish set below upon the hearth. Thus, with milk and butter in abundance after the first two or three years, with tree-sugar and molasses in profusion, with wild berries and plums, etc., with which the woods abounded, the settlers, after they once got started, had no lack. In fact, many things of which they had a plentiful supply, would now be reckoned (if they could be obtained at all) a wonderful luxury.

As to the supply of game and the readiness with which it could be gotten, it may be stated that one man has been known to kill nine deer in a single day, another has killed six. These are of course extreme cases, yet to kill a deer or two, half a dozen turkeys, and fifteen or twenty pheasants in a day was nothing uncommon for a single person.

To light the house, no gas nor kerosene, nor even tallow candles were needed. The huge fire-place would, for any ordinary purpose, give light enough. Some had a kind of contrivance consisting of a sort of dish or bowl with a nose or spout for the rag-wick to lie in. In the dish was melted tallow or lard, and the wick lay with one end in the melted lard, and the other up along the spout. This lamp would hang by a string in the middle of the room and well supplied the place of chandelier or astral. Sometimes a still simpler arrangement was employed, a broken saucer with some tallow or lard in it would have a piece of rag laid in as a wick, and your lamp was all complete. And for outdoor uses, the boys used to light themselves and their company to meetings or spelling schools, or to hunting sprees or "hoe-down" parties, with torches, consisting of a handful of hickory bark. All that had to be done was to peel some bark as you went along, light the ends in the fire-place when about to start for home, and keep it whisking about as you went on. The more wind the better, though wind in those forest paths gave little trouble. A group of torches scattered along among the trees, flaring and dancing and flashing as they were waved hither and thither by their bearers, presented so picturesque a sight as in these artificial days can seldom be witnessed. A good torch-light was worth half a dozen lanterns any day (or any night rather).

IMPLEMENTS.

The methods and means of work were simple enough.

Trees were girdled and felled, and cut into lengths with the ax.

In fact the ax was, to the settler, the tool of all work. Without it he was helpless. With it he was a crowned king.

With an ax and an auger and an old hand-saw, he could make wellnigh anything.

Rail-splitting was done with maul and wedge.

Moving logs was was done with a lever, or hand-spike, while one in a hundred or a thousand would boast a crow-bar.

Clapboards were split out with a frow.

Puncheons were split with maul and wedge, and shaped and smoothed with the ax, or with a large, long frow, suited to the purpose.

Flax was threshed by whipping the bundles on a barrel-head, or a block set endwise. It was spread and rotted, and dried and "broke," and swingled (scutched), and hatcheled (hackled), the tow carded, and the flax or the tow spun and reeled, and spooled or quilled, and warped, and woven, and colored, and made up into garments.

Grain was hand-reaped, or cradled, and threshed with a flail, or tramped on the ground with horses, and cleaned with a sheet or a basket fan.

Hauling was done on a sled, made out of "crooks" split from a tree-root.

Plowing was done with a bar-share plow, which had only a wooden mold board.

Hoes were huge, ungainly things, large enough to cut and dig "grubs" with.

Men traveled mostly on foot, or on horseback. Many a man went on foot to Fort Wayne or to Cincinnati to enter his land. One man entered three different forty-acre tracts, and went on foot to Cincinnati for the purpose, each several time, except that one of the trips was made partly on horseback. The old man is still living to enjoy the fruits of his labor. Boys, sixteen years old, have tied up their money in a rag, and gone on "Shank's mares" alone through the woods, to make entry of land for father, or mother, or possibly for themselves.

Many a farm was tilled for years with a single horse, or even an ox. Not seldom a poor fellow's only horse would lie down and die, and leave him in a "fix" indeed. However, people were accommodating, and a person could get help from his neighbors to the extent of their ability.

Wagons were very scarce. To become the owner of a wagon was an event to reckon from as the beginning of a new era.

One early settler says, that in a space of two miles square, where resided perhaps thirty families, only two wagons were to be found.

He says moreover, that the neighbors got up a milling expedition, taking a wagon with six horses, and twelve bushels of grain. The horses were restive and wild and would not pull together, and the wagon became fast in the mud; and six men took a horse and a sack of grain apiece and "put out" for the mill, leaving the wagon in the mud-hole to be got out at some other time.

Thus our ancestors plodded on; slow and tedious and awkward their methods would now be reckoned, but honest, faithful, industrious, frugal, simple-hearted, sincere, hospitable and generous. They heroically accomplished the herculean tasks appointed to their lot, and bore patiently and successfully the burdens which providence laid upon their shoulders. Let their posterity beware how they contemn the humble condition of their forefathers. Let this generation look back to those old-time scenes, and to the worthy actors in them, not with a feeling of shame nor a sense of disgrace, but let them reckon it an honor to have sprung from a line of ancestry so noble, so excellent, so hardy and energetic, so worthy of sincere respect, nay, almost of reverence; and let them see to it that in methods of energetic labor and in heroic success in the employment of larger and better means of accomplishment, they prove themselves before the world to be worthy successors of their venerable progenitors.

CLOTHING.

Most of the settlers brought with them into the wilderness all they could afford, to last them until more could be raised, at least to last for one year, and often for more than that.

After a corn field and a truck patch must come a flax patch. When the flax became ripe it was pulled, threshed, spread, rotted, gathered up, broken, scutched, hackled, spun, woven and put on the back to wear. All the machinery needed for this work was a flax-brake, a scutching-board, a hackle, a spinning-wheel, a quill-wheel and winding blades, warping bars and loom, all of which were very simple and inexpensive, and most of them could be made in the vicinity or even at home. And all the work, from sowing the seed to taking the last stitch upon the garment, was done upon the premises, and much of it was performed as easily by the lads and the lasses as by the men and women themselves.

The hackling of the flax produced tow. This tow was carded and spun, the flax was spun into "chain," and the tow into filling, and both were woven into "tow linen;" and out of this strong and not unsightly fabric, many garments for summer wear were made; dresses for females being colored according to the taste, and the males wearing theirs uncolored. For winter, people had sheep, and took the wool, carding it by hand, spinning it on a "big wheel," and weaving it with linen or cotton warp (or chain) into "linsey-woolsey" or "jeans." The "linsey" was worn mostly by the women, and the jeans by the men; sometimes the fabric was colored "butternut," and sometimes blue.

Cambrics, muslins, etc., were scarce and costly, and rarely used. For outer garments men soon began to use deer-skins, making pantaloons and "hunting shirts." The latter was much like a modern sack coat, and a very comfortable, though not especially handsome garment it proved itself. At first the buckskin was obtained, ready dressed, of the Indians; but the settlers soon learned to prepare it themselves. The men had commenced to make and sew their own buckskin garments, the work being too hard for female fingers. The sewing was done with the sinews from the deer's legs, or with a "whang," i. e., a thong or string cut from the deer hide, a shoemaker's awl, and a very large needle. These buckskin clothes were just the thing. They were within the reach of all, costing nothing but labor; they were very durable, lasting for years; they were warm, and as to looks, each man looked as well as his neighbor, and what more is needed? And they were an almost perfect protection. The sting of the nettle, the scratch of the briers, and even the bite of the rattlesnakes was harmless. The cockle-burs and the Spanish needles would not stick to them, they kept out the cold "like a charm," and, moreover, when properly dressed, and neatly made, they presented by no means an unsightly appearance.

The garments were commonly made and worn large and free, which of course greatly added to their comfort and convenience. Sometimes, however, in standing near the fire, a man would get his "breeches" hot, and another in mischief would clap the hot buckskin to the flesh, and the luckless wearer would jump, with a yell and a bound, clear across the room, as though the great log fire were tumbling on him. Sometimes too they would get wet, and if allowed to dry, the skin would become very hard and stiff, and could not be used again till it had been softened by dampening and rubbing.

The Indians made moccasins, and the settlers bought and wore them, being excellent for dry weather, winter or summer, but not for wet. For the wet season, strong leather shoes were used, though many, especially the younger class, went much barefooted.

Upon the head the men wore in the winter chiefly a strong, well-made, low crowned, broad-brimmed wool hat, somewhat like that which the older Quakers now wear. Sometimes a warm head-gear was made from a coon-skin. It was comfortable, but looked wolfish. In summer, home-made hats, braided from whole rye-straw, grown for that purpose, were in extensive use.

Women also made their bonnets out of straw, only each particular straw was split into five or six pieces by a "splitting machine."

This machine may be thus described: Narrow strips of tin were firmly set in a piece of wood an inch square and six inches long. The straw was spread open and drawn through these tin "teeth" and made into strips of equal width. Five of these strips (sometimes seven) were plaited into a braid, and the braid made long enough for a whole bonnet. The braid was ironed smooth (having been bleached if thought necessary), and nicely sewed into bonnets; and they looked equal in neatness (not to say taste) to the fashions of the present day.

Sun-bonnets were made much as at the present day, of calico and pasteboard. The great object of a bonnet was at that time supposed to be to protect the face, head and neck from the sun, and the wind and the cold; and they were made accordingly. What a bonnet is for now is best known, perhaps, to the wearers; or, if they do not, how should anybody else be expected to know?

The fashions of that primitive time, doubtless, would seem awkward and uncouth at the present day; but the clothing answered the prime ends for which clothing is worn, decency and comfort, even better perhaps than the garments of the present day. And as to looks, folks were better satisfied with what they had then than people are now; and, if they were suited who had them to wear and to look at, surely we who are so far removed by two generations of time have no occasion to complain.

It can be truly affirmed that underneath those coats and hunting shirts, uncouth in looks and awkward in fit, dwelt souls brave and generous, and hearts tender and kind, loyal, affectionate and true. God grant that the same may ever be truly declared of their children and their children's children while the ages roll. Fashions may come and fashions may go, but what matter, so the deep fountain of love and truth and faithfulness in the human soul remains pure, untarnished and perennial.

MONEY.

Money was scarce, little, indeed, was needed, for, as has been shown, almost every necessity and luxury was produced at home. Some money, however, was necessary, chiefly to pay taxes, and to buy iron and salt, powder and lead. Taxes indeed, for many years, were low. The first county tax levied in Randolph was "twenty-five cents upon each horse-beast." The first settlement of the treasurer showed as follows:

Receipts	$20.00
Expenditures	20.00
Balance	00.00

That was in May, 1819.

In November, $260.00 were the receipts, and $259.75 the disbursements.

In 1820, the county treasury boasted of $462.63, $309.63 of which were realized from the sale of lots, and $1 from a fine, leaving $152.00 as the avails of county taxation in a single county for a whole year. And up to 1829 the annual county taxes still fell short of $900.00. So "taxes" required but a small amount of the "needful."

But iron and salt and powder and lead were indispensable, and heavy and costly. They took money, and abundance of it, or its equivalent.

As a specimen of the costliness of articles in those times, the statement is made that Benjamin Bond, who came to Wayne County in 1811, gave for nails twenty-five cents a pound, and paid for them in cordwood cut upon his land just west of New Garden meeting-house in Wayne County, at twenty-five cents a cord upon the ground, a cord of wood for a pound of nails!

Once in Western Pennsylvania in the long, long ago, a horse was given for a barrel of salt, and at another time (in this region) eighteen dollars was given for a bushel. Money could be obtained, indeed, though not largely. Deer skins would bring fifty cents; raccoon skins thirty-seven and a half cents, and muskrats twenty-five cents. The fur buyer, when he came his annual round, would pay cash; but the merchants paid only in trade. If the settler would wait for the fur buyer, he could have the cash, if not, he must "dicker" it out, and let the merchant finger the cash himself.

Deer must be killed from May till November, and raccoons and muskrats from December till April. So the hunter had his harvest all the year round; only, if he wanted money, he must store up till the fur-dealer came. But necessaries could be gotten at any time. And these were comparatively few, though somewhat expensive. A side of sole leather and of upper leather, a barrel of salt, powder and shot for hunting, some fish hooks, and perhaps an ax, would suffice for a whole year. For land buying, some money was required, of course, and after the "specie-circular" in the spring of 1837, only silver (for gold was not then in circulation, being, before the days of California, dear, and of course scarce, or, more properly speaking, not in ordinary use as money at all) was available, and hard work indeed it often was to obtain the needful.

One (now old) man tells of the strait he was put to at the time when that famous "Specie Circular" came in force. He was a lad of eighteen years. Having had his eye for a long time upon a fine sugar camp near his father's dwelling, but without money enough for his purpose, he heard that another man intended to "enter" the tract. Hurrying to gather up funds for that and for some more land desired by his father, he set out, on foot and alone, carrying his money, tied in a knot in his pocket handkerchief, most of the way in his hand, bound for the land office at Fort Wayne. The money was largely in paper, and in just three days the "specie circular" was to come in force. He hoped to reach Fort Wayne by that time and struggled on. But he could not "make it." The third night found him at St. Mary's, a few miles short. The next day he entered the Land Office, not knowing what he could do, fearing the worst yet hoping the best. The Receiver happened to be an acquaintance of his father's, and agreed to take his "paper money." And so he made his point and got his land. And then, afoot and alone, he wended his way homeward again, without money only as he borrowed two dollars of his friend, the Receiver, but happy in possession of the certificate which would in due time bring for him a patent under the "Broad Seal" of the United States of America. The reason why he was found thus with no money to go home on, was this: He supposed that the tract of land he wished to enter was an "80 acre" piece. It was 84, which would take exactly $5.00 extra, so the question came up, "Will you take all your money and get your land, or will you save your money and not purchase?" He had come too far to go back with his object all unaccomplished, and the young hero decided that he would have the land and get home as he could. And have it he did, and, under the generous offer of his friend, the Receiver, he accepted the loan of two dollars to pay his expenses homeward. It is a pleasant thing to note that, though this boy (and his father) were ardent Whigs of that olden time, and the Receiver was a Van Buren Democrat, he befriended the boy nevertheless, like the frank and genial man that he was.

AMUSEMENTS.

Wherever there are human beings, there will be amusements. Thousands of years ago a prophet foretold that Jerusalem should be rebuilt, and that the streets "should be full of boys and girls playing in the midst thereof." Wherever there are boys and girls there will be playing, and men and women are only grown-up children.

The Indians of the western continent, the Africans of the eastern, all tribes and and all nations of men, have their sports.

Even the various tribes of animals are not without their games, in which they engage with rollicking glee. And the human tribes, savage and civilized, barbarous and cultivated, rich and poor, in the torrid heats and amid northern snows, in the sands of Arabia, in the valleys of India, on the plains of China, amid the snows of Norway and of Lapland; on the stormy steppes of Russia, amid the glaciers of Greenland, and in the North American wastes, where wander the wild Esquimaux; in every spot where human foot has trod, jollity has found a resting place, and fun has set up his throne.

When the woods were full of Indians, as at first, the white boys played and romped with the copper-colored children; and the men would pitch quoits, and heave stones, and run races, and jump with the savage braves.

The Indians indeed were wonderfully susceptible of the ridiculous. Solemn as they seemed, they were full to the brim of native fun and enjoyed a joke hugely. When the son of the first settler, a lad seven or eight years old, was passing near an Indian wigwam, driving a calf up to his pen, a squaw standing behind a bush jumped out with what the frightened boy thought to be a gun, and started for him. He sprang like a deer, and wild calf, and scared boy, and yelling squaw, went thrashing through the woods together. The boy ran to his father's cabin and the squaw after him. She had no gun, but only a stick; but she was so "tickled" at the boy's fright, that she just fell down on the cabin floor and laughed, and laughed, and rolled over and laughed, as if she never would have done. She laughed and jabbered over her broken English as she lay there thinking of the chase and the fright she had given the little white boy, until the lad grew madder and still madder at the wild creature, and wished her anywhere but there, laughing and making fun of him.

The sports of the settlers were generally of the more active kind as, jumping, wrestling, running races, with frequently a "hoe-down" at an evening merry-making, after a raising, or a log-rolling, or a spinning bee, or some other gathering for work and assistance.

An invitation would be given to the men and boys to come and help roll logs, or to raise a building, or something like that, and to the women to come and bring their spinning wheels. Both classes would go. The men would roll logs or what not, and the women would spin. At nightfall supper would be served, and then for a frolic by such as pleased to take part in it, which would doubtless be fast and furious, since those who participated were stalwart lads and buxom lasses, and, in sober truth, "all went merry as a marriage bell."

And not seldom the women would carry their spinning wheels as they went and returned, on foot.

There have been indeed more harmful sports than these backwoods-balls, especially if they were kept free from the mischievous presence of and disturbing power of intoxicating drinks (which was not always the case), since they were for the most part simply lively methods of working off a superabundance of animal spirits, which mere hard work outdoors or indoors could not subdue.

Then for the boys, hunting served the purpose both of hard work and high sport as well, for to chase the bounding deer through the leafy woods, or to wait and watch for his forest lordship, as his kingly horns would come tossing proudly among the waving boughs, and to bring his active form to the earth with the unerring shot of the faithful rifle amid the wild baying of the eager hounds as they gathered to be "in at the death,"—these wild and fiery hunts were, for these rollicking boys, the keenest of sports. And thus it was—

"Mid earnest work and furious play
The youngsters passed their lives away."

RELIGION.

But not all even of the young spent their leisure hours in sport. For many, very many, the religious exercises of those earliest days of primitive simplicity were more satisfying, as they were certainly more profitable, than any form of mere worldly pleasure could possibly be. Great numbers of the first settlers of Randolph were men and women of a strong and earnest religious faith and, of a hearty, loving spirit, fearing God, and delighting to do good to men.

The earliest religious meetings were probably of the Friends or the Methodists, possibly the former, though whichever may have been first, the other was not far behind.

The Friends built a house for divine worship, either the first or the second summer of their residence here, and the humble edifice served the double purpose both of church and schoolhouse.

The Methodists began their meetings in the house of Ephraim Bowen, Sr., not very long after his removal to this county, and the first Methodist sermon ever preached in the county was delivered in that unpretentious abode; and the great body of those who belonged to that people, which in truth was not a large crowd, gathered there to listen to its cheering words. The minister officiating was Rev. Mr. Holman, of Louisville, Ky., and his text was an appropriate one for the introduction of the gospel message into the new land: "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is the hurt of the daughter of my people not recovered?"

Some who heard that sermon are still among us, and they speak highly of that first effort by that gifted servant of Christ. Mr. Bowen's dwelling was long a place for the Methodist meetings of that region.

Perhaps the earliest houses of worship through the county were built by the Friends, the one at Arba being the first, those at Lynn, Jericho, White River, Dunkirk, Cherry Grove and perhaps some others, following not long after in point of time. The Methodist meetings were held mostly at first in private houses, as Mr. Bowen's in Greensfork near Arba, Mr. McKim's at Spartanburg, Mr. Marshall's in Ward Township, Mr. Hubbard's and Mr. Godwin's in Green Township, and so on. Other denominations also gathered congregations in various parts, as: The Disciples, the United Brethren, the Christians, the Protestant Methodists, the Baptists, the Presbyterians, and in latter days the Anti-Slavery Friends, the Wesleyans, as also the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and perhaps others.

There are now also Lutherans, Catholics, Universalists, Dunkards, etc. Just when each of these arose, it is at present difficult to tell.

Several of these branches of Christians have but few churches in the county. The number of each is supposed to be as follows:

Friends, about ten or twelve; Methodist Episcopal, a large number; Disciples, six or seven; United Brethren, a considerable number; Christians, a considerable number; African Methodist Episcopal, three or four; Baptists, two or three; Lutheran, three or four; Universalist, one; Catholic, two; Protestant Methodists, one or two; Wesleyans have died out.

Some of the Methodist churches were built very early, as: the Chapel west of Deerfield, the Prospect Meeting House east of Deerfield, etc.

In early times many protracted meetings were held, and several camp-meetings, at some of which remarkable seasons of religious awakening were witnessed, and many souls were brought to repentance and forgiveness. Many preachers too have been prominent and successful in their labors for Christ. Protracted meetings are still employed, (in addition to regular Sabbath and other stated work), as a powerful and efficient means for the spread of religious knowledge, and the impression of the public mind with religious truth. Camp-meetings are also (though more rarely) held, since the altered condition of society renders them less a matter of necessity or convenience than formerly. Almost every neighborhood now has commodious churches, large enough to hold the congregations who desire to gather for Divine worship. There are indeed, in various places in the county, groves which have been furnished with seats, etc., for the convenience of meetings; and, during the pleasant Sabbaths of summer, out-door meetings are occasionally held in them. But immense crowds now are rarely seen, except upon very unusual occasions such as county fairs, political "rallies," traveling menageries, or such like. One religious gathering is still very large, the Richmond Yearly Meeting of Friends. That is not held in this county but in Wayne, while yet the Randolph "Orthodox Friends" all belong to that wondrous "body." That far-famed "meeting" is not what it once was, since within twenty years past it has been divided, and now three "yearly meetings" exist upon the territory once occupied by the "Richmond Yearly Meeting" alone.

In the simple-heartedness of those early times, the people are thought, by the aged veterans who can remember what took place forty, fifty or sixty years ago, to have been more warm-hearted and whole-souled in their religious feelings and convictions than they are to-day. However that may be, religion, to those who then professed it, was a serious business, and they made thorough work of it. Women would take a babe in their arms and the husband a three-year-old child in his, while together they would go cheerfully on foot for miles to the place appointed for divine service. The daughter of the first settler of the county, who, by the way, is living still near where they first pitched their "camp," states that she often, when a "girl in her teens," walked from near Arba to Newport to Friends' Meetings, (at least six miles), and was not aware of having done anything worthy of especial mention. A young Friend at Cherry Grove would rise at 3 A. M. and work several hours in his field, and then ride on horseback sixteen miles to week-day Friends' Meeting. A Methodist circuit rider would go his round once a month, riding frequently hundreds of miles during the time, and having an appointment every day, and not seldom one at night besides. The preacher honored his calling then, and to be a Methodist circuit rider, meant to go to work at preaching and to have plenty of it to do; and to their honor it should be said that, as a rule, they performed a great amount of ministerial labor, and that, according to the full measure of their ability, they served the gracious Lord in His vineyard in their appointed lot. And those old-time ministers of Christ have, one by one, lain down to their final rest, and their souls have gone home to receive the gracious welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

And true it is that the simple-hearted worship offered and the instruction given in those rude and uncouth cabins, was to the full as acceptable to the Great Father of all our mercies as is any now-a-days to be met with in the grand and magnificent piles of brick and stone that pass for houses of worship in these later days. Linsey woolsey home-spun, and deer-skin hunting shirts, calico sun bonnets and coon-skin head-gear were as pleasing to the eye of the Omniscient as can any rich and costly methods and fashions be which the descendants of that honest, sturdy, faithful race of sterling men and loving women feel themselves called upon now to indulge or to practice.

It is indeed a comfort to the pure and humble soul, in all ages and places, to know and feel the blessed truth, that while "man looketh upon the outward appearance, God looketh on the heart;" that the Good Shepherd knoweth His sheep, and leadeth them in peace into the green pastures of His love.

To show that many of the early settlers were religious, we append a few names of families who, in days long gone by, belonged to some one of the various churches of the time. It is not to be understood that none besides the families named were included among the active workers for Christ, but only that these have been mentioned as prominent among the early Christian believers by some one or other of the pioneers who still remain in the land of the living, and whose memory reaches backward into those "beginnings of things" in a religious point of view among the forests of Randolph.

RELIGIOUS PEOPLE.

Alexanders, Addingtons, Akers, Beach, Botkins, Beards, Bowens, Barneses, Ballinger, Burroughs, Brown, Bealses, Bonds, Buttses, Brumfields, Coateses, Croppers, Carters, Cottoms, Cadwalladers, Chenoweths, Clenny, Crouses, Canadas, Chandler, Clevengers, Diggses, Devor, Debolts, Engles, Elliots, Edgers, Floods, Goodriches, Grubbs, Gorsuch, Hunts, Hills, Horns, Hunnicutts, Hinshaws, Hoffman, Harbour, Hammer, Hiatt, Hewitts, Hart, Johnsons, Jacksons, Jordans, Kennedy, Kizer, Lanks, Locke, Moormans, Masons, Murphy, Miller, Marshall, Macys, Middletons, McKew, Monks, Maulsbie, McIntyre, Mendenhall, McProud, Neffs, Nicholses, Overmans, Osborns, Pucketts, Pollys, Parkers, Phillipses, Peacocks, Reeders, Rubys, Ritenour, Reynolds, Rogers, Reece, Reynards, Shoemakers, Sumwalt, Stone, Scotts, Starbucks, Sumption, Swain, Smiths, Thornburgs, Thomases, Ways, Wrights, Wickersham, Worths, Wiley, Wiggins, Willmore, Wards, Willcutts, Wiggses.

GENEALOGICAL DATA, ETC.

Ancestry of John Jenkins: John Allen and Esther (Woolman) Allen were the great-grandparents of John Jenkins, now resident between Buena Vista and Huntsville, Randolph Co., Ind. He was born June 16, 1708, and she (being the daughter of John and Elizabeth Woolman in England), was born in East Nottingham, Old England, July 3, 1706.

Patience Allen, the youngest child of John and Esther Allen, was born November 3, 1746. She was the grandmother of John Jenkins. She married James Gawthrop about 1770, and died in Frederick County, Va., in 1828, in her eighty-second year. Her husband, James Gawthrop, was born at Stenton, near Kendall, in Westmoreland, May 4, 1742.

Hannah Gawthrop, daughter of James and Patience Gawthrop and mother of John Jenkins, was born December 12, 1788, being one of ten children. She died Sunday, May 23, 1847, in her fifty-ninth year, three miles north of Wilmington, Clinton Co., Ohio, and her husband, Jacob Jenkins, died May 23, 1849, in his sixty-eighth year, at his old residence near Wilmington, Ohio.

Mr. John Jenkins has the family Bible that was purchased by his great-grandmother, Esther Allen, upon her marriage, about 1725. The book was printed at Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1721, by Samuel Watson, printer for the King.

The Bible is now 160 years old, and is in good repair. The print and spelling are like ours, except that the long s's are used.

He has several antiquities, such as old tools, etc. Among them are two chairs, made in 1795. They are stout and firm. One of them has never lost a slat nor a round, and is as solid now as when new. The other is sound also, except that one of the slats in the back is loose. The chairs have been for most of the time in constant use, as kitchen chairs.

The bottoms of the posts have been worn off nearly two inches. Of course they have been re-bottomed one or more times. He has also a mattock sixty years old, nearly as good as new.

Rev. Greenman, of Union City, Ind., has a book about 250 years old, picked up at a second-hand book-stall in Cincinnati.

OLD MAIL ROUTES.

One of the chief mail routes in "auld lang syne," and perhaps the most difficult and severe as well, was the one from Winchester to Fort Wayne.

That route was established before 1829. It was then the main link that the northern settlers had to civilization and to the great world "outside the woods."

Elias Kizer carried the mail on that obscure and well-nigh impassable track for several years before 1830. The Hawkins boys, sons of John J. Hawkins, Esq., almost the earliest settler in the forests of Jay, carried the mail for about eighteen months, about 1833. They went sometimes by the solitary Hawkins cabin near what has since been the village of Antioch in the county of Jay, and the "Quaker Trace;" and sometimes by Joab Ward's, and the Godfroy farm west of Camden, and thence to Fort Wayne by the "Godfroy Trail." It was a lonely, wearisome, burdensome task, and was too much for the boys; and ere long they were full fain to relinquish the labor to some more hardy pioneer. And such a one was found in the person of John Connor, who in the spring of 1835 laid hold of the work, and who kept it, through rain and mud, and frost and snow and floods, year in and year out, for twenty-six or twenty-seven years, till 1861; and then he went into the army, old and wayworn as he was, and laid him down to die in the enemy's land.

Thos. Ward

Many a struggle had he with the hostile forces of nature, many a mud-hole, sometimes seventy-five miles long, undertook to bury him out of sight; many a flood rose across his pathway, many a fierce and bitter storm frowned and howled in his face, but ever in vain. The old hero came out of the contest a conqueror every time.

Sometimes his horses, one or both, would lie down and die, under the terrible service; but he would simply get more and try it again.

It was almost a thing of necessity that his farm near Portland should come to be what some rather cruelly nicknamed it "Connor's bone-yard." The fault lay not so much in Connor, as in the inexorable and relentless nature of the service to which he had devoted his life.

Those old horseback or hack mail routes (and the latter were perhaps worse than the former), were truly serious realities in the days of "auld lang syne." When that route was opened, not one post office was to be found along the entire distance.

After some years, Deerfield was established, and still later a post office in Jay (then Randolph) County, June 11, 1835, at the house of Daniel Farber, near College Corner. John Conner then had two post offices to serve with mail instead of one. And gradually settlers found their way into the northern woods, till that whole region became filled with dwellings and dotted with towns and schoolhouses and churches and post offices. And still John Connor kept on carrying the mail, till people on the route got to think that Uncle John Connor and "Uncle Sam" must be one and the same.

WRIGHT FAMILY.

They were a very numerous family. As mentioned already, three of the first officers were Wrights, and there were more Wrights than anything else. Two of the three officers, John and Solomon, were brothers, and the other was their cousin, and in particular there were many John Wrights.

John Wright, blacksmith, who donated land for the county seat, was brother to David Wright, Sheriff, and went to the Legislature three or four times; moved to Illinois in 1830, and died long ago. When he left, William M. Way, his son-in-law, became the owner of his land, who sold it to John Mumma, who laid it out as Mumma's addition (the tract long known as the "goose pasture").

John Wright, Judge. He served as judge twenty-eight years (four terms), up to 1846. He then moved over the Wabash, where he died some years ago. His oldest son, Edward, who lived (1880) on the Huntsville road, two and a half miles from Winchester, died in 1881.

Hominy John Wright, father to Solomon Wright, who is now living near the crossing of Cabin Creek. This John settled two and a half miles west of Winchester. He had twelve children, three of them triplets, Abram, Isaac and Jacob. He had a son John, also called Hominy John.

Spencer John Wright, son of James Wright who settled the Kizer farm north of Winchester.

Blue-chin John Wright, son of David Wright, Sheriff.

Thus there were at least six John Wrights. Old Thomas Wright, the oldest of all, was father-in-law of John Coats, who died since (1871). Thomas Wright's progeny are too many to be counted. Mr. Smith says of them, "Whole colonies of them have emigrated westward. If they and all the other descendants of the Wrights who were here in 1818 had remained in the county, there would be little room for any one else."

The above is a specimen of some members of a single connection among the pioneers. Similar accounts might be given of other families, as the Ways, the Diggses, the Johnsons, the Hodgsons, etc., etc. The pioneers indeed were remarkable, as a rule, for their large families. The original command to the progenitor of the human race was, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it;" and these sturdy emigrants considered themselves only in the line of primal human duty (as indeed they were thus) in raising flocks of children to grow up and possess the goodly and excellent land.

CHAPTER V.

ORGANIZATION.

COUNTIES—PRELIMINARY—COUNTY SEAT—OFFICIAL HISTORY—PUBLIC BUILDINGS—TOWNSHIPS—ROADS, ETC.

ORGANIZATION OF COUNTIES.

IT may be proper at this point to give a brief statement concerning the counties of Indiana as to the time of their creation, that the reader may gain a clear idea of the course and progress of settlement in the different sections of the State, and in our own section as well.

Some sketches are given also of governmental matters previous to that time.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

The State of Virginia had, before the Revolution, claimed the body of the territory lying northwest of the Ohio. Connecticut also had a claim, which was quieted by giving her the proceeds of several million acres of land lying on the southern shore of Lake Erie, embracing what is now known as the "Western Reserve," and including Ashtabula, Lake, Geauga, Portage, Summit, Medina, Cuyahoga, Lorain, Huron, Erie and parts of Ashland and Mahoning Counties, Ohio. Virginia ceded her claim to the United States by an act dated January 2, 1781. Congress accepted the grant, September 13, 1783, as a national domain.

Virginia, by an act passed December 20, 1783, directed her delegates in Congress, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee and James Monroe, to accomplish the cession. This was done by them March 1, 1784.

On the 13th of July, 1787, the Congress of the Confederation passed the now famous "Ordinance of '87" for the government of the Northwest Territory. And on the 5th of October, 1787, Arthur St. Clair was appointed Governor thereof. He was President of Congress at the passage of the ordinance, and retained the Governorship for twelve years (1788–1800).

In July, 1788, Gov. St. Clair organized the Territory, making Ft. Harmar (Marietta) the capital. January 9, 1789, he concluded a treaty with some of the leading men among the Indians, at Fort Harmar, but its validity was questioned or absolutely denied and hence the treaty was never enforced.

In 1790, Gov. St. Clair made a journey to Clarksville, Vincennes and Kaskaskia, to conciliate the Indians. His efforts, however, were fruitless.

September 13, 1790, Gen. Harmar moved from Fort Washington (Cincinnati), reaching the vicinity of Fort Wayne, and suffering a disastrous defeat October 19.

May 23 and August 24, 1791, Gens. Scott and Wilkinson led expeditions against the Indians on the Wabash (the Wea Prairie), eight miles below Lafayette, and at Ke-na-purr-a-qua on Eel River, six miles from Logansport. Both expeditions were successful. In September, 1792, Gov. St. Clair marched from Fort Washington, erecting Forts Hamilton and Jefferson on the way. On the third day of November, 1792, the army reached the Wabash at Recovery, and the next day (November 4) was terribly defeated by the Indians under Little Turtle, Blue Jacket and other chiefs.

Early in 1794, Gen. Anthony Wayne, then chief commander, having marched into the Indian country, built Fort Recovery on the ground of St. Clair's defeat, moved onward July 26, 1794, and erected Fort Adams on the St. Mary's, and Fort Defiance at the junction of the Auglaize and Maumee Rivers.

August 20, 1794, he defeated the Indians at the rapids of the Maumee, and, September 14, he began the erection of Fort Wayne. October 28, Gen. Wayne returned to Greenville.

The treaty of Greenville was framed and ratified at a meeting lasting from June 16 to August 10, 1795. The land embraced in that treaty included much of Ohio and a small portion of southeastern Indiana. The line agreed upon extended (with exceptions and reservations specified) from the Tuscarawas branch of the Muskingum River, westward by a varying line to Fort Recovery, Ohio, and thence southwest in a straight line to the Ohio opposite the mouth of the Kentucky River.

This is Wayne's boundary, already sufficiently described. Wayne had defeated the Indians so severely, and had so thoroughly convinced them of the hopeless folly of resisting the powers of the United States, that they sincerely and heartily observed the terms of the treaty. Public confidence was restored, and emigration set in to the region ceded thereby, with a strong and steady current.

Oct. 29, 1798, Gov. St. Clair issued a proclamation for a General Assembly for the Northwest Territory, to be held at Cincinnati, January 22, 1799. The Assembly met and adjourned to September 16, 1799, at which time it convened again and continued in session till December 30, of the same year. There were then in the whole northwest only seven counties, and but one of them (Knox) was within the present State of Indiana.

May 7, 1800, Congress divided the Northwest Territory into two parts, Ohio and Indiana. Ohio Territory embraced substantially what is now the State of Ohio, and Indiana Territory took in all the Northwest, containing by census that year only 4,875 souls. Gen. William H. Harrison was appointed Governor of Indiana Territory.

January 10–26, 1800, the judges met at Vincennes, and framed needed regulations. Ohio was made a State in 1802, Michigan Territory was set off in 1805, and Illinois Territory in 1809.

The first General Assembly for Indiana Territory convened at Vincennes July 29, 1805. At this time two more counties had been formed, viz.: Clark, in 1801, and Dearborn in 1803. Dearborn embraced all the territory in Indiana east of Wayne's boundary, and Clark took a large extent of country on the Ohio River.

Wayne was made in 1810, and Franklin in 1811.

By 1816, when Indiana became a State, thirteen counties had been formed, in all, to wit: Knox, 1796, (when created), all of Indiana and Michigan; Clark, 1801, on the Ohio River; Dearborn, 1803, east of Wayne's boundary; Harrison, 1809, on the Ohio near Corydon, the first State capital; Wayne, 1810, north part of Dearborn; Jefferson, 1810, cut off from Clark; Franklin, 1811, between Dearborn and Wayne, including also Fayette and Union; Gibson, 1813, south of what is now Knox; Warwick, 1813, next east of Gibson; Washington, 1814, north of Harrison and Clark; Switzerland, 1814, southern part of Dearborn, on Ohio River; Posey, 1814, southwestern county in the State; Perry, 1815, somewhat west of Harrison County; Jackson, 1815, north of Washington. [This last county, Jackson, though erected in 1815, would seem not to have been represented in the Constitutional Convention of 1816, or it may be that, being small in population, it was united with some other county]. Thus the settlements at this time (1816) were:

First—East of the (old) boundary (and perhaps some between the two boundaries) Switzerland, Dearborn, Franklin, Wayne.

Second—On or near the Ohio River, west of the boundaries, Clark, Harrison, Perry, Warrick, Posey.

Third—On the Wabash (northward) Gibson, Knox.

Fourth—Interior, (north of Harrison and Clark), Washington and Jackson.

A year or two before the Constitutional Convention of 1816, the settlement of Wayne had been pushed northward into the south part of what is now Randolph, and the Constitutional Convention met at Corydon June 10–19, 1816.

The first election of State officers took place on the first Monday in August, 1816.

In the first State Legislature, Jackson County was represented, and also one more county, formed in 1816, Orange, west of Jackson County.

One of the Representatives from Wayne County resided in the bounds of what became Randolph County, to wit, Ephraim Overman. He was the fifth settler in Randolph County, coming there in November, 1814. He settled one and a half miles north of Arba, where Joshua Thomas now lives, on the Pike.

[NOTE 1.—Counties having the names of Wayne and Randolph are mentioned as existing in Northwest Territory, in 1805. But Wayne County thus referred to was in Michigan, embracing all of Michigan and some of northern Indiana, etc. Randolph County was in Illinois].

The counties of Indiana were formed with some rapidity. Before 1817, sixteen counties; during 1817, three counties; during 1818, eight counties—Randolph County, being one; 1818–22, seventeen counties; 1823–1828, fourteen counties; 1830–37, twenty-one counties; 1843–71, thirteen counties; making in all ninety-two counties.

Thus the progress of settlement was, in general, from the south toward the center, and so toward the north.

It will be seen that Randolph County was among those that were early in settlement. The whole central part, and the vast northern and western portions, remained a wilderness for years after Randolph began to be settled. Winchester was laid out some years before Indianapolis and Fort Wayne. Settlement in Randolph began in 1814, but the central and western regions remained Indian land till 1818, and they were not surveyed till 1821–22.

Randolph is the sixteenth in population (1880), and the seventeenth in size. This county, at one time, embraced a large portion of the State northward from her present limits, and Delaware and Grant besides. At its first formation, however, the county included only the country east of the twelve-mile boundary and north of Wayne County, but the boundary was afterward changed, and other portions were temporarily joined thereto. The regions attached were settled more or less rapidly, and new counties were organized from time to time, till at length, by the erection of Blackford in 1839, Randolph became "herself and nothing else."

ORGANIZATION.

During the session of the Legislature of Indiana, held at Corydon, 1817–18, eight new counties was formed, of which Randolph was one.

It embraced, at first, all the territory north of Wayne County, and east and south of the twelve mile boundary. It was afterward so changed as to include, temporarily and for judicial purposes, an area outside of the twelve mile strip, and also an immense indefinite territory north and west, comprising, at one time or other, Delaware, Grant, Jay, Adams, Blackford, Wells, Allen, and how much else we do not know, perhaps even to the north line of the state, no county having then been organized in either of those directions. And as settlers moved into those regions they were reckoned as in Randolph until new counties were erected and organized, including them.

The act creating Randolph County was approved by Gov. Jennings, January 10, 1818. The law creating the new county appointed William Majors, Williamson Dunn, of Dearborn County, James Brownlee, of Franklin, members of Constitutional Convention, Stephen C. Stevens and John Bryan, to fix the county seat. The boundaries were described in the act as follows:

"All that part of the county of Wayne which is inclosed in the following bounds shall form and constitute a new county, that is to say, beginning at the state of Ohio line, where the line that divides the 15th and 16th townships strikes said Ohio line, thence westward with said township line until it strikes the old boundary, thence westward with the centre line of the 18th township in the new purchase until it strikes the Indiana boundary, thence northward with said boundary until it strikes the Ohio line, thence south with said line to the place of beginning." Until suitable accommodations could be made, the courts were appointed to be held at the house of William Way.

The locating commissioners met in August, 1818, and fixed the county seat at Winchester. They received and secured to the county donations of land as follows: Charles Conway, 60 acres; John Wright, 50 acres; David Wright, 10 acres; David Stout, 18 acres; Daniel Petty, 20 acres. 158 acres in all from five men, a splendid donation. Randolph County surely has no right to complain that her county seat did not get a good "send off." All of the land thus donated was in Sections 20 and 21, Township 20 north, Range 14 east of the second principal meridian. The location is on Salt Creek, and some distance south of White River. The town now lies on both sides of Salt Creek, and has extended itself northward nearly to White River.

Some old settlers say that the new county seat would have been located at Sampletown, four miles west, but that the settlers there were unwilling to "come down" sufficiently with donations.

Pursuant to the laws then in force, Gov. Jennings appointed David Wright, Sheriff, to organize the county. He did so by making two precincts, Greensfork and White River, the chief settlements being on these two streams. He created two townships as above, dividing them by an east and west line across the county. An election was held in August, 1818, to choose two Associate Judges, a Sheriff, Clerk, Recorder, Coroner, and three County Commissioners, which officers were chosen as follows: William Edwards, John Wright, Associate Judges; David Wright, Sheriff; Solomon Wright, Coroner; Charles Conway, Clerk and Recorder; Eli Overman, Benjamin Cox, John James, Commissioners. These officers were all commissioned, and the county machinery was put duly into motion. The Wright family furnished three of the eight above named, and that connection was at that time very numerous in the county, some account of which is set down elsewhere.

Thus far the organization of the county, and the election of officers therefor.

The official history at large will be furnished in a separate chapter.

COUNTY SEAT—WINCHESTER.

[Much of the following account of Winchester has been taken substantially from "Manuscripts" by Honorable Jere Smith, who came to Randolph County in August, 1817, and resided therein for more than fifty years until his death].

Winchester was the first town established in the county. The site was fixed by the commissioners to locate the county seat in 1818. As already stated, they located it on Sections 20 and 21, Town 20, Range 14 east of second meridian, by donations from five different persons, in all 158 acres.

Lots were laid out in the fall and winter of 1818. The first sale of lots took place February, 1819. The whole plat was an unbroken forest, a primitive wilderness, heavily timbered, with a thick undergrowth.

A large oak, three feet through, stood for years on Inlot No. 9, east front. It was cut down in 1825 or 1826, and the stump was standing there in state when Judge Smith built the Franklin House in 1839.

The Commissioners, Messrs. Cox, Overman and James, and Paul W. Way, Agent, had agreed upon the plan of the town. Overman and Way were both surveyors, backwoods fashion. Charles Connor, who was also a "half-surveyor," had a little stiff-armed compass, four-inch face, and an old two-pole chain, tied with leather and tow strings. Paul Way did the surveying. As the Commissioners were looking over the ground to locate the public square, Charles Conway told Judge Smith that Old Eli Overman stuck down the Jacob-staff, saying, "Here shall be the northeast corner of the public square," and there it was, and there it is, and is to be, unless, indeed, as seems not very unlikely in these latter days, some city "engineer" shall take it into his overgrown head to plant new corners and turn town, streets and all "awry."

The first house built was a round log cabin, one-story high, "scutched down" after it was raised, and before the rafters were put up.

It had a clapboard roof, and a clay and stick chimney. Mr. Smith says, "I do not know who built the house, but Martin Comer owned it and lived in it a long time. It stood on inlot No. 9, north front, and was built in the early spring of 1819.

The second house was put up by Thomas Wright, father-in-law of John Coats, still living in the county (1871), in the spring and summer of 1819. It was like the other, and stood on inlot No. 8, north front.

In the summer and fall of 1819, James McCool, a blind man, put up upon inlot No. 1, west front, a good, two-story, hewed-log house. When I first came to Winchester (1819) it was the hotel of the town, kept by the blind man, McCool. When next I came, James Oldham, hatter, kept tavern in it, and a hatter's shop back of it. Old Esquire Odle owned it afterward, and built a little frame store at the north end, and a frame shed back for bedrooms, and he ran it as a hotel, store and residence for some years.

In the winter of 1819–20, James Oldham, the hatter, built a good hewed-log house, story and a half, on inlot No. 11, southeast square; and in the spring of 1820, Alvin C. Graves built a round-log cabin on lot No. 14, in the southeast square.

The hewed-log court house and the Banta jail were built in 1819–20.

In that year (1820) Judge John Sample built the first frame house, a small one-story building, on lot No. 3, east front. He set it on the west line of the lot, some distance south of the northwest corner of the lot. He sold it the next year to George Burket, who extended the house north to the corner of the lot, and kept store in it for some years. He then sold it to Jesse Way, and he also had a store there for awhile."

It would seem from this account that there were now (1820) seven buildings in Winchester (if the Judge has mentioned them all).

Mr. Smith goes on, "The next frame house was in 1824–25, by David Haworth, which house was standing in 1871. It was on inlot No. 10, northeast square, where Jacob Elzroth lived so long, and where he died.

"Andrew Aker, in 1826 or 1827, built a frame house on inlot No. 8, north front, two stories, with a one-story store-room at the west end.

"In 1826–27, Abner Overman built a frame house on the northeast corner of lot No. 2, east front. He sold it to John Way in the fall of 1829, who moved into it, and started a blacksmith shop, and lived there the rest of his days. In 1823, Mrs. Mary Reeder bought inlot No. 2, west front, built a cabin and lived there some years. She then traded it off to Nathaniel Coffin, for inlot No. 12, southeast square, on which last lot she is still living. She (Mrs. Mary Reeder) is the "oldest inhabitant" of Winchester, having lived in it ever since, being (in 1881) fifty-nine years old. She was in the town seven years before I was, and ten years before Jesse Way.

"There were, I presume, other cabins and shanties put up in the town during this decade, but I cannot now call them to mind."

Thus far Mr. Smith.

Winchester would seem to have had an exceedingly slow growth, remarkably so, considering it was the seat of justice of a county containing at the start 200 voters, and increasing its population with considerable rapidity; considering, moreover, that for ten years not another town was even attempted within its limits.

Judge Smith appears to think that the dozen or so houses which he describes were nearly or quite all that had been built up to 1830. And information from several sources indicates that not more than a dozen families were residents of the town at the lapse of twelve years after the town had been platted. One jail and two court houses had been built. Court after court had been held; jurors had heard cases in the court house, and determined their verdicts seated upon the stumps and logs outside; lawyers and judges and clients had threaded and waded and swam their way through the primal woods to that frontier town; but lo! almost no town was there. But in those halcyon days small need was there of towns, people lived at home and made wellnigh every thing they used, and had little occasion to buy anything which they could not make. The larger portion of the settlers had come from the Carolinas, where towns were "few and far between," and what more need was here of such things?

EARLY BUSINESS.

Some facts as to the early business are as follows:

The first store was kept in Randolph County in November, 1818, by William Connor, an older brother of John Connor (mail-carrier), whose widow lived in Winchester until a short time ago. It was licensed by the Commissioner's Court held in November, 1818. and was kept in a log cabin on the north bank of the creek, on the southwest quarter of Section 10, Township 18, Range 14 (a little northwest of Old Snow Hill).

David Connor's Indian trading-post on the Mississinewa was older, but this of William Connor's was the first licensed mercantile house in the county. He paid $20 for his license, and had perhaps $200 worth of goods. Of David Connor and his trading-posts Mr. Smith says:

"David Connor, of Greenville, Ohio, established a little Indian trading-post on the little (?) Mississinewa near the present site of Allensville. When the war broke out he discontinued it. At the close of the war, or rather during its continuance, he moved farther down the river, and established his post where Lewallyn afterward settled and built his mill. Connor did not enter the land or make any improvement at either place. Meshach Lewallyn, then living seven miles north of where Richmond now is, moved out to Connor's trading-post, and Connor moved his post still farther down the river, nearer the Indians, to a point two miles below where the town of Wheeling now stands (Delaware County). After the treaty of 1818 (some years after), he made another move, following the Indians, and set his trading house near the boundary of the thirty-mile reserve and about three miles below the present site of Marion, where he died."

[NOTE.—Burkett Pierce, Arthur McKew, Robert Sumption, Thomas Ward, Edward Edger and others, do not agree with the above statement. They make his first location at Fort Recovery, his second two or three miles above Deerfield, his third below Wheeling, and his fourth and last below Marion, where he built mills and where he finally died. They say that he never had a post either at Allensville or Ridgeville, and, moreover, that he was at his station above Deerfield up to perhaps 1833, or afterward.

It will be seen that up to 1830, Winchester as a town was not much of a success. The business of the place was small, the buildings were few and poor, the roads leading to it were new and bad, the people needed but little trade, and all went thoroughly on the slow order. The court sat and did whatever there was for them; Charles Conway, as Clerk and Recorder, had all the county writing to do, which was not as much for the whole eleven years as has been since recorded in a single year. County offices were at a discount then. The Sheriff could not have done much, though he was Collector and Sheriff both, as the county tax for 1829 amounted to a sum less than $900. Jurymen came and returned without any bills to find or cases to try, and were paid the magnificent sum of 50 cents per day; and the Associate Judges maintained their dignity and satisfied their desires for food and lodging to the tune of $2 per day.

Winchester was a town in the woods, but for a long time there was decidedly more woods than town. It was an old saying by some odd specimen of humanity concerning a certain town, that "he could not see the city for the houses." But at Winchester he would have found no such difficulty. The houses were not in the way, the city was all in full view, the buildings were not near enough together to obstruct the vision in any direction. The trees, with their huge trunks and far-reaching branches, may have hindered the sight somewhat. Doubtless they did. But what of that? They were cut down and felled to the ground and reduced to ashes one by one, or else in vast heaps they formed a holocaust to the God of Fire, submitting helpless and palsy-smitten to his terrible power.

And gradually, too, but oh! how exceeding slowly, the town increased its fair proportions until, at last, we behold a city, goodly in size, bustling and thriving in its business, and successful in its prosperity.

Winchester has been hindered in its growth by the fact that Union City stands on the one side and Farmland on the other, but there is room for her also, and she shall make her victorious way through trial and struggle to assured renown during the days to come. There are those who affirm that Winchester, instead of Union City, might have been the original railroad center for the region. Possibly so. Some who are quick to find fault insist indeed that one prime cause of the slowness of growth of Winchester, is, that the capitalists of the place have not been sufficiently enterprising in investments for business of various kinds. One thing at least is true of the chief citizens of Winchester, which cannot be said of that class of persons in every town, that they are genial, estimable, reliable men, and the form of investment which any man shall adopt must be left to his own volition.

The judicious investment of capital in enterprises affording useful, honorable and remunerative employment to large numbers of people is, in fact, a great advantage to a town, and a great blessing to her people; and wealthy men who thus furnish such means of employment and useful industry are a bonefit alike to themselves and to the public.

OFFICIAL HISTORY.

[Much of this official history is from Hon. Jere Smith's manuscripts].

William Edwards, elected Associate Judge in 1818, was a younger brother of Jonathan Edwards, who located south of Winchester in 1818. He continued to be Judge some sixteen years; was Representative two or three times, and then moved to Illinois.

Charles Conway continued to be Clerk and Recorder three terms (twenty-one years). In 1832, he was strongly opposed by Daniel Worth, who was beaten. In 1839, he moved to Missouri. He was born in Pennsylvania. His father was in the northwestern army, and was killed in St. Clair's defeat. His mother then moved to Tennessee, where Charles was raised. He married there, and came here in 1814 or 1815. [Perhaps not so soon as that]. Mr. Smith says, "He was truly an honest man, which, the poet says, is the 'noblest work of God.'"

David Wright resigned as Sheriff, and the Coroner filled the term. David Wright soon died. He had three brothers—William, James and John B. David was the youngest of the four.

Solomon Wright, Coroner, was elected Sheriff in 1820 and 1822. Ten years afterward he moved to Grant County, and died long ago. The Solomon Wright now living in the county is another member of the Wright family.

Of the Commissioners, Eli Overman served two years, and was succeeded by John Wright (blacksmith). Eli moved to Grant County twelve or thirteen years afterward, and died there.

Benj. Cox served two years. He lived many years in the county. Overman and he were Friends. Cox was a preacher.

John James was Commissioner five or six terms, moved to Grant County and died many years ago. He was a Baptist.

1818, 1819.

The Commissioners met August, 1818. They accepted the Report of the locating Commissioners; appointed Paul W. Way Agent, and selected grand and petit jurors for the Circuit Court in October.

The grand jurors were John Ballinger, Jesse Roberts, William Diggs, Armsbee Diggs, John Way, Jonathan Edwards, Isaac Wright, William Wright, William Kennedy, Jesse Johnson, James Massey, Travis Adcock, William Way, Sr., Daniel Petty.

PETIT JURORS.

Paul W. Way, Samuel Lee, James Jacobs, William Way, Jr., Jonathan Heath, Jesse Green, Solomon Wright, Meshach Lewallyn, David Stout, Joshua Cox, Abraham Wright.

Some account in detail of these jurors: Jonathan Ballinger, foreman, died soon after. He was a resident of West River settlement.

William Diggs (then called old Billy Diggs) was father of Armsbee Diggs, also a juryman. William Diggs has been dead a long time. There is now a William Diggs, a very old man—not, however, that William Diggs, but his son—who is nearly ninety years old.

William Way, Sr., had also three sons on the same jury—Paul W., John and William, Jr. Old William lived to a great age, and died at Newport, Wayne County, (Fountain City) some years ago.

John Way lived and died in Winchester. His son, Jesse, still resides there.

Paul W. Way lived and died in Winchester. His children are all dead but his oldest son, William M. Way, who lives in Illinois, and his oldest daughter, Anna, the wife of Nathan Reed. [Mrs. Reed is dead]. Isaac and Jacob Wright, two of three who were triplets, emigrated West years ago.

William Kennedy lived southeast of Winchester and died about 1870.

James Massey was an old man, and died soon after. He lived in (Jackson or) Ward Township. His son-in-law, James Smith, was Commissioner two or three terms. His sons left the county early. One of them was Associate Judge of Grant County a term or two. [NOTE—A James Massey settled in Nettle Creek, who may have been the same man].

Jesse Roberts we can say nothing of.

Jonathan Edwards died a few years ago one mile south of Winchester.

Jesse Johnson lived and died a half-mile south of Lynn. He came to the county in 1817 (or sooner).

Travis Adcock lived in the south part of the county. He afterward had his name changed to Travis Emery. The residents near Lynn say Travis Adcock (Emery) removed to Iowa about 1837.

Daniel Petty lived on the Moorman Way place. In 1826 or 1827, he moved to Walnut Level, where he was living a few years ago.

Joshua Cox lived and died east of Winchester, where his sons, Andrew and Joel, still live (or did a few years ago).

Samuel Lee was an old man, and died in 1827.

Jonathan Heath we can give no account of.

Meshach Lewallyn was an old man, with a large family of sons and daughters. He lived at Ridgeville, and built a mill there. [Lewallyn seems to have been a resident of Randolph, August, 1817].

Mr. Smith says: "The Connor trading post, Lewallyn's mill, the building of pirogues and flatboats, the killing of two Indians, and the (somewhat frequent) 'mistakes' in killing hogs in the woods, constituted the chief interest in Ridgeville life in those days." Mr. Smith would seem to be in error as to the location of David Connor at Ridgeville.

James Jacobs there is no account of. Mr. Jacobs was a settler on the Mississinewa.

David Stout moved to Delaware County; built a mill on White River, and laid out Smithfield near his mill.

FIRST CIRCUIT COURT.

The first court was held at the house of William Way, October 12, 1818, Associate Judges Edwards and Wright. James Rariden was admitted to the bar and appointed Prosecuting Attorney. The grand jury were impaneled and discharged for lack of business with an allowance of 75 cents each.

The petit jury was not impaneled. The court allowed Mr. Rariden $12. There were no cases and the grand jury returned no indictments. Adjourned to the next term.

The second court was held May 7, 1819, at Charles Conway's house.

John A. Daly was admitted to the bar. James Rariden was made prosecutor.

Mr. Daly was the brother of George Daly, and the latter was the father of ex-Sheriff W. A. W. Daly, residing near Lynn.

Mr. Rariden is the same famous "Old Jim Rariden," so well known ever since.

GRAND JURORS FOR MAY, 1819.

John Wright (Hominy), Isaac Wright, David Stout, Joshua Cox, James Wright, William Haworth, John Wright (Bl.), James Massey, David Haworth, William Wright, Tence Massey, Armsbee Diggs, Jonathan Hiatt. Five of the above are Wrights. They found no bills, and were discharged the same day. No cases were pending in this court.

Third court, September 10, 1819. John Watts presiding Judge of the Third Circuit, and Associate Judges Edwards and Wright.

GRAND JURORS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1819.

Paul Beard, Benjamin Cox, John James, Paul W. Way, Meshach Lewallyn, Abram Peacock, William Blount, Travis Adcock, David Bowles, Thomas Parker, Ephraim Overman, Jr., John Cammack, Abner Overman, Isaac Wright, Jesse Cox, John Thomas, Jesse Ballinger. No bills were found; jury discharged same day. One case in court, an appeal from Esquire Moorman, Greensfork Township. Cause dismissed.

Up to the third term of court no trial, and but one judicial decision, viz., the dismission just named.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT—CONTINUED.

Board of Commissioners held second term at the house of Benjamin Cox, November 1818. Appointments: Jesse Johnson, County Treasurer, one year.

Overseers of Poor—Francis Frazier, John Thomas, Greensfork; John Way, John Wright, White River.

Constable—Jonathan Edwards, White River; Abner Overman, Greensfork.

Viewers—John Wright, William Diggs, Joshua Cox, White River; Joshua Wright, Isaac Kinley, David Bowles, Greensfork.

Superintendents School Section—William Hockett, Towns 18 and 19, Range 14; James Massey, Town 21, Range 14; John Way, Town 20, Range 14.

Board granted license to William Connor to sell merchandise one year—first store in county, Section 10, Town 18, Range 14 (between Snow Hill and Winchester). Special term held December 6, 1818, to let court house and jail (see Public Buildings).

Third regular session was held February, 1819. George Bowles was made Lister (Assessor) for the county.

Fourth term Commissioners' Court held May, 1819, George

Bowles made his report and was allowed $10 for assessing the county.

Levy on every horse, beast, etc., 25 cents. And this was all in 1819 (for county taxes).

Jesse Johnson, Treasurer, reported—Received taxes, $20; paid out, $20.

It were enough to make the heads of the present tax-ridden population whirl to think how different matters are now.

First road laid out May, 1819 (see Roads).

August, 1820, Commissioners organized all the territory northward, probably to the State line, into a township, calling it Wayne (see elsewhere).

November, 1819, Treasurer reported—Receipts, $260; expenditure, $259.75.

February, 1820, Abner Overman, Lister.

May, 1820, Lister reported.

Levy—Each three year old horse, 37½ cents; each house of entertainment, $10.

November 1820, Treasurer reported:

Revenue	$152 00
Lots sold	309 63
Fine	1 00	$462.63
Disbursements		437 08
On hand		25 55

As the law then stood, the Commissioners had to fix the rate of charges at licensed taverns. They did it thus:

Dieting (per meal)	25
Gin (half pint)	28
Brandy	25
Whisky (half pint)	12½
French Brandy	37½
Rum (half pint)	37½

First delinquent list had seventeen names; amount $11.50. Up to 1824, Sheriffs were ex-officio collectors. The county business was done by three Commissioners. But in 1825, the Board of Justices began, embracing every Justice in the county, service gratis. This board had to appoint a Collector each year.

February, 1825, John Coats, Justice, White River, was made President of the Board.

May, 1825—Present, Justices John Coats, White River; Geo. Ritenour, on Mississinewa River; David Moore, on West River; Joshua Wright, on Martinsdale Creek; David Vestal, on Stony Creek; Joseph Hall, on White River (crossing of Lynn road); David Frazier, Greensfork; Noah Johnson, S. Sample's Mill.

LEVY TAXES.

Poll, 50 cents; gold watch, $1; horse, 37½ cents; carriage, 50 cents; ox, 12½ cents; liquor license, $5; brass clock, 50 cents; foreign merchandise, $10; silver watch, 25 cents; town lots ($100), $1; covering horse, price of standing.

LAND.

One hundred acres (first quality), 25 cents; 100 acres (second quality), 20 cents; 100 acres (third quality), 15 cents.

Treasurer reported:

Liquor License	$10 00
Estrays	8 87½
Taxes, Collector	552 88¾	$556 51½
Disbursements		575 70
Due Treasurer		$ 9 19

May 1826, rates were changed: Tavern license, $3; meal, 18¾ cents; whisky, 6¼ cents; peach brandy, 12½ cents; rum or French brandy, 18¾ cents; horse (one gallon), 6¼ cents; horse, all night, 25 cents; lodging, 6¼ cents.

May, 1829. Levy—Covering horse, once-and-a-half the price; 100 acres of land, first quality, $1.20; 100 acres of land, second quality, 90 cents; 100 acres of land, third quality, 60 cents; ferry, $2; licensed store, $10; horse, 75 cents; ox, 37½ cents; town lot, 3 per cent; watch, silver, 43¾ cents; watch, gold, $1.50; Carriage, $2; brass clock, $1.50.

Treasurer's Report, 1829—Receipts, $817.49; disbursements, $826.93; balance due Treasurer, $9.44.

Thus, after twelve years, the annual county taxes fell shortof $1,000.

Now we have, one does not know how much—and in all more than $150,000. Then only a few things taxed, now everything!

Treasurer to 1824, Jesse Johnson; Treasurer to 1825–29, John B. Wright; Treasurer, 1829–30, James T. Liston.

The Sheriff was Collector, 1818–24.

Thomas Wright was Sheriff, 1825–27, and was appointed Collector also. But for 1828 he was not appointed.

Mr. Smith says (in substance) "I may be allowed to give the history of that matter.

"I came (for some reason) to Winchester, January 7, 1828. Board of Justices in session, only three present, Woodworth, Nelson, Willson. Esq. Nelson wished me to be collector; I told him 'No, I cannot give security;' he said, 'I will fix that.' 'Well, I will do it then,' said I.

"The board appointed me, and I was sworn in with David Heaston, John Nelson, and Charles Conway for my security. In May, 1828, I was elected Teacher at Richmond. I made my brother, Carey Smith, Deputy, and he did the collection, and I taught school nine months, being my first and last.

"Revenue collected, $804.38. Commission for collection, $40."

From 1818 to 1824, Commissioners were elected; 1825–30, Boards of Justices did the county business.

As the Justices got no pay for this service, their attendance was very irregular. They would come, for the most part, only when their neighborhood wished or needed something special, and then they would go home again. On one occasion the Sheriff had to go with a subpœna and compel the attendance of two Justices to form a quorum. Hence, after seven years, the Legislature of 1831, restored the Commissioners, and the county business has been done in that way ever since.

COURTS, 1820–30.

During this time, there was but one court of record, consisting of a Presiding Judge and two Associate Judges. The court could be held by the Presiding Judge alone, or by the Associate Judges alone, or, of course, by the Presiding Judge, with one or both Associates. But the Associates could try neither criminal nor chancery cases. The Associates did the probate business with a separate record.

Court, April, 1820, Edwards and Wright. One day Charles Conway took judgment by default against William Connor (store keeper) for $135, with interest at six per cent, from December 26, 1818, with costs and charges. The court did not compute the interest and add it in, but added this clause, "This execution is entitled to a credit of $1.50, from January 30, 1820."

This was the first judgment ever rendered in the Randolph Circuit Court, and it was one by the Associates, without a lawyer so far as appears. The judgment might have been considered void for uncertainty of amount. But no advantage was taken of the defect (if it were one). Jesse Johnson "stayed the execution" twelve months, and doubtless the amount was duly paid sixty-one years ago.

April, 1820. Solomon Wright, Sheriff. Grand Jurors—William Hunt, foreman, Henry Hill, James Massey, Daniel Petty, Ephraim Bowen, R. McIntyre, John Ballinger, Amos Peacock, Joshua Wright, Isaac Wright, Albert Banta, John Coats, Thomas Wright. No cases, discharged; 75 cents each. The next court was held at Charles Conway's, June, 1820. Court held two days, and had two cases. Grand Jury found one indictment, the first in the county. John P. Huddleston vs. William Frazier, affray.

October, 1820. Held in court house, one day, no case—no indictment.

April, 1821. Judges Eggleston, Edwards, Wright. Court

sat one day. Frazier was tried and acquitted. A chancery, a divorce and one appeal case were disposed of.

July, 1821. Associate Judges—two days, Bethuel F. Morris, Cyrus Finch and Isaac M. Johnson were admitted to the bar, and Morris was appointed Prosecutor.

He removed to Indianapolis shortly, and became the first Judge of the Indianapolis Circuit Court. He was the Judge at the trial at Pendleton (Falls Creek), of the white men convicted and hung for the murder of some Indians. And he is the Judge also, against whom some scribbler in a Philadelphia paper of that day perpetrated the monstrous tale that "went the rounds," to wit: "He (the writer) came to a hewed log building with a wooden chimney, raised a little above the mantel, and the hearth not filled in. He found a barefooted man sitting on the puncheon floor near the fire-place paring his nails. By and by a man came riding up with a deer's-skin hunting skirt on. The other man (the barefooted man) accosted the 'man on horseback' 'Well, Mr. Sheriff, have you got a jury?' 'Not quite, Judge, I have nine men caught and tied, and I'll soon have three more.'" This picture was intended for Pendleton Court House and Judge Morris, not so far out of the way for the court house, but a vile caricature of an able and upright Judge, by some Philadelphia upstart, prospecting in our far-off Indiana wilderness!

But to the court. Two cases, and Philip Hobaugh made proof of a pension claim.

October, 1821. No cases, no indictment.

April, 1822. One day, little business.

August, 1822. Judge Eggleston—two days, some business.

April, 1823. One day, three indictments. Charles H. Test, Lot Bloomfield, and Charles W. Ewing, were admitted to the bar. Test and Ewing both became Judges afterward.

August, 1823. Court sat two days. Martin M. Ray and William Steele admitted. Divorce (first one) granted. Huldah Way from her husband, Nathan Way.

November, 1823. Full bench, two days, three State cases, two civil suits.

February, 1824, one day, three cases. August 1824, full bench. Cyrus Finch was appointed Prosecutor; Josiah F. Polke admitted. Mr. Smith says: "I was at this court, and saw and heard my first criminal trial and conviction to the penitentiary. It was a somewhat peculiar case. David Banta had been indicted for hog-stealing, so-called, i. e., taking and killing a marked hog not his own. Cyrus Finch prosecuted and James Rariden defended. It was clearly proved that the hog was marked with a mark not his; that he took the hog home, cleaned, dressed and salted it. Judge Eggleston charged the jury that when he found by the mark that the hog was not his, the asportation of the hog completed the larceny, if he did that with the intent of appropriating it to his own use; and that, if the jury so found, they must bring him in guilty. The jury brought in this verdict:

"Guilty, as charged in the indictment. We do further find that the property has been restored, and do fine the defendant $3 and costs, and that he go to the State prison for one year."

Rariden gave notice of a motion for a new trial and arrest of judgment, reasons to be filed next morning.

Next morning Judge Eggleston asked Rariden, "Where is the prisoner?"

"I have not seen him."

"Call the prisoner."

The bailiff called at the door, "David Banta." three times. No answer. Rariden (sotto voce), "My client probably has some business in Ohio which he wants attended to just now." Some of the jurors had thought that, as the property had been restored, the parties should be quits. But the judge held that recovery of the property did not condone the offense, and gave judgment for $3 and costs, and one year in the State prison. But David was not there to pay the money, nor to go to prison, and he has not, to this day, come and done it, nor any part of it. That was the first conviction for felony in a Randolph court. But, though there was a conviction and a sentence, there has never been, to this day, an execution of the judgment."

August, 1824. Two days, some dozen cases. February, 1825, Edwards & Sample, Judges; Oliver H. Smith, Prosecutor. Five days, half-a-dozen cases. August, 1825, full bench, O. H. Smith, Prosecuting Attorney. Two days, four State cases, two civil cases. February, 1826, full bench. Two days, eight or ten cases. August, 1826. Amos Lane, Prosecutor, full bench. Three days, nine pages of record. Elijah Arnold's name appears for the first time on the record (to keep the peace). It appears often after this, for, perhaps, twenty-five years. He has been dead some years. He was a wild, troublesome, reckless man. He was reckoned to belong to a gang of counterfeiters, thieves, etc., with headquarters in the "fallen timber" in the south part of the county. Old residents of that region are full of tales of the reckless mischief of Arnold and his comrades in daring and crime. The gang was broken up after a long time.

Wilder Potter was also indicted for "mayhem." The first slander case was disposed of, defendant acquitted.

February, 1827. Two days, seven pages of record. August, 1827. Full bench, Test, Prosecutor. Wilder tried for mayhem, convicted, fine $5 and costs, Rariden, defense.

February, 1828. Full bench, two days, nine pages. Second slander suit, defendant found guilty. August, 1828. Full bench, two days, ten pages. February, 1829. Three days, fifteen pages; M. M. Ray, Prosecutor. Jere Smith first acted as Deputy Clerk that term, serving thus for ten or eleven years.

August, 1829. Three days, seventeen pages. John D. Vaughn, John S. Newman and Caleb B. Smith were admitted to the bar.

"At this term, my old friend, Conway," says Mr. Smith, "was tried for assault and battery. He owned the fact. 'I'll be punished,' said the old man,' 'if I didn't put him out.' Conway, however, was acquitted by the jury."

This brings the history of the courts up to 1830.

OFFICIALS, 1818–1830.

It may not be amiss to devote a chapter to the detailed official history of the county, up to the limit just named.

The commissioners were as follows:

Benj. Cox, 1818–20; Eli Overman, 1818–20; John James, 1818–24; John Wright, 1820–22; Zachariah Puckett, 1820–22; David Bowles, 1822–23; Daniel Blount, 1823–24; David Stout, 1823–24.

PRESIDENTS, BOARD JUSTICES.

John Coats, 1825–26; Samuel D. Woodworth, 1826–29; John Odle, 1828–31.

Justices, attending more or less, 1825–31:

George Ritenour, Wm. Hunt, Wm. Rowe, David Frazier, Wm. Massey, John Nelson, Noah Johnson, Jesse B. Wright, Geo. T. Willson, Isaac Barnes, Samuel Woodworth, Daniel B. Miller, John Odle, Curtis Voris, John Jones, David B. Semans, John Coats.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

William Edwards, 1818–34; John Wright, 1818–46.

SHERIFFS.

David Wright, 1818–19; Solomon Wright 1820–24; Thomas Wright, 1825–1827.

CLERK AND RECORDER.

Charles Conway, 1818–39.

TREASURERS (APPOINTED BY COMMISSIONERS).

Jesse Johnson, 1818–24; John B. Wright, 1825–29; James T. Liston, 1829–30.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

At a special term of Commissioners' Court, December 6, 1818, the building of a court house and jail was let—the first to Abner Overman for $254.50, the second to Albert Banta for $125—to be completed in eighteen months. The court house was to be 18x24, hewed log and two stories. The jail was to be 14x18 feet, of square hewed logs, thirteen inches on each face, floored above and below, and also a middle floor all of the same timber, two stories, each six feet high in the clear.

In October, 1820, the court house and jail were received by the Commissioners. There was no outer door to the lower story of the jail, but its only entrance was a trap-door from the upper story, and that was entered by a short flight of stairs and a door at the top of the stairs.

In 1826, the Commissioners thought the county needed a new court house, which was the truth. In July, 1826, Paul W. Way was appointed to let the contract for the new building, which he did, and it was finished in 1828.

The old log court house was sold (with the lot No. 7) in 1829 or 1830.

The public square, three and one-half acres, was cleared about 1820, by David Lasley, a young man who had lately come to the county. The timber was very heavy, sugar-tree, oak, beech, hickory, etc. Some of the trees were three or four feet through. He says it took him three or four days to get a hole in the woods large enough for the sun to shine on the ground. He did the job alone and it took him three and one-half months. He got $35 for the job, boarding himself and working often far into the night.

It was winter when he burned it, and there had come snow, and to burn it was almost impossible. He says that Moorman Way got $70 for putting new trees in the square, just twice as much as he got for taking the old ones off.

The original jail was still in use as a jail in 1846, and for years afterward (till 1856). That block-house jail was all Randolph had for thirty-six years.

The second court house did not prove a good job, and the Commissioners sold it, and from that time till 1877, Randolph County had no court house.

Some years before (1856) two buildings had been erected, one for a jail and one for county offices, brick, two stories. The courts were held in Ward's Hall, on the north side of the public square.

However, in 1875, the Commissioners, Thomas Clevinger, F. G. Morgan and Philip Barger, let the contract for a new court house to A. J. Campfield; architect, J. C. Johnson, Fremont, Ohio, for $73,000. The building was completed in 1877 without the changing of a single dollar in specifications or estimates. What may now seem strange, it was yet a fact, that very strong opposition was made to the measure and a fierce furor of denunciation took place, in so much that, when two of the Board, Messrs. Morgan and Clevinger, were presented as candidates for renomination by the Republican party, they were defeated because they had been guilty of contracting to build that said court house. But the court house was built nevertheless, and there it stands to-day, the pride and glory of the county, of its architect, and of the Commissioners who had back-bone enough to go forward and secure its construction. It is, indeed, a gem of beauty, a marvel of taste and elegance and of cheapness as well. A man might sooner be the architect of that edifice than be President of the United States, or King of England. A President may be only an ordinary man, and a king may be a dunce or a madman; but for such a building as that, only genius the most wonderful could conceive, and skill the most consummate could design and execute so beautiful and artistic a structure. It has been justly pronounced by good judges to be one of the finest buildings in the State.

One of the Commissioners has since said (and doubtless the others would say the same), that he is not sorry for the part he took in the transaction, and that if he had the thing to determine again he would do just as he did before.

Say what one will as to the time or manner of construction, none can deny that it is one of the most beautiful edifices in the whole land, and well worth the money it cost, and now stands an honor to the county to which it belongs.

It has been claimed since its erection, that two very serious draw-backs and defects exist—that it is not fire proof, and that no sufficient provision was made for heating the building.

If these things be true, they are indeed serious objections, and mistakes that should not have been committed.

The necessity of fire-proof arrangements for the security of the public records is, indeed, the grand, unanswerable, overwhelming reason for the construction of costly public buildings, and no expense should be spared which is really essential to the attainment of that end. And careless or defective flues are in a vast number of cases, the cause of the conflagrations that so often bring dismay, and widespread desolation upon the dwellers of the county.

The corner-stone of the new court house was laid in the presence of a crowd estimated at 8,000 people.

The following documents were deposited thereunder, viz.:

Copy of the Holy Bible.

Roll of officers and members of Winchester Lodge, No. 56, F. A. M.

Reports of Grand Masonic bodies, 1874–75.

Masonic Directory for Winchester.

Copy of each paper published in the county.

Copy of Winchester Patriot, first paper published in Randolph County, dated October, 1843.

Report of Superintendent of Winchester Schools, 1874.

Premium list of Randolph County Fair, 1875.

Names of Judges and officers of the Circuit Court.

Names of county officers and members of the bar.

Names of corporation of officers of Winchester.

Copy of Hon. John E. Neff's speech on the Civil History of Randolph County, delivered at the laying of the corner-stone.

Coins and medals.

Copy of contract for first court house.

Names of members of the Richmond Commandery and cornet band present.

Among others on the stand were David Wysong, who built the first court house; David Lasley, who cleared the public square of the native forest; and John Coats, who, at that time, was thought to be the oldest citizen of the county—eighty-eight years old.

Material—Stone, brick and iron.

Exterior—Stone, pressed brick and galvanized iron.

Mansard Roof—Slate.

Rooms—First floor as follows: Auditor's office, two rooms; Clerk's office, two rooms; Recorder's office, two rooms. Two iron stairways—one large, one small. A large hall lengthwise. A hall crosswise. Four iron doors at the ends of the halls. The halls have tile marble floors, black and white. Second floor as follows: A large hall opening into the various rooms. A large court room; several other rooms for various purposes.

Construction—Rubble stone foundation with various rubble stone walls along and across the basement; entrance, step-stone; walls, pressed brick, with cut stone finish; stairways and outer-doors, iron; cornice, dormer windows, etc., galvanized iron; deck-roofs, etc., tin; mansard roof, slate; framing timber, solid pine; floors and inside floor, ash; inner doors, pine; court room painted in frescoe.

Cost (without heating) $73,000; compensation of architect, three per cent; cost of heating apparatus, $4,900.

NEW JAIL.

The Commissioners are now (March, 1881) making provision and arrangements for the construction of a new jail, at a cost of between $30,000 and $40,000. They have purchased of Martin A. Reeder, south of the Franklin House, on the east side of Main street, a lot for $1,200, and the intention is to proceed to the erection of the building during the present summer, and the expectation is, that it will be substantially and thoroughly built with modern methods of strength and security for the detention and safe keeping of the persons confined within its walls, not to the neglect, however, of their health and bodily comfort. The following are (in substance) the specifications for its construction:

Thomas M. Browne

At the April session, 1881, the building of the jail (and Sheriff's dwelling) was let to A. G. Campfield, contractor, according to specifications by Hodson, Architect, to be completed by December, 1881.

Cost of building, $34,500; compensation of architect, three per cent; dimensions of jail, forty-five by fifty-eight feet; sheriff's residence, fifty-four by twenty-nine and a half feet; foundation, rubble work; prison floors, stone flagging; mansard roof, covered with slate; prison proper, iron cells with passageway seven feet wide all around them inside the outer walls, and a central hall nine feet wide; cornices, chimney-caps, etc., galvanized iron; glass, AA double strength; windows, grated with heavy twisted and riveted iron bars. Upper tier of cells reached by corridors, extending from the stair-cases in the hall, between the jail and the Sheriff's residence. The hospital is over the jail proper, in the second story (in the mansard roof), the lower story being sixteen feet high and including both tiers of prison cells. The cells open into the inner hall, and have grated unglazed openings for light, heat and ventilation. The hospital department contains a hospital room and two or three bed-rooms, besides some others.

The sheriff's residence has three stories (with the roof). On the first floor are sitting room, kitchen, parlor, office, hall and stairway, and two other small rooms for no special purpose. On the second floor are two large rooms and two small rooms, the juvenile and the female departments, each of the latter two having two cells apiece, and a larger room to each department. The whole building is to be heated by steam from the court house engine, 400 feet away. Great improvements, so reckoned, and great expense as well, in jail construction, have been made since the days of the hewed log jail built in 1819.

Then, log jails at a cost of $100 or less were strong enough to hold the rogues of that day; now, whether a jail built wholly of iron will hold the villains of the present time remains yet to be tried.

The old adage is, "The world grows wiser and wickeder," and many believe the saying to be the truth. It is, at least, the fact that the shrewdness displayed, both in the commission of crime and the evasion of its penalty, is perfectly amazing. The building is now (July, 1882) completed and in use. The heating from the court house proved a failure. A separate engine for the jail is now employed.

SUPPORT OF POOR.

Some provision was made in the first days of the state for the poor. For many years, however, there was no County Asylum. Thirty years probably elapsed before Randolph County did more than to give outside aid, or to "hire out" or to "bind out" paupers or pauper children. One curious fact appears, that for some years a man was paid for keeping his own mother as a pauper. After that she was "sold out" to another party, who would keep her cheaper than her own son would do it.

Overseers were appointed by law to attend to the poor and afford needful help. The law required these officers to "farm out" such as were paupers, on the first Monday in May, allowing, however, the money to be paid, when judged proper, to the pauper himself; and required them, also, to "bind out" all paupers (females) under eighteen and (males) under twenty-one years of age. Some instances occur in the record of "farming out" at a very low price, which, however, room for insertion is lacking.

COUNTY INFIRMARY.

Some time previous to 1851, the Commissioners purchased a tract of land two miles southeast of Winchester, on the Lynn pike, for a Poor Farm. A dwelling was on the premises, which for a time was occupied for a Poor House. In March, 1852, William Fitzgerald was as (also he had previously been) employed as Superintendent of the Poor House, as follows: $400 a year, quarterly, in county orders, including food and lodging for himself and family; the family to give all their services, except when "the five younger children" were in school during the winter season. Before that date two reports are on file, showing the personal property of the county at the Poor House to be about $800 and $900 respectively.

In July, 1852, a County Poor Asylum was put under contract, to be completed by December, 1852; contractor, Joseph Johnson. Dimensions, 65x40 feet, 12 feet high, 16 rooms below, hall 12 feet wide lengthwise the building, and another hall 7 feet wide the other way, with rooms also above. Cost, $1,750. This building was burned down in a few years and another one was erected not long after, which is now standing. The first was built of wood but the second is of brick, having two stories. It is large and commodious, being reasonably adapted to its purposes.

The cost of maintaining the poor at the Poor Asylum and otherwise during the years 1868, 1877 and 1880, is given below: 1868 (year ending May 31), $1,369.57 (probably excluding Superintendent's salary); 1877, $4,415.99; 1881, $5,998.22. One would suppose there must be some error in the statement of cost of maintaining the poor for 1868. We give it, however, as set down in the annual exhibit for that year, as spread upon the Commissioners' record at the time.

SUPERINTENDENTS' POOR ASYLUM.

William H. Fitzgerald, from beginning to 1855; Simon Gray, from 1855 to 1857; Jeremiah Cox, from 1857 to 1859; Thomas McConochay, from 1859 to 1861; Elias Kizer, from 1861 to 1866; Jonathan Edwards, from 1866 to 1869; Amos Hall, from 1869 to 1878; Madison Hill, from 1878 to 1879; Amos Hall, from 1879 to 1882.

TOWNSHIPS—ORGANIZATION.

GREENSFORK TOWNSHIP

was organized in 1818 by David Wright, Sheriff, appointed by Gov. Jennings for that purpose. It included the whole southern half of the county. The north line of the township was a line one mile south of the line between Townships 19 and 20. The northwest part of Greensfork for one and a half miles reaches that line still. The north line of the rest of the township is one mile farther south. This division remained during 1818 and 1819. November, 1819, West River was erected, including "all that part of Greensfork lying west of the west line of Section 16, Township 18, Range 14." This line is two and one-half miles west of the present west line of Green's Fork Township. Washington was afterward formed on the west, taking off two and a half miles, and Wayne on the north, taking one mile on the north (except for one and a half miles) in the northwest quarter of Greensfork, leaving that township as at present.

WHITE RIVER TOWNSHIP

was created in 1818 by David Wright, Sheriff, before the organization of the county and preparatory thereto. It included the whole of the county north of the line between Greensfork and White River as above stated.

[NOTE.—The county at that time itself extended only west and north to the outer boundary of the twelve-mile strip, commonly called the "new boundary."]

August, 1820, Ward Township was formed, taking all that part of White River north of the line between Townships 20 and 21, leaving White River on the north line as it is now. About this time (1820), the boundaries of the county had been enlarged to take in what it includes at present west of the twelve-mile boundary and Delaware County, and Grant County and all the State northward from Randolph County were attached thereto for temporary judicial purposes. Liberty Township (now in Delaware County), was erected in 1825. Delaware was made a separate county in 1827, and Grant in 1831.

Stony Creek was set off July, 1826, embracing at first Townships 19, 20 and 21, Range 12, and perhaps the north half of Township 18. Green and Monroe were afterward formed, and the boundary of Stony Creek moved one mile eastward, making White River stand as it now does.

WARD TOWNSHIP

was created August, 1820, and included all the county north of the line between Sections 20 and 21, to wit: All the present townships of Jackson, Ward, Franklin and Green (if the boundaries of the county had then been extended to its present limits, which is probable.) In fact, the general formation of counties in (this part of) the purchase of 1818, and the final establishment of the bounds of Randolph County were made by the Legislature at the session commencing December, 1819.

The other three townships were cut off subsequently, leaving to Ward its present limits.

STONY CREEK TOWNSHIP

was created July, 1826. It embraced Townships 19, 20 and 21, Range 12 (and, one would suppose), the north half of Township 18. Liberty Township, including perhaps Delaware County, had been formed on the west side of what is now Randolph, in 1825, and Stony Creek embraced the entire west side of Randolph County. It then included (probably) all of Nettle Creek Township, the most of Stony Creek and the larger western parts of Monroe and Green. Nettle Creek, Monroe and Green were in due time created with their prescribed limits. The limits of Stony Creek were also enlarged on the east by taking a mile from White River, and thus Stony Creek became as she stands at the present writing.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP (NORTH).

NOTE 1.—In August, 1820 (at the same time that Ward was cut off from White River), a township was created, extending northward indefinitely from (probably) the present north line of the county, perhaps to the north end of the State, and named Wayne Township. Mr. Smith says: "The Commissioners appointed the place of election at the house of Dr. William Turner, at Fort Wayne. They made Ezra Taylor Inspector, and directed an election to be held for the choice of two Justices and one Constable." This territory (as we think), was wholly outside what is now Randolph County.

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP (DELAWARE COUNTY).

NOTE 2.—As to "Liberty Township" Mr. Smith writes:

"In the May term of 1825, David Rowe was allowed $1.50 for making return of the election of two Justices of Liberty Township. From this and from my recollection, I can say that in January, 1825, either the whole or the east part of Delaware County was made into Liberty Township. The township containing Smithfield is still called Liberty. And as Daniel Stout had been County Commissioner in Randolph, and had moved to what is now Delaware County, built a mill and laid out Smithfield, I presume he had that county erected into Liberty Township. There were but few inhabitants in that region, and David Rowe, who brought the election returns, lived pretty well up on Prairie Creek, at least six miles from Smithfield. Also, May, 1826, John J. Deeds, who had settled on White River and built a mill above Smithfield, was appointed Supervisor on the West Fork of White River from the mouth of Cabin Creek to Mont-see-town, as the Indians called it. Hence "Mont-see-town" was then (May, 1826) in Liberty Township and in Randolph County as well."

John Sample was at the same time made supervisor on West Fork of White River from Sampletown to the mouth of Creek. It should be stated that the Legislature had declared the West Fork of White River to be a navigable stream, and had ordered it to be worked as such. Thus, up to 1830, the townships stood as stated below:

Greensfork, 1818; Ward, 1820; White River, 1818; Stony Creek, 1826; Wayne (outside, north), 1820; Liberty (outside, west), 1825.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP, 1831.

Was erected at the term in May, 1831, beginning at the corner between Sections 14 and 15, Township 18, Range 14; thence north eight miles; then west seven miles; thence south eight miles; thence east seven miles to the place of beginning.

The line between Washington and West River was then exactly through Huntsville north and south, and the line between Greensfork and Washington was half a mile west of the present line.

In September, 1834, half a mile was taken from the west side of Greensfork and attached to the east side of Washington.

West River was created at the same time (1881) and extended to the Delaware line. It embraced all west of the west line of Washington Township, i. e., the west half of the present township of West River, westward from a line north and south through Huntsville, all of Nettle Creek Township and two miles at the south end of the present Stony Creek Township.

WEST RIVER TOWNSHIP, 1831.

Was first formed May, 1831, embracing at that time all west of Huntsville, and eight miles from north to south, including thus the west part of West River, all of Nettle Creek and two miles at the south end of the present Stony Creek Township.

In January, 1835, West River Township was made to be thus: Beginning at the southwest corner of Township 19, Range 13, and extending northward seven miles, and four miles eastward, the east line being one mile west of the present line of West River.

Afterward one mile was taken from the west side of Washington and attached to the east side of West River, making West River and Washington as at present.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP, 1833.

Was first laid out by the Commissioners at the November term, 1833. The bounds of the township at first were all of what is now Jackson and Wayne Townships. But in September, 1838, Wayne Township was cut off from Jackson, leaving Jackson, Greensfork and Wayne as they are at present.

Before that (September, 1834) half a mile was taken from the west side of Greensfork, and attached to the east side of Washington.

GREEN TOWNSHIP, 1834.

Was created in January, 1834, embracing its present limits and two and a half miles of what is now the north part of Monroe. Afterward Monroe was formed from parts of Green and Stony Creek, leaving Green as it now appears on the map.

NETTLE CREEK TOWNSHIP, 1835.

Was created January, 1835, lying in Range 12, and extending seven miles north from the Wayne County line, and including one mile at the south end of what is now Stony Creek. Afterward (probably when Monroe was formed) one mile was given to Stony Creek from the north end of Nettle Creek, making Stony Creek to stand as it now does.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP, 1838.

Was formed September, 1838, being cut off from the south end of Jackson Township, and leaving Jackson as it now stands.

MONROE TOWNSHIP.

Was in existence in 1851 and must have been created before that time. It was formed by taking parts of Stony Creek and Green Townships, and Stony Creek was extended southward by taking two miles from the north end of Nettle Creek Township.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP, 1859.

Was created with its present limits, in June, 1859, being cut from the west side of Ward Township, leaving Ward as it is found at the present time, Franklin being the last township formed in the county.

UNION TOWNSHIP, 1838.

Union Township was created by the Commissioners in March, 1838, four miles square, at the north end of West River, leaving West River four miles square. A remonstrance was afterward presented against the formation of Union Township, and it is to be presumed that the township was dissolved asi t is not now in existence, though no record has been found of such action on the books of the Commissioners.

Union Township included the village of Unionsport. Why action was taken for so small a township, and what was to be done with the remainder of West River, deponent saith not. Both Union and West River were far too small. The name, Union, would seem to indicate some connection between the formation of the new township and the "community" movement which established Unionsport Village about that time.

SALAMONIE TOWNSHIP, 1834.

Salamonie Township (Jay County), was erected by the Randolph Commissioners September, 1834, embracing all of Jay County (then a part of Randolph). Jay County was formed by the Legislature shortly afterward. Allen County had been laid off before and Blackford was made a few years later.

MADISON TOWNSHIP.

Madison Township (Jay County), was erected in May, 1835, embracing five miles on the east side of Jay County. Jay County was afterward organized, including Salamonie and Madison Townships.

CREATION OF TOWNSHIPS, 1818–1859.

Greensfork, formed 1818, brought to present form, 1834.
White River, formed 1818.
Ward, formed 1820, brought to present form 1859.
Stony Creek, formed 1826.
Washington, formed 1831.
West River, formed 1831.
Jackson, formed 1833, present form 1838.
Green, formed 1830.
Nettle Creek, formed 1835.
Wayne, formed 1838, in its present form.
Monroe, formed before 1850.
Franklin, formed 1859, in its present form.
Union, formed 1838, remonstrance, organization dropped.
Wayne (northern regions), 1820.
Liberty (Delaware), 1825.
Salamonie (Jay), 1834.
Madison (Jay), 1835.

TOWNSHIPS AS NOW LOCATED.

On the north side of the County are four townships, making a strip across the north side of six miles wide, except Green, which is four and one-half miles wide. They are arranged thus, reckoning from the west:

Green, six and one-half miles east and west and four and one-half miles north and south.

Franklin, six miles north and south and four miles east and west.

Ward, six miles square.

Jackson, six miles north and south and about five and one-eight miles east and west.

On the south side of the county are four townships, bounded on the north by an irregular line, with location and size as follows, beginning at the east side of the county:

Greensfork, six and one-eighth miles from east to west and about seven miles from north to south, with a corner in the northwestern part, one mile north and south and one-half mile east and west.

Washington, eight miles from north to south and five and one-half miles from east to west.

West River, eight miles from north to south and five miles from east to west.

Nettle Creek, seven miles from north to south and four and five-eighths miles from east to west.

Through the middle of the county are four townships as follows, beginning at the east:

Wayne, five miles from north to south and about five and one-eighth miles from east to west.

White River, seven miles from north to south and ten miles from east to west, and also a strip at the southwest four miles from north to south and one mile from east to west.

Monroe, four and one-half miles from north to south and six and five-eighths miles from east to west.

Stony Creek, five miles from north to south and five and five-eighths miles from east to west, excepting one square mile in the southeast corner.

Area of townships: Green, 30 square miles, 19,200 acres; Franklin, 24 square miles, 15,360 acres; Ward, 36 square miles, 23,040 acres; Jackson, 30¾ square miles, 19,680 acres; Wayne, 41 square miles, 26,240 acres: White River, 74 square miles, 47,360 acres; Monroe, 30 square miles, 19,200 acres; Stony Creek, 27⅛ square miles, 17,360 acres; Nettle Creek, 32⅜ square miles, 20,720 acres; West River, 40 square miles, 25,600 acres; Washington, 44 square miles, 27,560 acres; Greensfork, 47⅛ square miles, 30,160 acres. Total area of county, 457⅛ square miles, 292,480 acres (approximation).

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

There were, at first, no roads. Every man picked his way according to his own fancy, as a hunter roams through the woods. The earliest regular track, perhaps, through the Randolph forest of any considerable length, was the "Quaker Trace," opened by the settlers of Richmond and vicinity, to get an outlet to Fort Wayne for trade with the Indians.

Squire Bowen says: "The 'Quaker Trace' was begun in 1817. James Clark and twenty-five or thirty others took three wagons with provisions and a surveyor with his compass and chain and measured distances and blazed trees and marked mile trees, cutting out the road wide enough for a wagon to pass. They wound around ponds and big logs and trees, and quagmires, forded the Mississinewa and the Wabash, and so on to Fort Wayne. James Bowen went as one of the company twenty-five miles to beyond the Mississinewa Crossing, till one wagon load had been used up. That team returned, and James came back with them. The route passed through Arba, Spartansburg, Bartonia, South Salem, (west of) Union City, through Mount Holly, through Allensville, crossing the Mississinewa just north of that place, through North Salem, and crossing the Wabash at Jay City, Jay County, near Corydon. There was but one house between (what is now) Dan Comer's, one mile north of Spartansburg and Fort Wayne, viz., at Thomson's Prairie, eight miles north of the Wabash."

This road or trace was, for a long time, a famous thoroughfare, being known far and near, and it obtained much travel. Most of it came to be at length a public highway, and much of it remains so to this day. Except the "Quaker Trace," there were, up to May, 1819, no regular traveled roads. There were simply blazed paths, or tracks haphazard through the woods wherever a settler might happen to go.

FIRST ROADS.

At the session of the Board of County Commissioners, held May, 1819, Jesse Johnson and others, residents of the south part of the county, petitioned for a road as follows:

Beginning at Winchester, thence the nearest and best way to go between Jesse Johnson's and Paul Beard's, thence the nearest and best way to the county line at the southwest corner of Section 14, Township 18, Range 14. The petition was granted and the road was laid. It took chiefly the route now the Winchester and Lynn pike and southward to the county line.

The second road was from Winchester west to the boundary, August, 1819.

The third road was ordered at the same time, August, 1819, from Winchester through Bloomingport to Wayne County line.

The fourth road was the extension of the "Lawrenceburg road" from the house of Ephraim Overman to that of William Yates (August, 1819) [the road through Arba northward]. William Yates entered the north half, Section 9, Township 16, Range 1, northwest of Spartansburg.

The fifth road was from West River settlement to Winchester, August, 1819.

The sixth road was from Economy to Huntsville.

The seventh road (February, 1820) was from Winchester to Fort Recovery. This road is not now in use.

The eighth road (May, 1820), was from Winchester to John Foster's (Griffis farm). This afterward became substantially the State road to Muncie, Indianapolis, etc., the route, however, being somewhat changed.

[NOTE.—The John Foster or Griffis farm, on Sections 25, Town 17, Range 1, Wayne Township, was entered in 1817 by Chenowith].

The ninth road (May, 1820), was from Sample's Mill to Huntsville. [Sample's Mill was on White River west of Winchester, somewhat east of the "twelve mile boundary]."

The tenth road (August, 1820), was laid out from Winchester to Ridgeville.

[NOTE—The County Records of 1821–25 are mostly lost.]

The next road on record (call it the eleventh) is from Sample's Mill to Lewallyn's Mill (Ridgeville), May, 1825.

The twelfth road (May, 1825) was from southeast corner Section 35, Township 16, Range 1 west, to Obadiah Small's. The point of beginning is on the county line two miles east of Arba, and Obadiah Small owned the land that Spartansburg now stands on. This road is thought to be the one now running from Bethel, Wayne County, by "Pinhook," Charles Crist's, and Jeremiah Middleton's to Spartansburg.

The thirteenth road was from the State line north of Union City to Ridgeville, via Deerfield.

The fourteenth road was from (the direction of) Dalton through Losantville to Windsor.

The fifteenth road (November, 1827) was from the Winchester and Lynn road, west through Bloomingsport to Huntsville.

The sixteenth road was (September, 1828) from Huntsville, by Hunt's, Rook's and Vestal's to the county line west of Vestal's house.

The "Quaker Trace" began to be worked in 1825–28, and much of it is worked and traveled still.

January, 1830, a road was laid from the west end of Hockett's lane to the Wayne County line, at the southeast corner of "Martindale's Deadening." A wonderfully, clear and exact description. The settlers knew where the "road" was as easily as the "boy knew his daddy."

March, 1831. From John Moorman's, via Arba to Ohio State line.

May, 1831. Road from the southwest corner of Samuel Smith's fence to the crossway south of Jackson's, thence to the new road at the north end of William Smith's lane. (Another description worthy of special notice).

September, 1831. Cartway laid from Winchester across the ford of White River to Lewallyn's mill.

September, 1832. State road from Winchester to Newcastle.

May, 1833. Richmond and Fort Wayne State Road.

May, 1833. State Road from (toward) Greenville, Ohio, via Ridgeville and Fairview to Saunders' in Delaware County.

May, 1839. State Road from Winchester via Ridgeville and Camden to Bluffton, Wells County.

May, 1839. State road from Cambridge to Fort Wayne,

March, 1845. State road from Huntsville through Unionsport, Macksville and Fairview into Jay County.

March, 1845. State road from Deerfield through Steubenville and Fairview to Granville, Delaware County.

Doubtless many roads have been laid at some time or other not herein mentioned. Enough are named to give a general idea of the system of highways established and maintained by the county for the use of the citizens.

These roads, laid out, as we have said, by public authority, were opened and worked to some extent, yet for a long time most of them were but poor indeed. The trees were cut away somewhat, a few bridges were made, and log ways were built in some places, yet for the most part they were horrid enough. David Lasley relates in his "reminiscences" how he (with another man) built three-quarters of a mile of "log-way" on the road west of Winchester. As late as 1859 there was one and a quarter miles of log-way, nearly in one "string," north between Winchester and Deerfield. Often logs a foot or eighteen inches through would be laid down and sometimes absolutely nothing on them, and the wagon had to go "bumping" across that continuous log-heap. Each new road would be divided into districts an overseer appointed, and "hands" given him for his "gang" to open and work the highway, e. g., Francis Frazier (bellmaker, east of Lynn), James Wright and William Hockett, were appointed to mark and lay off the road leading through Lynn, which they did. Albert Banta claimed damages, and John Ballinger, John Way, William Haworth, Joshua Cox and Henry Hill were chosen to consider and assess damages. They reported "no damage." The road was laid, and Paul Beard was made Supervisor of the south end and John Elzroth of the north end. Beard had all the east part Greensfork Township (in the south end of the county) for his district, and Elzroth had all the north end for his, east of Sugar Creek.

Paul Beard was a physician, and was called "Old Dr. Beard," being the grandfather of Elkanah Beard, and he lived southeast of Lynn.

John Elzroth lived near the "Poor Farm." After residing in Randolph a long time he moved to the "Reserve," in Grant County. In 1871 he came back by rail to Deerfield, and on foot to Winchester, hale and hearty, then eighty years old. He was an older brother of Jacob Elzroth, so long a magistrate in Winchester.

[NOTE.—Either he or a brother of his died June, 1880, at Crawfordsville Ind., aged ninety-four years. He was in Randolph County on a visit five weeks before his death, being then hale and sprightly].

Dr. Beard's district was eight miles long and about four miles wide, with thirty-two sections and perhaps thirty road-hands, and nine miles of road to open and work.

Mr. Elzroth's district was nine to ten miles long and seven miles wide, containing sixty-six section and about forty hands and four and a half miles of road.

All males from eighteen to fifty years had to work two days each per year, and that was all the road tax there was. Hands could be hired from 25 to 50 cents a day. Mr. Smith says:

'How does that look by the side of the road-taxes now (leaving out pikes and railroads)."

And it may be added, how did the "bridle paths" and "log-ways," "pole bridges" and "mud-beds" then compare with the roads now. It must be confessed that, even now, road work is often laid out to poor advantage. A better method of highway labor is sadly needed.

For the second road (west from Winchester) Judge John Wright was made Supervisor, with all the hands in White River Township west of Sugar Creek and south of White River.

On the third road (Winchester to Bloomingport) is a point of some interest, Joseph Gass'. Mr. Smith says: "His house stood on the north side of a brushy prairie in Section 29, Town 19, Range 14, some three miles north of Bloomingport. He built there in early days on the main Indian trail between Muncie (an Indian town at that time) to Greenville. where the Indian annuities were paid from Wayne's treaty in 1795 to 1815 or 1816, at which time the place of payment was changed from Greenville to Fort Wayne. The Indians traveled from Muncie (which they called Mont-see-town) up White River on the south side till they crossed Prairie Creek at its mouth. They then took a "bee-line" for Greenville, which none but an Indian can do. The trail passed north of Huntsville and Spartansburg, and was about as straight as a surveyor could have made it. The trace was quite a plain one and was much traveled even by whites in those days.

Joseph Gass was a brother of the Gass who went with Lewis and Clark across the continent to the mouth of the Columbia River (1805–07), and who published a journal which he kept on that expedition. Joseph Gass built and settled on that trace at that point when there was no white settler from six miles west of Greenville to "Mont-see-town," and he lodged travelers who passed on that trace, and hence his house was a noted place to mention on the route of that road. Mr. Smith says he had often seen him and the house he built there.

The town of Springboro was afterward laid out February 15, 1834, at the point where Joseph Gass lived, but the town was not a success, and it is now extinct.

[NOTE.—Jesse Way says Joseph Gass's was not on the "Indian trail" but considerbaly south of it.]

Mr. Gass probably settled there before he entered his land. He was there when the "Way company" came through from Carolina to White River, March, 1817. But the date of his land entry is August 11, 1817. How much earlier than March, 1817, Mr. Gass settled at that place we are not able to state. He seems to have been one of that enterprising class quite common in those days, whose activity took the form of trading with the Indians, which perhaps might have been well enough except that it often included the practice of selling strong drink to the poor red men. That business, whether among white men or Indians, however lucrative it may be to the trader, brings evil and only evil to him who uses the fearful fluid. And as now, so of old, the traffic in strong drinks was one great source of trouble between the settlers and the savages. A sober Indian was commonly peaceable but a drunken savage was an object of fear and dread.

However, in those days, the manufacture of intoxicating liquors and the traffic in them was not regarded as otherwise than proper and honorable.

The fourth road (north from Arba) was viewed by Ephraim Bowen, Ephraim Overman, Jr., and David Bowles; and Jonathan Small was made Supervisor, with all the hands on Nolan's Fork and Greenville Creek to work the road. Lawrenceburg, at the mouth of the Great Miami was then expected to be "the town" on the Ohio, and roads had been extended (among others) up White River, past Richmond, to Randolph County line, and it was called the "Lawrenceburg road."

Of the eighth road (May, 1820, State line to Winchester), Mr. Smith says:

"In May, 1820, Viewers were appointed to mark out a road from Winchester to the State line, near Foster's (Griffis farm). The road was reported and established in August, 1820. John Coates was made Supervisor from Winchester to the ford of White River, and Amos Peacock from White River to the State line. In 1822 or 1823 the Legislature authorized the laying of a State road from the State line near Foster's, through Winchester to Indianapolis. Joshua Foster, John Sample and John Way were appointed Commissioners to lay the road. They took Paul W. Way for their surveyor, and started from Foster's to run to Winchester. But they ran too much south, so they made a "bend" to the north before reaching White River. But being still too far south they veered again northward, west of George Hyatt's, and came in at the end of Broad (now Washington) street and ran on that street through Winchester. Then diverging to the south till they got opposite (west of) the middle of the public square in Winchester, they struck west on the route of the present State road (Pike now) to the west side of the county. Thence down White River (south side) to Old Town (Indian town) six miles above Muncie, thence down the river by Anderson, Strawtown, etc., to Indianapolis. The county road from the State line west to Winchester was merged in this State road." Again Mr. Smith says (of the thirteenth road above): "September, 1825, a road was reported beginning at the Greenville road northwest from Greenville (Connor's old trace to his trading post) by Daniel B. Miller's to Lewallyn's Mill. This was not opened and worked till 1832. February 2, 1832, the Legislature passed an act appointing Daniel B. Miller Commissioner to lay out a State road from the State line (same point as the thirteenth road) to Parson's Mill, thence to Lewallyn's Mill, thence to intersect the Miamisport road, near Sanders', in Delaware County. Judge Miller appointed me his surveyor, and in August or September, 1832, we began the survey.

We started where Connor's trace crossed the State line, a little north of Union City, went nearly straight to the east side of Deerfield, thence to Parsons' Mill, half mile below Deerfield, thence to Lewallyn's Mill, near Ridgeville, thence onward beyond Emmettsville, keeping in a straight line to Sanders' in Delaware County, passing north of Fairview. The county road from the State line to Lewallyn's Mill was merged in this State road. The road remains substantially as we laid it out, having on it Middletown, Deerfield, Ridgeville and Emmettsville."

Of the "Quaker Trace" Mr. Smith says (among other things): "One Baker settled at the Wabash Crossing and kept entertainment many years, as also a canoe for crossing the river. It was a prominent point for a long time." A Mr. Storms settled very early near the Mississinewa Crossing. But at first and for some years there were none anywhere on the route except a single house on Thomson's Prairie, as already stated.

[NOTE Mr. Smith says the "Quaker Trace" was opened in 1818 or 1819. The Bowens say in 1817; which date is correct we do not know. The Bowens are more likely to be right, since they lived on the route, and one of them helped to make the "trace."

BRIDGES.

Probably at first the large streams was crossed by fords.

The first road (through Lynn) crossed White River in its upper course about a mile north of (old) Snow Hill, and the East Branch of Green's Fork, south of Lynn. The road west to Windsor crossed Cabin Creek near Solomon Wright's, and Stony Creek east of Windsor. The road north toward Deerfield crossed White River north of Winchester, and Mississinewa north of Deerfield.

The State road from Greenville to Winchester crossed Greenville Creek east of Bartonia, and White River east of Nathaniel Kemp's.

The road from Losantville to Windsor would probably cross Little White River.

The large bridges (if any were built) would needs be in the north part of the county, since the large streams were all there.

There are now several large bridges, some of which are of iron. A bridge crosses the Mississinewa in connection with the Allensville pike running north. Another one is south of New Pittsburg. There is one north of Deerfield, one at Ridgeville and one at Fairview, besides one or two between the two places last named.

There is a bridge across White River east of Winchester, and one on each of the pikes leading thence to Union City, one across White River northwest of Winchester, one still west of that, one south of Farmland, and one near Parker. There is a large bridge across Stony Creek east of Windsor on the Winchester Pike. There are, of course, bridges innumerable across the several creeks that course through the county in various directions.

Some of the streams are still crossed by fords, as Cabin Creek just west of Unionsport, Greenville Creek northeast of Bartonia (between Elihu Cammack's and William Macy's), Salt Creek northwest of Winchester, Mississinewa east of Ridgeville, and perhaps many other places.

BRIDGES IN RANDOLPH COUNTY.

Iron bridge at Fairview, across Mississinewa River, old, Section 4, 21, 12, not substantial.

Iron bridge at Ridgeville, Section 12, 21, 12.

Iron bridge over White River, near Stephen Moorman's, on the line between 15 and 16, 20, 13.

Bridge south of Farmland, over White River, between 19, 20, 13 and 24, 20, 12.

Bridge south of Parker, 29, 20, 12, over White River.

Bridge north of Deerfield, over Mississinewa, between 8 and 9, 21, 14.

Bridge west of Ridgeville, over Mississinewa, between 10 and 11, 21, 13.

Bridge north of Allensville, over Mississinewa, between 9 and 10, 21, 15.

Bridge south of Pittsburg, over Mississinewa, between 12, 21, 14, and 7, 21, 15.

Bridge west of Harrisville, over White River, between 13, 20, 14 and 18, 20, 15.

Bridge east of Winchester, Section 35, 20, 14, over White River.

Bridge northwest of Winchester, over White River.

Bridge near Maxville, 20, 20, 13 (probably down at present).

Bridge north of Winchester, over White River, 17, 20, 14.

Bridge east of Ridgeville (gone), between 17 and 18, 21, 14.

Bridge north of Steubenville, over Mississinewa, between 11 and 12, 21, 12.

Bridge southeast of Winchester, over White River, on Greenville State road.

Bridge over Stony Creek, near Windsor, on the Winchester Pike.

Bridge over Greenville Creek at State line, 24, 17, 1.

Bridge over Greenville, east of Bartonia, 26, 17, 1.

Bridge over Cabin Creek, west of Maxville, 23, 20, 12.

Ford over Greenville Creek, northeast of Bartonia.

Ford over Mississinewa, east of Ridgeville.

Ford over Cabin Creek, west of Unionsport.

IRON BRIDGES IN RANDOLPH COUNTY, 1881.

1. Over Salt Creek in Winchester, on Franklin street.
2. Across Mississinewa, at Ridgeville.
3. Across White River, south of Parker.
4. Across White River, five miles west of Winchester, near Stephen Moorman's.
5. Across Mississinewa, at Fairview. This is the first iron bridge in the county; built in 1868.

Road work has been heretofore done under the direction of Supervisors chosen for each road district, each man between eighteen and forty-five having to work the road. A law passed the Legislature of 1880–1881 making important and radical changes, putting the roads into the hands of a new officer styled Township Superintendent. The law goes practically into effect April, 1882, since no Superintendent can be appointed until that time.

MILLS, MACHINERY, ETC.

As to mills, etc., before 1820, we have not been able to gain any certain or exact information. There were some mills built on Nolan's and Green's Forks (as, also, some horse-mill corn-crackers and hominy-pounders).

William Smith, father of Hon. Jeremiah Smith, built a mill in 1819, on West River. Meshach Lewallyn built one at Ridgeville on Mississinewa, about the same time. Jere Cox erected one on White River, some miles east of Winchester, in 1825. Jessop had a mill on Greenville Creek as soon as 1820 or before. Aaron Hill's father, as also a Mr. Hawkins, in the region of Arba, had hominy-pounders, and perhaps, corn-crackers, run by horse-power, shortly after the first settlers came. However, Aaron Hill's father came to this county in 1831.

Jesse Way says he thinks the first water mill in the county was built by John Wright, on Salt Creek, just north of Winchester, in 1818 or 1819.

But to find exact dates, and to determine the locations of those early mills, has been a difficult, and in many cases an impossible task. In the statement herein given, locality has been followed rather than priority of date; and no doubt many, after all the labor expended in the work, have been omitted.

WATER-MILLS.

A mill was built at (just below) Macksville by Robert Cox about thirty-two years ago (1848). It is now owned by Roberts & Goode. It is a good (grist) mill, and does a thriving business.

At the mouth of Cabin Creek Mr. Bunker built a saw-mill very early. Afterward John H. Bond rebuilt the saw-mill and added a grist-mill. William Roberts bought and rebuilt the mill soon after 1854. It is standing yet and is owned by Dick & Cowgill.

Roberts put in steam, but the mill is now run by water alone. The saw-mill has been removed but the grist-mill does a good business.

Up Cabin Creek (three-quarters of a mile) is another grist-mill; Jacob Boles built one on that site very early. Afterward it was rebuilt by Peter S. Miller (from Bucks County, Penn.), and again by William Marine (about) 1844. It was owned by John H. Bond and Solomon Wright, and now by Studebaker. Steam was used at one time but now water alone. A portable saw-mill was there once but it has been taken away. The mill now has a good reputation for work.

Just above that (also on Cabin Creek), William Marine had built another mill (about) 1839. He at one time owned both these mills (called Marine's upper and lower mills). The upper one has gone down.

While Marine was running both these mills, Nathan Mendenhall undertook to build still another mill between Marine's upper dam and the lower mill connected with that dam. He built his dam, dug the race, got the timber on the ground but finally he stopped. Why we do not know, for one would think a man might as well go clear through as to begin such a job as that. It is a pity he had not put to actual test the project of running a water-mill without water!

Two miles above (on Cabin Creek still) stood Mendenhall's (lower) mill, built before 1840. It has been rebuilt once or twice, and was discontinued not long ago. The works were taken to Parker, and the mill is in operation there now.

A mile above was Mendenhall's upper mill, built by Nathan Mendenhall (father of the one mentioned above), at a very early day.

The mill was rebuilt by his son Hiram. It has since been changed into a woolen factory, and is now used as such. It is at Unionsport, and is run by both water and steam. It has had a good reputation, and with the requisite capital a fine business might be maintained.

A saw-mill was built by William Davison before 1829. It was running up to 1852, but was discontinued soon after.

Thomas Gillum built a "corn-cracker" one-fourth of a mile south of Buena Vista, one of the first water-mills in the county. It was gone long ago.

Below Macksville mill (on White River), Mr. Spiller built a saw-mill (about) 1850. It was rebuilt by David Harris. The mill was running five years ago, but is gone now.

On Sparrow Creek, a saw-mill was erected (before the Macksville grist-mill was built) by Morgan Mills. He used to saw day and night. He would set his log and start the saw, and then lie down and take a nap. When the saw got through the log, the snapping of the trigger would wake him up, and he would set the log again. That mill went down twenty-five years or more ago. Robert Cox rebuilt the mill and used it to saw the lumber for the mill he built (at Macksville) on White River.

Noah Johnson built a grist-mill on Sparrow Creek at the crossing of the Huntsville and Sampletown road, southeast of Macksville, very early, about the same time as Gillum's mill on Cabin Creek there was also a saw-mill. Both have been gone many years (twenty-five years or more).

James Clayton built a saw-mill on "Eight Mile Creek" above Macksville. That mill quit sawing before 1830.

Lewallyn's grist-mill on the Mississinewa near Ridgeville, was built (say) 1819 or 1820. It was afterward owned by William Addington, and then by his son Joab Addington, afterward by Addington & House. Still again by Arthur McKew, and now by Whipple. It goes by water and steam both, and is an extensive and valuable establishment, having done a large business for many years.

Frederick Miller had a grist-mill and saw-mill on Bear Creek, three miles southwest of Ridgeville, perhaps forty years ago. They have been gone many years.

On Bear Creek, Josiah Bundy and Jacob Horn once had a saw-mill. It did not do much.

The old Sampletown Mill between Macksville and Winchester, just east of the "twelve-mile boundary," was built very early, but has been gone a long time. Some of the old timbers are to be seen yet.

Jere Cox built a grist-mill above Winchester on White River in 1825, on the farm now owned by William Pickett. Joseph and Benjamin Pickett built a saw-mill, William Pickett in 1853 purchased the place and both mills. They were operated till about 1864, and were torn down in 1870. Mr. Pickett says there were five dry years (from 1864 to 1869), in which the water was so low that the mills could not run, and they were left to go to wreck, and were taken away in 1870.

Parsons had a grist-mill on Mississinewa one-half mile below Deerfield before 1832.

Jessup had a "corn-cracker" on Greenville Creek, north of Spartanburg before 1820.

A grist-mill used to stand on Greenville Creek northwest of the Griffis farm in Wayne Township. It was there in 1850, but has been gone many years. The timbers are there still.

A Mr. Hinchy had a saw-mill and grist-mill on the Mississinewa, east of Allensville, in the early settlement of Jackson Township, which were somewhat important for several years.

There are some mills (one or more), on Mississinewa, near Fairview.

John Wright is said to have had a corn-cracker water-mill on Salt Creek, north of Winchester, thought by some to have been the first water-mill in the county. Jesse Way says Wrights mill was built in 1818 or 1819.

Joshua Bond, uncle to Benjamin Bond, long of Washington Township, had an oil mill (perhaps the only one in the county), as, also, a grist-mill, both run by horse-power, near Winchester, very early—perhaps as long ago as 1820, or thereabouts. Benjamin Bond was married in 1826, and he spent most of several previous years with his uncle Joshua, working in that mill.

Joshua Bond settled near Winchester about 1818, and set up his mills soon after; and about 1835 or so, he removed to Jay County, building a horse mill there also, and running the same till a comparatively late day, dying about 1878, at the age of ninety-four.

His mill in Jay County was noted, settlers coming from both far and near.

He was one of seven brothers, all large limbed, stalwart mountain men of North Carolina, five of whom, when he was sixty years old, were living still.

Old Paul Beard had a saw-mill on Greensfork, which was old in 1837. There was a mill site where a grist-mill had been, but had gone down in 1839, and a new mill by Levi Stout (same man) two miles lower down on Greensfork, a mile and a half north of west from Lynn, about 1838, which was still running in 1854. It is now wholly gone.

Amos Ellis had a saw-mill, in old times, between these two mill sites, which was gone, however, in 1840.

Most of the water there now runs in a ditch.

There were other mills built from time to time, particularly saw-mills, concerning which no information has been obtained. These early mills must not be reckoned to be like the great mills of the present day. They were, indeed, but small and insignificant affairs. It is related of one of the first mills in Jackson Township, that the owner boasted that his whole "fixings" had cost him only $2.50. What in particular that same $2.50 was expended for "Dame Rumor" has not condescended to furnish information. Whether it was for dressing the "gray heads" into mill-stones, or to purchase the iron gearing (if they had any), or for something else, it matters not. The money was spent, and it has gone past recovery, and the mill has gone, too, and no relic of either remains. "Sic transit gloria mundi." And so "passeth the glory" of those old-time marvels of machinery as well.

Those old-time mills were very humble, unpretending establishments. Cox's mill above Winchester, built fifty-six years ago, and eleven years after the first settlement of the county, bolted flour in a hand bolt. The "corn crackers," so called (Jessup's on Greenville Creek, for instance), used to grind about a peck an hour. The stones employed in many of the first mills were simply the native boulders of the region, dressed to suit the purpose. Still they served the needs of the settlers in a small way for many years. Some half-dressed mill stones are lying beside the highways still.

The grist would be sent on the back of a horse or a mule with a half-grown lad, and one by one these grists would be slowly, oh, how slowly, worked through the machinery of the mill.

Men, however, who were able to command a wagon and team and enough grain to warrant the labor required, would take a trip to the more extensive and better appointed mills on the White Water, or the Stillwater, or even the Miami. In the earliest times, boys have been sent on horseback twenty miles or more, from the Arba settlement to the mills on the White Water below Richmond, both to buy corn and to get it ground in one of the mills in that region.

The story told by the old settlers of nearly every one of the first mills in the whole region, though perhaps not an actual fact as to even a single one of them, is yet painfully suggestive of the more important real fact that the mills did actually grind so "awful slow" that everybody would naturally believe that a dog might "lick the meal by spirts," and lift up his head and howl between the "jets" for more. But let us not laugh at these small beginnings of things. The settlers used far more labor, and displayed much greater energy in undertaking what they were able to accomplish under such appalling difficulties than their posterity do in effecting the far greater results of the present day.

STEAM MILLS.

For years after the opening of the country for settlement, the use of steam power was unknown. To fit up a steam establishment required a large amount of money, more, in fact, than most could command. Still as the country grew, and the milling necessities began to surpass the capacities of the water-power, and the "corn cracker" and the hand-bolt mills of the region, men ventured to try how steam would answer the purpose, and one by one, mills were built away from the streams. The result has been that water-power has dwindled and almost grown out of use, and steam has nearly carried the day.

One of the first steam mills in the county, possibly the first, was built by Elias Kizer at Winchester, as early perhaps as 1835, in the east part of the town. It was discontinued perhaps twenty-five years ago.

Mr. Roberts had a steam grist-mill at Winchester (in the west part of the city). It was running say in 1860, but its rumbling has been silent for some years.

The brick mill and warehouse near the depot has been standing for some twenty years. It was built for a warehouse by John Mumma. Martin owned it awhile, then Heaston & Riley, then Colton & Bates, now Bates Brothers. It is an extensive mill, has a high reputation, performing good, thorough, reliable work, and a large amount of it.

Deerfield Steam Mill was built by Jason Whipple thirty-seven years ago (1845). It has been in operation ever since, and is a good mill. For many years it had a very large patronage, and does still an extensive business. At one time it drew custom for thirty or forty miles in every direction. Customers had the privilege, by staying through the night, of having their grists ground in turn, and many availed themselves thereof. Sometimes a dozen or twenty teams would wait through the darkness of the night, rather than go home through the long and tedious journey, and then be obliged to return at a future day.

People came from Centerville, Wabash, Greenville, etc. Other mills have been built, and its business has decreased, though it does well still. It is now owned by Willis Whipple, son of Jason Whipple.

The mill at Allensville is fixed so as to run by water or steam. It was built in about 1850, and has been running under various control ever since. It has a fair reputation for quality of work.

A saw-mill (water and steam) was built, and afterward a grist-mill, by McNeely before 1845. Both are there still, and doing good work. The establishment was rebuilt by Thomas Reese & Co.

There was a steam saw-mill on Olive Branch, then it was made a grist mill, and afterward the works were taken out and carried to Farmland.

At Farmland, Dr. William Macy had a steam saw-mill, afterward belonging to Ford & Co., but it has been silent for twenty years.

Stanley Brothers had a steam grist-mill at Farmland before 1860. Having been burned, it was rebuilt with new machinery by Hawkins. It is now in operation.

Another steam-mill is at Farmland, built by Charles Stanley about ten years ago, which is running still.

A steam-mill was built at Ridgeville on the railroad, by Arthur McKew. It was burned and rebuilt of brick; is now owned by Starr & Co. The mill is a good one, and does much work.

There is a steam-mill at Harrisville, built some years ago, and doing a considerable business.

A steam grist-mill was running for several years at Arba, but it burned down in 1877, and has not been rebuilt.

There are two steam saw-mills at Spartansburg. One has been in operation for twenty-five years. The other was built by Wesley Locke about two years ago. It has a corn-mill and planing-mill attached, and does good work.

A large steam grist-mill was erected at Union City, Ind., five or six years ago. It is a grand establishment; is owned by Converse & Co.; has a capacity of 200 barrels per day; has an extensive run of custom, and does also a large amount of merchant work.

There are two corn-mills in Union City, one is owned by C. W. Pierce and the other by Kirschbaum.

There is a saw-mill at Parker, also a steam grist-mill, built in 1876.

There is a steam saw-mill at Pleasantview, which has been running for several years.

Several mills have existed at different times in Jackson Township, but most of them have ceased to run, except the one at Allensville.

A steam saw-mill has been in operation for several years on the State line pike, two miles south of Union City, but it was removed a year or so ago.

Carter & Montgar had a steam saw-mill in Union City, Ohio, in and after 1852 for several years; the first saw-mill on that ground.

Mr. Sheets set up a saw-mill west of Union City, near where the machine shop is now, in 1852.

There was a saw-mill on Oak street, Union City, near where William A. Wiley now resides.

John H. Cammack has a saw-mill in the Cammack neighborhood, some two miles east of Bartonia. It does considerable business.

There is a saw-mill eight miles southwest of Farmland, still doing work, having been in operation many years.

A steam grist-mill has been for many years, and still is, in operation in Union City, Ohio. It has a good reputation, and does a large business.

There is a steam-grist mill at Huntsville. It has been in operation for fourteen years, and is a good mill.

There is also a saw-mill at Huntsville, owned by Peyton Johnson.

There is another saw-mill owned by Jere Hyatt.

A saw-mill has stood not far east of Deerfield, on the State road, from early times until a year or two ago, owned latterly by John H. Sipe.

There was, for years, a saw-mill on the boundary, southwest of Spartansburg.

A saw-mill was in operation for twenty years or more near Salem. When Union City began to need lumber for building, that mill, among others, helped much to supply the demand.

A grist-mill and a saw-mill were formerly in operation north of Lynn, but one was burned (or both) and now there is neither.

Anthony McKinney built a saw-mill on Mississinewa, one and a quarter miles below Fairview, about 1839, put in a corn-cracker about 1840, and built a new and more extensive mill, putting in "wheat buhrs" about 1842. He had three run of buhrs—and a bolt carried by machinery. It was a good mill for awhile, and is still in operation. Mr. McKinney sold the mill to Samuel Zaner. He owned it about a year and sold to Abner Wolverton, about 1864, who owns it yet. There are now two runs, one for corn and one for wheat. Steam was put in in 1875, and now water and steam are both employed.

Mr. Ward had a saw-mill on Mississinewa, below Ridgeville, some twenty years ago, which ran for several years.

John Foust had a saw-mill and corn-cracker in about 1856, in Franklin Township, just at the township line, on Mississinewa, which stood five or six years.

Cyrus A. Reed had a saw-mill one mile above Fairview. It was built about 1850, and stood perhaps ten years.

There is a saw-mill at Shedville, running by steam. It has been in operation but a short time.

Before 1825, Lemuel Vestal undertook to erect a mill on Stony Yours Respy.

D. S. Cottom

Creek, near Windsor. Before completing it, he sold out to John Thornburg, who finished the grist-mill and also built a saw-mill. [See record of John Thornburg]. After four years, he sold to Andrew G. Dye, and he to Moses Neely, and still again the mills were transferred to Thomas W. Reece, who built them anew. Their owners since have been Neely, Mark Pattis, Johnson & Dye, William A. Thornburg, Reece & Sons, Mahlon Clevenger, John Thornburg, and now, Robert Cowgill.

Doubtless other mills may exist, or have done so in years past, of which no account has been obtained.

OTHER MACHINERY.

Peter Cable had a carding machine, etc., in the west part of the county. At first Mr. Cable had a little carding machine in the garret of John H. Bond's grist-mill. He was very poor, and got the use of Bond's "power." After awhile he bought a waste farm that was too wet for tillage. He ditched the prairie and drained the ponds, springs and swamps, and collected the water, and got enough to run a carding machine and woolen factory. For a long time it was a famous establishment, getting custom far and near, and Mr. Cable made a fortune. His factory is gone now. There are pleasant anecdotes about Mr. Cable and his mill. Somebody had at one time turned the water upon the wheel and made the mill run empty through the night. He was provoked, and on Saturday he sawed the foot-bridge over the fore-bay almost in two, and laid it in its place. Monday morning he came to start his mill, and, forgetting all about his "trap," he stepped upon the sawed plank and went, souse, into the fore-bay. He scrambled out just as Thomas Addington was going to the mill. He ran to meet Thomas, laughing and crying out: "O, Thomas, Thomas, I caught mine self, I caught mine self!" Another. Mr. Cable was one day walking along a muddy road, near a horse. The animal stepped in a water-hole and the water flew fiercely into the honest German's face. Wiping the muddy slosh from his eyes, he cried out, "Vell, dat vas right mutty, didn't it?" Mr. Cable lives there still, three miles south of Macksville.

There has been for some years a woolen factory at Unionsport. It has a good reputation, and its yarns are in great demand.

There used to be a carding machine at Winchester, belonging to Elias Kizer, but it is not there now.

The old county seminary, at Winchester, was fitted up and run as a woolen factory for several years. It was quite extensive and did much work, but it has been discontinued.

There was, for many years, a carding machine and woolen factory at Deerfield. It was burned down and rebuilt, and burned again, and, since the last fire, has not been rebuilt.

There is a large amount of machinery at Union City, Ind., and Ohio, as also at Winchester, Farmland and Ridgeville, for various purposes which will be described under the head of Union City, and the rest.

It is told us, as a matter of curiosity, that Moorman Way once undertook to fit up a carding machine at Winchester, and run it by ox-power. The establishment did some work for awhile.

A carding machine was built and operated in very early days, near Winchester. It is thought to have been the first in the county, but has been gone for many, many years. It belonged to Daniel Petty, and was operated by horse-power.

PIKES—RANDOLPH COUNTY.

The first pike asked for and granted is thought to have been the Williamsburg & Bloomingsport pike, September, 1858.

The second was the Greenville State Line Company, granted also September, 1858. Its officers were: N. Kemp, President; Daniel Hill, Secretary; James Griffis, George Hiatt, Alexander White, Directors. The whole length of this line was some ten miles. But it is remarkable that of this pike has been built only about four miles; three and half miles at the westward, and three-quarters of a mile next the State line, leaving a wretched gap of some six miles of the worst road in the county.

Since 1858, a great number of pikes have been projected, many of which have been made, and the difference between the "old time mud" and the new "regime" is very great indeed, though it must be confessed that even the pikes are by no means what they ought to be; since in the "muddy, rainy time," some of them get so badly cut up that the imagination has to be brought into service considerably to succeed in considering them actual gravel pikes and not old-fashioned mud roads.

Below is given a statement of the assessed valuation of some of the pikes now in Randolph County for the year 1880, as also the estimated cost of different pikes as contained in the statements to the Commissioners by the parties asking permission to build them.

ASSESSED VALUATION OF PIKES IN RANDOLPH COUNTY, 1880.

White River, Farmland and Shiloh, $1,892; Macksville and Unionsport, $253; Winchester and Windsor, $3,300; Winchester and Deerfield, $2,800; Winchester and Bundy's Mill, $2,050; Winchester and State Line, $500; Dunkirk, $400; Lynn and Winchester, $1,000; Lynn and Spartanburg, $600; Arba and Bartonia, $2,040; Nettle Creek and Stony Creek, $600; Buena Vista and Unionsport, $1,173; Winchester and Huntsville, $1,526; Salem and Union City, $2,180; New Pittsburg and Hoover, $200; Union City and White River, $1,088; Union City and Winchester, $1,500; Stone Station and Olive Branch; West River and Washington Township, $282; White River and Southern, $600; Williamsburg and Bloomingsport, $116; Economy and Bloomingsport; Newport and Winchester, $300; State Line, south from Union City; State Line, north Union City and Recovery.

ESTIMATED COST OF PIKES.

From the Commissioners' record, we take some data as the estimates upon the costs of pikes projected in the county.

Some of the earlier ones were not discovered in our search and hence they do not appear.

Two have already been mentioned. We number the others in order (not altogether in order of time):

Winchester and Huntsville, August 19, 1867, length seven miles, fourteen and a half rods; estimated cost $17,100. N. P. Heaston, engineer.

Huntsville and Hagerstown, February 21, 1867, over six and a half miles; cost $8,200. Robert C. Sheets, Engineer.

Unionsport and Hagerstown, June 21, 1867; ten and nine-tenths miles; cost $17,985. Charles Jaqua, Engineer.

Farmland South, two miles; cost $8,777.04 (large bridge). P. Pomroy, P. Hiatt, Engineers.

Winchester and Deerfield, November 6, 1865, nine and a half miles; cost $17,000.

Farmland and Hagerstown, November 6, 1867, nine miles 281 yards; cost $18,834.12. P. Hiatt, Engineer.

Farmland and Economy, south end, October 22, 1867, four miles 420 yards; cost $8,468.31. P. Hiatt, Engineer.

Salem and Union City, May 5, 1868, eight and two-thirds miles; cost $17,044. C. Jaqua, Engineer.

Losantville and Northern, September 6, 1868, ten and three-quarter miles; cost $23,782. N. P. Heaston, Engineer.

Spartansburg and Arba, Cherry Grove and Lynn, March 23, 1869, seven miles; cost $14,616. James H. Hiatt, Engineer. Winchester, White River and Union City, September 10, 1869, seven miles, four chains; cost $8,998.20. J. Wharry, Engineer.

Bloomingsport and Greensfork, August 16, 1869; cost $6,860. S. P. Heaston, Engineer.

Lynn and Winchester, August 31, 1867, eight and three-quarter miles; cost $19,500.

Winchester and Bloomingsport, May 18, 1867, ten and a half miles; cost $27,300.

Huntsville and Buena Vista, July 3, 1867, six and a half miles; cost $8,310.26. P. Pomroy, Engineer.

Union City and White River, May 28, 1870.

Winchester and Salt Creek, May 20, 1867.

Farmland and Mississinewa Valley, March 27, 1869.

Winchester and White River, July 17, 1869, three and a half miles; cost $6,165.

Spartansburg and Arba and Bartonia.

Mississinewa and Shiloh, March 5, 1869, seven miles.

Spartansburg and Lynn, March 5, 1869.

White River and Farmland, March 5, 1869.

Buena Vista and Unionsport, and West River, September 6, 1875.

Macksville Cemetery and Unionsport, September, 1875.

Dunkirk Company, right of way granted, June 5, 1876.

Stone Station and Olive Branch, June 5, 1876.

New Pittsburg and Brown, June 6, 1876.

County Line and Farmland, March, 1880.

Bush Creek and Mississinewa, February 20, 1880.

Tampico and Lynn, February 2, 1880.

Huntsville and Buena Vista, June, 1880.

Bush Creek and Rockingham, June, 1880.

Elkhorn, June, 1880.

Ridgeville and Mississinewa Valley, June, 1880.

Ward and Franklin Townships, June, 1880.

Mount Zion, June, 1881.

The Winchester and Windsor pike was granted June, 1867.

The Arba and Bartonia, June, 1868.

The Winchester and Richmond, via Lynn, about the same time.

Some of the above pikes were never made.

The first pike in Green Township was begun in the summer of 1880. Considerable work of that sort is going on in that region now (1881–82).

TOWNS.

In the present article, we give simply the names of the towns in Randolph County, with their location and actual condition, leaving the detailed description of each to another time and place. There are (or have been) in Randolph County, fifty-two towns, (or hamlets with names attached) and post offices, located in the various townships as follows:

[NOTE—The townships are arranged in order of location].

Green Township—Emmetsville P. O., Sec. 5, Town 5, Ranges 7 and 8, Town 21, Range 13, decayed; Fairview P. O., Section 4, Town 21, Range 12, not flourishing; Olive Branch (hamlet), small; Rockingham, on Mississinewa, below Ridgeville, extinct; Shedville P. O. (unincorporated), just begun; Steubenville, Sections 13 and 14, Town 21, Range 12, extinct; Carlisle, Section 12, Town 21, Range 13, extinct.

Franklin Township—Ridgeville P. O., Section, 12, Town 21, Range 14, thriving.

Ward Township—Berlin (perhaps on Mississinewa River), extinct; Deerfield P. O., Sections 16 and 17, Town 21, Range 14, decaying; Randolph P. O., Sections 16, 17, 20 and 21, Town 21, Range 14, small; Saratoga P. O., on Panhandle Railroad, not large; Stone Station, Sections 30 and 31, Town 21, Range 14, very small; (Clark P. O.).

Jackson Township—Allensville, Section 9, Town 21, Range 15, dead; Castle P. O., Section 27, Town 21, Range 15, store and toll-gate; Mount Holly, Section 27, Town 21, Range 15, dead; New Lisbon, Section 12, Town 18, Range 1, dead; New Middletown, Section 30, Town 21, Range 15, dead; New Pittsburg P. O., Section 6, Town 21, Range 15, decayed.

Wayne Township—Bartonia P. O., Section 27, Town 17, Range 1, decayed; Harrisville P. O., Sections 17 and 18, Town 20, Range 15, thriving; Randolph (old), Section 27, Town 17, Range 1, extinct; Salem, Sections 11 and 12, Town 17, Range 1, dead; Union City P. O., Sections 24 and 25, Town 18, Range 1, large.

White River Township—Macksville, Section 20, Town 20, Range 12, decayed; New Dayton (hamlet) P. O., Section 2, Town 20, Range 13, small; Sampletown, Section 22, Town 20, Range 13, extinct; Winchester P. O., Section 20, Town 20, Range 14, large; Unionsport P. O. (partly in West River), small; Buena Vista, Cerro Gordo P. O. (partly in West River), decayed.

Monroe Township—Farmland P. O., Sections 12, 13, 18 and 20, Town 20, Range 13, thriving; Morristown, Parker P. O., Sections 16 and 17, Town 20, Range 12, thriving; Royston, Section 17, Town 20, Range 13, extinct.

Stony Creek Township—Georgetown, Section 29, Town 20, Range 12, extinct; Neff P. O., Section 24, Town 20, Range 12, store and dwelling; Windsor P. O., Section 10, Town 18, Range 12, small.

Nettle Creek Township.—Fallen Timber P. O., northeast of Losantville; Flemingsburg, Section 23, Town 19, Range 12, extinct; Losantville P. O., Sections 11, 12, 13 and 14, Town 19, Range 12, small; Pleasant View, Good View P. O., Sections 11, 12, 13 and 14, Town 19, Range 12, small.

West River Township.—Buena Vista, Cerro Gordo P. O., Sections 3, 4, 9 and 10, Town 19, Range 13, decayed; Huntsville, Trenton P. O., Sections 27 and 28, Town 19, Range 13, thriving; Swain's Hill P. O., Section 5, Town 18, Range 13, post office; Unionsport P. O., Sections 4, 5, 8 and 9, Town 19, Range 13, neat.

Washington Township.—Bloomingsport, P. O., Sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, Town 18, Range 14, not large; Johnson's Station P. O., Section 11, Town 18, Range 14, small; Lynn, P. O., Sections 34 and 35, 19, and 2 and 3, Town 18, Range 14, thriving; Rural P. O., Wood Station, Sections 9 and 16, Town 19, Range 14, small; Snow Hill (old), Section 23, Town 19, Range 14, extinct; Snow Hill Station, Section 16 and 21, Town 19, Range 14, very small; Springboro, Section 29, Town 19, Range 14, extinct; West Lynn, Sections 3 and 3, Town 19, Range 14, not large.

Greensfork Township.—Arba P. O., Section 33, Town 16, Range 1, thriving; Spartansburg (formerly Newburg) P. O., Section 10, Town 16, Range 1, thriving; Edgewood (hamlet), Section 12, Town 16, Range 1, seminary and church.

RECAPITULATION.

Four of the above are only post offices. Four are only hamlets, never laid out as towns. Eleven are absolutely extinct. Four are dead, but not wholly gone. Eight are very small. Eleven are much decayed. Two are somewhat active. Six have considerable trade. Two are quite large towns. There are twenty-eight post offices.

Fort Wayne (now Allen County, but when laid out, in Randolph County), 118 lots; streets, 66 feet; alleys, 5, 14, 16 feet. The streets in the plat were: North and south—Barr, Clinton, Calhoun; east and west—Water, Columbia, Main, Berry.

Location: Junction of St. Joseph's and St. Mary's Rivers, head of the Maumee River (now Allen County), in Section 2, Town 30, Range 12.

Recorded at Winchester, June 9, 1824.

The town has grown, of course, immensely since those primitive days, and it is now a city of 30,000 inhabitants.

SURVEYS OF THE TOWNSHIPS IN RANDOLPH COUNTY.

Township 16 north, Range 1 west, of First Principal Meridian—surveyed by Israel Ludlow, 1800; subdivided by Samuel Archer, 1812.

Township 17 north, Range 1 west—surveyed by Daniel C. Cooper, 1800; subdivided by Jeremiah McLane, 1805.

Township 18 north, Range 1 west—surveyed by Daniel C. Cooper, 1800; subdivided by Jeremiah McLane, 1800.

Township 19 north, Range 1 west—surveyed by Daniel C. Cooper, 1800.

Township 18 north, Range 13 east—east part, Henry Bryan 1811.

Township 19 north, Range 13 east—east part, Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 20 north, Range 13 east—east part, Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 21 north, Range 13 east—east part, Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 18 north, Range 14 east—Henry Bryan, 1811.

Township 19 north, Range 14 east—Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 20 north, Range 14 east—Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 21 north, Range 14 east—east part, Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 18 north, Range 15 east—not told.

Township 19 north, Range 15 east—Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 20 north, Range 15 east—Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 21 north, Range 15 east—Jacob Fowler, 1811.

Township 18 north, Range 12 east—not known.

Township 19 north, Range 12 east—John Hendricks, 1821.

Township 20 north, Range 12 east—John Hendricks, 1822.

Township 20 north, Range 12 east—J. F. Polke, 1822.

Township 18 north, Range 13 east—west part, John Hendricks, 1821.

Township 19 north, Range 13 east—west part, John Hendricks, 1821.

Township 20 north, Range 13 east—west part, John Hendricks, 1821.

Township 21 north, Range 13 east—J. F. Polke, 1822.

Township 21 north, Range 14 east—west part, John Hendricks, 1822.

[NOTE.—The "old boundary" separates 16, 17, 18, 19 north, Range 1 west, from 18, 19, 20, 21 north, Ranges 12, 13, 14, 15 east.

The "new boundary" divides 18, 19, 20, 21 north, Range 13 east, and 21 north, Range 14 east].

The "field notes" were copied from the records at the Land Office (Cincinnati, perhaps) by Samuel Williams, Clerk in said office, March 1, 1834.

They were recopied from the first copy by Calvin G. Goodrich, Surveyor of Randolph County, August 24, 1841.

The latter copy is now on file in the office of the County Auditor at Winchester, Randolph County, Ind.

CHAPTER VI.

RECORDS.

DEEDS—APPRENTICESHIP—FREE PAPERS—ABSTRACT OF TITLES—MARRIAGES—CIRCUIT COURT—COMMISSIONERS' BOARD—PROBATE COURT.

EARLY RECORDS.

CHARLES CONWAY was for the first twenty years Clerk, Recorder and Auditor (i. e., he did the business which the Auditor now performs), all three at once. The three together must have made but a poor living for even one man.

The Recorder's book shows the following facts, viz.:

From September, 1818, to December 31, 1822 (four years and four months), fifty-six instruments in all were put on record.

In 1823, thirty-two instruments; 1824, twenty-two; 1825, thirty-eight; 1826, twenty-one; 1827, fifty-two; 1828, forty-eight.

By the close of 1828 (about ten years), 262 pages had been filled by the Recorder, including all kinds: deeds, bonds, mortgages, bills of sale or chattel mortgages, official bonds, etc., or an average of twenty-seven instruments or twenty-six pages a year for ten years.

The following statements will show the slow but gradual increase of work in the Recorder's office:

In 1829, 64 pages; 1830, 77 pages; 1831, 68 pages; 1832, 100 pages; 1833, 149 pages; 1834, 143 pages; 1835, 260 pages; 1836, 294 pages; 1837, 350 pages; 1838, 480 pages; 1839, 467 pages; 1840, 415 pages; 1841, 478 pages; 1842, 393 pages; 1843, 389 pages; 1844, 335 pages; 1845, 415 pages; averaging for nine years, 1829–37, 167 pages annually; for the last eight years, 487 pages yearly; for seventeen years, 318 pages annually; and for the whole time 210 pages, or about 17 pages per month.

In 1818, only one "record" is made, viz.: David Wright's bond as Sheriff.

In 1819, only one record, Solomon Wright's bond as Coroner, date of record, November 25, 1819.

In 1820, things began to "start" a little. Thirteen instruments were put on the record, or one a month and one to spare.

First bond for deed—Paul W. Way, County agent, to James McCoole, for Lot 1, west front, Winchester; deed to be given on or before the year 1825, on what conditions precedent to be fulfilled does not appear.

Second and third patents (5,967 and 6,105) to Charles Conway, dated August 15, 1817, and May 5, 1818, signed by James Monroe, President. Recorded February 10, 1820.

Fourth warrantee deed—From Paul W. Way, agent, to Isaac Wright, of Clinton County, Ohio, for north half of Lot 6, south front, Winchester; price, $30. Date of deed, December 14, 1819; date of record, March 7, 1820.

Fifth deed—P. W. Way, agent, to Albert Banta, Lot 3, southwest square, for $31.20; date, April 3, 1820.

Sixth deed—David Heaston to John and Elizabeth Elzroth; land in Section 6, Town 19, Range 14; price, $500; dated, March 13, 1820.

Seventh deed—A curious instrument; purport as follows: First. John Elzroth has sold sixty acres of land to Jacob Roths (Roads) on south side of Section 33, Town 20, Range 14. Second. Elzroth agrees to take in payment the share of Polly (Elzroth) Roths in the estate of Nicholas Elzroth (her father), provided said legacy amounts to $150 or more. Third. If said legacy falls short of $150, John Roths agrees to pay to John Elzroth the deficit. Recorded April 6, 1820.

Eighth deed—From John Elzroth to John Roths as described in seven.

Ninth deed—John Elzroth to John Irvin, 180 acres; price, $500; Section 6, Town 9, Range 14; recorded March 13, 1820.

Tenth deed—P. W. Way, agent, to Hiram Bailey, Clinton County, Ohio; Lot 6, south front, Winchester; price $30. Dated December 14, 1819; recorded February 5, 1820.

Eleventh deed (by donation)—Charles Conway to Paul W. Way, County Agent, sixty acres, Section 20, Town 20, Range 14, for town plat (in part) of Winchester. Deed made September 30, 1819; recorded September 4, 1820.

Twelfth, bill of sale—George Hight, of Darke County, Ohio, to William Vance, Jr. Amount, $2,678.50.

[NOTE.—The schedule is deemed worthy to be here inserted.]

One bay horse, 7 years	$200 00
One brown horse, seven years	100 00
One dun-mare	90 00
One black horse (abount 12 years)	60 00
One sorrel horse	50 00
One black horse, 15 years	50 00
One sorrel horse, 3 years	50 00
Ten steers, 1 year	50 00
Ten heifers, 1 year	50 00
Five calves 1 year	10 00
Seventy hogs at $3	210 00
Two wagons	200 00
Four oxyokes	12 00
Three ox chains	20 00

One sorrel mare, colt	50 00
One bay horse, colt, 1 year	20 00
One iron gray mare, colt, 1 year	20 00
One pair oxen, 8 years	100 00
One pair work steers, 3 years	50 00
One English bull	75 00
Twenty-one cows at $18	378 00
Five steers, 3 years at $12	60 00
Two heifers, 3 years	24 00
Seven steers, 2 years at $10	70 00
Four heifers, 2 years, at $10	40 00
Gears for three horses, three double trees	40 00
Three plows	25 00
Three felling axes	9 00
Three weeding axes	9 00
Two mataxes	6 00
One crowbar	3 00
One cradle, two scythes	7 00
Three grass scythes and hangings	12 00
One horse sledge	4 00
Three iron wedges	5 00
Two pitchforks	3 00
Three negro hoes	6 00
Six sickles	6 00
One wooden clock	30 00
One plate stove	35 00
Seven Windsor chairs	15 00
Four tables	16 00
One stand	2 00
Three looking glasses	12 00
One iron shovel	2 00
One set harrow teeth	13 00
Two grindstones, with cranks, etc	18 00
One pair andirons	4 00
One crane, trammel and hooks	5 00
One shovel and tongs	4 00
One 12-gallon kettle	7 00
One coffee mill	3 00
One shot gun	17 00
One musket	10 00
Three saddles and bridles	70 00
One U. S. map	20 00
Four maps	40 00
One Ohio map	10 00
Two hand axes, two drawing knives, six augers, four planes, three chisels, one cross-cut saw, one hand saw	34 00
Four bedsteads	10 00
Three bed sacks, ten bed blankets	40 00
One mattress	6 00
One counterpane, four sheets	25 00
One pair saddle-bags, etc	5 00
One seven-gal. kettle, one large pot, one stew pan, one grate iron, one bake oven, one griddle, one small pot, one toasting iron, one dish kettle, one spider, one skillet	23 50
Three sad irons, two pairs steel yards	5 00
One frying pan	1 50
One wheat sieve	2 50
One buffalo hide	8 00
One cutting box	5 00
Total amount	$2678 50

If the above marked prices were a fair estimate for the time, the schedule furnishes a noteworthy exhibition of the comparative value of commodities of various kinds at that date.

It would be interesting to know more of this George Hight. He would seem to have been a large farmer for those early days.

Thirteenth deed (mortgage)—James Oldham to Paul W. Way, agent of Outlot No. 2, southeast square, Winchester, $150, given as security for the payment of two promissory notes given by Oldham to Way (doubtless for the land itself), and due in one and two years from date, with interest. Notes dated September 30, 1819; acknowledged September 27, 1820; recorded January 6, 1821.

In 1821, nineteen instruments were recorded. Twelve deeds in fee, two deeds of gift, two mortgages, one bond for deed, one Sheriff's bond, one bill of sale.

In 1822, twenty-two instruments passed to the Record. Eighteen deeds in fee, two deeds in gift, one Sheriff's bond, one Coroner's bond.

As specimens of the frequency in those times of bringing deeds, etc., for record, we give a statement for 1826.

From November 28, 1825, to April 15, 1826, none; May 8, 1826, three; June 3, 1826, one; June 26, 1826, one; July 3, 1826, one; July 4, 1826, one; July 5, 1826, one; July 17, 1826, two; July 8, 1826, one; July 14, 1826, one; September 2, 1826, three; September 14, 1826, one; September 15, 1826, two; October 11, 1826, one; October 23, 1826, one; January 11, 1827, one.

It is refreshing to those who complain in these latter days of exorbitant fees to bloated officials, to learn that "Charlie" Conway's fee-bill for recording instruments of writing for the worthy citizens of Randolph County from September 2, 1826, to January 11, 1827, amounted to $6.75, or exactly $1.50 per month. This princely sum was not all, however. He had, besides his fees as Clerk of the Court (including Circuit and Probate business), his fees for issuing marriage licenses, and then the fees for serving as clerk of the Commissioners' Court, which would doubtless raise his monthly salary to $5, possibly $7.50 per month.

Our good friend, Conway, must have got even more than that, for the record frequently shows that he was in the habit, as often as he could get the chance, of taking acknowledgments, solemnizing marriages and similar things. And the entire avails of his official labor may possibly have swelled to the amount of $10 per month. And think what a vast sum, honest man as Judge Smith reckons him to be, he wrested from the pockets of the hard-handed yeomanry of Randolph during his almost life-long continuance in office.

Twenty-one years make 252 months, and ten times 252 are 2,520, and so many dollars, and how many more no mortal knows, that gray-haired official took in pretended compensation for work performed in official station, from the tax-payers and business men of that over-burdened community.

The first deed on record seems to be one made by Charles Conway (as Recorder) to Paul W. Way, agent, of sixty acres of land, being the tract donated by the said Conway to the county for the location of the county seat. The date of the deed is September 30, 1819.

Another deed is founded on notes that bear the same date, September 30, 1819, though the deed itself was acknowledged nearly a year later, September 27, 1820, and recorded January 6, 1821. It was from James Oldham to Paul W. Way, agent, for outlot No. 2, southeast square, Winchester, to secure the payment of two promissory notes for $75 each, due in one and two years from date.

The next deed in order is dated the next day, October 1, 1819, made by William Jones to Paul W. Way, agent, for Lot No. 14, southwest square, Winchester. It is a mortgage to secure pay-of two notes $31.28 each, due in one and two years.

The transaction hardly seems clear, but probably Way had conveyed the lot to Jones in some way, as agent for the county, and then Jones had mortgaged it back to Way to secure the payment of the purchase money. No account of such a transaction, however, has been found, and the actual deed on record, made by Way, as agent, conveying the lot in question to Jones, is dated in 1822 (probably), at any rate after the time for payment of the notes.

[NOTE.—Daniel Lasley, County Superintendent of Education, found amid the rubbish of the Recorder's office (where it had lain for more than sixty years, the original of the above document. He rescued it from its hiding place, mounted it in a neat frame, and it now serves to assist in decorating the walls of his office in the court house. Two or three other instruments (not so old as that, however), are in the back of the frame].

APPRENTICESHIPS.

On page 233, Book B. is found the record of the indentures of Cornelia Ann Jackson, a poor child of the age of five years and nine months. She is to be taught the "business and mystery of housekeeping," to have fifteen months' schooling (sixty-five days for three months, or 325 days on the whole) three months thereof to be when she is between the ages of fifteen and eighteen years; and at her majority she is to have as follows:

"One good feather bed with bedding, bedsteads and cord, such as are common among respectable farmers; one good spinning (flax) wheel; two good suits of warm clothing, such as good home-made flannel; two pair of new shoes, and two pair of new stockings."

On page 202, Book B, is found another record of apprenticeship, of a lad named Logan M. Jackson, to Francis Frazier. He is to have eighteen months' schooling (sixty-five days for three months), three months to be when he is between nineteen and twenty-one. He is to have $50 (in land, or otherwise under the direction of his guardian), two good home-made suits, two pair of shoes, two pair of stockings and one fur hat.

SHERIFF'S DEED.

The first Sheriff's deed that is found is made by Solomon Wright, Sheriff, of Lot No. 6, southeast square, Winchester, under a writ, "alias plures fieri facias," against Thomas Hutson and Jacob B. Hornish. Date of deed, April 12, 1823. Recorded, June 29, 1824.

The first mention in the record of a Notary Public appears under date of October 15, 1834. The deed was made by N. Longworth, of Cincinnati, and acknowledged by him at the date above mentioned, before James Foster, of Hamilton County, Ohio, who was a Notary Public.

The deed was made to Dennis Kelly, and was recorded October 27, 1834.

"FREE PAPERS."

A curiosity is to be seen under date of August 4, 1834. It consists of the "Free Papers" of Ezekiel Lewis, an enterprising colored man, who was one of the pioneers of the Greenville settlement, northeast of Spartansburg. We give the document entire:

STATE OF VIRGINIA, ROCKINGHAM COUNTY. } No. 52.

To wit: Registered in the office according to law, October 19, 1820. Ezekiel Lewis, a free man of color, about twenty-two years on the fifth day of March, 1829, as appears by his indenture, he having been bound by the overseers of Rockingham County, to John Koontz, to learn the tanning business. by order of the court of said county at the January court, 1818. He is about five feet ten and one-half inches high, has a scar on his forehead, which is not perceivable when his hat is on; he is stout built, and follows his trade, and is very dark.

The foregoing register was compared by the County Court of Rockingham County, with the said Ezekiel Lewis, and found to be duly made, and a copy thereof was ordered to be furnished him as the law directs. Done at October court, 1820.

In witness whereof I have delivered him this copy, and hereunto affixed the seal of my said county this 29th day of November, 1834, in the forty-ninth year of our commonwealth.

H. J. GAMBELL,
Clerk of Rockingham County.

Recorded (at Winchester) August 4, 1834.

[This Ezekiel Lewis became a permanent and prominent settler in the colored settlement on the Ohio line, and, at his death was the owner of an excellent tract of land, 160 acres, northeast 1, 16, 1.]

KINDS OF RECORDS KEPT.

For many years, all records belonging to the Recorder's office, were kept in the same set of books. But, after some years, different sets were provided, and there are now eighteen distinct sets of books in that office alone.

The records, in all, number 142 books; the deeds alone include sixty-five books; the mortgages number nineteen books; the chattel mortgages are in three books; the school fund mortgages comprise two books; tax titles are in two books; Sheriff's deeds have been recorded in two books; mechanic liens are all in one book; record of executions, one book; record of decrees, one book; record of fee bills, one book; indexes of deeds, twelve books; indexes of mortgages, seven books; entry of deeds, three books; entry of mortgages, three books; partition records, one book; soldiers' discharges, one book; town plats, one book; miscellaneous records, five books. Each book contains from 400 to 700 pages.

The whole number, as before stated, is 142, several of which are in the process of being filled. The contrast is indeed sharp and striking, in the Recorder's office, between the business in early years and at the present time. The first four years and four months have less than sixty entries, covering about sixty pages. The last four years include several thousand pages. For some years past a memorandum has been taken of the mortgages recorded, and also of those which have been canceled during the same time. The gratifying fact appears that the amount canceled far exceeds that of those entered upon record during the time in question, though the exact sums cannot now be stated.

ABSTRACT OF TITLES—RANDOLPH COUNTY.

This very important business was undertaken about 1875, by William Harris. Daniel Lesley bought half interest, and, in about a year, he purchased the whole. The work is immense, having taken thus far about six years, and requiring several months yet to complete the labor.

The books are as follows: The books of general abstract, 240 and 464, immense double folio pages; one book, maps of sections, 169 large double pages; two books, towns, 240 and 319 large double pages. The abstractor at present has his office in that of the Recorder. The enterprise is of great and constantly increasing importance to the real estate interests of the county.

MARRIAGES—RANDOLPH COUNTY.

A very ancient authority has declared that it "is not good for man to be alone," and for all the ages since that primitive era, the search has been unceasing by each individual man to find his mate.

This universal "race for a wife" was not stopped, perhaps not even checked by the process of emigration. The boys went on courting the girls in the western woods, even as they used to do, and their fathers before them had done, in their far-off Eastern or Southern homes. And hence it came to pass, ere a long time had lapsed, that the Clerk of the Court was called on for a "marriage license," and the services of the squire or parson were had in requisition, and the log cabin beneath the shadow of the beeches was the center of a gay and joyous festal scene, in the shape of a country wedding. And the young people of Randolph were no exception to the general rule in this respect. And so the record of marriages, as kept in the Clerk's office, begins at the very first, and keeps equal step through the lapsing years with the ceaseless whirl and turmoil of business and of pleasure.

That record, though faithful and true, doubtless, for the most part, to the facts of marriage, at any rate to the number seeking marriage in the county, yet fails to show the whole number of the residents of the county who, in those early years, took unto themselves wives of the daughters of the land.

It very often happens, almost of necessity, in fact, that the young men, hale, strong and personable, would come into the wilds and select for themselves a home, and after remaining long enough to clear a patch and erect a cabin, would return to the land of their nativity, marry the lovely lass who had long been the girl of their choice, and wend their cheerful way, sometimes on horseback, man and wife, possibly two upon the same horse, to the Western paradise, and settle down in their new home to fight life's rough battle in earnest together. One couple came on horseback, and the bride stuck her riding whip into the ground on reaching the place of their destination, and it stands there yet, now grown a giant tree, to commemorate their early arrival. The lady died many years ago, but the groom, then hale and young in 1822, lived until the spring of 1881 in the county, almost sixty years a denizen of Randolph, between eighty and ninety years old. And many found their mates among the damsels dwelling in the older settlements, outside of Randolph.

Two of the very first pioneers on White River went out from the places of their selection, and found their way down into Wayne County, the very first winter of their tarry in this region, and, when they returned, each had a wife to share his labors and his pleasures. And, moreover, as the number of settlers multiplied, there were swarms of boys and girls everywhere, for the old pioneer families were wondrous for their numbers. Ten, twelve, fourteen, eighteen, twenty-two, and even twenty-four children have been found to be reckoned in a single household. Some families there were who moved into the Western wilderness with fourteen children. One family in this region of the State numbered eighteen children, nine sons and nine daughters; and, when the youngest was twenty-three years of age, the whole eighteen were grown, married and still living, as also the father of this immense company of descendants; and now, when the youngest is forty-four years old, twelve of the eighteen yet behold the glorious sun, and still breathe the vital air. There is a citizen now residing in the county, who has eleven sons now alive, all farmers but two, and every one Republicans, so that (with his own vote) he turned an even dozen for the successful candidate in 1880. No wonder that Randolph gave 2,200 majority for Garfield.

The first license for marriage in Randolph County was issued to Jacob Wright and Sally Wright, February 1, 1819; and they were married February 2, 1819, by Rev. John Gibson, M. E. preacher.

The second marriage was that of Absalom Gray and Margery Cox.

The license was dated June 7, 1819, and the marriage took place June 10, 1819, the nuptial ceremony being performed by John Wright, Justice of the Peace.

The third marriage license was to Samuel Frazier and Mary Cook, dated June 21, 1819. The marriage was performed by Ephraim Bowen, Justice of Peace, August 3, 1819, six weeks after the license was issued.

The number of licenses varies greatly in different years. In 1819, twelve licenses were issued; in 1820, ten; in 1821, ten; in 1822, eight; in 1823, twenty-three; in 1824, seventeen; in 1825, twenty-five; in 1826, fifteen; in 1827, thirty; in 1828, twenty-seven; in 1829, twenty-four; in 1830, thirty-nine; in 1831, thirty-two; and up to April, 1832, sixteen.

From February, 1819, to April, 1830, 290 marriage licenses were issued by the County Clerk; up to August, 1837, 271; to September, 1847, 907; to July, 1852, 686; to June, 1858, 1,164; to October, 1865, 1,272; to February, 1870, 1,109; January, 1875, 1,208; to January, 1879, 1,117; to February, 1881, 593. Making a total in sixty-two years of marriage licenses issued by the County Clerk of Randolph County of 8,678 couples, waiting to be joined in the bonds of holy wedlock. Probably, including those happy Randolph swains, who were so fortunate as to find their fair dulcineas in other counties or other States, the whole number would reach 9,000.

Who and how many of this immense multitude still remain alive; how many yet are residents of Randolph County; how many have removed to other regions of our widespread land; how many have gone to that clime where they "neither marry nor are given in marriage;" how many descendants have sprung from these marriage unions; how many have been separated by the remorseless hand of death; how many of the whole vast number have been second, third, or even fourth marriages, and how many now remain in the loneliness of their desolation, waiting in patient resignation the hour when they shall be summoned to join the pale nations of the dead are known only to Him who dwells in the light of omniscience!

This statement of the marriage licenses issued does not embrace those who were married in "Quaker meeting;" and that, in this county, where, almost from the very beginning, there have been six or eight "preparative meetings of Friends" in constant and prosperous existence, must have been a considerable number. How many, however, have thus been joined in the bonds of holy wedlock, the means of determining are not now at hand.

The whole number of marriages cannot fall far short of 10,000.

RECORDS—CIRCUIT COURT.

Amount of record. Up to April, 1838, not quite twenty years, there had been made in all about 500 pages of record for the business of the Circuit Court, an average of about twenty-five pages for each year. The first twenty-four terms, one hundred and twenty-one pages of record were filled in the "Order Book," making an average of five pages per term, or ten pages per year.

From that time the record stands thus: April term, 1840, 96 pages; September term, 1840, 80 pages; March term, 1841, 74 pages; September term, 1841, 66 pages; March term, 1842, 101 pages; September term, 1842, 82 pages; March term, 1876, 142 pages; March term, 1877, 825 pages; during the year 1880, 446 pages.

Besides all this there is an immense amount of Probate Record and of Vacation Record, etc., concerning which we have made no account. Statements concerning the marriage license record may be found elsewhere.

The entire mass of "records" in the various "county offices" is something astonishing.

We have already stated the "Books of Record" in the Recorder's office to be 147 (including those pertaining to the "abstract of title).

In the Clerk's office are about 340 books; in the Auditor's office are about 240 books; in the Treasurer's office are about 250 books. The whole mass of "record" includes about 1,000 books, most of them large, with from 300 to 700 pages each, and some of them of immense size.

Besides all these, the "papers" belonging to every case that has ever been before the courts are supposed to be on file, and every report made to the Commissioners and everything else is (in theory) preserved (in one office or another) for ready and convenient reference. In the Auditor's office "pigeon holes" are made to suffice for the "stowing away" of these endless "papers;" but in the Clerk's office, through the painstaking ingenuity of the late Circuit Clerk, John W. Macy, Esq., a system of tin "boxes" has been put into use, in which all the "cases" that could be found in the office are deposited in regular detailed order.

The whole number of boxes is 1,685. Only 1,047 of them are yet in use. Each box containes a greater or less number of "cases." Some have in them as many as twenty "cases." Each "case" is in a strong, firm envelope, the envelope being numbered to show the "box" to which it belongs and also its own number in the box.

The "cases" are "indexed" in the "order books" so as to show the number of the "box" and of the "case" in each box. The system is ingenious, simple, perfect and capable of indefinite expansion in application to years or even centuries to come; and its successful establishment in the Clerk's office is of incalculable advantage to the public business.

AMOUNT OF RECORD—CIRCUIT COURT.

First six terms, 8 pages, October, 1818, to October, 1820.

Second six terms, 21 pages, April, 1821, to November, 1822.

Third six terms, 41 pages, August, 1823, to August, 1825.

Fourth six terms, 51 pages, February, 1826, to August, 1828.

Fifth interval, 383 pages, February, 1829, to April, 1838.

Sixth interval, 476 pages, May, 1838, to January, 1841.

Seventh interval, 560 pages, September, 1845, to February, 1849.

Eighth interval, 640 pages, March, 1876, to January, 1877.

Ninth interval, 626 pages, September, 1879, to February, 1880.

These statistics show an almost incredible difference between the early and the later times in this respect.

These statements include only the "order books," so called, besides which there are the "fee books," "index books" and various other kinds, familiar indeed to the incumbent of the office, but a fathomless mystery to the "outsider."

RECORDS—CIRCUIT COURT GLEANINGS.

In looking over the books containing the records of the Circuit Court, various items of interest have been gleaned, some of which are given below:

November, 1823, a license to sell spirits was granted to William Suttonfield, of Fort Wayne, under bond of $500.

August, 1826, Daniel Shoemaker was fined $1 for disturbing the court by crowding on the window. The next day the fine was remitted and paid back to the delinquent.

August, 1827, the grand jury report concerning the jail, that it is clean but not strong, that the trap-door is not sufficient and that the hinges on the outside door are not strong enough.

February, 1828, Thomas Shaylor was indicted for an assault and battery. He pleaded guilty, and was fined $1 and costs, and was to stand committed until paid.

Bazel Jay was declared insane, and guardians were appointed to take charge of his estate, viz., Nathan Hockęt, James Jay and Joseph Jay.

Same court—Slander trial. John Irvin vs. Richard Tharp. Defendent adjudged guilty, and damages set at $17.52\frac{2}{12}$ (not another mill) and costs. It would be interesting to learn by what process the jury were able to attain such marvelous exactness, even to the twelfth part of a cent, but that will probably never be forthcoming. That degree of exactness would be invaluable at the present time, both to juries and otherwise.

August, 1828; Marshall Wright vs. Kizer for an affray. They confessed guilty, and were adjudged to pay each $1 fine and half the costs.

August, 1828, grand jury report "the jail is sufficiently strong but not sufficiently clean. It needs an inside door-shutter, and a lock for the accommodation of both sexes."

February, 1829, Sheriff allowed $1 for furnishing wood for the session of the court.

If we could only find so accommoduting a Sheriff now-a-days! But alas! tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur cum illis. Times change and we change with them.

February, 1829, Paul M. Way indicted for retailing liquors without license. The defendent pleaded guilty, was fined $2 and costs, and paid the fine to the clerk forthwith. Not many years afterward, the same Paul Way was an active, thoroughgoing temperance man. And the exact why of the case does not appear in the record.

Edward Mason was indicted for "vending foreign merchandise without license." Pleaded guilty and was fined $1 and costs, and it is to be presumed he paid up like a little man, "though nothing is said about it in the records."

Several indictments are found against parties for selling spirits without license.

The jail is reported to be clean and strong, but not sufficiently warm.

February, 1830, the fact is set down that the petit jury got 50 cents a day.

Seventeen jurymen served a total of forty days, and received among them $20.

The Associate Judges received $2 a day.

February, 1834. Ezekiel Roe vs. Isaac Lewallyn and Edward McKew. Charge—trespass vi et armis. Lewallyn adjudged guilty and fined $13, McKew cleared and authorized to recover costs of plaintiff.

Hannah Lewallyn vs. Ezekiel Roe—charge of slander. Defendant guilty and mulcted in damages 1 cent and costs. Paid forthwith to the Clerk.

May, 1835, Ezekiel Roe decreed to lie in jail six hours for contempt of court, in making noise and other disturbance in court-room.

Winchester was incorporated as a town in 1838, by popular vote.

At an election held to determine the question, thirty-eight voted for incorporation, and none against. The persons voting were these:

John Way, Carey S. Goodrich, Edward B. Goodrich, George T. Willson, John D. Stewart, George M. Goodrich, David Heaston, Jeremiah Smith, Nathan Garrett, John Neff, Zachary Puckett, John Connor, Josiah Mongar, Jacob Elzroth, Alfred Rossman, Robert Way, John Wright, Martin Comer, Charles W. Wischeart, Andrew Aker, Welcome L. Puckett, James W. Olds, John Aker, George W. Monks, Elisha Martin, Michael Aker, Jesse Moorman, David Aker, Thornton Alexander, Paul W. Way, Stephen Segraves, W. Page, Philip Allen, Jesse Way, Joseph Botkin, William Kizer, Micajah Puckett, James Alexander.

The town was divided into five wards, and a Trustee was chosen for each ward:

First Ward, northeast square, Elias Kizer; Second Ward, north front and northwest square, Nathan Garrett; Third Ward, west front and southwest square, Jeremiah Smith; Fourth Ward, south front and southeast square, John D. Stewart; Fifth Ward, east front, Jesse Way.

October, 1839, eleven indictments were found against one person for selling liquor. He was found guilty and fined $2 in each case, and the costs also were assessed against him.

On file in the "pigeon holes" are found immense quantities of all sorts of things. Among them are great numbers of old "bonds." From these were selected the following "grocers' bonds," given at various times:

James Burke, 1835; James H. Hart, 1836; Thornton Alexander, 1836; John Neff, 1836; Jesse Cartwright, 1836; S. Dye, 1837; A. B. Hester, 1837; A. Garinger, 1838; D. S. Dye, 1838; Michael Aker, 1838; Henry Neff, 1838; Alexander & Martin, 1838; William Page, 1839.

Thornton Alexander is probably the one who was afterward elected Sheriff, became a sot, and finally died some years afterward with delirium tremens; and from his desolate dwelling while his lifeless corpse lay stiff and gaunt therein, the ladies of Winchester, headed by the widow of the wretched man, marched in long and grim procession to the groggery of William Page, and, knocking in the heads of his barrels and what-not, spilled the abominable, murderous stuff into the street, out of which startling transaction grew the noted "Page Liquor Case," so famous twenty-five years ago. And the same terrible demon of the drink traffic raises still its devilish head, and eagerly goes about to destroy everything fair and lovely and of good report.

Hundreds, possibly thousands, of indictments have been effected against liquor sellers in Randolph County, and scores of men have been fined for selling strong drink "contrary to law." Yet men are to be found who, for money, will carry on the mischievous traffic, and law-makers will still play with the wild beast, Alcohol, as though it were a merry, gamboling kitten to be petted and cuddled, instead of being, as it is, a fierce and ruthless monster to be throttled and slain, with its horrid carcass burned to ashes and scattered to the four winds.

CURIOUS CASES.

In 1842, Philip Kabel, a wool-carder, sued one Jonathan Frier for slander. The complainant charges that Frier had said publicly of Kabel, "He spoiled my wool," "he stole ten pounds out of sixty, and that before my eyes." After a severe quarrel, the matter was settled apparently; Frier agreed to haul a load of wheat to Lawrenceburg for Kabel and to take him and his family on a visit into Wayne County, Ind.; and on this promise from Frier, Kabel withdrew the slander charge from court.

It would seem, however, that Frier broke his agreement. At any rate Kabel sued Frier for damages for breach of contract and recovered $4. Frier appealed to the court and a judgment was rendered against Frier, but only for $3. Whether that was the end, and how much was the cost we do not know. It must have been considerable, and, moreover, must have been somewhat equally divided. Frier would have to pay the first costs, since he was beaten, and Kabel would have to pay the second since the amount was lowered in the court above. But what a comment on the folly and passion of men!

ANOTHER CASE.

A father was a farmer, his son was a blacksmith. They dealt and kept accounts; on a petty disagreement as to items of account, one sued the other before a Justice, and the beaten one appealed to court. When the case was decided the parties provoked each other into a fight in the court yard, and a severe battle took place; suits followed, and so on until both were broken up after years of bitter hostility and estrangement, and hundreds, perhaps thousands of dollars expense.

CASES IN COURT.

Fey, for killing Heltz, his son-in-law, in 1845, convicted of murder, sentenced to be hanged, commuted to imprisonment for life, hung himself in prison soon after entering penitentiary.

Calvin Bunch, for poisoning his wife near Bartonia in 1863, convicted of murder in first degree and sentenced to imprisonment for life; pardoned by Gov. Gray in 1880.

Barney Hinshaw for killing Abram Heaston in Winchester, acquitted on the ground of self-defense.

—— ———, for killing Kennon at Union City, adjudged guilty of manslaughter with three years in penitentiary.

Another murder at Union City, we have not the names.

Case of John H. Lewis and son, for killing young Lumpkin in 1879. A terrible case of passion; one man killed and two badly wounded, concerning a ditch across a pike.

The public mind was greatly aroused, and many thought it a clear case of willful murder; the result, however, as tried in Jay County, was a verdict of acquittal, which ending was, to say the least, entirely unlooked for and, to many, utterly unaccountable.

Case of State vs. Woodbury was a remarkable one, in which a sister undertook to fasten upon another sister the charge of having set a barn on fire to spite herself against a suitor for giving attentions to another. The trial occurred seven years after the burning of the barn charged upon the young woman. The result was a verdict of acquittal, which is thought to have been in accord with the general sentiment.

A very curious case was tried in the Circuit Court, in the fall of 1880. Hartzell vs. Hartzell, in which both man and wife sued mutually for divorce, but the judge denied them both, so that in law they are still one, although in fact distinctly and decidedly two.

CASE IN PROBATE COURT.

In the time of Judge George Debolt, a jury was trying a case which had already taken a week and was likely to take two weeks more. The wages of the jury were 25 cents a case. Some of the jury were Asahel Stone, W. W. Smith, Elias Kizer, Pearson, etc. Pearson had lost a child and was nearly crazy with grief, and the jury finally agreed out of consideration for him. But during the progress of the case, after a week's sitting as above stated, the jury rebelled, and informed the Judge that they must have pay or they would refuse to continue. The Judge was surprised, and said to them: "Do you know it will be my duty to send you to prison for contempt of court?" "We do, and we shall not resist your order if you make it." The worthy Judge was nonplussed, but the parties to the suit came to the rescue and agreed to pay the jury per diem till the trial was ended, which was some three weeks or more.

The courts in their various forms furnish sad commentaries upon the failings and crimes of the human race, as also upon the curious and strange "tangle" into which, often, in spite of everything, business will manage to fall. He that knows enough to keep "clear of law" is indeed an exceedingly wise and wonderfully fortunate man.

In old times, a landlord who had been engaged for years in a wearisome and expensive lawsuit, upon the decision of the case, painted a new sign for his hotel, having on one side a man clothed in rags, and on the other a man with no clothes at all. When asked the reason for such a freak, he replied, "The man in rags is the successful party in a lawsuit, and the man in puris naturalibus is the one who is beaten."

RECORDS OF COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

The record begins in November, 1818.

Superintendents of school sections were appointed:

William Hockett, Townships 18 and 19, Range 14.

John Wright, Township 20, Range 14.

James Massey, Townships 19 and 20, Range 13.

Expenses of establishing the county seat were found to be $97. Two and a half pages of record were made at the first session.

December, 1818, contract was entered into for building a court house and jail; two pages of record.

February, 1819, two pages.

May, 1819, George Bowles appointed Lister (Assessor); cost of assessing the county, $10; county tax was 25 cents on each "horse beast;" three pages of record. Commissioners' wages, $2 per day.

August, 1819, five pages.

November, 1819, Jesse Johnson, Treasurer, allowed $13 for services to November, 1819.

West River laid off from west line of Section 16, Township 18, Range 14, north to White River and west to county line; record, seven pages.

February. 1820, Abner Overman. Lister; four pages of record.

May, 1820, four pages.

June, 1820, special session upon the court house and jail: one and a half pages.

August, 1820, Ward Township created, whole north part of the county; Wayne Township also, extending indefinitely northward to Fort Wayne, etc. [Records missing up to Nov., 1825.]

November, 1825, first session of Board of Justices; two pages.

January, 1826, Robert Way was allowed $5.25 "for 'blazing lines' through the woods for streets in the town of Winchester," six days' work, 87½ cents per day; four pages record.

March, 1826, two pages.

May, 1826, Joshua Foster, who had been Commissioner of Greenville & Winchester State road, had removed from the region, and John Nelson was elected in his room.

Road laid out from Hockett's road three-quarters of a mile north of "Gass'" in an irregular direction to the State road at Vernon." [Where is that? Perhaps Sampletown—No one now seems to know.] Eleven pages of record. David Vestal was paid $5 for assessing Liberty Township (Delaware County.)

July, 3, 1826—Special—two pages; called to arrange for a new brick court house.

July 29, 1826, conditions for court house agreed upon; two and a half pages.

September, 1826, David Wysong had contracted for building a new court house; the price does not appear. He is allowed $225 extra for rock foundation instead of brick; four pages.

November, 1826, three pages.

Truly Yours
J. N. Converse

January, 1827, David Wysong is paid $292.50 in part for work on court house.

March, 1827, one and a half pages.

May, 1827, Robinson McIntyre appointed Trustee of Seminary Fund for three years; nine pages.

July, 1827, bounty offered for wolf scalps; 12½ cents over six months old, 6¼ cents under that age, except old prairie wolves. Stony Creek was laid off, comprising Townships 19, 20 and 21, Range 12; two pages record.

Account of sales of lots in Winchester by Paul W. Way, County Agent:

First sale, November 6, 1818, thirty lots, $1469.76; second sale, September 30, 1819, fourteen lots, $736.32; third sale, September 26, 1822, eleven lots, $269.16; fourth sale, February 26, 1825, eleven lots, $208.26; fifth sale, November 26, 1825, eighteen lots, $121.15; sixth sale, January, 1828 (items not given).

September, 1827, Albert Banta was acquitted of 13 cents tax on town lot; John Coates, 16 cents for the same, which doubtless made them feel better; William Smith was allowed $6 for keeping Judith Ray, an infant pauper, three months; Curtis Cleny was allowed $11.44 for keeping Levi Hale, a pauper, three months; three and a half pages.

November, 1827, road laid out leading from Winchester toward Richmond, between Obadiah Harris and John Moorman, by William Connor's, Hezekiah Hockett's and the meeting house near William Hunt's; two pages. January, 1828, one and a half pages; March, 1828, 5 pages. Inside work of court house let. May, 1828, twelve pages; July, 1828, two pages; September. 1828, five pages; November, 1828, Paul W. Way was allowed $189.90 for work on court house. January, 1829, Solomon Wright was allowed $112.50 for work on court house. David Heaston, allowed for same, $109.67; Abraham Kerne acquitted of 4½ cents tax; Elijah Arnold adjudged a resident; three pages. March, 1829, four pages; May, 1829, fine reported by Justice assessed against John Stevenson for swearing ten oaths, $10; allowance made for keeping pauper six months, $12; twelve pages. July, 1829, three pages.

September, 1829, Ezekiel Williams is reported as fined for swearing ten oaths, $10; for something else, $2; total, $12. Joseph Crown is allowed to work at his trade in the west room of the court house; seven pages.

January, 1830, road is laid "from the west end of Hezekiah Hockett's lane to the Wayne County line, at the southeast corner of Martindale's deadening." Surveyors now might have some trouble in locating that road; Surveyor Jaqua would better be set to find the route. But the parties then knew where the road was to be and the Commissioners thought that was enough.

December, 31, 1829, John Mann fined for working on Sunday in his clearing, $1; no costs charged, David Semans, J. P.; four pages; March, 1830, five pages. May, 1830, Travis Adcock is allowed $1.50 for three days' time spent in attending to a pauper. Philip Storms then lived in the county since he is appointed supervisor in place of Charles Simmons; thirteen pages.

July, 1830, four pages. David Semans, President.

September, 1830, four pages; November, 1830, two pages, William Hunt, President; January, 1831, John Odel, County Treasurer, four pages; Treasurer's Report for 1830, $869.24; Treasurer's Commission, $25.90.

Joel Ward is engaged to do work at his own price; if he and the county do not agree, a committee of workmen are to settle the dispute, and he may draw at any time for $50. May, 1831, four pages.

Road laid from southwest corner of Samuel Smith's fence to the crossing south of Jackson's, thence to new road at the north end of William Smith's lane. Charmingly accurate and clear description, only "Samuel Smith's fence," southwest corner and all, is probably gone long ago.

Commissioners' Court revived and county divided into three districts: First District, east of line dividing Townships 15 and 16, Range 14. Second District, west of said line to the line between Townships 15 and 16, Range 13. Third District, west of said last line.

Commissioners met September, 1831. Cartway laid out from Winchester across ford of White River to Lewallyn's mill, five pages.

November, 1831, five pages; January, 1832, report of Paul W. Way, agent, in settlement; total receipts, $2,679.02¼, settled in full; eight pages.

May, 1832, Jere Smith appointed Commissioner of the "three per cent fund." Ordered as follows (of that fund): $50 to the bridge over White River east of Winchester, $30 to the bridge over Sugar Creek, $500 upon the road from Winchester to Newcastle. S. R. Shaylor, J. P., reports: Three men fined for swearing, $3; fine for assault, $1; fine for disturbing religious meeting, $1; eighteen pages.

September, 1832, State road from Winchester to Newcastle located shortly before; expenses of location through Randolph paid by Commissioners; length of road in Randolph 17 miles, 28 chains, 47 links; November, 1832, seven pages; January, 1833, County receipts, $796.13; March, 1833, John Odle, Treasurer, reports: Receipts, $2.50; expenditures, $1.50; balance on hand, $1. Jeremiah Smith appointed Treasurer one year.

May, 1833, Jere Smith, Surveyor, makes reports of the location of the following roads: State road from Richmond to Fort Wayne; State road from Winchester to Newcastle; State road from Greenville (via Ridgeville and Fairview) to Saunders' in Delaware County.

September, 1833, Andrew Aker is appointed Commissioner of the three per cent fund, the avails from which fund are said to be $500. Paul W. Way is put in charge of road from Winchester toward Fort Wayne to expend $150. David Heaston is to expend $150 on the Greenville road; David Frazier is to apply $90 on the road toward Richmond, and $70 toward Newcastle.

November, 1833, Jackson laid out, including also all of what is now Wayne. Treasurer's receipts, $775.73.

January, 1834, Green laid out, present limits and two and a half miles of what is now the north end of Monroe; Treasurer's receipts, $759.19; taxes laid—license for capital in trade, $1,000, or less, $10; license for each addition thousand, $5; license for grocery, $10; license for selling wooden clocks, $10; license for tavern, $10; license for covering horses, one price per season; horses, 37½; oxen, 37½; watches, 37½; carriages, four wheels, $1; carriages, two wheels, 50; brass clocks, $1; town lots, two per cent; first rate land, 1 cent per acre; second rate do, ¾ cent; third rate do, ½ cent; Treasurer's report, $221.42.

September, 1834, half a mile taken from Greensfork and added to Washington, Andrew Aker appointed Treasurer; receipts for the year, $1,070.94¼; Joel Ward's work viewed by referees and adjudged to be worth $188.00 (moral, agree upon the price beforehand); Salamonie Township (Jay County) erected.

January, 1835, Nettle Creek, created with one mile also that now belongs to Stony Creek. West River arranged seven miles long and four miles wide (east line one mile west of present line).

May, 1835, Madison Township laid off in what is now Jay County, five miles wide on the east side of Jay County; meeting advertised by the Sheriff for the formation of an agricultural society to be held on the last Saturday in May, 1835.

September, 1835, two paupers farmed out at $30 per year; road laid beginning at the southwest corner of Robert Bunker's door yard; nice place to begin at.

March, 1836—Building an office for the Clerk and Recorder. Ordered to be let by Jere Smith. It seems from subsequent entries that David Heaston took the contract.

November, 1836—Three per cent funds on hand, amounting to $1,914.22. Ordered to be expended thus: Greenville State road, $700; Richmond and Fort Wayne, $800; Centerville Road, $250; Newcastle, $114.22; Muncie, $50.

November, 1836—David Heaston undertook the contract to build an office for the Clerk and Recorder.

Samuel Skaggs was appointed Trustee of "Library Company" in place of Jere Smith, resigned.

March, 1837—Treasurer's receipts, $1,808.16.

May, 1837—License on vending wooden clocks at $60. Andrew Aker, Treasurer.

March, 1838—Union Township, four miles square laid off, embracing the north end of West River Township. Edmund B. Goodrich and Jere Smith appear as Commissioners of the Seminary fund.

Reports from seven Congressional townships show funds amounting to $2,640.81.

May, 1838—County divided into forty-seven road districts.

September, 1838—Wayne Township cut off from Jackson. Nathan Garrett licensed to keep tavern.

May Term, 1839—Court house not done. Paul W. Way directed to relet the job of completing it. It had been let to David Heaston, but he would not fulfill the conditions of the contract.

Benjamin Inman was allowed a license to sell goods at Springboro.

Receipts for county from January to November, 1839, $1,842.69¾.

Michael Aker contracted for finishing the court house for $2,480.

That second court house would seem to be almost as long in building as Herod's Temple in Jerusalem. "Forty and seven years was this temple in building, and wilt thou destroy it in three days?"

J. L. Addington was paid for attending the agricultural society 75 cents.

William Kizer, Collector—Receipts $2,707.24¾. Three per cent fund expended that year.

S. D. Woodworth, $1,894.27. H. D. Huffman, $318.79.

State road from Winchester via Ridgeville, Mount Pleasant and Camden to Bluffton, located.

Also road located from Cambridge to Fort Wayne; field notes recorded. Remonstrance presented against taverns and groceries to sell intoxicating drink, signed as follows, dated June 1, 1840: George W. Goodrich, W. C. Willmore, Moorman Way, George W. Monks, James W. Olds, E. B. Goodrich, G. W. Henderson, David Aker, Robert Way, W. M. Way, Philip Allen, S. B. Cunningham, Elias Kizer, Robert Woody, Paul W. Way, James Butterworth, David E. Heaston, John. Way, Thomas Best, Nathan Wooters, Asahel Stone, W. G. Puckett, Cary S. Goodrich, Mary Reeder, R. Irvin, Nelson S. Ball, Henry Diggs, William Holderman, John Leake.

March, 1840—Heman Searl received license for tavern at Deerfield.

May, 1840—Clock peddlers' license, $100.

August, 1840—J. L. Addington was allowed $2 for attending agricultural society.

March, 1845—Roads located. State road from Huntsville via Unionsport, Macksville, and Fairview into Jay County, nineteen and three-quarter miles in Randolph County.

State road from Deerfield to Granville, Delaware County, via Steubenville and Fairview, twelve and two-third miles in Randolph County.

COUNTY AGENT.

It would seem from the "record" that the business of County Agent, beginning at the first establishment of the county, continued a long time.

Paul W. Way was appointed County Agent in 1818, to sell lots in the county seat, etc., and in June, 1852, thirty-four years after his appointment, he reports business as follows: Moneys received since February, 1847, $497.79, with vouchers for the same. Whether this report closes his business the statement does not say.

1856—Two brick buildings were erected for county purposes.

It would appear that the second court house of 1826 was a "poor job" and became worthless so as to be abandoned. These buildings as above were erected for county offices, jail and Sheriff's residence, coupled with halls for secret societies in rooms above, and the courts were held for years in what is now Ward's Hall, north of the public square.

June, 1859, Franklin Township erected, the last and smallest in the county.

June, 1875—New court house put under contract.

April, 1877—New court house completed.

Spring of 1881, new jail contracted for and commenced, A. G. Campfield, contractor, Hodson, architect.

PROBATE COURT.

At first and up to 1834, the Associate Judges acted as a Probate Court. From 1834 to 1852, there was a distinct Probate Court presided over by a separate Judge.

From 1852 to 1873 the Probate business was done by the Court of Common Pleas.

In 1873, the Court of Common Pleas was abolished and the Probate business was transferred to the Circuit Court.

The first to administer the affairs of Probate for Randolph County were Hons. John Wright and William Edwards, Associate Judges for the county, elected August, 1818.

The first court seems to have been held May 3, 1819. At that time Antony Way (son of "Huldy" Way), aged ten years, nine months, was bound to Thomas Frazier to learn "farming." He was to receive eighteen months in all, schooling, and at his majority $100 in a horse, saddle and bridle, and one good suit of new cloth clothes. Thinking that a veritable "bond of Apprenticeship" "all of the olden time" would be a "curiosity" to the present generation, we subjoin the "bond" by which Thomas Frazier, master, and Antony Way, apprentice, were mutually obligated to care and instruction and service:

This Indenture, made this third day of May, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, Witnesseth: That Antony Way, son of "Huldy" Way, aged ten years nine months and five days, by and with the consent of his guardian, Jonathan Ozburn, hath, of his own free will, placed and bound himself to Thomas Frazier, to learn the art of labor or husbandry, and with him the said Thomas Frazier to dwell, continue, and serve from the day of date hereof until the said Antony Way shall accomplish and arrive at the full age of 21 years; during all which term of years the said Antony Way his said master shall well and faithfully serve, his secrets keep, his lawful commands gladly do and obey; hurt to his master he shall not do, nor willfully suffer it to be done by others, but of the same to the utmost of his power shall give notice forthwith to his said master; the goods of his said master he shall not embezzle nor waste, nor them lend without his consent to any; at cards, dice, nor any other unlawful games he shall not play; taverns nor ale houses he shall not frequent, * * * * * * * matrimony he shall not contract, from the service of his said master he shall not absent himself without his master's consent; but in all things as a good and faithful servant shall and will demean and behave himself toward his said master and all his during his said term. And the said master his said servant in the art of husbandry will teach and instruct or cause to be well and sufficiently instructed after the best way and manner he can; and shall and will find and allow to his said servant meat, drinks, lodging, and "apperrill," both linen and woolens and all other necessaries fit and convenient for said servant during the term aforesaid; and also shall, for the space of one year between the date hereof and the time when the said Antony Way shall come to be fifteen years of age, put the said Antony to some good English school to be instructed in reading and writing and arithmetic, and also six months when the said Antony is between the age of 18 and 20, to be instructed as aforesaid; and at the expiration of the said term of servitude for the said Antony the said Thomas Frazier shall pay to the said Antony the sum of $100, to be discharged in a horse, saddle and bridle, and also one good suit of new cloth clothes. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals the day and year first above written. his mark.

ANTONY X WAY, [SEAL.]

Attest, CHARLES CONWAY, Clerk. THOMAS FRAZIER, [SEAL.]

Under date of March, 1821, stands an inventory of goods belonging to Isaac Burnett, a deceased Indian trader, who had been located at Fort Wayne, then and for some years longer in Randolph County.

Some of the items appear below.

347¾ yards blue calico, at 35 cents	$121 71
9 yards Russia sheeting, at 75 cents	6 75
21 yards English calico, at 62½ cents	13 25
76 yards domestic cotton, at 30 cents	22 20
72 good coon skins, at 40 cents	28 80
82 bad coon skins, at 20 cents	16 40
4 catt, 1 rat, 2 bear skins (sic)	5 00
1 sorrel horse	15 00
Money on hand	153 00
56 pounds butter, at 12½ cents	7 00
18¾ pounds powder, at 87½ cents	16 43¾
Silk handkerchiefs, shawls, cross-barred handkerchiefs, scarlet clothes, blue cloth, blankets, surcingles, bridles, legging straps, knives, spurs, plumes, snuff boxes, fine combs, flints, screw nippers, playing cards, 26 looking glasses, wampum, belts, files, rasps, shears, bits, striped deer skins, moccasins, saddle bags, ribbons, etc., etc	25 00
20 best fine combs, at 37½ cents	7 50
657 ear bobs
6 pair large ear wheels	6 00
6 pair small ear wheels	4 50
1000 white wampum	4 00
950 purple wampum	4 00
7 tomahawks	6 12½
2 traps	6 00
42 deer skins
1 pound tea	2 00
1 breechcloth, etc., etc., etc

B. B. Kercheval,
John P. Hedges,
Thomas Forsuth, } Appraisers.
Samuel Hanna, Administrator.

Fort Wayne, March, 1821.

FIRST WILL.

The first will on Record is that of John Ozburn, decedent, of Clinton County, Ohio. Its provisions are in brief, as follows:

1. Pay his debts and expenses.
2. Pay to Daniel Ozburn (his son) and his heirs forever, $1.
3. Pay his daughter, Ann Kersey, and her heirs forever, $1.
4. Pay Sarah Way's heirs, $1.
5. Pay Huldy Way (wife of Nathan Way) and her heirs forever, $1.
6. Give to John Ozburn a three-year old mare and one hundred acres of land (he to support his mother during life, or widowhood).
7. Give to Jonathan Ozburn sixty acres, the rest of the 160 acres (left after the one hundred acres on the north side has been taken by John Ozburn) upon payment of $80.
8. Pay to Mary Ballard and her heirs, $1.
9. Give to Susannah Ozburn and her heirs forever, a cow and $10.
10. To my beloved wife, Sarah Ozburn, all my movable property during her widowhood, then to return to John Ozburn, to be his forever, except her wheel and bed; she to have possession of the one hundred acres willed to John Ozburn, and support therefrom during widowhood.

FIRST ADMINISTRATION CASE.

April 30, 1821: Estate of John Moore. Administrator, David Wright. Sale May 25, 1821:

Feathers, $7.27¾; one stew-kettle, $2.05; one flax wheel, $1.39; one weeding hoe, 96 cents; one Yankee hoe, 75 cents; one kettle and bale, $4.06; one mare and bridle, $42.91; one bake oven and bale, $1.80; six pewter plates, $2.51; one castor hat, $1.76. Total, $84.81.

FIRST GIRL APPRENTICE.

April 8, 1822, Mary Moore, four years ten months, Solomon Wright, guardian, bound to James Massey till eighteen; to have schooling one year, and, at majority, one suit of clothes, one feather bed and furniture, and one cow and calf.

April, 1822, George Burkett obtained letters of administration on the estate of Dr. William Turner, of Fort Wayne, deceased.

April, 1822, Daniel Ozburn came into court with receipts from six legatees of John Ozburn, decedent, and paid $1 to the court for the heirs of Sarah Way.

July, 1822, Samuel Hanna, administrator of Isaac Burnett, of Fort Wayne deceased, returns inventory and bill of sale, containing among other things, as follows:

Sixty-seven deer skins at 13 cents, $8.71; twenty-six coon skins at 27½ cents, $5.33; thirty eight dressed deer skins at 36 cents, $13.68; seventeen muskrat skins at 16 cents, $2.72; reporting the debts to be $5,469.18. The estate was declared bankrupt, and an order issued to sell two sections of land belonging to the said decedent. The land had been granted to him at the treaty of St. Mary's in 1818, in connection with the Pottawatomies. Permission of the President of the United States for the sale had to be obtained, which was granted by James Monroe, and the land was sold.

Also his undivided interest in six sections granted to his children which he had by an Indian woman, Cakama, a Pottawatomie, sister of Toppemba, principal chief of the nation. The land was appraised at 68¾ and 50 cents per acre.

The tract on Tippecanoe River was sold at 70 cents, and that on Flint River, Michigan, for 50 cents per acre. Total, $768.

July 22, 1822, George Burkett, administrator of Dr. William Turner, returned the bill of sale, containing the following items.

"Waggon"	$30 00	1 Saddle	$ 5 00
Cow and calf	10 50	10 Bushels potatoes	5 25
Cow and calf	14 00	1 Box surgical instruments	8 00
4 Cows and calves (to the widow—all)	13 37	Medicine	16 00
2 Cows	16 50	1 Sofa	16 56¼
1 "Yoak" oxen (widow)	15 00	1 "Beaureau"	21 00
1 Horse (widow)	20 00	Shovel and tongs	4 37½
3 Yearlings and a calf (all)	18 00	Knives and forks	6 64¾
1 Grindstone	8 00	Pair decanters	15 00
3 Head cattle	18 37½	10 Wine glasses	1 62½
1 Large tin kettle	5 12½	½ Dozen tumblers	3 60½
1 Roaster	1 50	2 Beds and furniture	18 50
1 "Lantorn"	4 00	Set castors and glasses	5 00
		Umbrella	2 00

August, 1824, first guardian, self chosen, was by Adam Kizer, minor son of Henry Kizer; guardian, Charles Conway.

WILL OF JEREMIAH COX, RECORDED MARCH 29, 1830.

1. Pay his debts and personal charges.
2. To his sons Jeremiah and Elijah 160 acres each, previously deeded to them.
3. To his sons Enoch and Benjamin, 320 acres jointly.
4. To Robert and William, 320 acres jointly.
5. To Samuel and John, 320 acres jointly.
6. To his daughter, Amy Roberts, $25.
7. To her children at age, $200.
8. To his wife Catharine, one-third of all his estate not before mentioned, two-thirds to be divided equally between twelve children.

Money on hand of Jeremiah Cox's estate, United Stated notes, $225; silver, $1,082.31¼.

Sale bill covers nineteen double column pages.

June 7, 1830. Bill of sale of John Canaday's estate amounts to $1,009.22¼.

October 19, 1830. The inventory of the estate of Ishmael Bunch contains the following:

"A right of hogs not 'appraist,' running in the woods, and wild, 'cutent be got,' sold for ten dollars to James Simmons on the day of sale to highest bidder."

Philip Storms seems to have been a resident then, for he bid off a "froe" at 97 cents.

A list of the purchasers at the sale of Ishmael Bunch's property will be interesting as showing the residents at that date, November 4, 1830. [Ishmael Bunch lived not far from Dolph Warren's, in Jackson Township.] Zachariah Key, George Reitenour, John Wolfe, Samuel Helm, Charles Summers, Henry Jackson, Philip Storms, Samuel Williams, William Brockus, Jeremiah Brockus, John Gray, Bennet Evans, James Simmons,

Samuel Simmons, Mary Key, Samuel Emery, George Porter, John Jones, Samuel Hawkins, James Brown, Robert Parsons, William A. Lindsey, Amos Smith, Allen Wall, Isaac Lewallyn, Aquila Loveall—twenty-six persons. The territory from which these persons came is quite extensive, from below Deerfield to above Allensville, and from Jay County.

January 4, 1831. Estate of Joseph Small (Green's Fork), contained, among other things, one "spider," one "frying pan."

The purchasers at his sale were Emsley Wade (one skillet and frying-pan), Jason Overman, Aaron Mills, Jesse Overman, Alfred Long, Abijah Mills, Jonathan Moore, Nelson Conner, Sampson Shoemaker, Joseph Green, Daniel Shoemaker, Jesse Small, Aaron Hill, Henry Davis, Willis Davis, John W. Shoemaker, Daniel James, John Mills, David Harris, John Mann, Robert James, William H. Freeman, Charles Morgan, Ziba Marine.

WILL OF JAMES CAMMACK, 1830.

1. Pay debts and expenses.
2. Son William, land heretofore deeded and one cow.
3. Son John, land heretofore deeded.
4. Son Samuel, land heretofore deeded.
5. Son Amos, land heretofore deeded, and farming utensils.
6. Daughter Elizabeth (Ozburn), $30.
7. Daughter Margaret, $10.
8. Daughter Mary (Hall), $2.
9. Daughter Ann (Williams), $10.
10. His wife Rachel, all except as above, including household furniture, farming utensils and stock, during her life.

Estate of John F. Hawkins (of Jay County), father of Judge Nathan B. Hawkins, Benjamin Hawkins, Esq., Joseph C. Hawkins, etc., died 1831, $280.70¾.

WILL OF WILLIAM HUFFMAN, AUGUST 25, 1832.

1. To five sons and three daughters, the whole real estate; the daughters to pay $25 each, the amount to be divided among the boys, and William to pay $20 to the rest.
2. Rest of the property to pay the debts, etc., the balance to be divided equally among all the heirs.
3. Bay mare to George for two years.

WILL OF ABRAM PEACOCK.

1. 154¾ acres to his wife while she remains a widow or is alive, and then to John.
2. Daughter Margaret, the large Bible.
3. Amos, Elvira, Achsah have had enough already.
4. After the debts are paid, the remainder is to go to the widow, Pheriba, Miriam and Margaret.

The inventory of John Cammack's personal estate, as returned by John James and John W. Thomas, amounts to $704.51¼.

WILL OF MATTHEW MASSEY, DECEMBER 8, 1832.

1. To his wife, the plantation, while a widow or during life, then to the children.
2. To his wife, the gray mare, horse colt, two milk cows, thirteen sheep, all the stock and fatting hogs and geese, and corn and wheat, the household and kitchen furniture.
3. The rest to be sold and divided among the children.

WILL OF JOHN TULLES, OF WAYNE COUNTY, RECORDED IN RANDOLPH COUNTY.

This will indicates a "new departure," the "day spring" of a "new era" as will be seen.

1. To his wife Eleanor all his property, she to bring up the children that are under age.
2. After her death and the majority of the youngest child the property to be divided among the children.

WILL OF MORDECAI MENDENHALL.

February 24, 1835.

1. Pay the debts.
2. To his wife, Phebe, two beds, two spinning wheels, reel, cupboard and ware, pot, Dutch oven, skillet, brass kettle, three chairs, chest and flax hackle, smoothing iron, wire sieve and fire shovel, cow, horse and saddle, half the orchard, and a comfortable support while living or his widow.
3. To Hannah, $20.
4. To Susannah, $1.
5. To Robert, $1.
6. To Aaron, $1.
7. To Stephen, $5.
8. To John, $114.
9. To Phebe, loom and $12, and a living with her mother while single.
10. Anything else divided among all the heirs.

WILL OF JAMES F. DRESSER.

November 29, 1874—probated June 18, 1879.

All his property to his sister, Charlotte A. Dresser; R. A. Wilson to be executor.

WILL OF JEREMIAH SMITH.

Recorded January 12, 1875.

1. My body for burial, and my soul to God.
2. Debts, if any, to be paid.
3. The graveyard where my father and mother lie buried on the old farm in Section 5, Township 18, Range 13, 150 feet square, to be kept for my posterity as a burial ground—a poplar tree in it, one foot through, to be preserved—the iron fence around my father's and mother's graves to be finished and kept up.
4. Oliver H. to be educated to graduation, and to have $1,500 like the rest.
5. No account to be taken of other sums given during life.
6. My flute to Jeremiah G., and the oil paintings of myself and wife to Charlotte A.; my private library, etc., to be divided among children amicably. Old books, manuscripts, etc., to be preserved.
7. My goods sold, and debts collected, and distribution made to heirs annually.
8. Real estate (except that in Union City) to be sold at the discretion of my executors and distributed.
9. The Union City property to be held and disposed of by the close of 1895.
10. The executors are to use their best judgment for the good of the estate, managing as they have reason to think I would have done in the same place.
11. William K., and John Dye Smith are to be executors, and after them or either of them, Henry B., Jere G. and Oliver H., in order as named.

I enjoin it upon all my sons and daughters that harmony and concord, unity and affection, be cultivated and preserved among them during all their lives, and that they suffer no "root of bitterness" to spring up and trouble them; and that they live humble disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ throughout their lives, that I may meet them in a happy eternity.

EDWARD STARBUCK'S PROPERTY.

Inventory, November 9, 1874. Taken by widow, $500; personal property, $1,211.49; dues, $47,734.34; additional, March, 1876, $6,141.50.

INVENTORIES.

George W. Monks, $20,378.14, October 21, 1865.
Carey S. Goodrich, $10,991.28, November 2, 1865.
David Riddlebarger, May 2, 1876, $4,488.33.
Philip Powell, September 13, 1876, $10,306.30.
William Chenoweth, November 24, 1876, $19,574.77.
James Rubey, February 3, 1877, $5,971.80.
Ezekiel Robbins, December 23, 1876, $3,579.16.
John Sumwalt, April 12, 1877, $3,329.45.
Edward Thomas, March 12, 1877, $3,039.01.

John C. Retts, March 31, 1877, and August 30, 1877, $7,947.38.
Levi Reece, September 1, 1877, $4,466.30.
A. Barnes, November 14, 1877, $8,589.90.
Dennis Hart, December 14, 1877, $9,153.60.
Robert S. Fisher, May 25, 1880, $58,991.11.
Fountain Murray, March 8, 1878, $5,528.60.
Samuel Emery, Sr., July 25, 1878, $4,285.01.
Mark Diggs, $18,369.34.
Abram J. Chenoweth, January 8, 1879, $7,548.45.
Mordecai S. Ford, March 1, 1879, $3,054.31.
James F. Dresser, August 22, 1879, $17,382.06.
Thomas Meeks, September 17, 1879, $10,605.21.
Israel F. Wirt, October 16, 1880, $15,468.50.
William Hawkins, July 27, 1880, $10,050.96.
Jacob S. Miller, June 10, 1880, $5,031.01.
Daniel B. Miller, 1881, $41,591.59.
Amos Rockhill, July 20, 1881, $5,254.85.
Joel Blanset, 1881, $3,279.79.
Peter S. Miller, $5,031.01.
John Fisher, February 22, 1881, $18,273.15.
John Demory (colored), $2,738.70.

CHAPTER VII.

REMINISCENCES.

THE following reminiscences by old and early settlers concerning their pioneer life in Randolph County and elsewhere, were ritten from their own lips, mostly in their own language. Care has been taken to have all the matter in these narratives fresh and unique, the same thing not being repeated, each pioneer's tale giving some fact or phase not found in any other.

Most of these sketches are from the original settlers, and from those who came when the land was heavily laden with dense, unbroken forests, and the country was still a wild and unpeopled waste.

The "reminiscences" are arranged for the most part, though not entirely, in the order of time.

Some of the "sketches" contain incidents that occurred outside of Randolph County, yet in connection with persons who have been at some period residents thereof. This portion of the work might have been greatly enlarged.

JESSE PARKER, 1814, son of Thomas W. Parker, first settler, April, 1814, and long of Bethel, Ind., but dying November, 1881, near Lynn, Randolph County.

"The Indians were thick all around us, but they were civil and peaceable and friendly. They would help the settlers raise cabins, bring us turkeys and venison, etc. Three wigwams were in sight of our cabin. We children had great sport with the young Indians, and they were then almost or quite our only playmates.

"A squaw once scared me nearly to death. I had gone to drive a calf home to its pen. The calf was near one of the wigwams; I felt skittish (this was before I had became so familiar with them), but the calf had to be brought and I had to do it, for children had to mind in those days. So how about the calf? This way—I got around it and started it for the pen, and away we went, calf and boy, when, hallo! out popped a squaw full tilt after me! She had jumped behind a tree and stuck out what I took to be a gun, and as I came near she bounced after me. My legs flew, you may guess; I could keep up with the calf with the squaw after me. She chased me home, she was tickled well nigh to death, and I was scared nearly out of my wits. I thought I could feel the ball hit me; but she had no gun, it was only a stick, and she was in fun. But there was no going around nettles then; they flew like sticks in a whirlwind, and she came rushing after me, parting the brush as she came! The Indians would often come slipping around watching for deer, and would carry the dead deer to their wigwams. The squaws would dress the venison and jerk the meat and dress the skins for leather.

"The Indians wore paint and all their war equipments, which made them look frightful enough. But we soon got used to them, as they were very friendly. As the country settled up, they went farther back—Winchester, Macksville, Windsor—and then to Smithfield, Muncie and Anderson. They would pass back and forth on their trails, bringing moccasins, etc., to trade for iron, salt, corn, etc., for their use.

"There were many rattlesnakes, yet but few people ever got bitten by them.

"Father settled April, 1814; John W. Thomas and Clarkson Willcutts, farther north during the summer, and October 22, 1814, Ephraim Bowen drove up to father's door, and he went still farther up Nolan's Fork, and the farthest north of any. North and northwest was an endless wilderness, except a few soldiers at Fort Wayne and Fort Dearborn and Green Bay and Mackinaw.

"At first it seemed lonely, but neighbors came gradually, and the blue smoke of their cabins could be seen curling up among the forest trees, as we followed the "blazes" from hut to hut.

"The settlers who had come in by 1819 were these: Thomas Parker, John W. Thomas, Clarkson Willcutts, Ephraim Bowen, Ephraim Overman, Eli Overman, John Schooly, Seth Burson, Nathan Overman, Joshua Small, George Bowles, Jesse Small, Jonathan Small, David Bowles, James Cammack, John Cammack, John Jay, Isaac Mann, John Mann, William Mann, Stephen Thomas, Elijah Thomas, Stephen Williams, etc., etc.

"We settled near (east of) the old (Wayne's) boundary. Game was plenty—deer, opossum, coons, turkeys, crows, wildcats, catamounts, bears, wolves, etc. The wolves would come near the door at night to pick up the crumbs, though precious little they found to pick, except the bones. Stephen Williams built a wolf-pen. Sometimes a wolf would get caught, and there would be fun. They would put a dog into the pen, and the wolf would whip the dog quick enough. The wolves would howl till one could not sleep for their noise.

"Our bedsteads had but one post, and they needed no more. The rails were bored into the logs of the house, and met in one post at the corner. But we slept first rate. The floor was puncheon, the door was one big puncheon, the loft was boards laid on poles, or often none at all. We would climb into the loft by a ladder, and slept under the roof to the music of the rain on the shingles. The fire-place was cut out six or eight feet long; the back and jambs were dirt beaten in and puncheons outside; the chimney was sticks and clay; the table was a puncheon upon poles laid on forks; the chairs were rough stools, or we had none, or sat on puncheon benches; yet we were happy and full of glee. Our diet was splendid—venison, turkey, roasted coon, fat possum, bear steak, roasted squash, sweet potatoes, pumpkins, corn bread baked on a hoe, or a lid, or a board, johnny-cake, or dodger bread, all good. Health and hunger make the best sauce, and we had them both. Then we had pounded hominy, and lye hominy fit to set before a king.

"About my schooling: It was not much, picked up in the woods. The neighbors joined and put up a cabin for church and school, the first of the kind in the county. The first school was taught by Eli Overman, and I attended it and was there the first day. My first book was a primer, and my next (and my last) was Noah Webster (spelling book).

"The house had a puncheon floor and door, a puncheon to write on, scalped off smooth with the 'pitching ax.' The benches were split poles with legs. Not a plank, nor a shingle, nor a brick, nor a nail, nor a pane of glass was in the whole house. The nails were pegs, the bricks were dirt, the planks were puncheons, the shingles were clapboards, the glass was greased paper over a crack for light, and the bigger boys got the wood for fuel. They had not far to go; the mighty giants stood huge, grim and frowning, stretching far and wide their monstrous arms as if to reach down and devour us. I tell you, the way the men and women (and the boys and girls, too) made the work hop around was a wonder—a sight to behold. Log-rolling would begin and keep on twenty or twenty-five days, people helping one another all around. Raising cabins, chopping trees, rolling logs, clearing land, splitting rails, making fences, plowing, planting and what not, kept folks busy enough for weeks and weeks the whole year through. People would go miles to help their neighbors; one could hear the ax ring or the maul go crack, crack, or the trees come crashing down, from morning till night, all over the woods. The loom and the wheel were heard in every cabin; the giant oaks, and the kingly sugar maples and the mighty beeches could be seen bowing their proud and stately heads, and coming heavily, helplessly down on every hand. The girls spun and the women wove and made the clothing, and took care of the family. Now, the first thing when a couple get married, is a hired girl, and the next thing a piano.

"We had hard times, indeed, in those grand old days amid the majestic, overshadowing forest. And now, how changed! And what shall sixty-six years more of time, stretching forward into the dim and wondrous future, accomplish for those who shall look on those coming days? We who have borne the brunt of the hardy past—how few we stand, how swift our passage to the opening tomb! The rising race—what do they know? They complain of hard times, forsooth! Then, it was the ax, the maul; the iron sledge-hammer, the flail, the brake, the swingling-board, the hatchet, the "cards," the wheel, the reel, the winding blades, the loom. If we went anywhere, it was on foot, or on horseback, or even on oxback, or on rough, home-made sleds. And now these things are fled, and the faithless ones of the present day will scarcely believe that such things are any more than idle tales made up to beguile the weary hours in the telling; yet they are true, as the few old pioneers know full well.

"The Indians helped father raise his cabin. There was no one else to help. He covered his "camp" with bedclothes and brush the first night. We crept into our cabin under the end logs the first night after it was built because no door hole had been cut. Father and mother went to Friends' meeting at New Garden (probably) the next "First Day" after they moved into the forest, seven miles through the woods. John Peale and Francis Thomas, at New Garden pole-cabin meeting-house, one day, swapped pants, and Peale kept the ones he got, and was buried in them, April 21, 1879. The swap took place about 1813, so that he must have kept those "pants" about sixty-six years.

"The Pucketts were eight brothers. Four settled near Dunkirk. Daniel settled near Newport, Benjamin lived a few years in Randolph, but moved to Morgan County, Ind., in 1826.

"We crossed the Ohio at Cincinnati, on a flat-bottomed boat, that was pulled over by a rope stretched across the river.

"There were just three pole-cabins in Richmond with families living in them, and one with goods for sale. The families were John Smith, Jere Cox and Robert Hill.

"Robert Hill had the store. Mother sold him some "slaies," reeds for weaving, for some muslin and other "traps."

"Francis Thomas lived near the toll-gate below Newport, perhaps. My father and John W. Thomas went up to Nolan's Fork and picked out their "places." Parker moved to his land first; Thomas next, and afterward Clarkson Willcutts.

"Thomas Parker sold out to John James, and bought out Clarkson Willcutts, and Willcutts bought elsewhere.

"The squaw who scared me so and chased me through the brush, was so "tickled" at my terrible "scare" that she could not tell mother what she had done, for laughing. She fell down on the cabin floor, and laughed and laughed, and kept on laughing; and to mother's question, she only pointed her finger at me as she lay there, and burst out laughing again; and I stood there, as mad as a lad of my age could well be, at the squaw, for scaring me so terribly, and then laughing herself well-nigh to death over the fun she had got out of me.

MRS. CELIA ARNOLD (PARKER).

Mrs. Celia Arnold, daughter of Thomas W. Parker, first settler of Randolph (who is now living at Arba, Ind.), and sister of Jesse Parker, being one of the three children who belonged to the family of the first emigrant to the Randolph woods. She says, "I was born in 1811, married Benjamin Arnold in 1830, and have had five children, three of whom are living. My husband died 12th month, 11th day, 1878, aged seventy-two years. He was born 3d month, 11th day, 1807. He came to Randolph County in 1823, being the son of William Arnold.

"As we were coming to Indiana, our wagon upset and scraped my wrist. Two families, John Thomas and Thomas Parker, came all the way in the same wagon, nine in all, and some of the way Thomas Willcuts and his wife and five children. [NOTE.—David Willcutts, later of Newport, Ind., Thomas Willcutts' youngest son came with us]. All these did all the riding they did on the one wagon. We brought beds and cooking utensils, and one chair (for mother). She died in 1823. I used, when a girl in my teens, to go on foot to New Garden, six and a half miles, to meeting. I have done it many a time, and did not consider myself as having done anything worthy of special mention."

SQUIRE BOWEN, 1814.

"The "Quaker Trace" was begun in 1817. James Clark, with twenty-five or thirty men, started with three wagon loads of provisions, as also a surveyor and chain, etc., and they marked "mile trees," and cut the road out enough for wagons to pass. They wound around ponds, however, and big logs and trees, and quagmires, fording the Mississinewa above Allensville, Randolph County, and the Wabash just west of Corydon, Jay County, and so on to Fort Wayne. My brother James and myself first went to Fort Wayne (with a four-horse team) in 1820. James himself had been the trip a year or so before that. We took our feed along for the whole trip, as there was but one house from one mile north of Spartansburg to Fort Wayne, viz., at Thomson's Prairie, eight miles north of Wabash River. At Black Swamp we had to wade half-leg to knee deep, walking to drive (we always had to do that). After that first trip, we always took oxen, generally three yoke for a team. No feed was needed for the oxen, for they could be turned out to pick their living. Our load was commonly about 2,500 pounds of bacon, flour, etc. Bacon would be 10 to 12 cents a pound, and flour $7 to $8 a barrel. The trip would take about two weeks, and we expected to make about $40 a trip. It would take eight days to go, three days in Fort Wayne and four days to return. Once an ox team came through in three days, which was the quickest trip ever made. We would unyoke the oxen, "hopple" them, put a bell upon one of them and turn them out. For ourselves, we would build a fire by a log, cook supper, throw down an old bed on the leaves under a tent stretched before the fire, and lie down and sleep as sound as a nut. We would start early, drive till 9 o'clock and get breakfast, and let the oxen eat again. From two to six teams would go in company. Sometimes the teams would get "stuck," but not often. If so, we would unhitch the "lead" yoke from another team, hitch on in front, and pull the load through. Once only I had to unload. I got fast in the quicksands in crossing the Mississinewa. We got a horse from a settler (Philip Storms), carried the flour to the bank of the river on his back, hitched the oxen to the hind end and pulled the wagon out backward.

"The first religious meeting was held in father's cabin. Stephen Williams exhorted (perhaps in 1815). The first sermon was preached there also (in 1815), by Rev. Holman, of Louisville, Ky.; text, Isaiah, "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is the hurt of the daughter of my people not recovered?" It was a good Gospel sermon, and was food to the hungry souls longing to be fed in the wilderness. We used to go to meeting to Dwiggins' (near Newport), and they would come up to our house. The Methodist meeting house near Dwiggins' was warmed thus: They had a box, nearly filled with dirt, standing in the middle of the floor, and would make a fire with charcoal in the box. That house never had a stove in it, but was warmed in that way as long as it stood, fifteen or twenty years. They would have a rail-pen near the church to hold the coal, and carry it in as it might be needed. Mrs. Bowen says she has carried many a basket of coal to replenish the fire. The first meeting house was at Arba, built by the Friends in 1815, and used for church and schoolhouse both; I went to school there four or five years. Afterward they built a hewed-log church, and had a stove in it.

"We would catch wolves in a wolf-pen. We could pay our taxes with the "scalps." A wolf-pen was made, say six feet long and four feet wide and two feet high, of poles for bottom, sides and top, the size of your arm. The top was made like a "lid," withed down to the pen at one end, and so as to lift up at the other. The "lid" would be "set" with a trap so as to fall and catch the wolf and fasten him into the pen. The bait would be deer meat. To kill the wolf, take a hickory switch and make it limber by "witheing" it, i. e., twisting it limber. Make a noose and slip it through the pen and around the wolf's neck, and lift him against the top of the pen and choke him to death. If the wolf were shot and bled in the pen, no more wolves would come into it. One big wolf father undertook to choke, but the dogs wished so much to get in at him, that we let them in, but the wolf fought them terribly, and whipped the dogs out, till father put an end to the battle by choking him in dead earnest. We moved into the thick, green woods. We would cut out the trees a foot and under, grub the undergrowth, pile and burn the logs, girdle the big trees, and kill them by burning brush piles around them.

"The last time I went to Fort Wayne was in 1829. Several tribes drew their payments there for years after Fort Wayne was laid out as a town. The Indians around here were Shawnees. They would trap in April and May, and then go back to their towns. The squaws would plant and raise the corn, and dress the skins. The men did the hunting and the women did the work. At one time at Fort Wayne, thirteen Indians were killed during one payment in drunken fights."

"Plenty of wild plums and grapes (and some blackberries) were to be found. The plums and grapes grew on the banks of the creeks, and along the edges of the (wet) prairies. There were different sorts, red and purple, small and round, but very sweet and good, better than most tame plums. Some grapes were fall grapes and some winter grapes. The blackberries grew on the "windfalls." There was one near Spartansburg. There were crab-apples, but too sour to use, and papaws, but no one would eat them. The woods were full of weeds of many kinds, and of pea-vines, and horses and cattle lived well on them. Some places had been burned over, and the woods, in those spots, were open like a big orchard.

"I knew Johnny Cornstalk, the Shawnee chief. My mother-in law once made him an overcoat. He was a large, portly, fine looking, genteel Indian, straight as an arrow.

He once came (with his wife) to my father's, on horseback, to tell him that they had found a bee-tree in his woods. They rode up. Cornstalk dismounted, but his wife sat still upon her horse, tall, straight and lady-like, genteel, dressed richly in Indian fashion, with a beautiful side-saddle and bridle, and a fine pony. Mother said, "Won't you light?" Spry as a cat, she sprang off, and they went into the house. She was waiting for an invitation. They were a stately, elegant-looking couple. Cornstalk told father of the bee-tree, and father went and cut the tree down and gathered the honey, and gave Cornstalk half. They were then "camping" near James Jackson's place. I knew Chief Richardville five miles above Fort Wayne, on St. Mary's River. He was a Miami Chief, had a large, brick house and was rich. His daughters dressed Indian fashion, but very grand and stylish. He was a good, honest, genteel, friendly man, and much respected, both by the Indians and white men. We made bricks one season at Fort Wayne, and saw him often.

"In plowing, when father first moved, we used a bar-share plow and a wooden mold-board. I could tell tales by the hour of those old times, but it is not worth the while to print so much of an old man's gossip."

JAMES C. BOWEN, 1814.

Son of the fourth settler, who came on his forty-fifth birthday, October 22, 1814, when James was only a half-grown boy.

"Hunting was splendid, and game plenty in the woods. Deer, turkeys, bears (and wolves) were abundant.

"We used to go to mill to Newport, to George Sugart's mill, but oftener to White Water, to Jere Cox's mill. Sugart had a little "corn-cracker" run by water-power. Thé buhr went around no oftener than the wheel did. Sugart would throw in a bushel of corn, and go out and swingle flax, etc., for an hour or two, and then go in and attend to his grist again. Awful slow! One day a hound came in and began licking up the meal as it came in spurts from the spout. It did not come fast enough for him and he would look up with a pitiful howl, and then lick for more meal! We boys would go fourteen miles to mill on horseback. Sometimes we would go with a wagon and take a load, and then it would take two days. Often the settlers had to go over to the Big Miami for provisions. Sometimes two men would join teams and go with four horses, and bring a big load. Once I went with Clark Willcutts' son (we were boys) on horseback to a mill four miles east of Richmond, to get a grist of corn. We each got a sack of corn, took it to Cox's mill, got it ground, and took the meal home. It was twenty miles and took us two days.

"Pork was $1.50 a hundred net, and sometimes $1, or even less than that. As late as 1835, when I was Justice, I rendered judgment on a debt, and the defendant said he had wheat at Jeremiah Cox's mill, and he could not get 12½ cents a bushel, in money, to pay the debt. At Newport, Jonathan Unthank sued David Bowles for $5, balance on a store debt. Bowles was angry and declared he would never trade with Unthank any more. "To think," he said, "that I have traded there so much, and he must go and sue me for $5!" Benjamin Thomas (Wayne County) said he had as good wheat as ever grew, and he could not get 12½ cents a bushel, in money, to pay his taxes!

"In making "Quaker Trace," in 1817, twenty-five or thirty men started with three wagon-loads of provisions. I went about twenty-five miles (beyond the Mississinewa River) until one wagonload was gone, and then returned with that team."

[Mr. Bowen thinks that Sample's mill, on White River, was the first mill of any importance in the country. He says, also, that Cox's mill had at first a hand bolt, and that flour had to be bolted by hand, which was a slow and tedious process].

[Ephram Bowen came from Ohio in a big Shaker wagon, with a load of "plunder," and then went back after his family. The patent for his quarter-section was signed by James Madison. E. B. was an intelligent, devoted Methodist, and did much to help plant the foundations of religion in this western wilderness. His dwelling was the "preacher's home," and a preaching station for more than thirty years. The first meeting was held at his house, and the first sermon was preached there also. All the Methodists in the region were there, and others, perhaps thirty persons. The descendants of E. B. are numerous and widespread. There were at his death seventy grandchildren and many great-grandchildren. E. B. and his family are a fine specimen of the hardy pioneers who subdued these Western wilds. Courageous, honest, industrious, devout, intelligent, energetic, upright, enterprising, successful; their labors and achievements have helped the howling wilderness to become the "garden of the Lord," and to cause the "desert to bud and blossom as the rose."]

SILAS JOHNSON, 1817.

"I was fifteen years old when father came here. Paul Beard and John Moorman and Francis Frazier and John Barnes were here when we came. Paul Beard came the same spring. The others had come perhaps the year before. Curtis Cleny came, I think, the same fall. Daniel Shoemaker, James Frazier, David Kenworthy were early settlers. The settlers before us had not been here more than a year, perhaps not so long. John Barnes was very old and he died last spring (1880).

"James Frazier (bell-maker) had a large family, and lived in a "camp." The roof-poles of his camp were put in the forks of a cherry tree. There came a heavy snow May 4, after the leaves were out, and broke down his forks, roof—snow and all right on their heads.

"The Friends first attended meeting at Center Meeting in Wayne County, but soon Lynn meeting was set up (about 1820).

"Francis Frazier lived west of the pike, a mile south of Lynn. Daniel Kenworthy lived east of Jesse Johnson. Curtis Cleny lived a mile south. Daniel Shoemaker lived a half mile east of Lynn. James Frazier lived one mile east of Lynn.

CHOLERA, 1849.

"In the morning about breakfast, a black cloud came up from the east, dark and threatening; there was some thunder and a little rain, suddenly a sharp stroke of lightning seemed to strike the earth between Mr. Palmer's and the four corners, a mile east of Lynn. The sky was filled with smoke, and a fearful sickening smell as of burning sulphur filled the air, which lasted some time. A little while afterward, that same morning, John Lister and two sons (one a lad) passed those corners. They were all taken sick that evening, John died next morning, and his oldest son during the day. The lad lingered a month, but recovered. William Hodgin passed next, and then Henry Benson and three others; they were all taken sick and died the next day or very shortly. On Chamness' place, a mile off, five or six were taken sick, but they did not die.

Isaac Moody and Jonathan Clevinger nursed the sick all the time, but were not sick themselves. Most of the persons east and south of those corners were taken sick. Twenty-seven died, and a few got well. It lasted two or three weeks. There seemed to be an uncommonly sharp smell after dark. [See W. Pickett's, Francis Frazier's and W. D. Stone's accounts].

When Jesse Johnson came in the fall of 1817 (perhaps), Paul Beard had cleared a field and burned the standing trees black by piling the brush of the undergrowth around the roots of the trees and then burning the brush piles.

Settlers at that time were Paul Beard, Sr., Francis Frazier, John Moorman, John Barnes (Wayne County), Travis Adcock, Isaac Hockett (Cherry Grove), Gideon Frazier.

David Kenworthy had entered land (80 acres) some years before, but he came after Jesse Johnson did.

Jesse Johnson had been here and had entered the land, and came and settled soon afterwards.

Curtis Cleny was the next that bought near Francis Frazier, John Moorman and Travis Adcock.

Cleny was in the Indian war of 1811–13, in the blockhouse and scouting in the region.

James Frazier and John Baxter came the next spring. Edward Hunt came when Jesse Johnson did, and settled west of, and near to Lynn, 1817. James Abshire was an early settler, northwest of Lynn. He was a famous hunter. His son Isaac Abshire is still residing in thatregion."

IRA SWAIN, 1815.

"My father, Elihu Swain, was born in 1759, on Nantucket Island, moved from there to Guilford County, N. C., in 1776; to Jefferson County, East Tennessee, in 1785; to Wayne County, Ind. (near Randolph County line) in 1815, and died in 1848, aged nearly ninety. He married Sarah Mills in North Carolina in 1782. They had ten children, six boys and four girls—John, Nathaniel, Hannah, Samuel, Joseph, Lydia, Elihu, Rachel, Job and Ira. The family lived in a tent made of a wagon sheet for three weeks or more, lying in beds on the ground. They built a pole cabin, which for some time had a Yankee blanket for a door.

"For two or three years the children used to play with the Indians, who were plenty. A dozen Indians lived near, with their families, in "camps," made of poles set up in a circle, with ash bark peeled off the tree for a roof, the fire being built in the middle and a hole at the top in the peak to let off the smoke.

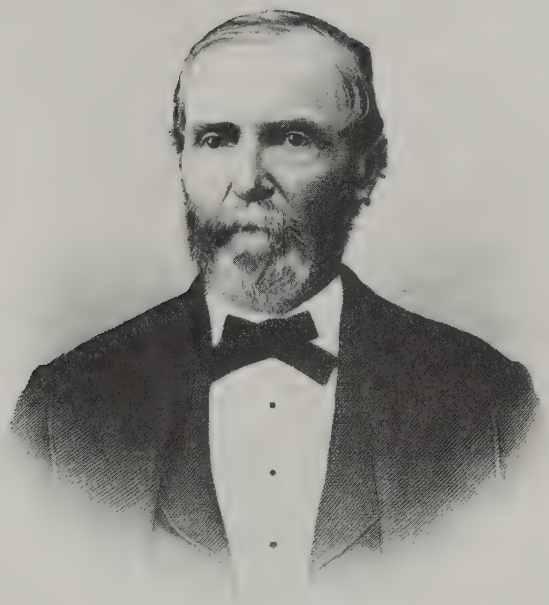
"In two or three years the Indians left their wigwams and came back no more, but their little pole tents stood tenantless and desolate for years.

"One little Indian by the name of "Jim," who lived not 200 yards away, and with whom I played many a day when we were boys there together, was adopted by Judge Reeves, and grew up civilized. I met him years afterward at La Porte, Ind. He knew me, though I did not know him. He had traveled a great deal, but he came back, and lived on Judge Reeves' old place a few years ago, remaining there until he died. When our family were coming from Tennessee, I saw a sight of cruelty which will stick by me to my dying day, and the memory of which has done much to fasten in my mind an eternal hatred of human slavery. As we came through Richmond, Ky., a man was being flogged near the road where we passed. I was but a child, but I remember it well. The man's hands were drawn down over his knees, and a stick was thrust through between his arms and his legs, thus fastening him forward. His body was naked, and they were whipping him terribly. He was screaming with all his might, and his back and hips were all cut into a jelly. It was a fearful sight.

"Father entered Congress land. The twelve-mile purchase was in market, but the land west of it was not, being surveyed in 1821–22. Father had to go or send to mill to Connersville (thirty miles). They would buy corn near the mill and get it ground and bring the meal home.

"The first school was near David Moore's (in 1816 or 1817), with, perhaps, twenty scholars. The house was a pole cabin, 14x18 feet. One end of it was cut out (much of it) for a fireplace. We used to pile up logs in the fire-place (i. e., the larger scholars did) for a rousing big fire. The fire-place was built up to the mantel, with puncheons filled in with clay inside, and the chimney was made above with sticks and clay around. The floor was puncheons, and the benches were split poles with legs. The older pupils used to get wood at noon to last till the next day noon. That was not much trouble, though the chief care was not to fell the trees on the schoolhouse, and it took "lots" of wood to keep the house warm.

"For several winters we had no shoes. Then father dug out a large log and made a big trough and tanned some hides, and made some leather, and so we got some shoes. One man who had a trough and some hides tanning, intending to move and wishing to take his hides along (I suppose they were not tanned enough, and he thought there was no bark on the prairie where he was going), made a big truck wagon with wooden wheels, sawed from a large oak tree. He loaded his tan trough, bark, hides and all, upon his huge truck-wagon, and away he started for Illinois. After traveling two or three days, he bethought himself that he had left some tobacco in a crack of his cabin, and, leaving his folks and team (of oxen) in the woods, he "footed" it back after the tobacco, found it, got it, and tramped back again, spending two or three days in the operation. What the folks did meanwhile I do not know; I suppose they just waited there in the woods, cooking and eating, and taking it easy.



Yours Truly
A. Stone

Yours Truly
L. R. Stone

"The people in those days made 'hand-mills' with stones 'a foot over' to grind corn with. To turn them was hard work. My wife's father once took a peck of corn to grind on one of them; a boy came with a tin cup to toll the grist. The man ground and ground, till he got so tired that he called out to the boy, "Come here, sonny, with your tin, and get some more toll, or I shall never get done." People went on horseback, or rather walked and led the horse, with a sack of corn or meal on his back, thirty miles to mill. A man or a boy would go with a horse and three bushels of corn in a four-bushel sack all that distance. Johnny Banks made a great improvement; he loaded one horse and attached a rein, leading one and riding another, thus not exactly killing two birds with one stone, but what was still better, getting two grists of corn to mill with one boy. Great labor-saving invention, to make one boy to accomplish the work of two, and more than that, for the led horse, having no boy to "tote," could take a full load of corn. We were often two weeks without bread. However, mother could make plenty of lye hominy, and we had potatoes, and sweet potatoes, and sweet pumpkins and squashes, and plenty of bacon and chickens and eggs, venison, wild turkey, etc., so that people need not starve even on such fare."

ANNA RETZ.

"Mr. Blount lived at first on the Zimmerman place [southern part of West River]. Mr. Barnes lived south of it.

Griffith Davis lived south of Mount Pleasant Church. William Smith settled a mile north. He came in 1817. I remember the "falling timber." I saw a tree fall between the house and the corn-crib, and remember playing under the tree top, as it lay there, with Cahoon's children, an Irish family, who lived near by. I recollect father's trying to get some colts that were in the woods among the fallen timber. We could see them and hear them "whinny," but he could not get them. They worked round home in three or four days. The cattle also took several days to come home. We could hear them bawl, but they could not be got at. One heifer did not come, but we got her a year afterward. A man saw the mark on her and came and told us, and father went and got her. My sister was keeping house for Isaac Branson, with his children; father clambered over the trees after the storm and got there; half of the house roof was blown off, and the stable roof also, and the logs were blown down round the horse, so that he could not move, yet he was not hurt; their cow was killed, and that was the only animal we knew to have been hurt. Trees were blown crosswise in every direction; east of our house it blew down but little; the storm seemed to rise for a space, but it came down again near Albert Macy's and took his house roof off; by-and-by it rose, and did not come down any more. The crops were injured, but not so badly as one might think; there was no hail; the worst of the storm was north of us. The house we lived in at the time of the storm is standing yet, and in good repair."

W. M. BOTKIN (1816).

"My father was a tanner; his tan troughs are here yet, though out of use for many years. A large cherry tree is growing in the end of one of them, as it lies buried in the ground. General muster used to be held on father's farm. A colored man named Jack ran away from Kentucky in early times and came to my father's, stopping awhile to work. One night a spelling-school was held in father's cabin. While they were spelling, a knock was heard at the door; father went to the door and asked who was there. Jack heard the reply, and knew his master's voice. Peter Botkin opened the window and let Jack jump out and escape. The master offered father $50 to help him get the slave, but we helped him off instead.

Plows were made almost wholly of wood; the bar and share were iron, but the moldboard, etc., were of wood; sometimes a piece of a saw or the like would be put over the moldboard to make the plow scour.

To make a cradle to rock the baby in, we took a hollow buckeye and split the log, and put rockers on the bottom.

I have cut many a cord of wood at 20 cents a cord and board, and have split rails at 9⅓ cents a hundred. I have worked many a day for 25 cents, and 37½ cents in harvest, from sunrise till sundown at that. Wheat was 37½ cents a bushel, and pork $1.25 a hundred net. I used to slide on the ice barefooted; the skin on the bottom of my feet was hard, almost like a stick.

Methodist meetings were held in father's cabin, and quarterly meeting at Jesse Cox's. Father's cabin burned down, and then meetings were held elsewhere; William Hunt and Nathan Gibson were preachers; father was very poor when we came to Randolph.

There is now on my place a tan trough, made by my father more than sixty years ago, hollowed from the body of a large tree, the top of the tree, some thirty feet long, being still in connection with the trough. There are also rails, made of white oak, of blue ash and of walnut, still sound and in use on the farm, made by father before 1820, and put up into fences by him on his original farm in that early day. It is only two or three years since I changed the location of some of the rails which had lain all that long time unmolested in a fence, and the "crossing" of the rails were firm and solid."

[Mr. Botkin, poor though he was when a boy, as his story shows, is poor no longer. He owns several hundred acres of excellent land; has a splendid brick mansion in a beautiful situation; is a thrifty and prosperous farmer, and a prominent and influential citizen, foremost in every good work. It is really a wonder how many of the rich men of the day are sons of men who were very poor, and some of them widows' sons and even orphans.

Thomas Ward's father was not able to enter forty acres of land.

Nathan Cadwallader's father died when Nathan was a lad; their old horse died and they were too poor to buy another.

John Fisher was an orphan boy who rode a pony alone from Carolina to Indiana.

Simeon Branham was an orphan boy who went for himself alone in the world at sixteen years old. And so on ad infinitum.

JOHN FISHER, 1817.

"Father was forty-five and mother was forty-two years of age when they died and left me a lone orphan in the world. I knew of no settlers in Randolph when I came but those on Nolan's Fork. What I understood to be the first wagon that went to White River was that of William Wright, from Clinton County, Ohio, in the fall of 1817."

[Mr. Fisher is mistaken. Settlers had come upon Nolan's Fork, Greensfork, Martindale Creek and West River in 1815, and on White River in the summer of 1816. Mr. Wright's wagon may have been the first that passed through that neighborhood two miles north of Newport (Fountain City). The company from Carolina in the spring of 1817, bound for White River, most likely went along a route farther west, past Economy, Joseph Gass', etc.]

"I owned a little mare and a saddle and bridle, and nothing else. I was an orphan boy and had no more than that pony and its accouterments. I had heard of the free and glorious Northwest, the grand and fertile plains beyond the mountains and the river, where no slave might tread; and set my heart to find that wondrous country, and I found it and thanked God for the consolation. I crossed the Blue Ridge at 'Ward's Gap,' thence to Grayson C. H., Wythe C. H., Abingdon, Va., head of Holston River, Tennessee, a large spring, from which flows a wonderful stream as big as the White Water at Richmond. I traveled down Holston to French Broad, turning north into Kentucky, crossing Clinch Mountain, and Cumberland Mountains to Cumberland River, and so on to Kentucky River, Cincinnati,

Richmond. The latter place had perhaps thirty houses, one small store kept by Robert Morrison, one log tavern, etc.

Newport was founded in 1822. It was a solid wilderness for years after I came. I have voted at every Presidential election, beginning with Madison's second term, 1816. I voted for Madison, Monroe and Adams, against Jackson, Van Buren; for Harrison and Taylor, against Polk, Pierce, Buchanan; for Lincoln, Grant and Hayes. I hope to give yet one more vote, and to help elect one more Republican President, and then I must leave national politics for younger hands [Friend Fisher had his wish. He went to the polls and helped elect another Republican President; and now he is gone to the land "where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest." He lacked thirty hours of living long enough to hear the candidate of his choice declared President by the presiding officer of the Senate in the joint convention of the whole Congress assembled to witness the counting of the electoral votes and the proclamation of the grand result. The second Wednesday of February was on the 9th, and he died on the morning of the 8th, at 6 o'clock. Father Fisher's era of life was truly an eventful one].

Mr. Fisher says: "I had no wagon for seven or eight years; my hauling was all done on a sled, winter and summer. In 1826, a neighbor and I bought a wagon 'to the halves' and we used it in company. In 1829, I bought his half and owned it alone. That was an event in my life, to be the sole owner of a two-horse wagon. Wagons were like 'angels' visits, few and far between.

"Of course there were some wagons in the country, but great numbers had none, and I belonged to that numerous class until the eventful hour when the bargain was struck, the trade was complete, and the wagon was mine, all mine."

JANE FISHER, 1817.

"Father, Edward Starbuck, Sr., came to Wayne County, in 1817. The family who came were father and mother and nine children. One daughter had been married in Carolina, and did not come till afterward. Father had, in all, eighteen children; ten by his first wife and eight by the second, nine boys and nine girls, the first set five and five, and the second set four and four. The first that died was Phebe (Leverton), sixty years old, and that was when the youngest was twenty-three years old. The father and eighteen children were alive till the youngest was twenty-three years old. The whole eighteen were married. The next that died was James, sixty-five; Edward, sixty-one; Betsey, eighty. Thirteen are still living. (1880).

"I have a large platter (pewter) which was my father's in Carolina, which he got from his mother. Its age is probably not less, perhaps more, than 120 years. The platter is fifteen inches across, is heavy and thick, and has never been remolded."

Mrs. F. has an iron candlestick, more than fifty years old, and as good as new, made by her uncle, Zachariah Coffin, a famous blacksmith of those early days. It is "the old candlestick"—the family candlestick—that used to hang, by a hook at the top, from a chair-back, to study by, when people were thankful for "tallow dips;" and the splendors of gaslight and kerosene were a thing unknown and unimagined.

She can show several wooden trays forty years old, in good condition, though dusty for lack of use. She can show also the greatest curiosity and oddity of all, in the identical "first coat and pants," made for and worn by her oldest son Daniel, now in his fifty-ninth year. The ancient relic must be about fifty-five years old. They are truly quaint and odd; the coat is not "shad-belly," but more like "swallow-tail;" the pants are "single fall," as was the fashion sixty years ago; the buttons are good, bright, brass buttons, good for fifty years more; the cloth is striped, home-made, strong and smooth, and just a trifle coarse.

Mrs. F. says: "When we 'kept house,' at first, we had a table, four cups and saucers, half a dozen plates, four knives and forks, one iron pot, one skillet, one rolling pin, four chairs, one light feather bed, two sheets, one flax-and-cotton, and one tow, one quilt, one coverlet. I have the coverlet yet. Mother wove it herself, in old Guilford County, N. C., and she gave it to me. I have had it more than sixty years, and how much older it is I cannot tell. I borrowed a straw tick of Aunt Rebecca for three or four weeks, till I could make some for myself out of tow, which I did, all but the weaving—I hired that done. For a bedstead, I borrowed an auger and made two benches out of puncheons, and lugged in nine clapboards and put across on the benches, and on this new, grand bedstead I made up our bed; and, let me tell you, I was 'set up' greatly, and felt as proud of my bed, all nice and neat, as of anything I ever had. My brother Edward and myself went back to North Carolina ten or twelve years ago. I was surprised, and pleased, also, to find how well I remembered the country; I could go anywhere, and knew every hill and stream, every road and farm, although I had been absent fifty years. I found in that ancient region four aunts and one sister, whom I had not seen since my father moved away. They were, of course, greatly rejoiced that we should be spared to meet, face to face, this side of glory land."

[NOTE.—Mrs. Jane Fisher, relict of John Fisher, deceased, departed this life at the dwelling of her son-in-law, Capt. J. R. Jackson, Union City, Ind., Thursday, February 4, 1882, aged about seventy-eight years. She had become much enfeebled, having, some months before her death, suffered a paralytic stroke, from the effects of which she never recovered.]

TEMPLE AND PRISCILLA SMITH, 1817.

"Joseph Hockett came to Randolph County, Washington Township, in 1816. The Quaker meeting was set up at Cherry Grove in 1816 or 1817; they built a double log cabin for a meeting-house.

"Bloomingsport was laid out not far from 1828, by Nathan Hockett. Alfred Blizzard built the first house; Beeson kept the first store.

"Dr. Paul Beard, Sr., was the first physician in the region; there was none in Bloominsgport for a long time. Dr. Gideon Frazier resided there in somewhat early years.

"Other physicians were Drs. Gore, Strattan, Kemper, etc. Messrs. Beeson, Comfort, Bullard, Budd, Wyatt, Wright, Coggshall, Hockett, etc., have been merchants.

"There has been a potter's shop, a wheelwright's shop, a sawmill, a grist-mill, etc.

"There are two churches, Methodist and United Brethren. At Ridgeville, fifty-four years ago, Meshach Lewallyn's daughter Polly married David Hammer. At the wedding supper, the bride's brothers were present, and one of them, dressed in buckskin hunting-shirt and leather belt, and with a butcher knife at his waist, undertook to carve the turkey, and did it with his hunting-knife.

"At another wedding, the people had gathered, but the supper was not yet done; and as the women were trying to bake pones or slap-jacks or something, the crowd of half-drunken fellows would snatch and eat as fast as the women would bake, till at last, one chap, not quite so drunk as the rest, took a club, and stood and watched, and guarded the women till they got enough baked for supper. This was at the house where the boys were chopping as related below. The family was immense, a dozen children or so; the cabin was small. They had a loom in the house but took it down and out, to make room for the 'weddingers.'"

Mrs. Smith says: "When I was twelve years old, my sister and myself went to help one of the neighbors pick wool. They baked a great "pone," and turned it out on the floor. The ducks came in, waddling and quacking, and fell to pecking away at the "pone" till they had broken it badly. The woman had her milk set under the bed, and in scaring the ducks away from the "pone," they scattered and ran under the bed, and went floundering and plunging and paddling "slapdab" through the milk. As the ducks went out, the sheep came in, 'baa-baaing' all over the room. We went home without eating, and said to mother, 'If those folks wish us to pick wool, they must bring the wool here; we can't stand such living;' and our picking wool there among the sheep and ducks was at an end.

"The boys would come in and stamp the mud off their feet upon the floor until the dirt was so thick that they had to scrape it from the floor with a hoe to let the door shut. One of our neighbors told us to be sure to call on a family of "new-comers," who, he said, were "upper crust," neat, stylish people, and that we must fix up our best. So one day sister and I fixed up in our "nicest," and went over there, a little afraid that we were not slick enough. When we got there, lo, and behold, a sight indeed! Four boys, brothers, from eight years and upward, were at the wood-pile chopping wood, with their shirts on and—nothing else! We were taken aback, and thought we must have got to the wrong place. But no, this was the very house. We went in; they set us some stools, black and greasy from having had meat chopped on them. Hardly knowing what to do, we spread some handkerchiefs on the stools and sat down. It was winter, and the creeks were frozen. The boys went out to the ice to slide barefooted, and when they came back their feet were as red as lobsters. "Are not your feet cold?" "No, they burn," was the reply. And such times the folks had, and such things were done by young and old in days of 'auld lang syne.'"

PAUL BEARD, JR., 1817.

"Settlers, about the same time with my father, were James Frazier, east of Lynn; Francis Frazier; John Pegg, three miles southwest of Beard's; Obadiah Harris, Cherry Grove; Stephen Hockett, Cherry Grove; Edward Thornburg, Cherry Grove; Travis Adcock, Curtis Cleny, Jesse Johnson shortly after, and perhaps others."

[Paul Beard, Jr., and his wife are both living at this time, 1880.]

MRS. PAUL BEARD, DAUGHTER OF BENJAMIN COX, 1817.

"Mother was greatly afraid of the Indians; father was not afraid of them at all. They would come at night; father would get up and make a fire, and let them sit and smoke and stay all night if they wished. Sometimes they would come late in the night and wish to warm, and when they were warm they would go away. Father had to go to Richmond for grain and for milling; this was too much trouble, and they used to pound corn for bread.

"Father made a sweep with a maul at the end, and a pin through the maul; two men would take hold of the pin, one on each side, and thus work the maul to pound the corn into meal in a trough or mortar below. We took the finest for bread, and the coarse for mush. We raised a kind of squash that was excellent for baking; many a meal has been made on baked squash and milk and butter.

Benjamin Cox was a great hunter, and killed abundance of deer. He has shot as many as five and six deer in a day. A prairie was near and also a spring; he would sprinkle salt around the spring, and the deer would come to lick the salt. He made a scaffold, ten or twelve feet high, in the forks of two elm trees, and from that he watched the deer, and shot them as they came. He has killed scores of deer from that scaffold. Mrs. Beard thinks her father was the first settler on White River, east of Winchester.

"John Cox, father of Benjamin Cox, came in the spring of 1818; Joshua and John Cox, sons of John Cox, came in the fall of 1818.

"Thomas Ward and Joseph Moffatt came shortly afterward; Jonathan Hiatt, Zachariah Hiatt and Jehu Robison came not long after.

"White River meeting-house was built of logs in 1820 or 1821. It was warmed by a box filled with dirt, with coals or bark on the top for a fire."

"Mrs. Paul Beard, Jr., is the daughter of Benjamin Cox. She was born in 1813; she married Paul Beard, Jr., in 1833. They have had nine children, eight are living and seven married."

ELIHU CAMMACK, 1817.

"The floor of the barn on my father's farm near Arba was made of lumber sawed by hand with a whip-saw, done in this way: The log was put on a high frame, and one man stood above on the log and the other below, and they sawed somewhat as with a cross-cut saw. The work was slow and very tedious, but there was no other way then and there. That barn was covered with shingles, and was reckoned the best barn in all that region.

"The meeting-house was warmed by a dirt box. They would have a great log heap fire out of doors, and take the box out to the fire and shovel in coals enough, and then take it back into the house, and set it in the middle of the room, and people would get round it and warm themselves as well as they could.

"The cabin in which I was born sixty-three years ago is still standing and in good repair. The roof has been renewed, but the logs are sound, and a family occupies it now. The cabin was "scutched down," i. e., scored and hewed down after the building was put up.

"I have hauled to Cincinnati many winters; the price for hauling was 50 cents per hundred; the trip took a week. A man would make from $6 to $9 a trip. Teamsters on the "pikes" would have big Conestoga wagons, and four to six horses, and take tremendous loads—equal to a small ship. Dealers would pack meat in "bulk," and teamsters would haul it "loose," and sometimes, when they would get "stalled," they would throw the load of meat out on the ground, like a pile of wood, and come back afterwards and pick it up again. The first wagon I ever owned myself, about 1841, I bought the iron for in Cincinnati, and got the money to pay for it with by selling (hauling) bacon, smoked, 'hog-round,' good, sweet and nice, to Cincinnati from near Arba, at $2.12 per hundred. The iron was $3.50 per hundred. I have hauled wheat to Eaton, selling at 37½ cents a bushel. I have fattened hogs and sold the pork, net, at Spartanburg for $1.25 under two hundred, and $1.37, two hundred full. This was done about 1842–43. Henry Peacock, of Jericho, now dead, has told me that since he settled in Jericho, he has paid $18 a barrel for salt, and paid for it in pork at $2 a hundred.

"I must give you a story told me on himself by Judge W. A. Peele, at Indianapolis, when he was Secretary of State. When he was a boy just old enough to turn the grindstone, his father and himself went to my grandfather's to grind an ax. They went into the house; grandmother had lately made a rag carpet, perhaps the first in the county. His father walked in, and stepped on the carpet. William thought the carpet was some nice cloth spread upon the floor, and that his father had done very wrong, so he tried to better the matter by undertaking to jump across it. He failed, and stumbled upon it, and got dirt on the carpet, and was scolded and laughed at besides for all the pains he took to keep off the wonderful and mysterious thing."

WILLIAM DIGGS, JR., LATE OF WHITE RIVER, 1816.

"I was born in Anson County, N. C., December 17, 1793. In the year of 1816, I came to Indiana to seek a home for myself. Paul, Henry H., William and Robert Way and I came across the country from North Carolina in a road wagon, crossed the Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.; came to Blue River, but not being pleased with the country, we came to Wayne County, made our temporary abode at Charlotte Way's (afterward my mother-in-law), and looked around for suitable places. We finally selected our lands and built our camps about two miles west of Winchester. I remained there till the latter part of August, when the Indians became so numerous that our friends advised us to abandon our claims and seek safety in the settlements.

"I was married to Charlotte Way October 6, 1816, and returned to my claim in February, 1817. At that time there was only one white settler nearer than twelve miles.

"We moved into a camp and lived in it till I could cut the logs and build a small log house, which seemed a palace to us then. We saw no white man's face for eight weeks after settling there. But Indians were plenty, yet peaceable.

"The first year, I cleared four acres of ground, and planted it in corn, but it did not ripen, and we had to go to Richmond, where settlers had been living for twelve or fifteen years, for all our breadstuffs. Wheat was then 75 cents a bushel, and corn $1.

"When we were getting out of bread, I would start on horseback for the White Water, buy a sack of corn, get it ground, and take it home. In this way we lived till more settlers came. Not long after, small hand-mills were introduced into the county, and as soon as the corn became too hard for roasting, we would take a small jack-plane, shave the corn off the cob and dry it. We would take this corn to a hand-mill and grind it into meal. The nearest mill to my house was three miles.

"Often I have worked hard all day, and then taken a sack of corn on my back to the mill, and gone home with it to furnish bread for my family next day.

"In this manner we lived till the country settled up so as to afford better accommodations. We brought up nine children; all but one are living yet, and they were all born in Randolph County, and on White River. The eldest, Fannie, now Mrs. Matthew Hill, lives at Jericho, Randolph Co., Ind.; Anna, now Mrs. Jesse Reynard, lives east of Buena Vista, Randolph Co., Ind.; Eunice, now Mrs. Thomas Moorman, of Winchester, Ind.; Pleasant W., married Anna Peacock, and now resides at Earlham, Madison Co., Iowa; Agnes, not living; Henry H., married Sarah Wright (now deceased), and afterward Lois Ann Carpenter. Their home is at Nora, Jo Daviess Co., Ill. Anthony Diggs, married Elvira C. Thomas, daughter of George and Asenath Thomas, and they reside at Earlham, Madison Co., Iowa; Ruth, married Matthew W. Diggs, and they live at Farmland, Randolph Co., Ind. After our children left us, we sold the farm which had been our home so many years, and moved to Poplar Run, to be near some of our children. We remained there some years when my wife's health became poor, and the children had all left that neighborhood. We sold that farm also and moved to Winchester. In about sixteen months my beloved companion died. Since then I have made my home with my children, and am now residing at Earlham, Iowa. My age is now eighty-nine years."

Paul W. Way, Henry H. Way, William Way, and Robert Way and myself, came in the summer of 1816; Henry H. Way and myself were both single, and we married during the winter of 1816–17, he taking for his wife Rachel Manlove, of Wayne County, Ind.; Robert Way stayed, as did all the group but Paul Way, who returned to Carolina and brought back a large company in the spring of 1817. During the spring or summer of 1817, William Way went to the South and brought his father and mother to White River.

Paul Way and his company got to White River in the spring of 1817, crossing the Ohio River on the ice with their wagons.

[NOTE.—That winter was very cold].

"Henry, William and Robert Way built cabins for themselves and the rest. Persons from Williamsburg, fifteen miles away, came and helped raise the cabins.

Fanny (Diggs) Hill is the first white child born in White River, her birthday being September 11, 1817; she is living still. My wife died January 31, 1877. I went to Jo Daviess County, Ill., in May, 1877, to visit my children, stayed there three months, went on to Iowa, and am in Iowa still.

My health is good, I can walk around town and to church, etc. I am an Orthodox "Body Friend," never having gone with any "separations."

I have voted at every Presidential election since I was old enough to vote, casting my first Presidential ballot for James Monroe in 1816, and having voted for President in all seventeen times. I was a Whig in the days of that party, and have since been and still am a Republican."

FANNY (DIGGS) HILL, 1817.

"I went to school first at Williamsburg, in Wayne County, Ind., when eight or nine years old. I attended school also under Henry D. Huffman in a log schoolhouse three miles west of Winchester. For a wonder, that house had window sash and glass!

When my mother was getting me to sleep one day, she heard a noise outside the cabin door. Hurrying to the door, she looked out, and lo! there stood a bear!

She scared it away, and it went to the milk-house, and tore the cloth off the milk-strainer, etc., but shortly went away.

Father for years had but one horse; mother has many a time gone out and cut an armful of wild grass to feed the horse.

My mother's father, Henry Way, of Wayne County, Ind., was killed by lightning.

Mother used to tell me that we were the first family on White River, and that our cabin was fifteen miles away from any other dwelling, and that for six weeks she saw no white person's face but that of her own husband. She used to tell me that the Indians told her when they were at her cabin how easily they could have killed her and sister while the girls were milking, as the Indians lay hid in the brush."

FRANCIS FRAZIER, LYNN.

"I used to kill many deer. Really, I was too fond of it. My friends tried to get me to quit. George Sugart, with a committee of Friends, undertook to visit me to give me advice. I managed to shun them three times, but the fourth time they caught me at home, and I could not dodge them. They talked kindly and urged me to lay aside my gun. I tried to do so for awhile, but 'what is bred in the bone, will break out in the flesh.'

"One day a boy told me that some swine needed attention out in the woods. I went, taking my gun. Tying two pigs together with my suspenders, I slung them across my shoulder, and started for the house. Along flew the hound, chasing some deer; pell mell they went and I after them. I tossed the pigs between some logs and laid off my shot pouch; had my coat on my shoulder and lost it. I shot one deer, and chased the other a mile and a half, but could not get it. I came back and found the dead deer, a splendid buck, three snagged, three years old. I hung it up, hide on, entrails out, and went to hunt for my pigs. They were gone, so were my "gallowses," and I have never seen them to this day, though that was fifty years ago, or more than that.

BEAR STORY.

"One damp, drizzly day I was out hunting, and heard a hog squealing terribly. I ran toward the noise, perhaps half a mile; came to a thickety pond and started into it. I saw nothing, but still heard the squealing, and also the bones 'craunching,' and knew a bear was killing the hog. As I pushed through the thicket, the thought struck me, "What if I shoot and she takes after me? There is nothing for me to climb, and I shall be a 'goner.'"

"I turned and went home, and got my two brothers on horseback to come. The dog ran in, the bear bit him, and he bounded out yelling for dear life. The bear bounced out too, and we after him, jumping logs, and tearing through the bush screeching like a thousand Indians. The dogs treed the bear, I shot him, and down he came tearing through the branches, and James rode up just as the bear fell. We skinned it and took the meat home, but it was too fat to eat. Once William Kiff came to our house, and wanted some venison; so we went out to hunt. The day was cloudy and misty, and I was not in humor to stay long. I said to myself, "I will go home; Kiff may hunt venison for himself." All at once a red deer stood near me; I shot and down he came. It was a grand, four snagged buck, right "in the velvet;" horns drop off in winter. In the spring they begin to grow, and the horns will come with "points" or snags on, one (on each horn) for every year of the deer's age. I have seen a deer with thirteen snags, seven on one horn and six on the other. I dressed the deer and carried it in, and "jerked" the meat, i. e., cooked it in strips over a slow fire. Kiff filled his pockets with the venison and went home satisfied.

"We used to wear shoes and leggings to keep the snakes from biting us. I have killed nine rattlesnakes in one day. The woods had plenty of plums and grapes.

"One morning I started toward White River Prairie. Seeing something run into a hollow log. I stuck my rifle into the log and let fly, but the recoil of the rifle came near knocking me down. As I went home, I came to a "maple flat," and saw a great gray wolf coming. I whistled and she stopped, and I shot at her. I went to the house and got father and Samuel to go back with me. The old sinner had tried to run, but she had made five or six beds as she went, and vomited mutton at each place. After awhile we found her nearly dead. We used wolf-skins, instead of saddles, like blankets on a horse.

"On 'Fifth Day,' as we were going to meeting, I said to James, "Let us kill a deer as we go home." "All right," said he. James' wife spoke up, "If any deer is killed, James will have it to do." We went after the deer, and the women went home. We went to a pond and saw deer tracks. There was a sloping tree with the roots turned up, and James sat there watching for deer. The bushes crackled, and out sprang two bucks. One threw his head up, and I shot it between the eyes and the nose, and down he dropped. "Hallo," cried James, "is the deer down?" "Yes." We tied the feet and carried it home on a pole. "Well," said James' wife, "who killed the deer?" "Francis," said James. She hated it that I had shot the deer instead of her precious husband.

BELL-MAKING.

"My father was a bell-maker, and so was I. Bells were in great demand then. Cattle and horses and sheep ran in the woods, and there had to be a bell in the flock to keep them together. I tended a little farm, and would plow till the flies would vex my beast, and then go and work in the shop, making bells. In that way I would make $17 to $22 worth in a single week. They sold from 25 cents to $3.50 a piece. Those heavy ox bells were large; they could be heard easily four miles. I have heard one of them seven miles. [I questioned the accuracy of his memory, but the old gentleman rallied gallantly to the defense of his bells, declaring that his statement was simply the sober, actual fact.—AUTHOR.]

"I would take my saddle-bags and stuff them with 'nests' of bells, i. e., little bells in bigger ones, perhaps two dozen bells, and set out for Winchester. The bells were ready sale, cash down. I would trade for shoes, hats, anything needed, and tie them on my horse, and go home loaded some times to the very tail of the horse. People would joke me, "Hallo, there, got a horseback grocery?" "Yes; can't you see for yourself," I would say. I made the bells of the best Juniata iron. When father died, the doctor's bill was $60. He wanted his pay in bells, but I would not do it, and he took a wagon. Sometimes I used boiler iron, and sometimes sheet iron, but Juniata (or Sligo) iron was the best. People would send far for my bells. I sent $16 worth to Fort Wayne, and they said, "They are the best bells we ever saw." They sent another order for $100 worth, but I could not fill it. The demand at home and from Illinois and Iowa movers was more than I could supply. I made bells for over twenty years.

"I was quite wild at one time of my life, and inclined to skepticism. I had two nice horses, perfect idols to me. I would walk to Newport any day rather than ride either of them. One day as I was plowing I thought, "If there is a God, I wish he would reveal Himself to me in some way that I may know Him!" Shortly afterward, as I was in the house, and the horses were in the stable, suddenly there came a sharp flash of lightning and a crashing thunder peal. I went to the stable and there were my beauties with their heads lying on a long trough. I spoke to them, but they made no sign. The lightning had killed them both dead. It impressed me greatly, "Turn, or the next will be thine," rang in my soul. I did turn, and since that time I have tried in my poor, weak way to serve the Lord, and I humbly trust my Maker looks upon my feeble service with gracious favor.

CHOLERA, 1849.

"The rise of the cholera near Lynn (1849) was very strange and striking. A cloud rose in the morning from the east, with some lightning and thunder. The lightning struck the ground at the cross roads near Isaac Palmer's, east of Lynn, and there came a terrible smell. The cholera began the same day, and ran along those roads west and south. The next day, in the morning, when I was at Newport, a neighbor came for a coffin, and said, "James Lister is dead with the cholera, sick only a few hours." I went home instantly. Henry Benson was taken also and died that night. Hodgen died also. Jesse Williams came to shave the corpse, and some one said, "Jesse, what is the matter?" He quit shaving, went out of the door, sat down, and in a few minutes he was dead. Hodgen and Williams lay dead together. Hodgen's wife stayed all night alone with the two corpses. Hodgen's body was taken away the next morning for burial, and Williams' corpse lay there alone till the next day. Twenty-seven died in all. Dr. Cook came down from Winchester, saying that he could cure it easily enough. He went into the field and picked and ate blackberries, and in two or three hours he was dead himself!"

NOTE.—The writer of these sketches then lived at the Union Literary Institute, near Spartansburg, and some eight miles from Lynn; and it was stated at the time that six lay dead before the one that died first had been buried. And also that two half-grown lads had to bury their father alone. It was said also that at Boston, six miles south of Richmond, Ind., the first person was taken sick at sunrise, and that before sundown six persons lay dead in that village. Whether these statements were true is not now known, but it is certain that they were made at the time as being matters of current news, and that they were supposed to be correct. The writer well recollects what fear pervaded the school at the institute lest the dread scourge should break out amongst them in its terrible power as at Lynn and elsewhere. The boarding house of the institution was filled with students, and the cholera among them would have been an awful visitation, but by God's mercy the fearful plague came no nearer, and they were spared. [See also statements of Silas Johnson and William Pickett, and of Elder W. D. Stone.]

JERE SMITH, 1817—READ AT OLD SETTLERS' MEETING, JUNE 11, 1864.

The subjoined sketch is so apposite and so well drawn that I cannot forbear to transfer it, in substance, to my pages:

"I came to Indiana, in 1817, with my father, William Smith, being twelve years old. He stopped that spring near Garrett's mill, on Green's Fork, two miles above Williamsburg, Ind. The settlers there were mostly from the same neighborhood in South Carolina with my father. David Young had come out in the fall of 1816, rented some ground for father, and a little cabin in a new town called Salem, in Wayne County, extinct long ago. Father put in a crop on that land, and stayed there till August, and then went up into Randolph County. The country all seemed low and like a river bottom in the jungles. The uncleared land was full of ramps, a rank, ill-smelling weed, eagerly eaten by the cows, and utterly ruining their milk. They grew early, however, and were soon gone. Buckeyes, nettles, gnats and mosquitoes were very plenty. In May, I saw the first Indians. An Indian family camped on the bank of the branch near Salem. I was terribly afraid, for all I had ever read or heard of cruel, bloody savages came thronging up to my mind. However, I ventured up after awhile, and got over my scare. After that, an old Indian, called Johnny Green, from whom Green's Fork was named, used to come and talk with us. He would get half drunk, and then the way he would talk was a wonder. He would tell of Wayne's fight with the Indians on the Maumee. He said, acting it out as he talked, 'Injun hide in timber, heap Injun. White man come, heap white man. Injun shoot, heap shoot. White man get in a row. Injun heap shoot, heap shoot. Bimeby old Anthony get mad, heap mad! Gallop horse along row, heap halloo, hoo-ee, hoo-ee, hoo-ee.'

"White man come, heap come, keep come, Antony heap holloo, hoo-ee, hoo-ee, hoo-ee, Injun shoot, heap shoot, white man keep come, then Injun run, run, run, heap run. Me run, run, heap run. Bimeby me come to a swamp, me jump in—yoo-ook, sink down, hide, night come, me slip away.' It excited me greatly to hear the old Indian savage act out this scene, and tell the tale of this battle, and the picture remains in my mind vivid to this day. In July, 1817, father entered fractional Sections 5 and 6, Town 18, Range 13 east, near the head of West Fork of White Water, now in Randolph, but then in Wayne, just east of the new boundary, and two or three miles farther up than any other settler, like the Nolan's Fork settlers three years before, on the utmost verge of civilization. We laid our corn by, helped Uncle George Smith through harvest and haying, and then August 18, 1817, father took his team and wagon, my two older brothers, David and Carey, and myself, and went out to his land, several miles through the woods, to build a cabin. We stayed all night at old William Blount's (the Zimmerman Farm), and the next morning went on, cutting a road as we went. A little after noon we got to the spot, the top of the hill where my father built, and where he spent the rest of his days. We cleared the bushes away, turned the horses to the feed trough on the tongue, and went to work. In a week we had a cabin up and covered, and had made a fire-place and chimney up to the funnel with dirt back and jambs, but the house had no floor. Father and one brother went back to bring the family and things, but my other brother and myself stayed there and cleared a patch for turnips. The next week the family came, and we sowed our turnips. We had a few small late ones that fall. We hewed logs and built a house in October, and had it floored and ready in December. In the winter we cleared two acres in the creek bottom, smooth for meadow, and sowed it in timothy; also six acres, 'eighteen inches and under,' for corn, and built a smith shop for father to work at his trade in. He was a blacksmith.

"William Blount lived highest up the creek, but one of his sons-in-law built a cabin about one-fourth mile above him, and another son-in-law lived on the same section.

"John Proctor lived just below on Section 17. Evan Shoemaker had the north end, and Griffin Davis the south end of Fractional Section 18.

"John Jordan (and his son, William) lived on Section 19, in Wayne County. Thomas Brower and John Gwynn lived below on the same section. James Malcom was on the northeast quarter of Section 17, and Henry Shoemaker lived with him. Samuel Sales, Army Hall, and David Jones, lived on the southeast quarter of Section 17. Isaac Barnes and John C. Hodge (brothers-in-law), from Beaver County, Penn., had entered land and built cabins. They went back for their families, and returned in the spring of 1818, by boat, down the Ohio to Cincinnati, and thence by land. Mr. Barnes' cabin stood on Section 7, across the creek from where Blount lived, and where Barrett Barnett lived a few years ago. Mr. Hodge's dwelling stood on Section 8, near and south of where my father built, and where Emerson Street lived ten years ago. So Mr. Hodge was our nearest neighbor.

"The country was thickly covered with a tall, heavy forest, having a dense undergrowth of shrubs, wild grass and weeds. I will name the trees most abundant: first, beech, sugar tree, ash, three varieties, gray, blue and swamp; oak, five varieties, white, red, burr, pin and river; poplar; walnut—white and black; elm—red or slippery, and white or hickory; hickory—white or shell-bark, and black or pignut; buckeye, linn, wild-maple, hackberry, coffee-nut, honey-locust, cottonwood. The undergrowth was spice-bush, iron-wood, water-beech, horn-beam, prickly ash, dog-wood, kunnekanic (Indian name—tree now extinct), red-bud, papaw, wild-plum, red and black haw, sassafras. In swamps there were black-alder, willow, thorn, crab-apple, young cottonwood. Weeds and grasses were nettles, pea-vines, may-apple, ginseng, ferns, black snake-root, seneca-root, silk-weed, ramps (soon extinct), bear-grass, file-grass, skunk's cabbage, pond lily, cats-tail.

"In clearings, there were butter weeds, thistles, mullen, dog fennel; in tilled lands, Spanish needles and touch-me-nots.

"The game were deer, squirrels—gray, red and black; turkeys, pheasants and bears. Other wild animals—wolves, raccoons, ground hogs, opossums, porcupines, wild cats, foxes, panthers, mink, otters and polecats. Wild bees were abundant.

"People helped each other roll logs, raise buildings and husk corn, often going several miles for that purpose. For milling, people had to go to Milton, or even to Connersville. My father got a pair of hand mill-stones, and we ground meal upon them, rather than go so far to mill. We also beat hominy in a mortar, and used that and potatoes and squashes and pumpkins instead of bread. My father finally had his mill-stones geared, and much of the corn of the neighborhood was ground upon them. Two turning would grind pretty well, but four would rattle it out finely.

CLOTHING.

"Our clothing was made of flax, wool and deer-skin, all home made. There was no money to buy "store clothes," and very few to be bought. Trade was mostly by barter. Peltry, honey, beeswax (for there were bees, both wild and tame), etc., were traded for salt, iron (which always had to be bought), and sometimes for leather, though many tanned their own leather, and many wore only moccasins. Hides were tanned in great troughs made from trunks of large trees chopped out hollow.

"Winter clothing was coon-skin caps, dressed deer-skin hunting shirts, pants and moccasins. Summer wear was linen, straw hats, bare-feet or moccasins. We often got moccasins from the Indians for corn, butter, hominy, salt, etc. The people, though now they would be called rough and uncouth, were yet neighborly, kind, sociable and affectionate, and intelligent and moral withal.

"The wild range was good for many years, and we soon had plenty of cattle, which furnished abundance of milk, butter and meat, with hides and tallow to buy salt, iron and leather. From 1821 to 1828, a common way to trade was, so many young cattle for a thing, for (say) a horse, yoke of oxen, piece of land, etc., and anything from six months to three years old was "counted in." If the parties could not agree, the price was settled by referees. Sometimes so many bushels of wheat or corn would be the price. In 1826–27, money began to appear somewhat, and barter became less frequent. However, in the spring of 1838, I traded a large, rather ugly four-year-old horse, and a half-worn dragon-bitted bridle, for a forty-acre lot a mile west of Winchester, no price being named in the trade.

CLEARING LAND.

"Clearing land was done thus: "One foot and under," or "eighteen inches and under," i. e., all below twelve or eighteen inches, were cut, and they and the "grubs" and old logs were all burned up. The rest were deadened by "girdling" (i. e., cutting through the bark, or the sap), or by burning brush heaps around the trees. If girdled to the "red," the tree would die immediately; if only through the bark, it would take two or three or four years, soonest if deadened in August. The deadened trees would fall more or less, and the land would have to be recleared each season for several years. Many, about the fourth year, would cut down everything standing, and clear the land fully. The trees would be made into proper lengths for rolling by "niggering," i. e., burning the trunks into pieces by piling large limbs and chunks across, and keeping fires across the tree-trunks. Attending to these fires was called "watching the niggers." I have done it many a time, attending sometimes a hundred fires in one job. Sometimes, at first, land was cleared in the green, but as soon as they could, it would be done by deadening, and mostly in August, by cutting the undergrowth, with stubs a foot or so long; nearly all would rot or die out the third year. The whole might be cleared by cutting and cross-piling and firing, with but little labor.

BIRDS AND "VARMINTS."

"When the land was cleared "in the green," the birds, etc., for three or four years would nearly take the crop. The trees left standing would afford them ample refuge, and they would take heavy toll. In 1821 or 1822, a general inroad of turkeys, birds, squirrels, raccoons, and even bears, passed the West River settlement toward the South. Much of the crops were destroyed. The creatures crossed over the Ohio into Kentucky; vast numbers were slaughtered as they passed; I once killed three turkeys from one flock, and my father and brothers, five more, making eight in all. The little boys used to be kept going round the fields, "hallooing" and screaming, to keep the birds away; sometimes yelling themselves hoarse.

"PIGEON ROOST."

"In the fall and winter of 1821–22, a pigeon roost was made between father's and Huntsville, on the southwest quarter of Section 33, Township 18, Range 13, and northwest quarter of Section 4, Township 18, Range 13. They began in October or November, and stayed to lay and hatch the next spring. They would begin to come about sun-down, and keep coming till 8 or 9 o'clock at night; some flocks would be more than a mile long. There must have been millions of the birds; on still nights, we could hear their noise to our house, a mile and a half. People would go there by night and kill them by hundreds, coming from Martindale Creek, and even from Green's Fork. The birds would lay their eggs in March, two in a nest, hatch and fly away, such as were left. I have seen but few for many years.

'FALLEN TIMBER.'

"In 1824, a terrible hurricane passed over my father's house. It was the second Sunday in July—the regular monthly meeting of the Baptist Church at Salem, of which my father and mother were members. My brother David and myself had been there and were going home; hence it took place July 11, 1824, at 5 P. M. As we were going along the Jacksonburg road, near the county line, we saw a black cloud rising in the west and we stopped in an empty cabin, hitching our colts near by. The cloud roared terribly, and the sky became suddenly dark; in five minutes it grew as dark as a starlight night; no sound was heard for twenty or thirty minutes but a deep, dead, tremendous roar; I heard no rain, no thunder, no trees falling, nothing but that awful roar, deep, dead and loud; it stopped quite suddenly, and the sky grew bright again; on going out, we saw there had been a heavy rain, and many trees, both dead and green, had been blown down around us. We started again for home, two miles north; some trees had fallen across the road, but we got to old John Zimmerman's (Blount's) place, with little trouble. He and his boys were out fixing the fence to save the crops; forty or fifty rods of fence were flat, and many trees also. John Zimmerman said (he was Dutch), "You can't kit home, te trees is all blown town acrost te rote." We said, "We will try." David said, "Our colts can go through the brush where a wild cat can't." The farther we went the worse it got. The thick timber began one-quarter of a mile above, and for a half mile to the creek crossing there had been no clearing, but it had been dense, unbroken forest. As we entered the mass of crushed and fallen timber, we tried to follow the track till we got to where Elijah Arnold built, and his widow Rhoda still lives (1864). We could get no farther; it was nearly dark, and stripping the bridles and old riding quilts from the heads and backs of the colts, we shouldered the things and put for home. The poor fillies neighed most pitifully as we left them; we got home before long, they came three days afterward. They never told us how they got through, neither can I imagine, but they made it somehow; we found the family unhurt, frightened at the terrible storm, but thankful for safety. Most of the roof was blown off, weight poles and all; some of the clap-boards were carried 200 yards or more; the body of the house was hewed logs, and they stood firm. Early the next morning, the whole neighborhood set to work, righting up houses, buildings, fences, etc., and on Thursday, we got the road opened again. Half a mile south of father's, a sound, thrifty-growing beech tree was twisted like a hickory withe, from two to eight feet above the ground, and was lying down all whole except that twist. It would seem that the tree had been bent over, and that while falling, it had been 'whirled' by the tornado, and the tree was so tough and green that it would not break, but just twisted like a withe. I helped cut the tree out of the road; it had stood west of the track and lay a little north of east. Another fact, at John E. Hodge's house, 300 yards south of father's, a twelve or fifteen gallon iron sugar kettle had been leaning against the southeast corner of the cabin, a low, one-story building. The wind moved the kettle three or four feet, and turned it bottom-upward. Mr. Hodge's cabin was wholly unroofed, and some of the ribs and logs were thrown out of place; the wind was stronger there than at father's, being 300 yards nearer the center of the storm. How far west or how high up in the air the storm was formed I never knew; it seems to have struck the timber at the Randolph and Henry line; its course was about due east, and nearly in a straight line, verging slightly south. The extent of the storm was about six miles from west to east; it seems to have come down to the timber about the county line, and to have come nearer and widened for two and a half miles, then to have ground and crushed everything in its reach, for about one and a half miles in length, and a mile in width; then it seemed to rise or grow weaker, till at length it appeared to pass entirely above the timber. My father's house and the road we traveled were nearly a mile west of where its effect ceased, and its crashing track was about half a mile wide there, its whole track being at that point about three miles from north to south; not quite a mile west, the crashing power was a mile wide, and for two miles farther west, the crashing force was a mile from one to one and a quarter miles. That whole region was a dense virgin forest, and the storm threw down all the timber in one immense mass. Some four miles west, a road had been opened north and south; that road was utterly blocked, and for years was wholly impassable for man or beast. This space, four miles east and west, and a mile or so north and south, was called the "fallen timber." Some ten years later the settlers began to enter and clear the lands and the tract is now occupied by fine farms."

So far as known, no person and no animal was killed or injured, which is, indeed, a wonderful fact.

[NOTE.—It is stated elsewhere that a cow was killed belonging to Isaac Branson. See Reminiscences of Mrs. Anna Retz, above].

URIAH BALL (1817).

"When father first came west (1817), not being satisfied with Warren County, Ohio, he took a flat-boat and floated down the Ohio and the Mississippi, stopping first in Tennessee, near Chickasaw Bluffs; he bought out an improvement there and located, but sickness soon drove us away from that region, and he went across the river to Little Prairie, Mo. Before long he turned his face northward again, coming back through Kentucky to Warren County, Ohio. The first Indian I ever saw was near Chickasaw Bluffs, Tenn. I was afraid of him, and tried to hide behind father; but the Indian (all painted and feathered) would 'peek' around father at me, to scare me, I suppose.

"The great earthquake had occurred a few years before (1811–12), and at Little Prairie we would often come to great "cracks" in the ground several feet wide. Sometimes trees would be standing split partly open, and "astraddle" of the crack. Two miles from Little Prairie, there had been before the earthquake a lake of considerable size. The earthquake so raised the land as to "spill all the water out," and the bottom was at that time two feet higher than the surrounding land. Outside the lake were trees and canebrakes, but in the lake ground were only great weeds like sun-flower weeds, called by the French "wample-pins."

"The earth had not done shaking yet, for as I lay on the cabin floor sick with the ague, the house and the doors, and the dishes would rattle with the shaking of the earth; and as we were on the Mississippi, the water would "ripple" as though there were a heavy shower, while yet the sky was clear and the air still.

"In New Madrid the houses had been cracked and twisted by the earthquake, and stood so yet when we were there (although some years after the earthquake had occurred).

"I sat on the west bank of the Mississippi and looked across the river with a spy-glass at the deer and the bears as they would come down to the river to drink, standing upon the eastern shore.

[Mr. Ball now resides at Union City, aged and feeble.]

JUDITH (WILSON) WAY (1817).

"I was born in Carolina in 1807, and was in my tenth year when father emigrated to Indiana in 1816–17.

"On the first day of December, 1816, a large company of emigrants set out from South Carolina, bound for Randolph Co., Ind., as follows:

Paul W. Way and family, five in number.
John Way and family, six in number.
John Moorman and family, six in number.
Benjamin Beverly and family, six in number.
George T. Wilson and family, five in number.
Armsbee Diggs and family, two in number.

They were relatives by blood, or marriage, or both.

Paul W. and John Way were brothers. George T. Wilson had married John Moorman's daughter.

"Benjamin Beverly's wife was Paul Way's sister, as also was Armsbee Diggs' wife. Thus there were six men with their wives and eighteen children, making thirty in all. We had four wagons, to wit: One two-horse wagon, two five-horse wagons, one four-horse wagon. John Moorman (with his son-in-law, George Wilson), had a two-horse wagon and a five horse wagon; Paul W. Way (with Benjamin Beverly, his brother-in-law), had one five-horse wagon; John Way (with Armsbee Diggs, his son-in-law), had one four-horse wagon, making sixteen horses in all.

"We overtook families of emigrants in every variety of locomotion; some had only pack horses, and sometimes there would be a whole family with a single horse. I remember one such in particular. They had a little knot of a horse piled up with goods, with two or three children on top and the woman and baby besides. The whole cry was "to get to Indiana," no matter how, so as only to reach that paradise beyond the Ohio.

"As I said, we started from Carolina December 1, 1816, and we reached Williamsburg, Wayne County, Ind., February 27, 1817.

"Our route lay across Blue Ridge, over the Holston, along French Broad and Crooked Rivers, through Sawanna gap, over Cumberland Mountains, and so through Tennessee and Kentucky to the Ohio River at Cincinnati. We camped on New Year's night on a very high bluff on French Broad, with steps cut down to the river. We saw a live alligator, which to us children was an unusual sight. There was a severe snow-storm as we were on top of the Cumberland Mountains, and we had snow and cold weather from there all the way through. The Ohio River was frozen over, and we crossed on the ice; boys were skating, and ladies and gentlemen were riding in sleighs on the river. Our folks were afraid to cross with their heavy wagons and big teams; and the men went over to Cincinnati and got men to come with long ropes and haul the wagons across the ice in that way. The hind wheels of Paul Way's wagon (which was the last one to cross), broke through the ice, and it was hard work to get the wagon out and across, but they succeeded. George Wilson (my father), was likely to have been drowned. He fell into an air hole up to his neck, and came near being sucked under the ice; but he held to the ice and the men pulled him out.

"We met a tribe of Indians (I think somewhere in Kentucky), going home with their ponies and their squaws. They had been to make peace, and to get their pay and their presents. There were 500 or more of them, men and women on ponies with the chief. Our company were greatly alarmed, but the Indians did us no harm. They asked for tobacco and bread, and they got what they asked for, so far as our folks had them. We were very glad to get along with them so easily as that. They went on their way, and our people passed on toward the Ohio, thankful to escape so cheaply.

"That winter journey was a severe one, and to look back it is not easy to see how we were able to get safely through. But by God's mercy we were spared to come safe to our looked-for haven, and to reach the friends who had already made the trip, and to meet them in joy and thankfulness of heart."

This is understood to have been the first company of emigrants to White River in Randolph County.

Paul W. Way, Henry H. Way, William Way, Robert Way and William Diggs had gone up White River from its mouth through the woods to Randolph County. Paul Way had gone back to Carolina to pilot the company through, and the others had stayed in Indiana. Henry Way and William Diggs went down to Wayne County during the fall and winter, and were married, and William Diggs and his wife are understood to have been the first family who settled on White River in Randolph County. Fannie Hill, of Jericho, oldest daughter of William Diggs, says her mother lived there for six weeks without seeing a white face (except probably her husband).

Such moving and such settlement as this would not very well suit modern notions of pride and comfort. But such was the way of the pioneers, and thus this goodly heritage gained its brave and hardy settlers.

The Ways, the Wrights, the Moormans, the Diggses, the Pucketts, the Hills, and many others were numerous and noted in early times among the primitive settlers, and many of their descendants still remain.

[NOTE.—Truth compels us to state that the romantic travel up White River from near its mouth to the neighborhood of Winchester, is declared by William Diggs, Jr., one of the party who is supposed to have made the wonderful trip, to be wholly a "myth;" that their journey was simply from Henry County over into Randolph, far enough indeed, but by no means such a journey as a trip the whole length of White River would have been.]

[NOTE 2.—Jesse Way, who says he, too, was a lad in the same company of emigrants, though younger than Judith Wilson, insists that the party saw no company of Indians like that of which she speaks. It is difficult to see how she could imagine the fact, more so than to consider that Jesse may have forgotten the circumstance].

[NOTE 3.—Another and perhaps a more serious objection to the correctness of her memory, is the question what Indians they could have been, and whither they were going. However, Aunt Judith insists that they met the Indians, let them be who they might be, and no matter where they had been or where they might be going].

WILLIAM PEACOCK.

"Jessup's Mill, on Greenville Creek, was built some years before Cox's Mill was, on White River.

When I was a little boy, say six years old, I used to go with some older boy to carry dinner to the men who were building Cox's Mill, on White River.

For a long time there were no ministers belonging to Jericho meeting. John Jones came about 1835. Benjamin Cox belonged to White River, and he used often to exercise at Jericho. Mr. Robinson has been a minister about fifteen years.

The early settlers were Henry Hill, Benoni Hill, Amos Peacock, Abram Peacock, Stanton Bailey, Jeremiah Cox, William Pickett, Joshua Buckingham.

The Shockney family did not come for years afterward—not till I was grown."

GEORGE AND ASENATH THOMAS, 1818.

Asenath (Hill) Thomas was born in North Carolina, in 1815, and was brought to Jericho, Randolph Co., Ind., in 1818. Jeremiah Cox entered land in the neighborhood before Henry Hill came. Abram and Amos Peacock were the first settlers there. They came, also, in 1818, but before Henry Hill did. A Mr. Kennedy lived up White River, three miles away, near Mount Zion. Mrs. Thomas says, "We used to 'neighbor' with them, they lived so near us. We went by a 'blazed path' through the woods. An 'Indian trail' passed from the north and west through Jericho, and past old Benjamin Thomas', east of Newport. The Indians would go in companies, fifteen or twenty pack-horses at one time. They would call at father's (Henry Hill's) for bread and milk. They thought milk was a wonderful treat. They would bring hickory kernels, moccasins, baskets, etc., to exchange for corn, meal, salt, etc. One of their chiefs was named Johnny Cornstalk. He often passed, and was always friendly. He was a stout, heavy man, with large limbs and high cheek bones. He would come in and stay and talk and laugh and enjoy himself for hours with us. The Indians mostly talked very broken English, but he spoke our language quite well.

"There was one bad Indian; the tribe had driven him off. He skulked round among the whites. Finally he shot a white man, and another white man shot him and wounded him, and still another man killed him. The Indians would not take him after he was wounded. The poor fellow got Mr. Lewallyn, of Ridgeville, to take him in. Mr. L. sent to the Indians to come and get him. They said "No; bad Indian; don't want him." The man whom the Indian had shot, found out that he was at Lewallyn's, and came there and shot him as he lay wounded in bed." [This was Fleming. See other accounts elsewhere].

"Friends' Meeting at Jericho was established about 1821. They built a log-cabin church, no windows, but merely holes, with shutters. The seats were poles, with legs. The women's side had a big fire-place; the men's side had a hearth in the middle, with a hole above to let the smoke out. They would use coals from the fire-place, with bark, etc., that would not smoke much.

"Benoni Hill, Henry Hill, Amos Peacock, Abram Peacock, Elijah Cox and Wm. Cox formed the meeting. The first preacher was John Jones, 1835. The first school was in 1822 or 1823, taught by Mariam Hill, consisting of twenty or twenty-five pupils, in Friends' Meeting House. Father Henry Hill once went to Richmond to work for money to pay his taxes, $1. He could get work at 25 cents per day. John Charles lent him $1, and he came back and paid them. He has taken bacon to Richmond, and sold it at $1 a hundred, half in trade. Eggs and chickens, for awhile, were no sale at all. Bye and bye we could get 3 cents a dozen for eggs, at Winchester.

"The first mill on White River, in this region, was Jeremiah Cox's—a water mill; a corn mill at first, then a flour mill also. The first run was gray heads; the other run was buhrs from abroad. It was built in 1825, and stood forty-five years. It was somewhat famous in its day.

"The lumber for Jeremiah Cox's house, owned now by Simon Cox—house still standing—was hauled fifty-two years ago from Richmond, and from Uncle Elijah Thomas' saw-mill, near Newport.

"Henry Hill lived in a pole cabin, fourteen by sixteen feet; no windows, but a hole for four lights, with a shutter. He made a sash with his pocket-knife, put in the lights, and then we had a window, and were grand for a fact! Our hearth was rock and dirt pounded together. Cattle would get fat on the wild pea-vines, etc., but they died with what was called the "bloody murrain." They were fat and full of tallow, but they would be taken sick and die in a few hours. Father had four heifers "come in" nearly at one time, and three died suddenly.

"People tanned their own leather in tan-troughs, made from big logs hewed out. George Thomas has a strip of leather tanned by Henry Hill forty-five years ago. George has worn it in his suspenders forty years, and it is good and strong now.

"People went to meeting in home-spun—the men in linen or tow shirts, and tow pantaloons, and deerskin jackets; the women in check home-spun. All classes would go barefooted. After awhile, people began to have shoes, and women would carry their shoes in their hands, and put them on when near church."

JAMES CLARK, 1819.

"We went to mill at Moffat's, Newman's, or Cox's. Our corn sacks would hold four bushels, but we would take two or three bushels, and put the sack across the horse. Fruit was abundant—gooseberries, plums, etc. Our clothing was linsey, home-made, or buckskin. Breeches, jackets, hunting-shirts, were buckskin.

"To dress skins was a great curiosity. The art is now nearly lost. I used to dress many skins years ago, and I will tell how:

TO DRESS DEERSKINS.

"Soak the skin soft; take off the flesh with a grain knife (a tedious job, two good skins are a full day's work); hang them up till dry; take deer's or beef's brains and dry them on a board, and put them into a sack with warm water, and squeeze them till like soap-suds; work the skin soft in this lather, two or three hours, wring it lengthwise as dry as possible, and stretch and pull it in every possible way till entirely dry. Do so (soak, wring, pull) three or four times, till white. Then cut off all the flesh and smoke the skin soft and yellow. It is nice and warm when dry, but when wet it will stick to your hide.

LOST CHILD.

"Once a child, Mr. Burson's, was lost—a three year-old girl. It wandered off three miles through the woods, to Micajah Morgan's. Mr. M. saw it clambering the fence, and took it in. Mrs. M. said, "She looks like Enoch Burson's child." Mr. M. started on horseback with the girl, and met Ephraim Bowen, hunting it. Mr. B. took the child and carried it home.

WORK, MONEY, ETC.

"At one time I hired out, mowing, twenty-six and a half days, at 25 cents a day. (Eighteen years old.) We used shin-plasters, mostly, for money. We seldom could get silver. The coins were commonly cut up into pieces, called "sharp-shins." Shin-plasters disappeared by and by, but silver was still very scarce. Sugar and deerskins were all we had to sell for money. Sugar, $6 a hundred; deerskins, from 25 to 50 cents apiece; fawn-skins, 25 cents; doeskins, 37½ cents; old buckskins, 50 cents. Land was, at first, $2 per acre; one-quarter down; not less than 160 acres. About 1820, the price was put at $1.25, and 80 acres; and afterward, 40 acres, all down. Many paid entry money and could not pay the rest, and lost their land. Afterwards, the law was made so as to allow a "floating claim," i. e., the money paid might apply to a part of the land.

"The community was civil and peaceable, mostly. No great crimes, no big affrays, nor fights, nor murders.

"There was a mill north of Spartansburg—Jessup's Mill. I went there once. There was no roof; the mill stood open. The miller's house was across the creek from the mill, and a foot-log between. He would take a peck measure full over, turn it in, come back and talk awhile, and go with another peck, and so all night long; just about a peck an hour.

DEER HUNTING.

"next day I killed my second deer. I had killed the first deer near Overman's. I shot that first deer, and asked him to help carry it in. 'No,' said Overman, 'I can't leave planting corn. You just take it on your shoulders, and its tail between your teeth, and climb a sapling and hang it up.' I didn't do it, however. But for my second deer. I was hunting a horse in the range. As I was going round a pond at the head of Nolan's Fork, a deer sprang up ahead of me, and I drew up my gun and let fly, and down came the deer. In 1821, I was staying with a cousin, north of where Spartansburg now is. We had been planting corn, and when that was done I went hunting. I saw no game till, finally, I came to Beaver Pond. The deer tracks were abundant. but no deer. Coming to a thick maple-top, I laid my rifle in it, and cleared away the twigs, and made a "rest" for my gun. About sundown I saw a deer cross, but too far off to shoot. About dusk there stood a doe in plain sight, about twenty steps away. I shot and she went. I hunted for her, but no doe could I find. I went back to my "rest" to watch for deer again. Presently along came a big buck, not ten yards distant. I moved, and he "bounced." About 11 o'clock, I heard the water go "plug-plug." Soon I saw a deer about 20 steps from me, running its head into the water, and flapping its ears. I sighted for two minutes, and shot, and the deer ran. I got down to load the gun, but I had not powder enough; and so I went to the cabin about 12 o'clock. "Where have you been all night?" "Beaver Pond." "Shooting deer?" "Yes." "What luck?" "Had two shots, but haven't found my deer." In the morning we went out and found both deer, dead, not ten yards apart. This was the year Napoleon died, 1821.

"Twice I have shot three deer in one day, and two in a day many times. Once I was chasing a gang of deer, and the sky clouded up and I started for home. All at once there stood four deer gazing at me. I let drive at them. After loading again, I went to the place and found the "hair cut" and scattered on the snow. I followed the trail and saw blood plenty, and at length found the deer, dead, 100 yards from where it had been shot. I hung it up, skinned it, left the meat hanging, and, going back, I found another place of "hair cut." I followed that trail, also, and the first I knew, there lay the other deer, dead, in a thicket of spice-brush. One shot had killed both deer. The carcass of the dead buck lay stiff and cold where it had been shot down. I did with that as with the other, and went to the cabin. Next morning we brought in the venison, and splendid meat it was, too, I can tell you."

SOLOMON WRIGHT.

"My grandfather, James Wright, was a Carolinian Quaker, who fled to the wilds of the Holston, in Tennessee, to escape conscription into the army, in the war of 1776. My father, John Wright, was puny at first, and was rocked in an old trunk-cover lined with the skin of a sea animal, the hair on which is said to rise and fall with the tides. As he grew up, he gained strength and vigor. He married Margaret Reece, in Carolina. About 1804, the Wrights emigrated to Ohio, to military lands. In 1814, or thereabouts, the twelve-mile strip came into market, and some fourteen or fifteen families, who lost their lands on the military tract through a flaw in the title, came, soon afterward, to Randolph County. They had fine improvements in Ohio, but they lost the whole. James and Abram Wright moved first of this company. My father came out and selected some land, but did not move then. James and Abram Wright settled on Eight-mile creek. William Haworth came with them. William Diggs and Armsbee Diggs came from Carolina about the same time. William Way, Sr., and his sons, William, Paul and Henry, all grown and married, came also. I think these came in the fall of 1815. James and Abram Wright moved soon afterward from Clinton County, Ohio.

"March 10, 1816, my brother Isaac (one of the triplets), and myself started, with one horse for us both, from Clinton County, Ohio, to go to the woods of Randolph. With a few things in a sack slung across the horse (among them, seven or eight apples—the last of the season), we set off in high glee, I being fourteen years old, taking turns in riding, or, as it is called, "riding and tying," a very common practice then. Our route was Waynesville, Springboro, Eaton, New Paris, Williamsburg, Ind., and so on to Randolph. We got to brother James' glad enough. Isaac said, "I had to walk nearly all the way. Solomon was so chicklegged he could hardly go at all." We went to work on father's place to clear and build. One day I had laid off my coat and vest on the leaves, when the fire ran and caught them, and burnt leaves, coat, vest and all. As I held up the smoking shreds, Uncle Haworth cried, "Save the buttons!" "There are no buttons to save," was the curt reply. There was I, a poor lad fourteen years old, one hundred and twenty miles from home, with no clothes but shirt and pants. I had to wear an old overcoat of brother James', a world too large and long, which made me the laughing-stock at all the log-rollings. In warm weather, I gladly shed the old coat and took to shirt and pants.

"I stayed through the summer, and were turned home: and in about a year father and I came through with a load of provisions. A year after that, father moved to his land. Cabin Creek was so named on a trip we made to David Connor's, below Wheeling. Seeing a group of Indian cabins on the bank of the creek, some one cried, "Let us call the stream 'Cabin Creek,' and Cabin Creek it is to this day. Muncie was so named from Muncie [Montzie], an old Indian. The Indians complained of Connor's whisky. "Too much 'Sinewa,'" they said. I saw the first lot sold in Winchester.

"Once in school, near Dunkirk, on the last day, the girls got behind the chimney and pushed the fire-place and back wall over into the house, and scattered the clay all over the floor—grand fun, they thought.

"My oldest boy, George Washington, killed a bear. He was quite young, and people would ask, "Is that the boy who killed the bear?" He skinned the bear and brought it [the skin] home.

"One day some white men and Indians were jumping near the mill-pond. One white man jumped with stones in his hands. The Indians were angry. One of them threw the stones into the pond, exclaiming, "No fair!"

"Nathan Thornburg came one day and said, "We are starving for meat." We went hunting, but found nothing. Just as we were going home, a deer started up. I shot the deer and cried to Thornburg, "There is your meat; go get it," which he did.

"One evening a man came and said, "There is a bear over the hill yonder." We went, and, sure enough, the dogs had treed a bear. Thornburg snapped and I snapped. He stuck in a new flint and shot the bear outright. One man said, not very long ago, "The telegraph cannot come here; there is no water-course." Once, as we were traveling near Smithfield, we came upon a gang of Indians, lying on the ground under the oak trees. The dog barked, and they jumped up and hastily wrapped themselves up in some way. One Indian asked me for "big ax, to cut bee tree." I told him, "No; got none." He brought me some venison, as black as black cloth, and gave me a piece. I took it. The young man with me took none. The Indian was displeased, and said, "No good white man."

"In 1833, my wife noticed the "stars falling." She went to the door and cried, "O, come and look, quick, or the stars will all be down!" While we were moving from Ohio, as we stopped one evening, a young man sat on a stone and sang:

"O, when shall I see Jesus, and reign with Him above?"

The occasion was affecting. We felt lonely and sad, and wept freely.

"Between Williamsburg and White River, an old ewe "gave out," and we laid her on a tree-root "in the wilderness." Seven weeks afterward we found her there, feeding about, and took her home. A great many Indians were here then. I used to hop with them and shoot at a mark. We lived in harmony till two young white men went down below Stony Creek and stole two Indian ponies and escaped to Ohio. Shortly, the Indians went after them. They said, "No good white man; steal Indian ponies." I always noticed that, in the Indian difficulties, the whites were mostly to blame, and that the trouble generally arose from stealing their horses or from selling them liquor.

"A while after we came to Randolph, father sent me to mill, on the Stillwater below Greenville. I followed the Indian trail through the forest, seeing not a living soul, except that I met me carry some Indians, who, upon my asking them "how far to Greenville?" held up six fingers, to mean, as I supposed, six miles. When I got to Greenville, the old fort was there in decay and partial ruin, and not much of a town. Passing on, I found the mill on Stillwater, some miles below, got my "grinding," and returned safely home. This was probably before 1820.

Solomon Wright is probably mistaken, by at least one year, in his idea of the time when he came to Randolph. It seems well settled that William Diggs and the Ways came in the fall of 1816, and that the Wrights, etc., none of them till at least the spring, or, more probably, the fall, of 1817. They did, some of them, certainly arrive that fall, and that was probably the time, December, 1817, when William Wright went to White River, as told by John Fisher, he thinking that wagon the first to White River.

The following reminiscences of Solomon Wright were written and furnished by Miss Lillie A. Garrett:

"About the time grandpa settled on this farm, he saw a young fawn floating down White River, rescued it from the water and put it into a hollow sycamore; and when he came back from hunting, took it home. He kept it several years. Grandpa says, 'I put a bell on it, and it would go off into the woods, and wild deer would follow it; and when I would hear the bell I would look out for the deer and kill them.'

"He became awful cross, and when anybody came, he would turn his hair back, bow up his neck, meet them at the gate, and they had to stand back or be "floored." One day, two boys were going to meeting, and "Buck" made them "climb" to get out of his way; and he kept them up their saplings till it was too late for meeting. At last he "bunted" over one of the children, and grandpa shot him.

"Jacob Wright and Sarah Wright (?) were the names on the first marriage license issued at Winchester.

"Abram Wright and Isom Garrett were pioneer teachers. One taught at Dunkirk and one on Green's Fork, and the schools used to meet to "spell" against each other. Those "spelling matches" were gay times, and were useful, to boot.

"To persons inquiring the way to Winchester, Charles Conway used to reply, "Just go on as far as you can get among the logs and brush, and you are in Winchester." Paul W. Way surveyed the town plat, and Abram Wright carried the chain for him. David Wright "cried" the lots at the first sale. He said to David Wysong, "That young man is good-looking, and he would look still better if he would bid just a little higher." Hiram Mendenhall and others, between 1830 and 1840, joined their possessions and formed a "Community" at Unionsport. The town still stands, but the "Community" was dissolved long, long ago.

"In time of the "Millerism" excitement, a deep snow fell, which the frightened devotees predicted would turn to brimstone.

The first teacher at Cabin Creek was Mary Ann Ring. Grandpa sent the two oldest children. The little "chits" hid their dinner, tied up in a rag, under the floor before they entered the schoolroom on the first day.

The Diggs', Littleberry, Marshall and Franklin taught the school in after times, and the "Wright children" grew fond of learning, eight attending at one time. And future years found them at Winchester, Williamsburg, Liber, etc., and then as teachers through the region. Great interest was taken by them in temperance, anti-slavery, etc. Fanny, the youngest, now the wife of Judge R. S. Taylor, of Fort Wayne, used to stand on a chair and recite:

"What, fellow-countrymen in chains!
Slaves in a land of light and law!"

—Whittier.

In the "Separation," most of the Cabin Creek Friends left the "Body." Amos Bond, J. H. Bond, Solomon Wright, etc., were noted Anti-slavery Friends. Great enthusiasm prevailed, and lectures, papers, pamphlets, etc., were the order of the day. The underground railroad track passed this way, and "Cabin Creek" was one of the chief stations.

When "Birney's vote" was found to be about 7,000, Hiram Mendenhall, who presented the "petition" to Henry Clay, at Richmond, Ind., said, "Thank God, there are left yet 7,000 men who have not bowed the knee to Baal, nor kissed his image"—referring to the rumor that so many kissed Henry Clay. Grandpa kept an inn for many years, as this road was a great Western thoroughfare.

The Van Amburg show passed here once, and the men, some of them, stayed overnight, and the elephant stood in the yard, tied to a young walnut tree.

Some Mormon converts once camped at the creek ford, and their preacher declared they were going to Nauvoo, protected by the same power that guarded Daniel in the "lions' den." They seemed sincere and hearty in their faith. Abram Wright attended a meeting of Mormons, at which the people wept profusely under the words of a speaker who said he had prayed all night to be delivered from the devil, whose chains he could hear rattling down the stairs.

"Samuel Peters, a highly respected young colored man, used to board with us. He went South, after the war, was cashier of the Freedmen's Bank, at Shreveport, La., and had been elected to Congress there, when he died in the fall of 1873 by yellow fever, which struck that city so fatally at that time. First burial in Friends' Burying-Ground at Cabin Creek was a child of Mordecai Bond's, and the next was Jethro Hiatt's wife.

First mill in Stony Creek Township was built at Windsor, by John Thornburg, 1827. The first cooking-stove was owned by Solomon Wright, bought at Newport.

A criminal with his legs fastened round the horse, once stopped for dinner. Two men held the clanking chains upon his ankles as he walked into the house. "Look at that and be honest, boys," said grandpa to his sons, who were standing by and gazing at the poor fellow.

"Eminent Quaker preachers of the olden time, in Randolph County, were Isom Puckett, Benjamin Cox and others. In later years, Martha Wooton, Daniel Puckett, Charles Osborn, etc., labored here to some extent, though not residents within the limits of the county.

WILLIAM ROBINSON.

"I have owned and improved six different farms in this region, building six separate houses. When my father moved here, I was too young to go to mill, but my brothers used to go to Solomon Wright's to mill and get wheat ground, unbolted, and then take the meal to an old man who had made a sieve by stretching a cloth over a piece of hoop bent round, and they would sift the meal through that, and thus make flour.

"Soon after father settled, the State road was made from Winchester to the State Line toward Greenville, right past father's cabin. I saw the men going along blazing "the trees." Judge Edwards said that when Paul Way surveyed the road, he had a man go along the county road and blow a horn, so as to keep him in a straight course. When they reached the "Dismal," they hunted a narrow passage for a crossing, and curved the road to hit the spot. The State road was the leading highway in this country, and, for many years, an immense amount of travel passed upon it. I have counted eighty wagons of movers in one day, going to Western Indiana, Illinois, etc. My father's cabin was a stopping-place, and we have had so many at once that we boys often had to go to the hay mow to sleep to give room to the lodgers.

"Years afterward, when the West had become somewhat settled, cattle used to be taken east in immense droves. I have seen 700 or 800 in a single herd. David Heaston's, James Griffis', and my father's were the chief places for movers and for droves. Father used to charge a man for supper, breakfast, lodging and horse feed, 37½ cents. The old National road was another great thoroughfare.

"An old man, Banta, built a bridge over Greenville Creek on the State road, and I helped him do the job. We went out there to work, camping in the woods. His folks neglected to bring us any provisions, and for three days we lived on bread and water.

"My father lived here six years before he was able to enter any land. He got money to enter his first land by hauling wheat to Lewallyn's mill, at Ridgeville, for flour; and by buying pork, potatoes, etc., building a flat-boat, and taking the boat-load of bacon, flour, etc., down the river to Logansport, and selling his load to the Indians.

"He entered land east of Winchester (Kemp farm). A company, of whom Jesse Way was one, went down the Mississinewa River with loaded flat-boats, and Jesse lost his boat, and his load too, in trying to run the dam at Byles's mill on that river.

"An Indian "trail" was simply a path through the woods. The path would be trodden so as to be plainly visible. Sometimes the amount of pony-travel would be so great as to make a heavily-trodden track. "Trails" passed in various directions. One led from Muncie to Greenville, straight as an arrow. One from Muncie to Fort Wayne; one from Godfroy Farm to Fort Wayne, etc."

RUTH (TEST) ROBINSON.

"When a girl, I went with my mother to a quilting and corn-husking. When we got there, nothing seemed ready, but the boys went to the woods and got some poles for frames; the women pieced the quilt and carded the tow, and so they quilted the quilt, each woman quilting where and how she pleased. Doubtless, the quilt was just as warm, which is the chief thing after all. One woman got drunk. She said she was getting her "nats upon the taps;" and she would go out and help cook. Whisky was everywhere. Still-houses were plenty, and much whisky was made and drank. My father settled in Union County in 1817. He owned the first mill in that county, and my oldest brother built a factory. My father came to Ohio from New Jersey in in 1802, to Waynesville, and I was born there. He resided at Cincinnati eighteen months, then at Covington, operating a woolen factory, and building the first good house in Covington. He lived thirty-six years on the East Fork of White Water, and then moved to Richmond residing there for four years. He died in 1852, eighty-four years old.

"Some men from Union County took the first (and only) two flat-boats down the East Fork of White Water to New Orleans. There was a heavy freshet and the water was very high. There was a great crowd to see them start, from all the country round. They sold their load at New Orleans and came back all the way from that distant market on foot."

THOMAS WARD.

"The first money I ever had, when a young lad, as my own, was 12½ cents. My brother and I sold a pair of deer-horns for 25 cents, and I had half. I managed, afterward, somehow, to get 87½ cents, and loaned it to father, he promising to give me a sheep. His "sheep" proved to be a lamb, but I raised it and traded it for a pig, and then that for a calf, and so on. Afterward, I came to be the owner of a colt, which I traded again, and so on from small things to greater, till, by the time I was twenty-one years old, I had become the owner of six hundred acres of wild land."

[Gideon Shaw states that Thomas Ward, when a lad, was at his father's, in the southeast corner of Randolph County, buying furs, etc.]

"I began very early to trade for things. Father let me have a pig or two, and I traded for a calf and then for a motherless colt, and so on. I bought my own clothes. As before stated, men would come along and hire me to survey and deaden land, and I would do the surveying, and hire the deadening for less than what they would give me. At one time I entered an eighty-acre tract for $100, and sold it shortly after for $200. I used to trade in furs and peltry, and would make, sometimes, $200 in a single winter, or even more in that way.

"The first land I ever entered for myself I carried the money in my hand all the way to Fort Wayne, traveling on foot the whole distance. There was a nice Indian sugar orchard which I wished very much to own. We found out that another party was planning to enter it, and I started on foot with money for that tract, and also for some that father wished to enter. I had the money tied up, and carried it in my hand the whole way. The "specie circular" had lately been issued, and in just three days it was to take effect. I got to John Brooks' the first night, gave Mrs. B. the money to keep and went to bed. The next day I got to Adam Miller's, near Bluffton. The third day I tried hard to make Fort Wayne, but the traveling was very bad, the snow being nearly knee deep, and I was but a boy (eighteen years old, or perhaps less), and I had to come short of the mark. In the morning I went to the Registrar's office, made application for the land for myself and my father, got my certificate from that office and went boldly to the Receiver. Col. Spencer knew my father and knew me, too, for he had stayed at my father's at different times. I told him the whole story—the paper money, the sudden start, my hard travel on foot, and how I had missed by a few hours, and what a disappointment it would be to lose my land after such a chase for it. He was a sturdy Democrat, and father was a stedfast Whig; but Col. Spencer was a gentleman and a kind-hearted man, and he pitied the poor boy; and he said to me, "You shall have your land, and your father shall, too. I am going into Ohio on business of my own, and I can use the money myself." So he took my money and I entered the land. But my piece was some four acres more than a full eighty, and it took $5 extra; and that was every cent of money I had. But I was determined I would have the land, let come what would; so I paid my last cent and got it. I told Col. Spencer what I had done, and he asked me how I expected to get home. I told him I did not know, but that I was going to start and risk getting through. "O, that will never do," said he; and he insisted that I should borrow of him enough to take me home. I finally did so, and tramped home again, sending his money back the first chance I found. I had an uncle (Daniel Miller), on Robinson's Prairie, and I stayed the first night with him, the second night at Portland, and got home the third night. When I started in the morning from my uncle's, on my way from Fort Wayne, he told me of a nearer way through the woods; that I could go by "blazes" to the Wabash, and cut off several miles. I took his directions, and followed the "blazes" through without difficulty. I thought no more of traveling thus through the thick woods, guided only by "blazed" trees, than I would now to travel along a beaten road.

"I have lost great amounts of property during my life. I put two hundred and forty-five acres of land near Ridgeville, and one thousand acres of Iowa land, into the north and south road through Ridgeville, when it was first worked on, and lost it. I did more for the road than anybody else, living or dead. Others managed to secure their stock, but my loss by the road was $30,000 or more. Mr. Lewallen's mill, at Ridgeville, was built, probably, after 1819. My father, Joab Ward, commenced building boats about 1835. When the country along the Wabash, etc., began to settle up, the fact made a market for several years, and the people of Wayne and Randolph tried to supply it by sending their produce down the Mississinewa to the Wabash, and thereabouts. Boats were needed, and Ridgeville was the head of high-water navigation, and so father took to building boats and selling them to people to take their produce down the river on. He would build a boat forty feet long by ten feet wide, at 62½ cents a foot, i. e., $25 for the boat, all ready for floating. He would cut the timber green, from the woods, have two heavy side-pieces sloped rounding upward at both ends, cut a "gain" in the lower edge to receive the ends of the planks which formed the bottom, pin the bottom planks to the sides and the middle piece, fasten on some pieces of plank at the top of the gunwale, so as to increase the depth of the boat (making it, perhaps, two feet), stop up the cracks, and she was ready to receive her load and to float along her downward way. This flat-boating could be done only in times of flood.

High water was mostly during the winter and spring. The business lasted perhaps ten or fifteen years. The river floods became less, and the markets in that region ceased or were supplied in other ways.

Father built, in all, a large number of boats—thirty-seven in one spring. He used to hire hands to work for him, and board them at 12½ cents a meal.

One spring, several boats started down the river, loaded with apples, potatoes, cider, etc. At the first mill dam below Marion (McClure's), one boat, belonging to Hampton Brown, who lived below Newport (Fountain City), in going over the dam, ran under and sunk and lost the whole cargo, and the boat was ruined. The men swam out to the shore and were saved.

At one time, a raft came plunging down upon the swift-rushing flood. They contrived to land a cable and tied it round a tree; but the raft broke in two and went over the dam. There were two men on the raft. One came ashore, but the other shot under the water and was never again seen alive. His dead body was found afterward, some distance below."

DAVID LASLEY.

"William Edwards came in 1818; Jonathan Edwards came in 1818; they lived north toward town.

David Wysong lived three-fourths of a mile east.

John Elzroth lived near the "poor farm," coming in 1818.

Thomas Jarret came in 1818. He lived one-quarter mile away. Peter Lasley bought his land at private sale, but unimproved.

In Winchester there were a few log cabins, and a log court house. David Heaston came in 1819, a little southwest. In Winchester were Paul W. Way, Charles Conway, John Odell, John Wright (blacksmith), John Wright (Judge).

"I cleared off the public square in Winchester; there were three and one-half acres; it took me three months, working all day and half the night, and I got $35 for the job. Moorman Way got more than double that sum ($75) years afterward for putting in new trees. It was all "in the green," there came a snow and the heaps would not burn well; much was sugar-tree, three feet and over. A very large elm stood right in the cross street. The timber in this region was sugar-tree, beech, hickory, walnut, oak, elm, etc., etc. Oak was scarce, sugar-tree most abundant of all. There was much wet land in the region that nobody would have, that land is now the best in the county. I helped make a big cross-way on the State road west of Winchester, three-quarters of a mile long. The logs were many of them eighteen inches through. Two of us built it in three months, getting $10 a month, boarding ourselves. Poles had to be put in between the logs at the top, and the whole was covered with dirt six inches deep. We had to cut many of the trees, standing knee-deep in water, and the logs often floated as we hauled them, making the work of drawing them to the track much easier."

JOHN MANN, GREENSFORK.

"We used to grind our corn on a hand-mill. My father had one, and the neighbors were in the habit of coming and using it. It was hard work; a few quarts would tire a man completely out; you had to turn with one hand and feed with the other (a few grains at a time). The mill worked very slowly, and we generally ground only enough for a meal or two at once. The way the mill was made and worked was this: The lower stone was laid flat and fast; the upper stone was fixed to turn upon a center piece in some way, and was made to revolve by a pole, fastened (loosely) in a beam above, and in the top of the stone below, near the edge of the stone, in a shallow hole drilled in the surface. This drilling into the stone was hard to do, for there were no tools, and there was no way to fasten anything to the stone. These stones were about two feet across, home-dressed and home-made."

SIMON COX.

"When I came to Randolph, Charles Conway lived half a mile south of Winchester. John Wright (blacksmith) lived on the north side of Winchester. Paul Beard and Jesse Johnson (and perhaps others), were on Greensfork, near Lynn. There were some settlers down White River, but I did not know them. No settlers were on White River above us. John Cox, my father, came in 1818, with eight children; none are now living but myself. He died forty years ago. White River meeting was set up about 1820. The members were Benjamin Cox, John Wright (blacksmith), Jonathan Hiatt, Simon Cox, Thomas Ward, Joseph Moffatt and may be others. Jericho meeting was begun soon afterward. The first school was about 1823; Isaac Pearson was the teacher. George Cox, born 1820, remembers riding home from school on his Uncle Pearson's shoulders; George was perhaps three years old.

"The first mill was on Salt Creek, north of Winchester, water-mill, built by Solomon Wright; it ground very slowly, being in use some years. Jeremiah Cox's mill was the next—a flour mill—bolt run by hand. The first meeting-house was the White River Church, warmed by coal in the middle.

"The first doctor I knew of was at Winchester. The first store I knew of was there too. The first frame house was Jeremiah Cox's, built about fifty-five years, and standing yet in good repair. The first child born in our settlement was my son, George Cox, born January 6, 1820.

"Benjamin Cox and myself once started to go through to the Johnson settlement below Lynn, after some grain to take to mill. One had to go ahead and cut "a road" for the wagon to pass. We had to "camp out," and a deep snow fell in the night."

BURKETT PIERCE.

"Meshach Lewallyn and Joab Ward lived near Ridgeville when I came; they had been there not long. James Massey and ———— Massey came the same fall that I did, and settled near Saratoga. (James Massey was here in 1818, before B. P. came). George Ritenour came two weeks after me and settled across the river. Meshach Lewallyn built a small mill in 1819 (I think), a water-mill; it would grind two or three bushels a day; the meal would come by "spurts." A dog came in and tried to lick the meal; now he would get some meal, and now he wouldn't; it did not suit him, and he would throw up his head and howl, and then he would try to lick the meal again." (This story has been told us of four different mills in the region, as also of one in Pennsylvania.)

"Mr. Lewallyn afterward built a better mill, which became a noted point in those times for many years; he built a saw-mill also. David Connor built a log shanty two miles east of Deerfield, on the Mississinewa, and traded with the Indians. He sold them flour, and salt, and powder, and whisky, etc., for furs and peltry. He took loads of furs and skins in "pirogues," down the Mississinewa, up Wabash, up Little River, across the portage nine miles to St. Mary's, and so to Toledo and Detroit. He hauled his goods across the portage on wagons with three yoke of oxen. Brother Thomas and I went with him once. He had otter, musk-rats, beaver, coon skins, minks, etc., a heavy load. He got his pay in silver, and bought a pony to bring the silver home. (This was in 1822.) He stayed at that point a year or two or so, and moved down the river to near Wheeling, and later, to below Marion, where he settled, built mills, and spent the rest of his life. He died rich a few years ago. I took hogs to him, which he bought and butchered. He showed me half a bushel of silver money. He was a "smart" man, and a man of his word; but he would have his own way in a bargain. He made a "power" of money. He did not like to sell to settlers, because he could not charge them enough. He commonly sold to Indians, and his price to them was very high.

"Lewallyn's son, Shadrach, shot an Indian in their yard. A patch of corn had been planted, and the boys were gathering it on a sled (as most of the hauling was done then). The Indian had bought some powder and whisky at Connor's, and he "cut up" and scared the boys. They unhitched the horses, and one of the boys ran, and the Indian ran after him and pointed his gun at the boy. Shadrach called out, "What is the matter?" The boy said, "The Indian is going to shoot me." Shadrach caught his gun and undertook to shoot the Indian. Shadrach's wife tried to pull him away for 100 yards, but he shot and killed the Indian right there in the yard. This was in the evening. Shadrach went to his father's that night, and in the morning they covered the body in the hollow of a tree turned up. Old Meshach went to Muncie alone, and told the Indians what his son had done and that he should be tried fairly, and suffer the penalty. He also told the Indians to come and bury their comrade and they did so; fifteen or twenty came and buried him on the river bank, on my farm. The young man was tried, but he was acquitted; and that made the Indians hostile. I went to Connor and talked with him, and got him to intercede with the Indians. Connor had great influence with them, and they would do almost anything he wished. He told them that I was his cousin, and that he wished they would be reconciled. I had come into the county after the shooting and before the trial. The Indians had torn up the floor in the cabin I was to live in, and I fixed it. We sent some boys to get the cabin ready, and we expected to move up from Joab Ward's. While the boys were at the cabin, six or seven Indians came in. One of the young men set them a puncheon bench, and they sat down. Presently one of them, Big Nose, drew his knife, and caught my brother Thomas, and cried, "Now I kill you; you killed my cousin." Brother said, "No, I wasn't in the country then." "You are a liar," Big Nose cried. He held Thomas a long time, but let him go at last. Another young man, who was with Thomas, ran away 100 yards and caught up his gun. The Indian caught my brother again, but finally said, "I let you go. I no kill you this time—next time I kill you, sure." The other Indians smiled like, but said nothing. The Indian turned my brother's face toward him and said, "Look, next time I kill you."

"The boy came and met us and told us. Joab Ward said, "Follow the Indians." I said "No." Then he said, "Go back with me." My wife stood there with the child, and she said, "Let us go on," and we started again. We went, and my wife followed, trembling, but when we got in sight of the cabin, all fear left her. We got to the cabin and unloaded, and there came along a big, burly fellow, and offered to stay with us. "He was not afraid," he said. He stayed. There was a big stump of a tree-root near by. Before bed-time he looked out and said, "I see an Indian out there. I see his blanket and his eyes. He is going to shoot." The fellow got his gun and his axe, and stood ready a good while. I said, "I am going to see." "Oh no, he will shoot you." I did go out; there was no Indian, only the stump and some snow. In the morning we went out to cut up the tree. I said, "It would not do for an Indian to come and cut up like that one yesterday." I looked up, and there stood an Indian! He heard what I said, but he smiled and was friendly.

"In about a month my brother went back to Ohio. He had not been long gone when six Indians came and hallooed from across the river, wishing to come across, Big Nose among them. I took my canoe, and brought them across. I charged him with his mischief. He said, "No, me civil." "Yes, it was you." "No, whisky." They went up to Connor's, and by and by, returned. (One was called Killbuck). One was so drunk that he could not walk alone; two of them were leading him across waist-deep. When they had come across, Killbuck said, "We not been saucy." I went into the house, but presently he came back, foaming with rage. "You go and get your gun," said he. "How do you know," said I. "What did you come back for?" "To show you I no coward, give me some bread," said he. I did, and he went away pacified. That poor drunken fellow lay there all night with his feet in the water, dead drunk.

"One night an Indian hallooed. "What do you want?" "To come in and warm." I let him in. "Me civil," said he. After he got in, he began to curse, and swore he would kill the first man that came into the cabin. I quieted him down, and then he began again. He went on to Connor's, and in the morning he came back, and said, "Connor told me 'No,' and I won't hurt anybody."

"In boating, flat-boats would jump the dams four feet high. People would bring fruit from Wayne County in wagons, and boat them down to settlers on the Wabash and elsewhere.

"After Fleming was killed, about twenty-five Indians came and had a ceremony over him. They had guns, and marched up very solemnly. One old Indian made a speech. He spoke a long time; Killbuck interpreted. He said, "Don't be scared, he was a bad Indian. We will be friendly." As the man stood there speaking, he seemed much affected, and the tears streamed down his cheeks.

"We used to go to mill at first to Richmond. David Wysong made a tread-mill (for oxen). One day I went with a grist, and, in the night, while I was there, the oxen slipped through, and stopped the mill, but they could not get out and were just hanging by their necks.

"The first school was taught two or three years after I came, in a log cabin, kept by Mr. Stevens, at $1 per scholar. There were perhaps twenty scholars. Half of the patrons could not pay. There were only two or three books in the school. The teacher would write letters on paddles to have the little fellows learn. I once drove thirty head of hogs to Ross County, Ohio, to have them fatten on the "mast." The Indians began to shoot them. I talked to them. 'Big Jim' said, "Fat hog make good soup," and laughed. When I came to the county, a big brush heap lay where the Winchester Court House now stands.

"John Cox settled near Winchester in 1815 or 1816."

JACOB DRIVER, 1821.

"Settlers when I came, in 1821: John Sample, at Sampletown (Mill), Paul W. Way, William Way, Henry Way, William Diggs (old), William Diggs (young), Littleberry Diggs, Armsbee Diggs, Tarlton Moorman, Robison McIntyre, Walter Ruble, John Wright and others.

"The Claytons came nearly when I did—perhaps two or three years afterward.

"Tarleton Moorman is the brother of James Moorman and the father of Stephen Moorman."

PELATIAH BOND.

"Benjamin Bond, my father, lived, at one time, just west of New Garden Meeting-House, in Wayne County.

"In building a house, he bought nails at 25 cents a pound, and paid for them in cord-wood at 25 cents a cord, chopping the wood on his own land, and selling it on the ground at the rate of four cords for $1.

"In Western Pennsylvania, in early times, a man gave a horse for a barrel of salt."

DANIEL B. MILLER, 1822.

"The settlers, when I came (on the Mississinewa, 1822), were, Riley Marshall, east of Deerfield; William Massey, James Massey, Robert Massey, north of Miller's; Frank Peake, north of Mississinewa River; Samuel Emery, on the south side of the river; Burkett Pierce, west of Deerfield, north of river; George Ritenour, west of Deerfield, south of the river; Martin Boots, between Deerfield and Ridgeville. He was the first blacksmith in that region. He moved to Fairview, afterward.

"I was single, and came on horseback from near Cincinnati, via Richmond and the "Quaker Trace," to Riley Marshall's. I bought eighty acres of a non-resident owner, and boarded eighteen months at Riley Marshall's, going then to Wayne County to be married, and bringing my wife with me, on horseback, into the woods of Randolph. Judge M. thinks James Massey was the first settler in Ward Township. Some of the Masseys were there in 1818. Burkett Pierce says James and another Massey came the same fall he did—1820 or 1821. Judge M. thinks, also, that Philip Storms came to Allensville after he (Miller) came to Randolph, and that Connor stayed on the river above Deerfield, five or six years after 1822.

"Lewallyn's mill ground very slowly. They said a pig crawled into the trough and licked up the meal, and that he would squeal because the meal did not come fast enough for him. This is probably another version of tho "hound" story, so often repeated.

"Meetings were held for a long time at private dwellings, i. e., at Riley Marshall's, and also elsewhere."

MARTIN A. REEDER, 1822.

"John Gass had settled at his place, southwest of Winchester, and was keeping tavern there when the Ways, etc., came from South Carolina, in the spring of 1817.

"The first entry in Randolph County used to be said to be three miles east of Winchester, where Miles Scott now lives. That land was entered by Jeremiah Moffett, in December, 1812.

"Anti-slavery societies began to be formed between 1836 and 1840, or sooner. The U. G. R. R. had a sort of organization, though not a very elaborate one. Lists of the stations, of the routes, of the men who would entertain and who would forward fugitives, etc., were kept for reference along the route.

At Winchester, Eli Hiatt was a chief promotor of the work. Others, were James P. Way, Frank Diggs, Jesse Way, Moorman Way, Dr. Cook, M. A. Reeder and others; George Bailey and others, at Huntsville; Zimri Bond, John H. Bond, etc, at Cabin Creek. Large numbers were in sympathy with the work; some, in fact, who would hardly have been expected to do so. One man, a landlord in Jay County, who was then, and has always since been, a stanch Democrat, was nevertheless a constant and reliable helper in the U. G. R. R.

At one time, a company of twelve stopped at Eli Hiatt's. The pursuers came to town while the fugitives were still here. They knew the fugitives were not far off, but not that they were in town.

Dr. Cook went early toward Ridgeville, and, returning, met the man-hunters—giving them such information as caused them to suppose their prey was ahead, and they pressed vigorously onward (four men, all armed to the teeth). The slaves were taken back to Huntsville, from there to John Bond's and thence to Camden, and so on toward Canada.

"During the war of 1861, Mr. Reeder and his wife went as nurses in the hospital, etc., spending more than a year in that service, and going wholly at his own expense. He was at Washington City, at Gettysburg and elsewhere, witnessing many sad and fearful scenes of terrible suffering, and doing his utmost for its relief. He bore a commission from Gov. Morton, and recommendations from President Lincoln, which enabled him to go anywhere he pleased in the prosecution of his loving work, and he feels thankful for the degree of success which attended his labors in his country's cause. Gov. Morton's name was itself a "power," and, of course, President Lincoln's "sign manual" was omnipotent, and both together became irresistible."

The following was printed in a Winchester paper in 1875:

M. A. REEDER.

Last week, Mr. Harris Allman and his wife returned, after an absence of forty-five years, to visit their former friends and comrades in this vicinity—now, alas, but few. His father, Matthew Allman, was a very early settler here, and in 1830 removed to White Lick, between Plainfield and Indianapolis. Since that removal, a wonderful change has taken place!

Winchester was then a solid forest. About eight families were at that time residents of the place, scattered here and there over the town plat, in small log cabins. The heavy timber was near on every hand. The streets could not be seen. Only three houses now [1875] remain standing that were here when Mr. Allman left, and one of them has lately been reconstructed.

The old settlers are mostly gone. M. A. Reeder has been longest a resident of the town, including, also, his mother, who is still living. Mr. Allman passed through the city (in company with M. A. R.), searching, almost in vain, to find the spots of familiar interest of the early olden time. Mr. A. pointed out many locations of objects then important, now to the younger generation unknown.

The old schoolhouse, on the site where now stands the residence of A. Aker, Jr.; the old spring at which the scholars slaked their thirst, located on the east bank of Salt Creek, about a rod south of the Washington street bridge; the old Aker Hotel, partly standing, just east of the City Hall; the Odle storeroom, the first dry goods store, afterward the residence of D. Haworth and of Jacob Elzroth, Esq., and now occupied by George Isom; Haworth's cabinet-shop, now occupied by J. W. Diggs as an undertaker.

The big oak tree, seven feet through, which stood where now stands Col. H. H. Neff's elegant mansion; the "old fort and mound," near and in the "Fair Grounds;" the "Ring Spring," one hundred yards west of the toll-gate on the pike leading westward; the big walnut tree, six feet through, standing where now Hon. E. L. Watson resides; the old Quaker (or Richmond) Trace, leading from the Wayne County settlements into these northern woods, which ran out the south end of East street, which trace is now nearly obliterated—these, and other landmarks unknown to the present inhabitants, were full of interest to one who spent his boyhood in our vicinity when all was rough and wild, full fifty years ago.

ISAAC BRANSON—STONY CREEK.

Came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1822 (or sooner), entered land in the southern part of Stony Creek, in 1822 [Section 10, 19, 12], being the farm afterward owned by Abram Clevinger. This land he sold to Joseph Rooks, about 1825, and entered land again in the southern part of Nettle Creek Township [W. N. W., 15, 18, 12], near Mr. Burroughs, March 26, 1816. They sold out again and moved to Delaware County, becoming pioneers in that region.

They raised a large family of children, enduring great hardships and peril. Mr. Branson died many years ago, but "Aunt Patsy" Branson, as she is called, resides with one of her daughters, in Muncie, Delaware County. She is nearly ninety years old, but very spry and strong, walking a mile or two without difficulty or fatigue, and retaining in memory the events of her old-time life with remarkable tenacity.

They had peculiar hardships when they first settled in Randolph. They came into the woods with one horse of their own, though somebody's two-horse wagon moved them there. In less than a week after they arrived, her husband cut his knee with a frow, while splitting clap-boards for a roof to his "camp," and so badly that he could not step on his foot for six weeks; and much of that time he lay helpless on the puncheons of the floor. About the same time, his only horse died. The horse was not very good, but it was better than none, and it was all they had, and they had nothing to buy another.

They came in February, and brought four large iron kettles to make sugar in. Mrs. Branson and her husband's brother, a lad of seventeen, who came with them into their forest home, took hold and opened an immense sugar camp that stood ready to their hand, and and actually cut the wood, carried the water, made the troughs, and produced about three barrels of excellent tree-sugar, all nice and dry, as good as need be. This sugar was indeed a "God-send" to the poor, afflicted family in the wilderness. Mr. B. hired a "plug" pony of his uncle in Wayne County, and contrived to do his work. After they got corn planted, he took sugar to Richmond and exchanged for corn and other necessaries. But their corn and vegetables grew splendidly, and long before the year was out, they had plenty of corn and potatoes and such things. They took to the corn as soon as it came to "roasting ears," potatoes as soon as they would do to cook, and squashes as soon as they got large enough, and so on.

They had a cow, and the pea-vines were up to her back, and she gave abundance of milk, and grew fat on her keeping to boot.

When Mr. B. went to Richmond with his sugar, he borrowed a wagon and a yoke of oxen, and took grain and things, also, for some other neighbor settlers, and the trip took a week or more.

Mrs. B. thinks they came in 1819, which may possibly be the fact; but if so, they must have resided here more than three years before they entered land, since that took place in the fall of 1822. And that, too, may have been true, as Mr. B. seems to have been very poor, and it may have been three years before he could raise the money for an entry.

ELDER THOMAS ADDINGTON.

"Once, when I was a boy at school, the teacher would sleep in "books." There was a boy in school who was rather "simple" and greatly given to "pranks," just because he "did not know any better."

One day, a mouse came running across the floor, and the "simple" boy went to chasing it. The teacher was asleep, but the noise waked him. He looked up and saw the boy capering about the room. As he spied the lad, he caught his whip and chased the little fellow, whipping as he went. The poor chap gave no heed to the slashing of the teacher, but went dancing ahead after his mouse. At last he "grabbed" with his fingers, clutched the "varmint," and turning short round, facing the master, cried, "See, teacher, I 'cotch' him!"

What the teacher did thereafter is not remembered. The laughing that the school accomplished just then was past all control, and the picture of that "simple youth," grinning in glee at his success in grabbing that quadruped, is a vivid thing in the minds of all who then beheld the performance of the feat."

WILLIAM COX, WEST RIVER.

"Settlers at that time were Joseph Hollingsworth, Albert Macy, Jesse Ballinger, Joshua Wright, William Stansberry, and others. Daniel Worth lived on the John Hunnicutt place; John Bunker was where John Charles now resides; Morgan Thornburg lived near White chapel. Some of these had been on their places for several years.

HURRICANE.

"Eli B. Barnard says he was twenty-seven months old when the tornado took place. Their roof blew off, and they shoved the cradle with him in it under the bed to keep him from drowning, and he says he remembers that. This was where widow Ballinger lives northwest of Charles W. Osborn's.

A horse was hemmed in with the fallen trees into a place only a few feet square, and yet the horse was not hurt! One man, scared nearly out of his wits, had yet sense enough left to pray; and he cried, "O Lord, if thou wilt spare me this time, I will get away just as soon as I can go!" And he kept his word, the people say, and the next morning, picking his way to the nearest standing timber, he left for parts unknown.

Squirrels were one year so poor that they were not fit to eat. William Smith's mill was built before 1819." [Doubtful.]

WILLIAM PICKETT.

"I have been a miller much of my life. I helped Jeremiah Cox build his mill on White River, in 1825. It was a water mill and stood on the place I now own; Jeremiah Cox died soon after. Joseph and Benjamin Pickett bought the mill, Benjamin Pickett built a saw-mill, and in 1853, I bought the farm, 108 acres, and the two mills. The mills ran till the "five dry years," 1864—69; they were pulled down in 1870. The river has far less water now than formerly. I worked as a miller three years at White Water, afterwards off and on at Winchester, dressing buhrs, etc. A steam mill was built there about 1835.

"When we were tearing down my saw-mill, a big post fell on me. While taking a sill from the second story (the mill was built double), a post, a foot square and eleven feet long, knocked me down and fell on me. I was confined several weeks. They thought I could not live; but that was ten years ago and I am here yet.

WILD HOGS.

"Great numbers of wild hogs were in the woods, descendants of tame ones, brought by early settlers, that had become wild. The males would stay wild for years. They would get with droves, and in a short time the whole drove would become so wild that you could hardly get them back again. Wild hogs would attack people when hard pressed. John Chapman, Allen County, was attacked by a wild boar when out after the cows. He climbed a big log, and had to stay till the creature left. He had a fiste with him; the hog chased the dog and then took after Chapman himself. He had to stay on the log till some time in the night.

An immense male hog once attacked a cow, in Thomas Coates' lane. He stuck his tusk into her breast, and the blood spurted right out. He then struck another cow and knocked her down as if she had been shot. His tusk was broken, or he would probably have killed her. The children were in the lane, they saw the hog, and climbed the fence. The men chased him more than half a mile, and shot him again and again, and at last killed him.

This animal belonged to one of the neighbors, but the creature had gone wild. On the Mississinewa hogs were found wild in abundance when the settlers first came there, as people would let their swine run in the woods, and after a while hunt them up again, to get them home, or to kill them for meat. They would go out and find the "range," and when snow would come several men would go on horseback, and shoot the hogs as they could find them. Sometimes the creatures would be four or five miles from home. After they were shot the hogs would be hauled home, by the nose, or on a sled or on a wagon. Once in a while people would make a fire out in the woods, and scald and dress them before taking them home.

DEER, ETC.

"Deer sometimes have thirteen prongs. At first the straight "spike" grows, the next year one prong on each horn, and so on. A straight horn is called a "spike;" one prong, is called a "fork;" more than one, "snags," three-snagged, four-snagged, etc. Deer were fat in the summer and fall and poor in the spring. I have often killed old deer that had no horns. Horns of old deer would be perhaps two feet long, when full grown.

"Amos Peacock and Henry Hill once took a load of smoked bacon to Richmond, and got only $1 a hundred.

I have bought salt that cost me $11.37 a barrel. I had flax seed to sell. I paid for hauling the seed, and the salt back from Dayton, and the whole cost me as above, $11.37 per barrel.

CHOLERA.

"As I was cradling wheat, a cloud gathered south of east, taking several hours. It covered nearly the whole sky. There was much lightning and thunder, and a little rain; I did not stop cradling. The body of the storm seemed to pass south. Shortly after I smelt a strong smell of burning sulphur, the smell lasting perhaps half an hour. It made me feel sick and faint, and I came near falling to the ground. Shortly after that the cholera broke out terribly at Lynn and other places." [See statements by Frazier, Johnson, Stone, etc.]

MARY HYATT—COATS—PICKETT.

"I was born in Grayson County, Virginia, in 1806. My father, Zachary Hyatt, came to Wayne County, Ind., 1814, and to Randolph County in 1817. Winchester, when I first saw it, October, 1819, had a court house and jail, and three houses. Once father lay sick, and I was weaving. Suddenly I saw through the open door a deer crawling through a crack in the fence. There were two crooked rails, one up and the other down. The deer had one hind leg broken. I sprang out with my little thread-knife, and my sisters and myself, with the dog, chased the deer one-quarter of a mile to a pond about knee deep. The dog caught the deer by the throat, and we waded in and killed it with clubs. We dragged the deer from the water, cut the leaders of the legs, and tucked the others in so we could carry it with a pole, and in that way we bore it home in triumph. The men were away, except father, and he was sick. Once the men were shooting turkeys, and one lit down into the yard and tried to crawl through the fence. My sister and I caught it and killed it.

"I used to spin and weave a great deal. I have woven many a yard of tow, and linen, and woolen. I wove coverlets, etc., for the whole region, Richmond, Mississinewa, Wabash, etc. Mr. Lewallyn from Ridgeville, once brought five coverlets. I told him, "I can't weave them, I have more than I can do." "Don't say a word," said he, "I shall leave the work, and you must do it, though it should stay here five years." So, he left the work, and in due time I wove them. We used to card and spin raw cotton, and wool too. My price for weaving coverlets was, $1 apiece.

"One day mother went away to be gone ten days. The flax was on the ground rotting. We girls took up the flax, dried, broke, swingled and hatcheled it, carded, spun and wove it; and by the time mother came home, the cloth was in garments, and on the children's backs.

"We used pewter platters, dishes, etc." [Mrs. Pickett showed a large ancient pewter platter, about a foot across, and heavy and thick, that her mother bought in 1818. It had never been molded over, and was about as good as new.]

"My father sold his place in North Carolina, and got ready to move to Indiana. Everything was packed and loaded, ready to start in the morning. The boys got up before daylight, and fed the horses, and got the harness to "gear up." Mother said, "you need not do it, father is sick." In ten days, father died. Mother married again, and in a year or two, came to Indiana."

WILLIAM ARMFIELD THORNBURG—STONY CREEK.

"When we first came, Richmond was our place of trade. We would go with the front wheels of a wagon, taking out the king-bolt, and fixing clapboards on the bolster and the "slider," puting on our coon skins and deer-skins and ginseng, and wheat if we could spare any, and the corn to be ground. The trip could be made as handily as you please. With only the two wheels, one could turn and twist almost any way around and among the trees. The "truck" would be traded for "store tea," and cotton yarn, and powder and sole-leather. If a barrel of salt were needed, father would go with the whole wagon.

"The first mill I ever saw, was Sample's mill, a corn cracker. The mills then were small affairs, but we boys thought them something wonderful.

"Our folks made large quantities of tree sugar. Two springs, we made, each season, two barrels of grain sugar, 100 pounds of cake-sugar, and forty or fifty pounds of molasses.

"The third spring of our residence in Randolph, Samuel Anthony, father of E. C. Anthony, Esq., of Muncie, came to that place with a store of goods. Father needed some things. He said to my mother and myself, "you go to Muncie with a sack of sugar apiece." We filled the sacks; mother took hers before her, but I took a heavy sack. We got there in due time (twelve miles), and traded the sugar at 6¼ cents a pound for coffee at half a dollar, and other goods as high as they could well be. When father built his mill, coffee and whisky had both to be furnished, or the men would not work. I had to go to Judge Reese's distillery in Delaware County, for the whisky, which when a lad, I have often done. Father and I once went to Richmond with two yoke of oxen and the wagon, carrying flour and ginseng and sugar and deer-skins and coon skins, perhaps $35 worth in all. The trip took four days, (thirty-five miles). A man named Brightwell was in company. As they were about to start for home, Brightwell said, "take a drink," handing a bottle of "ginger pop," and as he drew the cork the "pop" flew clear to the loft. Father drank and gave me some. As we came to a big hill, father said to me. "you tend the hind cattle, and I will see to the forward yoke," locking the wagon, as he spoke, but taking the forewheel instead of the hind wheel. We went down the hill, but it was a terrible "go," neither of us knowing what the matter was. Just as we reached the bottom, I saw what he had done, and said, "what made thee lock the forewheel?" "The dogs, I did, didn't I?" said he. I told my brother, and he remarked, "father was pretty tight." However, he was no drinker, but he got caught that time."

MRS. JOSEPH BROWN, JR.

"My uncle, William Simmons, came early to Randolph County, Ind., and, I think, as soon as 1821. He lived just at the line between Jackson and Ward Townships, directly on the Mississinewa River, south of New Pittsburg. He died in middle life, but was the father of twenty-one children by the same wife. They were all raised "by hand," the mother being unable to "suckle" them. Twelve became grown, and ten are still living.

"James Simmons (my father) worked one harvest for Chief Richardville, near Ft. Wayne. One day an old man passed along the road having a tall hat on his head and a bundle on his back, and being otherwise odd looking. The boys began to "poke fun" at him. Suddenly he laid down his bundle, took off his hat, whirled round and faced them. Said he, "Do you know the eleventh commandment?" "No, what is it?" "Mind your own business."

"That was a "center shot," their battery hushed, and without another word the old man went his way.

"When he was a boy at home, during the "squirrel year," James shot squirrels for weeks, throwing them to the hogs outside the field, and leaving them to decay upon the ground. It was a hard task, but they saved their corn by the means.

"Daniel B. Miller and his wife came on horseback to their forest home, and she stuck a black locust riding switch into the ground in the door yard. It grew and became a fine, large tree, and a few years ago was there still.

"James Simmons was a great hunter. It may be safely said that he killed more deer than any other man in Jackson Township. When he was building his log house, he set himself to cut and hew four logs a day, and besides that to kill one deer, and he did it. They lived at first for two or three months in a "camp" made of rails.

"He has killed six deer in one day. At one time he ran a deer till away after dark and got lost, and in the night he kept wandering round and firing his gun. His wife heard the firing, and, thinking that he might be lost, she took the ax and pounded as hard as she could upon a "gum" there was in the yard. He heard the pounding, and the noise guided him home.

"In winter time, after supper he would sit and tell deer stories as long as anybody would listen. He used never to think about going home from hunting as long as he could see the "sights" upon his gun, and often he would have a "time" to find his way to his cabin."

BEAR STORY.

"When I was a little girl, my brother (a little bit of a fellow), and myself were playing by a creek near the house, and a bear came and sat watching us from the opposite bank, a high bluff ten or fifteen feet high. I thought it was a dog, and was not scared. Presently mother saw the old fellow, and "hissed" the dog, which came and "tackled" the bear. She called to us, and we heeled it for the house. While the dog and the bear were "tussling," Jacob Harshman came along with his gun, hunting, and he shot and killed the bear.

"They used to have some fun in those days too. Cameron Coffin, a gentleman land-owner, came out to see to his land; he was not used to the woods, and the "bushwhackers" made game of him. One day he was at James Simmons' sugar camp, and the boys were making wax. Coffin was 'green' upon the subject of wax making, and they made some very hard and sticky, and got him to take a great chunck into his mouth to eat it; he chewed the wax till his teeth and jaws were all stuck fast together. He worked and worked and clawed and dug at the wax till he was nearly choked. Finally the stuff softened and melted somewhat in his mouth, and he made out to get clear of it; but he had a terrible time, and the boys nearly died laughing at the fun. At another time, they were walking a foot log over the river, and he undertook it, too; he did not know how to keep his balance, and the boys pretended to come near falling off, and shook the log so that he did fall off into the water waist deep. He was not used to such life; the backwoods boys were too much for him, and he "got out of that," and went back to the settlement where he came from, and left the jolly blades to play tricks upon themselves."

F. G. WIGGS, GREENSFORK.

"Father left North Carolina when I was seven years old; we were six weeks and three days on the road, reaching William Arnold's (now Noah Turner's), May 5, 1826. I rode a horse (that pulled one of our carts) all the way. Father put me on the horse the evening we started, and I rode clear through. We had two carts, and father led the other beast. Mother also walked a great deal; we camped under a tent through the whole journey; several families were in company: Joseph Copeland, wife and four children; Isaac Cook, wife and four children; father and mother and four children, eighteen in all.

"Father lent Isaac Cook $25 to come with (which he paid afterward). Father bought eighty acres of Benjamin Puckett, agreeing to give $250 and a cart valued at $25. He afterward entered eighty acres, and mother lived on it till she died in the fall of 1881; we settled in the wilderness. William Arnold and Frederick Fulghum came just before father did. Fred Fulghum had come back to Carolina and told us what a grand place Indiana was, and father was not satisfied till he moved out there himself. Deer used to come into father's clearing, and they were so tame that they would not run away; father had no gun, and never shot any of them."

JAMES W. CLARK.

"The first school I went to was held in a little horse stable made of slabs set endwise. David Semans taught the school. The seats were slabs with legs in, no backs, of course. The first church in the town was in 1837, on the old church lot, now (a part of) the graveyard. Three camp-meetings were held near Spartansburg (in 1838–40 probably). The rowdies disliked Preacher Bruce. He was pretty "sharp" on them. They had planned to flog him. They were swaggering round with peeled canes. He disguised his dress, got a "peeled cane," went down to the spring among the rowdies, and heard all their plans. He then went back, opened meeting, and told the astonished tricksters from the pulpit all their plot. The rowdies did not whip him. There were great revival meetings. At one time one hundred members joined.

"The first Disciple meeting was held near old Mr. Stewart's, a mile or so west of town. Several persons joined. The Baptists held meeting at Mr. Cartwright's. He was a Baptist.

"When I was a boy, people hired me to hunt their cattle. I could go anywhere, and not get lost, day or night. When twelve years old, I used to grind bark for the tanner at eleven pence (12½ cents) a day. Wild hogs were plenty in the "timber." I have been treed by them many a time. As I would be after the cows, the hogs would be in the woods, and they would see and chase my dog, and he would run to me, and they after him. Then the hogs would see me and chase me. I would begin to climb right sudden, you may guess, a high log or a tree, and there I had to stay till they would leave, which sometimes would not be anywise soon. The hogs would boo-boo around, and then seem to go away, and suddenly be back, and try to get at me again. These wild hogs had sprung from swine that had been tame, and had bred in the woods, and so their offspring had grown to be wild. My grandfather would let his swine run in the woods, and by-and-by he would find where they slept, and build a pen partly round their nest, and watch and shut them in. Then he would catch the pigs and mark them, and let the whole "pack" go again. At killing time, men would go out and track and shoot them wherever they might chance to be found. When I was twelve years old, grandfather was chasing up and killing his hogs. The men would shoot them, and I hauled them to the road with a horse. I forget how many I hauled that day. Grandfather marketed that pork at Richmond for $1.50 net.

"A big poplar tree stood in front of Mrs. Hammond's house, and another large tree stood on my lot. When I was a boy, I had a young bullock, perhaps a two-year-old, that I worked. It was a tough job to catch him, the only way being to run him down; and we would have a tedious race. One day I chased him a long time, and finally he plunged into a pond, and I after him waist deep. He stopped; I gathered him by the horns, Frank Morgan waded in with a rope, and we roped him and brought his lordship out of the pond in triumph."

[Mr. Clark reckons himself to have been longest a resident of Spartansburg, since 1826, or fifty-six years ago. Frank Morgan and he were boys then together, but Frank spent many years of his youthful life elsewhere, and, moreover, he died in 1880 at Spartansburg. Still, Mr. C. is by no means an old man, but is active and vigorous as in former days.]

WILLIAM CLEVINGER.

"The settlers when father came, 1828 (near father's), were Bezaleel Hunt, Nettle Creek; Joel Drake, Nettle Creek; Mark Diggs, Nettle Creek; Joab Thornburg, Stony Creek; Jonathan Finger, Stony Creek; Job Thornburg, Stony Creek; Abraham Clevinger, Stony Creek; David Vestal, Stony Creek; George W. Smithson, Stony Creek; Joseph Rooks, Stony Creek (large family boys); Jonathan Clevinger, Stony Creek; John Diggs, Stony Creek; and in the colored settlement, Richard Robbins (blacksmith), John Smith, Benjamin Outlan, Richard Scott, Jerry Terry, Isaac Woods.

"I have been to fifteen log-rollings in one spring. The first show I ever went to was an animal show at Muncie. I walked fifteen miles and got there by 9 A. M. My father was a member of the Christian Church, and a Democrat. He voted for Jackson the first time that Jackson was elected, just after he came to Randolph County.

"He had just money enough to enter 120 acres. He had one old horse, and it died in the spring. He had no way to buy any, and he did without, borrowing sometimes, which was hard to do. He cleared ground, and tended it mostly with the hoe. By next season he got an ox-team. We plowed our corn with an ox, putting harness on it like a horse, and one boy would lead the ox and one hold the plow.

"Father and his boys have cleared more land than any other family in Randolph County—more than six hundred acres. Father had no wagon for years. He hauled everything on a sled. He never owned a good wagon. He bought an old one for $30, and got "bit" at that. That was about 1836. He used that seven or eight years, and never owned any other. He made one crop with no team, and two crops with oxen. Then he traded the oxen for one horse. The oxen were young, and we could not "break" them well. We did mostly with one horse. Sometimes in the winter we would have a boy behind the sled with a rope hitched to hold back with. We had no wheat bread till we raised some wheat to make it from, for a year or two, at least. I remember when there were only three wagons in two miles square among twenty-five or thirty settlers. Once we put horses to a wagon with twenty bushels of corn and wheat, and started to mill (Economy). The horses knew nothing of pulling together, and the wagon got stuck fast before half a mile. Six men took a horse and sack apiece and went ten miles to mill, and left four or five to get the wagon out. The mill was owned by Nathan Proctor. Nathan Proctor, Elijah Arnold and others were charged with counterfeiting, thieving, etc. They were said to have a "rendezvous" in the "fallen timber." Some were convicted, and the gang was broken up at last. One of them, arrested for passing a counterfeit bill, asking to see the bill, took it and swallowed it.

"My father got his meat thus: He had a dog that would catch any hog. He helped his neighbors catch their wild hogs, and they would pay him in pork. The hogs were so wild they would not eat corn.

"How to build a cabin with weight poles: Build the square, let the top end logs project a foot or so, put the butting pole farther out than the body of the house, have it split and notched and pinned with the edge upright, so as to catch the ends of the boards; lay logs to build up the gables, with their ends scafed off to allow the roof boards to cover them, and the supporting poles so arranged as to give the proper slant. Put on the first course of boards, and lay a pole on the course far enough from the butting pole to receive the second course, keeping the "weight pole" up by "knees" between it and the butting pole. Put on the second course and another weight pole, and "knees," and so on to the top.

"Mother never got a meal of victuals on a cook-stove in her life."

JOHN KEY.

"Father came from Tennessee in 1829. He was a Methodist, and took great delight in the religious services of the olden time. When camp-meeting opened, he would move down to camp to stay while the meeting lasted, on a rude wagon with truck wheels made by sawing them from the end of a huge oak log. He had no wagon, and for home purposes used a sled. When father landed in "Randolph," he had just 37½ cents, one old horse, and five children. Pork was high afterward, and he sold four hogs for $50, and entered his first forty acres of land.

"Swine would run wild, and often, while we were hunting them and the dogs were trying to catch them, the wild creatures would cut the poor dogs' throats with their sharp, strong tusks.

"Once while some men were hunting wild swine, the savage beasts undertook to run into Dolph Warren's cabin, and scared the family inside well nigh to death. Squirrels would be so thick and would make such havoc in the corn that the children had to be set to scare the greedy "varmints" away.

"The pea vines would grow as tall as a man's head, and as thick as they could grow, so that one could track a horse or a cow through the tangled masses of pea vines almost as readily as through a snow-bank.

"Wild plums would grow in the thick woods, loaded down with as nice fruit as one would need to see; gooseberries, raspberries and blackberries would grow in the "clearings" and open places.

"The State road through Deerfield to Ridgeville, etc., was cut out about 1830. Mr. Andrew Key helped cut it out from the State line west, and assisted in opening it, too.

"Mr. Key entered forty acres at first (with that hog money), and afterward forty acres more; still later, he bought out Collins (his brother-in-law)."

"Andrew McCartney, born in 1804, in Virginia, came first to Jay County, in 1837. He has been married several times; once, and the last time, to John Key's sister. He had had a large family, was a rough, harsh, cruel man, with whom no one could live in peace. He would boast of his scrapes and exploits, and, in fact, would readily find and plunge into enough of them to answer any five ordinary men."

"Riley Marshall lived where Judge Miller did afterward. Mr. Miller bought Mr. Marshall out."

STATEMENT BY JOHN MOCK, WARD TOWNSHIP.

In 1824, Daniel B. Miller lived in Jackson Township. In a few years, the Harshmans came, and soon afterward, John Sheets settled on the Mississinewa, and built a saw-mill. Benjamin Devor, Ezekiel Cooper, Thomas Devor, Christian Nickey, Dr. Diehl, the Mikesells, Baileys, Moses Byram and the Debolts, also moved in before very long.

March 24, 1824, Ward (including Franklin) Township had seventeen families—Meshach Lewallyn, Benjamin Lewallyn, George and Henry Renbarger, Daniel Badger, Burkett Pierce, George Ritenour, William Odle, Elias Kizer, Allen Wall, David Connor, Reason Malott, William Massey, Riley Marshall, Daniel Mock, Jeremiah Lindsey, Joab Ward. Lewallyn had a mill that would crack five bushels of corn in twenty-four hours, if everything was in order. In 1829, he put in a hand-bolt and ground wheat, each customer bolting his own grist. A saw-mill was built about that time, near Deerfield. At the Presidential election in 1824, five votes were cast in the township of Ward. At that precinct D. B. Miller was Inspector and Riley Marshall Clerk. Persons could vote anywhere in the county, and most of the voters went elsewhere to cast their ballots.

In 1829, Ward received a large reinforcement from Tennessee, Key, Fields, etc., etc.

In 1836, George Ritenour built a grist-mill one mile west of Deerfield, with two run of buhrs, which did pretty good work. Samuel Helm built a saw-mill two and a half miles east of Deerfield. Collins & Fields also put up a saw-mill half a mile east of Deerfield. The village of Deerfield was laid out in 1831, but did not improve till 1837, when Edward Edger came and brought a store, and from that time it grew and a great amount of business was done there.

A long time after the first settlement, William P. Charlton built a steam saw-mill at Ridgeville, and William Addington rebuilt the grist-mill, which were of advantage to the county round, but no town was established till years afterward.

There were but few settlers in Green Township before 1835. John Life and Samuel Caylor, Bennet King, the Orrs, Cyrus Reed, Philip Barger, Elijah Harbour, Thomas Hubbard, Nathan Godwin, the Garringers and others came about that date or soon after. Fitzpatrick, Evans, Haynes, etc. lived at Fairview.

Antony McKinney built a mill in 1839. Cyrus Reed built a saw-mill near the grist-mill, causing trouble and a tedious lawsuit.

In 1824, Winchester was a field of stumps, with one store on the northeast corner of the square, owned by George Burkett. The old log court house was on the north side of the street, which lay north of the square. Charles Conway lived in a log cabin between the store and Salt Creek, and there was a log cabin still nearer the creek. On the northwest corner of the square was a double log cabin, occupied as a hotel by John Odle. There was a small log cabin in the southwest part of the town, and the new log jail stood on the jail lot. Those were the buildings in Winchester in March, 1824. In 1825. Thomas and Joseph Hanna put a stock of goods into a new building on the north side of the square, and before many years Michael and Andrew Aker bought them out, and sold goods a considerable time. Meanwhile the Mansion House was built, and Jesse and William M. Way put a store in it. The brick across the street was built, and Jere Smith built the Franklin House. A. B. Shaw erected a brick on the northwest square. Moorman Way built the brick west of the Mansion House. Rush and Kizer put up a brick building on the east of the sqare.

In 1836, Elias Kizer and David Haworth put up a steam gristmill east of Salt Creek, the first steam engine in Randolph County. This mill was of great importance, as there was none north of it nearer than Fort Wayne. The new (second) court house was built in 1826, or thereabouts.

Some of the early settlers in the region now called Monroe Township were Andrew Devoss, John Henenridge, Jesse Addington, Mr. Sloan and others. It settled very slowly. The region had no conveniences, no thoroughfare, no mill, no village nor town of any sort, until 1852. The southeastern and southern portion of the county had been long settled; the Bowens, the Fraziers, the Johnsons, the Hocketts, the Hinshaws, the Beards, the Hunts, the Botkins, the Smiths, the Arnolds of famous memory and many others had filled up that region. But in 1824, Nettle Creek and Stony Creek were still in the deep, unbroken forest. Nathan Mendenhall built a mill on Cabin Creek, which was a great convenience. John Thornburg put up mills near Windsor for both grist and sawing.

Among the facts of old times, it may be mentioned that there was not a shoe shop in Randolph County before about 1830. People made their own or got some neighbors to do it for them, and there was not a boot made nor worn in the county before that date.

A man by the name of Hartley made the first pair of boots in Winchester, for Michael Aker, and Aker, after exhibiting them a while to a curious crowd, wore the boots himself.

During the winter of 1824–25, an imitation of a school was had at Deerfield, on a grade from arithmetic down, and the teacher could not spell the word "highest" any better than to say h-i-e-s-t, nor tell how much salt $1.12½ will buy, at $1.87½ for fifty pounds [a rather snug little mental problem, by the way]. I never saw a blackboard in a schoolhouse in Randolph County, except at the seminary.

The people in the early days were full of hospitality. The settlers were from all quarters—Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Carolina—and all classes vied with each other in generous hospitality to strangers sojourning in the region.

None were ever allowed to suffer, and men would kill deer and give the flesh away. And so with turkeys and pheasants and fish. The way to catch fish was peculiar, and worth a description.

If the ice was thick enough to stand on, we could cut holes, and drive the fish to the holes and spear them. Sometimes, in a sunny day, we would tie three hooks back to back, and haul the fish out that way. In the spring, they would bite freely; later in the season, we would take torches of hickory bark, and spear the poor fellows as they lay in the ripples of the streams. Sometimes, we made a "brush-drag" by taking a grape-vine of sufficient length, laying strips of thin hickory bark across the vine under it, and then piling brush on till there was as much as we wished, tying the brush to the grape-vines with these strips of hickory bark; and, when the drag was completed, it would be hauled through the water, and the fish would move along in front of the "drag," and so they would be caught.

There were several ways to kill deer. One way was simply to shoot them from the ground; another was to climb a tree, and shoot them as they were drinking from a spring. Another, and a very cruel way, was to bleat like a fawn, and decoy the does to their death. Hunting turkeys was very sly work, as they are wonderfully sharp-witted. However, in the "gobbling time," you could call the "gobblers" to you by making a kind of pipe of the center bone of the wing. Fox hunting and coon hunting were great sport, though chasing the foxes and chopping the trees for the coons made a pretty hard task; yet the fun of it made the work seem light.

The tools for farm work at first were exceedingly simple. An ax, an iron wedge, a mattock and a maul, and a big "nigger hoe," an old-fashioned single shovel plow, and a barshare plow with an iron share, a coulter in front and a wooden moldboard, and a harrow made of wood, teeth and all. These were all they had till about 1829. About that time, John Way began to make the front part of the moldboard of iron, some of which would scour, and these were used till about 1834, when Horney, of Richmond, made a cast-iron moldboard and share. And, in 1845, Beard & Sinex brought forward the steel moldboard. About 1830, John Mansur, of Richmond, sold cast-steel axes, and about 1835, the Collins' patent came. About 1840, Gaar & Co. produced the four-horse power chaff-piler threshing machine, and later the eight-horse power separator came to hand—the Pitts, from Buffalo, for instance.

In 1836, there was only one open buggy in Ward Township, and one top buggy, Edward Edger having the former and Widow Kinnear the latter. Reapers and mowers, hay rakes, corn planters, nor even simple corn-markers, had any of them come into use in 1855, when Mr. Mock left Randolph County for the West. The first cook stoves in Randolph were brought by Edward Edger to Deerfield in 1838, one for himself and one for Mrs. Kinnear. They weighed 600 pounds each and cost $50, besides the hauling from Cincinnati, which was a large sum. Roads there were none in those early times, only perhaps that they were cut out somewhat; and the travel went anywhere among the trees and stumps, with mud in the wet season two feet deep, even as late as 1855, when he left for Illinois. Mr. M. started from Deerfield June 10, 1855, in a wagon with as good a span of horses as could be found in the county, with himself and wife and three small children and two trunks, perhaps 600 pounds in all, and it was all they could do to get through to Winchester. At least a mile of the corduroy was afloat or under water. There were too "little showers" that day, in which the rain fell five inches deep.

Mr. Mock relates that he once shot a horse belonging to one of the settlers by the name of Cox in the White River Settlement, east of Winchester, in mistake for a deer. Mock was young, and he was greatly alarmed. He went to Mr. Cox and told him. "So thee has killed my horse." "Yes." "And thee thought it was a deer." "I did." "And thee wishes to pay me for the horse." "It would be no more than right that I should, I suppose." "Well, John, I guess I'll not charge thee anything for the horse." And then Mock felt mightily relieved.

One of the old settlers (who might be named, but will not be, as he is yet alive) came to mill one morning and bought a drink of whisky. In undertaking to swallow it, he threw it up twice, but, catching it in the glass, he kept turning it down, exclaiming the third time he swallowed it (with an oath), "Stay down; whisky costs too much money to be wasted that way." And it stayed at last.

Jacob Voris was a butcher and a grocer and a baker. He made great quantities of gingerbread, that wonderful "nicknack" of olden time. The chaps had a song about it, one stanza of which ran thus:

"Of all the birds that fly in air,
The white, the blue, the red;
Of all the cakes that Voris bakes,
Give me the 'gungerbread.'"

At one time they had a spelling match at the school west of Deerfield under William Shoemaker as teacher. They spelled from the dictionary, which was the first time Mock had ever seen a book of the kind. It scared him out. He thought it was of no use to try to spell from that.

The best teacher in that region in those days was James Edwards, from Cincinnati or thereabouts. He taught a term or two and left again.

CHARLES CRIST.

When we moved to Hancock County, Ohio, there was but one house within three miles of where we built our cabin. It was January, and the snow was eight inches deep in the woods. My family stayed at that house, and we (brother and myself) tramped back and forth night and morning, to build my cabin, and we could get only two other men (four in all) to help raise it. It was small, fourteen by sixteen, and just high enough to stand up in. When we moved in, it was chinked, but not daubed; had neither chimney, nor floor, and no door (only a hole for one). We built a big log-heap fire to cook and warm by for two or three days, till we got a fire-place and chimney made, and we hung up a quilt for a door. There were only three or four houses then at Fort Findlay. There was one store; the two men that kept it were so poor that they had only one coat between them, and they brought their goods on packhorses. We were as happy then as ever in our lives. The Indians lived on their "Reserve," between Findlay and Upper Sandusky (about twelve miles away). They used often to pass as they were hunting—Wyandots and others. They are gone now, except some who live like white people. I have stayed many a night with the Indians. They lived well; the half-breeds, especially were intelligent and industrious.

"For some years, we had to go to mill to Perrysburg (Fort Meigs), on the Maumee River, across the "Black Swamp." That "Black Swamp" was a terrible place. We would take three yoke of oxen, and twenty-five bushels of grain, and cross the swamp, eighteen miles, and then go fifteen miles farther to the mill. The trip would take us twelve days, sometimes going only two or three miles a day. We crossed at what was "Hull's Trace," and the places were still there where Hull's soldiers cut brush, and little trees, and fixed and wove them together, to make places to keep them out of the mud and water as they slept at night The mud was black and deep—how deep I do not know. Large rocks were scattered in many places through the swamp.

"At another swamp in that country, there was a "crossing" made of rails, for a road, and the swamp would shake for several rods on each side, as a wagon passed along the track, and if a horse or ox got off the rails, he would sink into the mire so that he could not get out, only as he was hauled out. The "Black Swamp" has since been drained, and the farms there are among the very best. This swamp extended a great distance, perhaps 150 miles. As we traveled across it, we slept in the wagon, and would tie one ox to the wagon, and turn the rest out to feed. The surface away from the track was firm enough for cattle to walk on, and feed upon the weeds and bushes. I was at Lower Sandusky when the cholera prevailed. The emigrants going West died there in great numbers. I saw them lying dead around, I cannot tell how many. I got a load of salt to take to Findlay, and as I went to get some buckwheat straw to stuff round my barrels, I found several corpses lying covered in the straw.

"We lived in Marion County, Ohio, when the "stars fell," November, 1833. Some people that worked the next day in a deep well saw the "stars falling" all the next day also. In a deep well in Baltimore County, Md., eighty-four feet deep, which I cleaned out, I saw distinctly the stars from the bottom of the well. In Hancock County, Ohio, Mrs. Crist saw a "ball of fire" fall to the ground, and explode in all directions. I, myself, saw, one night, one fall not fifty yards off. It struck the ground and burst, and the fire flew every way. The light was bright enough to see to pick up a pin. It seemed as large as a man's hat, and burst as it struck. I have bought cornmeal at $1 a bushel that was so musty it was green, and that smelt so strong you could smell it several feet from the wagon, and we were glad to get even that! I used to split rails at 20 cents a hundred, and to work at 40 cents a day.

"The first spring, I cleared up five acres for corn. A good crop grew, but the birds and "varmints" mostly ate it up. I used to kill squirrels, and coons, and turkeys, so many that I did not take the trouble to pick them up. The turkeys would come twenty or thirty in a flock."

THOMAS MIDDLETON.

"I came to Indiana with $3 and a rifle-gun. I have been greatly afflicted; had much sickness. Have seven times been sick expecting to die; yet I am eighty-one years old, and in moderate, though feeble, health. I have paid thousands of dollars for doctors' bills. I was sick, when a boy, and I am sick in the same way yet. My back was hurt when I was a small child, and it hurts me still. I have had the piles and the gravel from early youth. I was ruptured in 1826, which remains till now. Dr. Ruby madé thirty visits from Bethel at one time. I took my wife and walked and led the mare to Richmond. My wife stayed six weeks, and got no relief. She came home and lived till October. My second wife was visited once a day for seventy days. I once sent for Dr. Warner, who prescribed for my case. Said he: "When this medicine is gone, come and see me." I went, and he charged me $1.50, and said: "You can't be cured. Some doctors will say: 'We can cure you,' but all they wish is a big bill; they can run that up on you fast enough." I was at one time greatly troubled with the gravel, and Dr. Morgan tried to ease me. He injected morphine into my side, which seemed to give relief. I had been almost raving and wild with pain from Wednesday morning till sometime Sunday.

"Thus many and severe have been my afflictions from my youth even till this day, but I have trusted in the Lord, and trust Him still."

ELISHA T. BAILEY.

"Dr. Silvers used to live near Ridgeville. He and his cousin, when small boys, were captured by the Indians, and lived and traveled with them for many years (1811 and onward) from Vincennes to Muncie, Greenville, Ft. Wayne, etc.

"When the Indians captured the boys, the clothes were thrown on the bank of a creek to make believe the children had been drowned.

"The Indians often passed through portions of Randolph County.

"Dr. Silvers used to say there was a spot on Nolan's Fork, under a knotty walnut tree (he thinks on the farm of John Thomas, one of the first settlers), where the Indians had buried money. The doctor has gone, in later years, and dug to find it; whether he succeeded or not, probably no mortal knows.

"At another place, near Richard Corbitt's, he said metal had been found.

"On Green's Fork, he said, an old Indian buried a lot of money, and the doctor spent months in hunting for it, but whether he found that or not no one ever knew but himself.

"The Indians used to have copper kettles (gotten in trade with the English or the French), and settlers have found some of them. Mr. Frazier, on Green's Fork, found one in early times."

WILLIAM M. LOCKE.

"The first preaching appointment at Spartansburg was started by Ohio preachers at Brother William McKim's. The Methodists built their first church there, in 1837, and their present one in about 1869.

"The first preaching was about 1833. We joined in 1834, in Mr. McKim's barn. Camp-meetings were held a little west of town three different seasons. The preachers in charge were Revs. Hall, Bruce and Smith. Large numbers joined the church.

"A Mr. Manning died near the camp ground. He had been sick, and was feeling better, and he wished so much to attend meeting, that he went before he was able, and by the excitement and the night air he took a relapse, and was dead before they got him home.

"There had been a little mill where Jessup's mill was afterward built, but it was gone. The "Quaker Trace" had been cut out, but as you went farther north, the track went "all over the woods," over saplings, round logs and ponds, etc.

"John Alexander used to tell how, in high water, the cattle would get on the bridges, and the puncheons would be floating, and the oxen would get their legs between the puncheons, and the teamsters would unyoke the cattle and let them swim out. How the wagons were got across cannot be stated. Old Thornton Alexander and his boys (colored) used to wagon regularly to Ft. Wayne."

ARTHUR M'KEW, 1831, RIDGEVILLE.

"When I was a lad, thirteen years old, I went with father to Fort Wayne, with two yoke of oxen and a wagon; and he worked there two weeks. When about to start for home, father found a man who was going to Logansport, and father waited, went with him, taking the oxen and wagon, and sending me home by the "Quaker Trace," alone. It took me five days to make the journey. It was a lonely trip, and I camped out several nights. Father, in coming home, lay out the last night. There was a heavy snowfall, and he spread the blanket over him and raked the snow on and around him to keep him warm.

"At one time, Thomas Shalor, whose home was near Camden, Jay County, Ind., came to mill, and after bacon, etc., with a wagon and two yoke of oxen. As he started home, in passing a drain bridged with poles, an ox got a leg between the poles, and broke it. Mr. S. came back for help, and hired me (a boy fourteen years old) to take a yoke of oxen and help him through. As we were crossing the "maple slash," in Jay County, the ox-tongue broke. It was in winter, and the snow was six inches deep. Shaler went to Mr. Welch's, four miles off, to get help and tools. He returned after dark with an ax and an auger and two men. Joseph Hawkins (another boy, fourteen years old) and myself took the "back tracks" of the men, getting to Mr. Welch's after midnight, nearly chilled through. She got up (the woman was in bed), and gave us some "corn dodger," and it was good, sure. The men came with the wagon and team, near daylight, with feet badly frost-bitten. After breakfast, Shalor and I went on, getting to Philip Brown's for dinner (corn bread and venison)—near Liber—and staying at Judge Winters' that night. In the morning, we cut the ice and crossed the Salimony, and went on through the thick woods, there being no road; and away in the night we got within half a mile of Shalor's cabin; but there was a creek and ice, and the oxen would not cross; so we tied them to the wagon, and, shouldering some meal and bacon, footed it to the cabin. But that cabin was a sight. No daubing, no chinking, no floor, no fireplace, no chimney; fire in the middle of the cabin, and the house filled with smoke. The woman got up, cooked us some meat and gave us some dodger, and we lay down. That woman and her four little girls had been there alone for more than a week, and were out of food. [See J. Hawkins' statement.] The next morning I started for home with the cattle. I had passed Judge Winters' about 1 P. M., when I met father, with Mr. Lewallyn and Mr. McCartney, hunting me. We got home about midnight, I having been absent five days.

"At another time, a horse had strayed. He was "spanciled," and I "trailed" him. I had on a rimless straw hat, and no coat nor vest, but simply tow shirt and pants, and was barefooted. I followed the trail to near Huntsville, stayed all night with a "Dunkard," and the next morning went with him to a "woods meeting." The preacher made inquiry, and a man came and told me he had seen such a horse, and where. The horse had been raised at Connersville, and seemed to be heading thither. I went to Connersville, Cambridge City, Milton, Jacksonsburg, Waterloo, etc., but no horse could I find, and so I set out for home. I met father near Maxville, hunting for me. I told him what the man had said, and he went and found the horse in that neighborhood. I had somehow missed him. My travels had been one hundred miles or more, and lasted seven days. At Waterloo they thought me a runaway apprentice, and were about to arrest me as such; but a man there happened to know my father and myself, and they let me go. And truly I was a sight to behold, and my story, though true, was entirely unlikely, and people would not believe me.

"Flatboating was a great business in those times. We used to steer the boats down the river over the dams, etc., to the Wabash, or elsewhere, and then go home on foot. Once, five of us were hired to take five boats down, all lashed together. We got through all safe, got our pay twenty miles below Marion, and "put" for Randolph. We struck south for the road (what there was), and so to Marion. Billy Gray said, "Boys, this makes my thirteenth trip. I always had plenty of company at the start, but none when I got home." We set forth that day for "keeps." The next day, Billy Gray was not well, but he warmed up and left us. We had to wade waist-deep that day to cross a stream. The next day he went ahead again, but we passed him before he reached Fairview. Gray stayed at Elijah Thomas', south of Fairview. Addington stayed at Caylor's Tavern, Roe came home, three miles from Ridgeville, and I got home to Ridgeville at midnight, having traveled that day more than fifty miles, often wading, and in places waist deep."

[NOTE.—Arthur McKew died at his home, in Ridgeville, January, 1882.]

JAMES PORTER.

"George Porter, my brother, came out in the spring of 1829, and raised crops, and then came back and moved his family to Randolph, three or four weeks before I arrived there.

"There was a mill at Ridgeville, when I came. Henry Hinchy built a water-mill on the Mississinewa, after a while, for corn and wheat, bolted by machinery, in (about) 1844.

"The first school was taught by George Porter's wife, about one-half mile west of our house (in Ward Township), about 1836.

"We used to go to meeting (M. E.), at Riley Marshall's house, near (what is now) Prospect Meeting-House. Mrs. P. used to go afoot and "tote" the baby—three miles. Mrs. Porter used to be greatly afraid of the Indians, though they never injured her. Travelers would often pass from Winchester to the "Quaker Trace." We were glad to see them and have them stay over night.

"The Brockuses would drink and fight. Their wives were fine women, but the men used them badly. They would not work, but would go off hunting or running about. The women would be at home with nothing to eat.

"I went three times to Cincinnati to enter land—forty acres each time—afoot, except, partly, the second time. Then I rode a colt to Hamilton, and sold it there for $35 cash, to enter land with. I had been offered $100, credit, for the horse at home, but I was in a hurry to enter my land, for fear somebody else would get it before me. I went afoot to Cincinnati, and home again.

"Thomas Shaler lived in a cabin on this place (and his brother; but they moved off). He had been here three or four years. Samuel Emery came in 1826. He lived in Ward Township, two miles down the Mississinewa. Allen Wall lived close by Emery's. There were no more between here and Deerfield, on the Mississinewa. Daniel B. Miller and Riley Marshall lived near Prospect Meeting-House, east of Deerfield. Philip Storms lived near "Sockum," at the crossing. He had been there some time. Andrew Debolt lived at Mount Holly. William Simmons had been here, had gone away to Blue River, and he came again in 1830. Messrs. Keys, Hodge, Manus and Fields lived south of here.

"Thomas Devor and Mr. Beach, Jacob Johnson, Joseph Sutton, James Wickersham, Amos Smith, Thomas Wiley and John Hoke came after a while. John Skinner and James Skinner came also."

WILLIS C. WILLMORE.

"Before I was five years old, I remember being at my grandfather Harrison's; I was with some black boys tramping clothes in a big trough. My uncles made me popguns, and gave me slices of toast from the plate before the fire. When five years old, father took me to his new home, and my new mother.

"As I got to the gate, I ran into the house, and the first thing I knew I was in my stepmother's lap. Father settled among the Blue Ridge Mountains. A part of the farm was creek bottoms, the rest was on the mountains. Some of the surface was very steep, so that it could be cultivated. The sloping land had to be plowed one way, and some could not be plowed at all; and that which was too steep to be plowed was cultivated entirely with the hoe. The stones and the hoe would often meet, and several hoeing together would make lively music. The mountains were full of bears, wolves, panthers, wild cats and snakes. Rattlesnakes and copperheads were the most dreaded. Our nearest neighbor was a mile distant. We could see no house but our own. Many days would pass with a sight of none but our own family. The pasture was fine in the mountains and ravines, and ready in March. The cows would come to their calves for three or four months, and then they had to be hunted. I was the cowboy, and often night would find me in the mountains calling the cows. The hair would well-nigh stand on end for fright while driving them over rocks and hills, and through laurel thickets, not knowing when I might meet a wild beast or tread on a snake. One night, two of my brothers, out coon-hunting, came home at daylight, and said the dogs were baying a bear in the mountain close by. We went with the gun to find the den. I walked to its mouth, the bear met me and passed without a word of "How-d'ye," or "Good bye." I crawled in and captured three cubs and took them home.

Another night, John and I were hunting in a strange place. John fell from a cliff; I hugged a tree. At dawn we were at the edge of a precipice over a stream.

One time, going home from picking whortleberries, we came upon three huge rattlesnakes lying in the sun. We cut three long forked sticks, and put them over their necks, and I held down their heads with a short fork, and cut them off with my pocket-knife. We did this to prevent their biting themselves, because we wanted the oil. We dragged our snakes two and a half miles to get them home. When I was skinning one of them the headless neck drew back and stood in the attitude to strike, and gave a forward blow as if to bite. My brother laughed at me years afterward for being bitten by a rattlesnake without a head.

"In the valley where I was born, in the Blue Ridge, the sun would shine far up the western heights long ere we could see its disk above the eastern hills, and long before night, moreover, it had sunk behind the mountain tops. In that rugged country, work began at daylight, and at 9 A. M., the horn blew for breakfast, and at 2 or 3 o'clock for dinner, which was the last meal. The work kept on from dawn till dark, and in winter cotton had to be picked till 9 or 10 o'clock at night.

The hills were very steep, so much so that often we were obliged to "tote" things a long way to where they could be "hauled." One day I was driving a cart, and, though several were holding it, over it went—load and all. Luckily the "overturn" did little damage, so we loaded up again and went on.

People here can have little idea of the hardships of such a life in so rough and rugged a land.

Yet there were some advantages even there. The clear, cool, bright springs gushing from the hillsides, and the pure, fresh, bracing mountain air were a delight to behold and to breathe.

"I had even in my boyhood resolved that this hard and broken land was "not the land for me." I had heard of that fair, level, rich country in the Northwest, beyond the beautiful Ohio, and I determined to find it, and view its glories for myself. And in due time the opportunity came. Father had met with losses and went to Ohio to find a new home. Meanwhile, I remained behind to settle his business, and a hard and tiresome task it was, indeed. In performing the work, I walked more than a thousand miles, and rode hundreds of miles besides.

Once we 'ran off' a tract of land overflowed by a violent rain, riding on horseback and using poles instead of pegs. The survey had to be made, and the surveyor would not do it, and so we did.

When all was done that I could do there for father, I moved stepmother with eight children to the "Great West," finding father in Gallia County, Ohio, in which region he made his new home. So here I was in the wonderful Northwest, and I had come to stay. I had bidden the rough and rugged mountains a long, long farewell. I had found the forest plains of which I had dreamed so often and so fondly. In Ohio I married, and, after four years, made my way to Wayne County, Ind.; and after a brief sojourn there, we pitched our tent under the green beeches of Randolph.

"But the West was not without its hardships also. Workwas wearisome, and money was scarce. Twenty-five cents a day (cash) was reckoned fair wages. Fifty cents in "dicker" was easier to get than half that amount in money.

I chopped and split rails from heavy oak timber for 25 cents a hundred and my board. Everything (that farmers produced) was low. The first cow (and calf) I bought was for $6.50. She was three years old and very small. When I got home with her and the calf, I called to my wife, "See here, I have brought you two calves." She looked and cried out, "She can't raise a calf." She did though, and both of them made splendid milkers.

We bought pork at $2 net, delivered, and corn was 12½ cents a bushel. I boarded a teacher, Samuel Godfrey, in Wayne County, about 1830, for 75 cents a week.

"November 17, 1831, we moved into our cabin, and the next day it snowed. I had managed by years of hard work to get money, with which I had entered 160 acres of land, and I felt richer than a king, and hoped and expected to prosper. But, alas, disease and affliction were speedily my lot. I was doomed to crutches for life. In less than three months I was prostrated with the "cold plague," and I have never stood upon my feet unsupported nor walked without crutches since that hour. I lay a long time helpless, my wife rolling me over in bed. Nobody thought I would live. But here I am! When it became clear that I could not regain strength, I was alarmed at the prospect. What was to become of us? But these fears were at that time taken away, and I clung to the promise, "Seek first, etc." We resolved to hold together as a family, which we have done. To pine, would avail nothing. How we lived is hard to tell. "God delivered us," is all I can say. The wheel and the loom did a brave part. When the calamity came, I was engaged in preaching to two churches. Of course I stopped. But when I had recovered so as to go on crutches, though not to sit up, I was sent for to see a sick man. The house was crowded; I lay on a pallet and pointed them to Christ. Since then, often have I, lying on a couch, in the congregation, invited sinners to repentance, and bade Christians God speed! The followers of the Lamb would meet, and sing, and pray, and I would try to preach, and the Lord was well pleased for His gracious name's sake. And many a time we were fed on heavenly manna!

My worldly prospect was indeed dark, but God comforted me, and blessed be His holy name!

I had grace to trust Him, and He sustained me. We had kind friends, and we always had enough; sometimes the bitter tear would fall, but I lifted up the eye of faith to Him who sent the ravens to feed Elijah, and to Him who, though He rules all worlds, yet had not where to lay his head! I was not disappointed. My friends have been many and kind, and with them would I live and die; and may we all rise to light, clothed in the garments of salvation!

"I was converted and joined the Baptists in 1821, was licensed in 1825, and ordained in 1830, and in 1839, when we moved to Winchester, a Baptist Church was organized for that place and region, which stood many years.

There was, at the time, a Methodist meeting-house, and there was no other. The Presbyterians began before long, and kept up an organization for ten or fifteen years, building a house for their worship, but the church was always weak, and at length became extinct.

"After I moved to Winchester, at first I wrote lying on a narrow straw bed, but mostly on my knees. The Recorder's office then was worth but little; an able-bodied man could have done the work, but I had to hire a deputy, and the profits were small. In the summer of 1847, my disease returned, and in May, 1848, I was hauled between two feather beds to where I now live. I was confined to my bed at that time for more than two years; since then I have been several times snatched from the jaws of death by the same hand which has led me all my journey through. Like the Jews before Jordan, I look across the river and behold the blessed Canaan.

Like Moses on Mt. Pisgah's top, I view the heavenly landscape o'er, and humbly wait the appointed time when God shall set my happy spirit free, and receive my blood-washed soul to the blissful mansions of eternal rest.

"For some years I trusted in the sweet Bible promises, and was upheld in the midst of my sorrow. But, as my family cares increased, after a time I became somewhat disheartened; my way seemed hedged up, darkness was on me, and I felt gloomy and sad. When I looked at my wife and children, and thought of their needs and my own, and my helplessness, my soul cried, 'What will become of us?'

But one Sabbath, after having been to my appointment at Concord (for I could preach though I could not stand, and had been greatly helped and strengthened in the Lord's work), I came home, and at night, when in bed, a burden of distress rolled upon my heart, and it seemed that I should be crushed; I was not asleep, it was no dream; but I saw myself struggling through deep water, and suddenly my Savior was walking by my side, and He sweetly held me up as I buffeted the waves. Deep peace fell on me, all trouble and doubt and sorrow fled, and my soul was bathed in joy unspeakable and full of glory. The holy baptism of that midnight hour has never left me; but I have been enabled to walk in the strength of the grace I then received, even to this blessed day.

A cripple bodily I have continued to be to this moment, but the ecstasy of spirit which my poor soul has many a time received from the Lord, human tongue in this world can never tell. And the good Lord is with His unworthy servant still.

The prayer of the Psalmist, "When I am old and gray-headed, O Lord, forsake me not," has with me and mine been wonderfully answered! Near fifty years ago, I lay feeble and helpless, waiting for death to do its work upon my wretched body; and yet, here I am still, tarrying in this tabernacle of clay, patiently expecting the hour, now surely near at hand, when I shall be, "not unclothed, but clothed upon;" and mortality shall be swallowed up of life—when I shall be permitted to see the King in His beauty; when my crutches and my poor old frame shall be laid aside together, and my freed spirit shall go shouting home!"

"Hallelujah to the Lamb who has purchased our pardon,
We will praise Him again when we pass over Jordan."

Since the Baptist Church spoken of above went down, Mr. W. has stood outside of special church relation. But he is in full and blessed sympathy with God and all good men, and feels that all humble, penitent, God-fearing, heaven-seeking souls are his brethren and sisters. He feels too, that—

"The church on earth and all the dead,
But one communion make.
They all have life in Christ, their Head,
And of His righteousness partake."

Through the glass of faith he views from the tops of the "Delectable Mountains" the glorious sights and scenes in the New Jerusalem; and feels that the time will not be long till he shall be among them, till he shall join the ecstatic throng; till with the spirits of the just made perfect, with the "church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven," he, too, cleansed and purified, "washed in the blood of the Lamb," shall take up the heavenly song, and swell the hallelujah chorus that rises ever from the hosts of the saved in the courts of glory on high!

NATHAN CADWALLADER.

"When I taught school, I did bravely, taking pupils through arithmetic, etc., where I had never been myself! The first school was by subscription, eight weeks, taught in an old log building in Frederick Davis' field. It had once boasted a clay and puncheon fireplace, but that had been pulled down, and the chimney-place was open, like a barn door. The books were whatever each pupil brought—Bible, Testament, Life of Washington, Life of Marion, History of England, spelling books, and so on. Each one used whatever he brought, too; "uniformity of text-books" was not in vogue in that institution, sure; of course, classification gave no trouble, but each tow-headed urchin was head, and foot too, of his own class. I had, perhaps, twenty pupils. My school was liked; my government was somewhat unique, and certainly original. One day I had two lads standing face to face, two or three feet apart, with a stick split at both ends and one end on each boy's nose; another mischievous ten-year-old I had thrown astraddle of the naked joist-pole overhead; and a fourth luckless wight who had fallen under my magisterial displeasure, was expiating his crime by standing with his hands behind his back and his nose plump against the wall!

Just at that supreme moment of the endurance of penalty for transgressing the majesty of violated law, in popped a neighbor and patron of the school, more noted for bluntness than gentility, through the open door. He stared, first at one, then at the next, and so on, till at length as the whole ridiculous gravity of the curious situation dawned upon his mind, suddenly he broke out with a rough expression, and, sinking with his ponderous weight upon the puncheon floor, burst into a loud and uncontrollable fit of laughter. Was not that school-room a sight? "Wholesome discipline" was at a discount at that moment of supreme ridiculousness; and teacher, pupils and visitor all gave way together, and laughed in concert till they got tired, and quit because they could laugh no longer."

At another time, the same "school visitor" "cut a shine" in that (or some neighboring) school, which fun-loving teachers will wonder at when they read: The school was in session; all were at their "books," and studying "for keeps." One young man was sitting, face to the wall, engaged in writing, as he sat in front of one of those old slab or puncheon writing-desks, fastened against the side of the house.

All at once, in popped "that same old coon" with a meal-sack slung around his neck. Paying no special heed to what was going on in the room, he strode straight across the floor to this young man aforesaid; and, before any one had the slightest idea of his intention, the old sack was slapped violently round the young man's face, the other exclaiming, "Tend to your books, you or-na-ry cuss." Teachers generally say they like to have visitors: doubtless this teacher had often said the same. But probably thereafter his desire for visitors contained at least one mental reservation.

Mr. Cadwallader's school was liked, perhaps all the better for his attempted "new departures" and original methods. At any rate, he was engaged again for the winter school, with an enormous increase of wages from $7 to $9 per month—a growth of well-nigh 30 per cent, and an increase worthy of especial notice and remembrance; conclusively showing that the employers in that backwoods school-district thoroughly understood the appropriate method and means of rendering suitable encouragement to corresponding merits; and that they put their knowledge earnestly into practice, much to the satisfaction of the worthy subject of the present sketch.

"That winter furnished some interesting experience. The big boys took me at Christmas, and ducked me through a hole in the ice up to my chin, till I would agree to "treat," which I finally did. They let me out, and I sent for some apples, for the "treat." The sequel came near being tragic, for the apple boys stayed so long that the others thought I was "shamming," and had sent for no apples; and, so they caught me, and went to duck me again. Luckily, the boys came just at the nick of time, and I was let go, and we had a gay "treat." Thus went school life (not very) long ago, when I was young and in my 'teens."

During Mr. C.'s term as Senator, an event occurred, so curious and vexatious, and so apt an illustration of the evils of hasty legislation, and, moreover, of the importance of careful and exact expression, that we cannot forbear to state it somewhat in detail. He had resolved that Indiana should have, like her sister States, a law regulating the movements of railroad trains, a thing, in fact, greatly necessary. So, he drew up a bill, mostly like the Ohio law; presented it to the Senate, and it was "tee-totally" passed in fifteen minutes; in fact, before he sat down. It was read, once, twice, ordered to be considered engrossed, read the third time, and finally passed, all in the same transaction. Not an objection was raised, not a word was changed; it went through "clean." It passed the other House much in the same way, and nothing more was thought of it. On the day in which the law was to go into effect, the whole State of Indiana was "waked up" by the unearthly screeching of every engine-whistle on every railroad of the State. Especially were the ears of our Senator, whose residence is close to the railroad depot in Union City, greeted with whistling fit to "wake the dead." When the railroad men were asked, "what does this mean?" they replied, "Senator Cadwallader's whistle-bill requires it."

Mr. C. resolutely denied the allegation, but on examining the "Record," there it stood in black and white—"Every engineer shall, within eighty rods of any crossing of any street or public highway, sound the whistle continuously until he has passed said crossing." Cities were allowed to regulate the matter as they chose; but as no town had done so, the law was binding in town and country alike. Here was a racket indeed. Mr. C. was nonplussed; but knowing the bill was not so when he had it pass the Senate, he got hold of the copy thereof, and found this curious fact, to wit: The section, as he wrote it, stood thus: * * "shall sound the whistle and ring the bell continuously until, etc., i. e., sound the whistle once, at first, and then keep on ringing the bell, etc. Somebody had drawn a pencil mark across the words "and ring the bell," making the clause read, "shall sound the whistle continuously," and thus it stands on the "Record." Who made the alteration, Mr. C. has never been able to find out. But it shows very strikingly how important it is to have the words of a law just exactly right, and how great a change a slight alteration will make. The bill, as it was presented, commanded (though the idea is not very clearly expressed), a proper and needful thing. As it stands on the Record, the thing required would be an intolerable nuisance.

Probably no man was ever greeted with such a howl of indignation as from every corner of the State met the astounded ears of the Senator from Randolph. Examination, however, soon quieted the clamor, and showed his intention and his action to have been proper, and that he was simply the victim of a strange and, thus far, unexplained mistake (or, possibly, of a trick on the part of some truckler to the favor of railroad corporations).

Mr. C. has had the satisfaction of witnessing the Indiana Legislature pass the "Railroad Whistle Bill" in an amended form, i. e., in the shape that he put it through the Senate originally, and of having the Senate pass, unanimously, a Resolution that the "blunder" of the previous "act" was in no way chargeable to him. One would have supposed that Gov. Williams would have seen the absurdity of the bill in the form in which it seems to have come into his hands, but it appears he did not; and "Governors" are not always "sharp" in the matter of language, any more than other people, as the Hoosier State, in common with others, has had occasion to discover.

I should not do justice to my feelings were I to omit to state that Mr. C. is himself an eminent specimen of an honorable and high-minded citizen. Though economical, he is not penurious; though desirous to make money, he is not oppressive to the poor and unfortunate; though not, in name, a professor of religion, yet in heart he delights in all things good and lovely, and assists liberally in building up every worthy enterprise. He is a hearty and earnest friend of the temperance reform, and an active and uncompromising Republican. He possesses the unqualified respect of all his fellow-citizens, and is an honor to the town in which he resides, and to the county which, for well-nigh fifty years, has claimed him for her own. Although highly honored, thus far, by his fellow-citizens, the State will never know what she has lost by neglecting to advance him to the post of State School Superintendent, for a genius so decidedly fresh and vigorous when in the inexperience of untutored youth, as shown by his original inventive powers, in the way of penalties for violation of school law, would infallibly have wrought out radical and thorough reformation in all school appliances and methods, so that lads and lasses both in the near and the remote future would have revered and blessed his name as the ceaseless ages roll.

WILLIAM TAYLOR.

"William McKim laid out Spartansburg. William Dukes lived in the house where Taylor now lives. Elias Godfrey and Thomas Hart kept a grocery in the house now occupied by John H. Taylor. Mr. Fires built the house where John Wiggs now lives, and sold it to Stephen Barnes, who completed it, and occupied it till he died. In the war of 1812, many men went from our region to Norfolk or Portsmouth. We lived 200 miles from Norfolk. People used to drive their hogs thither to market. The country where we lived was level and sandy. The upper counties were broken, and the soil was good for wheat and tobacco. We lived east of Raleigh forty miles. We could hear the cannon roar at Raleigh on the Fourth of July. We were six weeks and two days on the road coming West. My oldest son and myself walked nearly all the way. We camped out every night but one. Jesse Jordan had come to Indiana, and stayed three or four years, and returned to Carolina for some money that was due him, and he came back to Indiana with us. We were well and enjoyed the trip first rate. We had two one-horse carts to haul our luggage in. We had a tent, and would throw our beds down on the leaves. We slept one night at the foot of the Blue Ridge. We started the last Sunday of April, and arrived at Arba June 8, 1836. We came the mail stage route a long way, then through Powell Valley, Cumberland Gap, etc. We crossed the Blue Ridge at Good Spur and Poplar Camp, and came through Crab Orchard, etc. We traveled nearly a week on the Blue Ridge. We could see houses on points of hills and away down in valleys where we could not guess how anybody could ever get to them. One place called Dry Ridge had no water for a long distance. We crossed the Ohio at Cincinnati, which seemed to me to be quite a large town, the largest I had ever seen. We did not stop long there, but drove through, and camped for the night. As we came through Raleigh, they were building the new State House. Jesse Jordan had $1,500 in North Carolina currency that he had to exchange because it would not pass in Indiana. He got United States bank notes, the only bills that would pass. I had my money in gold. I paid for my land in half-eagles—seventy half-eagles. I had in North Carolina 125 acres. I went back to Carolina once and stayed six weeks. Jesse Jordan's widow also went back a short time ago. She said the people seemed to be doing very well."

BRANSON ANDERSON, 1833.

"Settlers when we came, in 1833, were Jacob Chenoweth, in Ohio; Hezekiah Locke, on the Bailey place; Mason Freeman, on the Marquis place. John Foster came on the Griffis place a year or so after we came. [This is not the Joshua Foster who was in that vicinity many years before.] Mr. Farms had just put up a cabin on the James Ruby place; had not moved into it yet. Smith Masterson lived on the Downing place, north of Dismal. James Griffis lived on the Williamson farm, and moved not long afterward to the Griffis place, on the Greenville State road."

ELISHA MARTIN.

"In June, 1832, in a race, molding brick with Silas Connell, I molded, from sun to sun, 25,148 brick, and he, 23,865. I was about twenty years old. My father-in-law scolded me; told me I should not have tried it, and that I could not stand it. He stood by me and kept me from working full speed, till 2 P. M., when he told me to "go it." Silas led me all the forenoon. A great crowd were looking on, and they bet two to one on Connell. By and by, the tide turned, and the bets became five to one for me, and I beat. People after that offered to bring men to beat me, but they never did. I had a man on his yard and he on mine. They set their watches just alike, and we begun to a second. We worked till dinner. I had my dinner brought to the yard; took a few bites and went to molding again. Men said I molded forty-eight brick the last minute. They carried me to the house, washed me in whisky, and would not let me lie down till near morning. I went to work the third day after. The bet was only $10 on a side. Isrum Engle, of Union City, and Ezekiel Clough, of Jackson Township, lived at Cincinnati at the time, and know that I did what I claim to have done."

Mr. Martin was a brick molder, and has been for many years. He owns a good farm south of Winchester.

THOMAS SHALER. [BY JOSEPH C. HAWKINS.]

"I had to go to mill at Ridgeville, from near Antioch, Jay County, Ind., generally on horseback. I had to do the milling, while the older boys carried the mail from Winchester to Ft. Wayne. Thomas Shaler, who used to live near, but had moved to near Camden, came to mother's on his way to mill with a wagon and oxen. He persuaded her to have me go with him and get fifteen bushels of corn, and said he would bring home the meal for her; so she sent me. Brother Ben had raised the corn at Joab Ward's, and I shelled it; got a horse there and took it to mill, and had the meal all ready. But Shaler had been getting drunk and fooling round, and he stayed three days. I determined to walk home and bring a horse and get my grist that way. But at last he got ready and started. (See Arthur McKew's Reminiscences.) He left my meal at William Welch's, and I took the grist home from there (John Adair's place south of Liber). Shaler was away about nine days, and his wife and family were at home starving. He was a drunken, shiftless fellow, boasting of being half-Indian. His wife was an excellent woman, with four children; all girls. She was there in the woods, ten miles from any settler. Their cabin had no fire-place, floor, nor chimney, no daubing nor chinking, and the snow was eight inches deep; everything was frozen up, and they had nothing to eat. She had burned some coal in one corner of the shanty, had made a sled, and was intending to take an ox, the sled, her four children, and a kettle with coals in it to keep the children from freezing to death, and to start for Mrs. Hawkins' cabin fifteen miles off, the nearest settler she knew. But her husband and young McKew got to the cabin that night about midnight, with the provisions. Shaler and McKew cut the ice and crossed the Big Salamonie, near Judge Winters', but there was a stream called Big Branch, up which the water had set back from the Big Salamonie, over a wide space. The water had suddenly frozen, and then had sunk away, leaving the ice, and they could not get the oxen across in the night."

[NOTE.—This Tom Shaler was the same that James Porter found "squatted" on the land that Porter entered afterward, northwest part of Jackson Township, Randolph County. Shaler moved from there near to Liber, and soon after that to near Camden. This incident took place about 1833. Joseph Hawkins' father moved to Jay County in 1829. He died in 1833, and they were "roughing" it up there in the Jay County woods, a poor widow with a large family.]

JACOB JOHNSON, 1833.

"The first resident of Jackson Township is supposed to have been Philip Storms. He "squatted" on a piece of land east of my farm; but a Mr. Fager entered the land from under him, and he then moved to Mississinewa crossing and remained there several years. It is also said that another person entered Mr. Storms' land there; that he was very angry and threatened to shoot the intruder, but that they finally settled the matter amicably and that he moved elsewhere. He was living in the region in 1830, how much later is not now known, and if he had lived elsewhere in the township several years, he was certainly the first comer. Mr. Jacobs is thought by some to have been the first permanent settler in the township, but these things are "mighty hard to find out." Ishmael Bunch was a very early pioneer also.

"I (Johnson) lived in a rail-pen from May 3 to June 22. Our family were myself and wife and nine children, and we were as happy as need be. We made the floor of the rail-pen of bark, and renewed it twice. When the water would splash up through the bark, I would put in a new floor of the same sort.

The State road to Portland was laid out about 1838, only forty feet wide!

The first Justice in Jackson Township was James Wickersham.

The first couple married were David Vance and Sally Smith by Esq. Wickersham.

The first mill was erected by Jones, on Lowe's Branch, one and a half miles above me.

I built a horse-mill, then a water-mill, and afterward a saw-mill.

The grist-mill was run twenty years and the saw-mill ten years, but they are all rotted down now.

The graveyard on my place was begun about 1840.

The Indians were all gone but one, "Old Duck." He hunted and trapped and took his skins and furs to Greenville. He used to stay with Jacobs, at Harshman's, and with Andrew Debolt."

NOTE.—This "Duck" is spoken of in Jay County History as being familiar with the early settlers of that county. He seems to have been a clever, civil, honest Indian. At one time he was at a church trial, and when the witness began to testify "crosswise," he rose to leave, saying, "Me go; no much good here, too much lie."

The author of Jay County History says (in substance):

All early settlers are familiar with the name of the old Indian, Doctor Duck, who remained in the county a long time after his tribe had moved to Kansas. He showed much skill in the treatment of diseases. * * * He was religious and often appeared to be praying to the Great Spirit. He attended meeting for preaching at Deerfield and the church trial afterward, which he left as stated above. He tried to cure John J. Hawking, a pioneer of Jay County, but did not succeed, though he lived with Mr. H. six months. About two weeks after Mr. H. died (March 15, 1832), the Indian visited his grave and spent nearly half a day there alone, apparently preaching and performing wild ceremonies."

Settlers (that Mr. Johnson remembers) when he came were: Daniel B. Miller, Ward Township; Jacob Harshman, two miles west of Johnson's; Abram Harshman, same neighborhood; Reuben Harshman, same neighborhood (died lately in Union City, Ohio); Andrew Debolt, Mount Holly, dead; James Reeves, near Castle P. O., dead; Amos Smith, near New Lisbon, gone long ago; Samuel Skinner, near New Lisbon, gone long ago; John Skinner, near New Lisbon, gone long ago; James Willson, James Wickersham, etc.

John Johnson, his brother, came when he did, dying a year or so ago, aged eighty-eight years.

William Warren, James Warren, James Simmons, came soon after Mr. Johnson.

James Porter was living near New Pittsburg, and others had settled near Allensville, on the Mississinewa River.

ANDREW AKER.

"My trade as a merchant was extensive and various. I used to buy every commodity that was salable at that day. I bought produce of all kinds and shipped it on flat-boats down the Mississinewa, sending sometimes two or three boats at once, loaded with flour, bacon, apples, etc. We went to Logansport, Lafayette, etc., selling mostly, though not entirely, to Indian traders. Sales would be made on credit, and then we would go down at the time of the Indian payments, which were made once a year, generally in August or September, and get the money for the goods sold to them. The last time I went we had three boat loads. The boats were made by Joab Ward, who kept a boat-yard near what is now Ridgeville. He would make a boat all complete for an amount varying from $25 to $30, which would carry about one hundred barrels of flour.

"I lost my sight about 1836, and sold goods till 1838. I worked twenty-five years at pump-making. I had worked at it when young, and, trying it again after blindness came on, I found that I could do the work with success, and resumed the business. I have made and sold great numbers of pumps, working all through the country, making forty at one time at Recovery.

"Thomas Hanna kept a store at Winchester when I came there. Esq. Odle had owned a store before that; Hanna's store was quite an extensive establishment for those days.

Paul W. Way set up a dry goods store afterwards, and William and Jesse Way began also. Michael Aker bought out my stock and followed me in the business, though he did not continue long.

The court house was up and covered when I came to Winchester; David Wysong furnished the brick, and the lime was obtained at New Paris, or at Middleboro; lime was not burned in this county till afterwards.

Joseph Hanchy had made pumps, hauling his tools with an ox team, and making them from farm to farm. He is the same man who planted nurseries in various places through the country.

"Soon after I came here I bought 108 acres of John B. Wright and 100 acres of Charles Conway. I bought the Daniel Petty land east of town, of Oliver Walker, as also a lot in every square in town. I traded the lot in the north front with a building on it for the farm I now live on (108 acres).

I traded 180 acres with a good house and barn and orchard and 50 acres cleared for 400 acres, and sold that in four or five years to Joshua Bond for $1,100.

"Ernestus Strohm began a cabinet shop, and I was in partnership with him for awhile. We made a sideboard worth $175 about 1838, the first costly piece of furniture made in the county. It is a splendid article—large, square, rather low, with a large framed glass at the middle of the top. I have it yet in a good state of preservation; in fact, almost as nice and good as new. It was the first thing that was made in that shop, and it was made to show what kind of work the shop could furnish.

"Some amusing things would take place in those primitive times. Some such incidents occurred in my own experience.

Curtis Voris and a half-brother of his had moved out here from Greenville. He had some money to spare and he asked, "Who would be safe?" The person told him, "Andrew Aker." So he came to me: "What per cent?" "Six." "How long time?" "A year." "All right," said he, "and I will trade out the interest." "Better yet," said I, "I will take your money. How much can you spare?" "Two dollars and a half," was the rejoinder. That I was astonished is simply the truth. However, I took his money, the whole of it, and he kept his bargain by trading out the interest, all of it.

"A man from out North was trading one day, and having made a bill of (perhaps) $2, offered in payment a $5 bill. It was a base counterfeit, and I told him so. "Why," said he, "it is good; I got it from Hell." "Take it back there, then, it will not pass here." He meant a man with that name.

"One day, Old Samuel Emery, from the Mississinewa (who died only a short time ago), came in with a roll of deer-skins. He was truly a rough-looking customer. His pants were buckskin and ripped up nearly to the knee. He wore a straw hat, with the rim half torn off; his shoes were ragged and tied up with hickory bark; and altogether he was as forlorn as one often sees. He wished to "trade out" his roll of buckskins. He got several articles, I reckoned up the account and the trade was nearly even. He then said, "I wish to get a few more things, powder and lead and some flints, and I would like to get trusted." I spoke to Charlie Conway at the back end of the stove. "O," said he, "Sam Emery is all right, he is one of the substantial citizens out on the Mississinewa." He got his powder and things on credit and paid for them promptly according to agreement. After that time he did a large amount of trading at my store, always dealing fairly, like the honorable man that he was. But when I first set eyes on him as he entered the store with his roll of buckskins on his shoulder, he was a strange-looking customer indeed!

"The same man who loaned me the $2.50 also bought a cow of me for $8. He agreed to pay me for the creature in two or three months. He paid me, though it took a much longer time than that. He made the payment in small sums, sometimes as low as 12½ cents, and never more than 37½ cents at any one time. But he paid me fully after a while.

Shortly after I came to Winchester I built a brick house, getting the brick of David Wysong at $2.50 per thousand delivered. Mr. Wysong died only two or three years ago, about eighty years old.

The pump business is carried on at present by my sons-in-law, Knecht and Thomas. They do not make now, but buy and sell, purchasing sometimes as high as 4,000 pumps at one time."

MRS. JESSIE ADDINGTON, 1834.

"Joab Ward and Meshach Lewallyn lived near Ridgeville. There were no houses from here to Winchester. Thomas Addington (not Rev. Thomas) occupied a cabin near where George Addington now lives. William Addington had come on in March, and had settled one mile north. There were no settlers east or west that I know of.

Benjamin Lewallyn and a Mr. Jones, as also James Addington (uncle to Jesse), had settled on the Mississinewa, below Ridgeville. That town was not begun till long afterward. People used to bring flour, bacon, apples, potatoes, apple-butter, etc., to Ridgeville to Ward's, and buy of him a flat-boat to send them down the river to market. Mr. Addington has bought of Mr. Ward apples supposed to be spoiled for trade by being frozen. We had to go to White River or Mississinewa to get help in raisings or log-rollings.

"Thomas Addington (cousin of Jesse, son-in-law of Joseph Addington, on Sparrow Creek) had moved out here just before, had built him a cabin and his family (and we, too) moved in without chimney or floor. We stayed there, cooking outdoors, for a month, till ours was built. We moved in as soon as our cabin was covered, having nothing but log walls and a clapboard roof. We cooked by a log-heap fire for several weeks, till a chimney was built, some time in August.

"Religious meetings used to be held in private dwellings around the settlement by the Methodists. There was no school for several years. There were several other Addingtons, father and uncles of Jesse Addington."

ROBERT MURPHY.

"The county was new. Very few settlers were here in 1834. James Griffis lived on the Williamson place; Smith Masterson lived west about a mile; William Kennon lived on State road, near Bartonia (father of Thomas S. Kennon); John Dixon lived one and a half miles northwest of me; Green resided on the State road. Kennon and Griffis had been here two years. Masterson came the same year but earlier than I did.

There were no roads, only "blazes." There were paths, tracks and "blazes." Hill Grove and Spartansburg both were towns, but few houses in either.

For milling, we had to go to Richmond or Stillwater. There was a mill at McClure's, which is standing yet. In dry times, the water would fail. We had to go to Piqua, or Troy, or Dayton, for salt. Andrew Kennedy (Congressman) once said that the time would come when a bushel of wheat would bring a barrel of salt. No one believed him, but the day has come.

I once tried to go to the first house in Union City (there was only one) to appraise some property there (Star House). I struck the railroad track and went on east. Coming to a house, I inquired, "How far east to Union City?" "Half a mile west," was the reply.

We had to cut up corn and haul it to the barnyard to keep the squirrels from taking it in the field.

There were no mills near, not even a corn-cracker. Cole's mill and Dean's mill (Ohio) were there. There had been one at Sharp Eye. A dam had been built, but the people thought it made them sick, and it had to be taken down. When I first came I moved into a cabin near by.

I came in March, 1834, and cleared seven acres and put it in corn that spring. I cut, rolled and burnt what I could, and the rest I killed by piling and burning the brush around them. I hired 2,000 rails made and fenced the land.

I have never bought in all, during forty-six years, ten bushels of corn. Two grists of corn and three bushels of wheat is all I have bought in that time.

I moved with three wagons, and afterward brought another load of bees, grain, etc. I had wheat in Darke County, and after harvest I hauled the wheat home.

I worked for one man (Mr. Teegarden) in Darke County one year, at $7 per month (some of the time at 31 cents a day). I have worked many a day at 31 cents a day. I never hunted or fished much. They must bite quick or show themselves, or I was o-p-h. I have killed only two deer. One night, fishing in a "riffle," in the "Dismal," we caught a basketful of suckers with our hands, many of them a foot long. One year, the creek froze and then raised above the ice with great numbers of fish, and the water froze again and fastened the fish between the ice in great quantities. We could have caught lots of them, but we thought freezing the fish spoiled them.

I found a steel-trap in Darke County, and sold it to an Indian for six coon-skins to be brought at such a time. The time came, but no coon-skins, and I thought "Good-bye steel-trap, good-bye coon-skins," but he came and brought them afterward, and said, smiling, "Too good sugar-making—couldn't come." Sugar-trees were plenty. We made all the sugar we needed, and some to sell.

The first school in the neighborhood was, say, in 1838. The first meeting-house was at South Salem.

I used to be a Presbyterian, but have joined the Protestant Methodists."

The following is a list of old men residing in Wayne Township (age, 1880): John Hartman, 76; Jacob Baker, 79; Joel Elwell, 75; William A. Macy, 71; Ezra Coddington, 73; Francis Frazier, 79; Robert Murphy, 75. Isaac Clifton, 73; George Huffnogle, 80; William Pickett, 79.

Mr. Murphy is growing old and somewhat feeble and decrepit, but no more so than might be expected at his age.

PETER HOOVER (1835).

Settlers when Mr. Hoover came: Robert Murphy; John Dixon came the fall before and bought out Mr. Kennon; James Griffis, William Kennon, Smith Masterson.

"People were sociable then. Men would go seven or eight miles to a raising or a log-rolling—to Sheets', north, or to Griffis' or Carnahan's, south, or even farther. People worked then. They did not eat and sit around. Twenty to thirty men were a large crowd. The first election (for Jackson and Wayne Townships together) was held at Peyton's west of Union City, in, say 1836, and only seven votes were polled. The rest went to other polls to vote. A person could vote anywhere in the county then.

Mrs. Teeter came early; her husband had died in Pennsylvania. She raised a large family and died about 90 years of age."

P. FIELDS (1833).

"Settlers when I came—some of them were Burkett Pierce, west of Deerfield, very old and living still; George Ritenour, across the river, near Pierce's, an early settler, but is now dead; William Odle, Curtis Butler, living along the river below town, moved away long, long ago.

There were none above (east of) town till a mile above me. Samuel Emery lived a mile up the river. He became very old and died a year or so since.

Mr. Bragg came the fall before I did, in 1832; he is dead.

Allen Wall was on the north side of the river, opposite Bragg's; he, too, is dead.

James Mayo, north of the river, also dead.

Aquila Loveall lived near Mayo's; he is not living.

Daniel B. Miller, up the river on the south side; he is quite old and resides at Winchester, having his third wife (he is now dead).

Robert Parsons lived a mile below Deerfield. He owned a corn-cracker; he is dead. Deerfield had not "started" yet. One shanty stood there, but no town had been begun. A school shanty was standing one and a half miles above, on Congress land, on the north of Deerfield and Union City road.

There was one also near the old (Chapel) meeting-house west of Deerfield.

The Chapel Meeting-House was built about 1835, and is the oldest one in the region.

Prospect Meeting-House was not built till several years after I came, perhaps about 1840. The cemetery at the Chapel is the oldest one in this part of the country.

When Lewallyn came to settle near Ridgeville, they unloaded their goods into the brush. Some stayed and went to building a "camp," and the others went back to get the rest of the "plunder."

Lewallyn's daughter married one Mr. Renberger, who used to live near Ridgeville, and she may perhaps be living now.

I came from Hawkins County, Tenn., sixty-four miles up Holston River from Knoxville. I sold 100 acres of land there for $400. We came here with one four-horse wagon and a carriage.

Lancelot Fields, my brother, had moved to this county before me, and had settled near New Pittsburg, not far from James Porter's. He had returned to Tennessee on business, and, when he came back to Indiana, we came along, too. There were thirteen in the company.

Deerfield & Union City road had been laid and "blazed," but it was not yet opened through. I helped open it to Middletown.

One Indian, called "Old Duck," lived in Allen Wall's yard, in a little shanty.

Cabins were made with "knees" and weight-poles and latch-strings.

The people were social and friendly. We used to go six or eight miles to raisings and log-rollings, and to Richmond to mill.

Deer were plenty, though I did not care for hunting. I never killed but one deer in my life.

But venison was very easily gotten. There were plenty of hunters who were only too glad to shoot for us all the deer we wanted. George Porter and his boys were hunters, and had no land. Zack Key, brother of Andrew Key, lived near us, and if we wished any venison, all we had to do was to speak to him, and he would shoulder his rifle and bring one down in a hurry. He would hang it up and tell me where to find it, and I would go out and bring the carcass in. The hunters cared nothing for the flesh. All they wanted was the skins, which would sell for from 25 to 50 cents.

Once I was hunting my horses. They had wandered far, and in looking for them, I came to Ephraim Bowen's. It was perhaps in 1835, not long after I came to the county. The settlers were far more numerous in that part of the county, but farther north it was wild enough. Mr. Bowen and his folks were very kind and hospitable. They could not tell me where to find my horses, but they did another thing which was first-rate for a tired and hungry man. They would not take 'no' for an answer, but insisted that I should stop and take dinner with them, which I did, and went on my wandering way much refreshed.

Horses had a wide range then, when running out, and sometimes gave immense trouble to their owners in hunting them."

JOHN R. WARREN.

"Settlers when I came were Daniel B. Miller, on the Miller place; Samuel Helms, two miles north of Saratoga; Andrew Key, three miles north of Saratoga; William Pogue (father of Robert Pogue, Union City), near Andrew Key; John T. Evans, west of Saratoga; Edward Evans, west of Saratoga; Abram Harshman, east of Saratoga; Alexander, near Harshman's; William Bragg, below Andrew Key; Daniel Mock, west of Saratoga; George W. Barber, one mile west of Saratoga; William Simmons, on Mississinewa River; Samuel Sipe, near Perry Fields; John Sipe, came shortly after I did.

The first school after I came was near Daniel B. Miller's, about 1840.

The first meeting-house was the one at Prospect, 1840.

The first grist-mill was west of Deerfield.

The first smith shop was kept by Jo Locke, north of Saratoga.

There was but one house in Deerfield.

A man told me I would not know when I got there."

EDWARD EDGER, DEERFIELD.

"When I came to Deerfield, just three families resided there, viz.: Henry Taylor, Henry Sweet and Jonathan Thomas. Henry Sweet was a blacksmith. Henry Taylor had a few groceries in a log cabin there. He also sold some whisky, and professed, besides that, to keep a hotel, too.

Curtis Butler had been doing business there, and had been Acting Postmaster at that place. Deerfield was by no means an unimportant place, in fact, small though it was, and deep buried in the thick forests of the Mississinewa. Although that valley had been settled more than twenty years, yet along its whole course, that little Deerfield was its only town, and its only post office, and the only one, it may also be said, between Winchester and Fort Wayne.

But Mr. Butler had moved to Marion, and left the post office in the hands of William Odle. The amount of business may be judged of when it is stated that the salary of the office was $1.75 per quarter. It rose afterward to $40 per quarter. I was appointed Postmaster soon after my removal to Deerfield. Shortly after that, and for two or three years, an immense business was done in Randolph and Jay Counties in the entry of land, especially in Jay County, and vast sums of (silver) money were sent by John Connor, the mail carrier, to Fort Wayne.

He used to have two horses—one for the mail and one for the money sack. He would have, sometimes, as much money (silver) as two of us could well throw upon the horse's back. He would lead the horses and walk, sometimes.

People would "look land" and leave the money with me, and I would send it by Mr. Connor.

He has taken thus as high as $6,000 or $7,000 at one trip. We used to hide it in a hole in the ground, beneath the puncheon floor, under the bed.

We handled in that way, in all, many thousand dollars. I would receipt for the money, and take Connor's receipt, and he would pay it at Fort Wayne and obtain the patents, and bring them to me, and I would deliver them to the parties concerned, and they would pay at the rate of $1 for eighty acres.

Though Mr. Connor was poor, he was faithful and honest, and, during my whole course of business with him, for nearly twenty years, I never suffered a cent of loss.

He carried the mail for some twenty-eight years, up to about 1861. His appointment began about 1835."

"The mail routes were as follows: Richmond to Fort Wayne, via Winchester; Greenville west to Winchester.

There were perhaps others. The mails were carried once a week from Winchester to Fort Wayne and back. Connor had to lie out in the woods one night on his trip going to and coming from Fort Wayne. The operation would not be considered very safe now, especially with hundreds and sometimes thousands of dollars in conveyance, but Johnnie Connor was never molested.

Between Winchester and Deerfield was a dense forest and much swamp.

There were only two settlers between Elias Kizer's (one mile north of Winchester) and Deerfield, viz.: Samuel Cain and John Kinnear. Mr. Cain's was two miles, and Mr. Kinnear's three and a half miles, south of Deerfield.

A large part of the land on both sides of the road northward from Winchester to Deerfield was held by James G. Birney, a non-resident, and the country remained unsettled for many years.

Deerfield became an important trading point, and it was for years a lively place.

David Conner, the Indian trader, left his post east of Deerfield some years before I came, though I think not very long.

"I traded with the Indians for furs, as also in succeeding years in cattle, hogs, etc. I traveled extensively, to Green Bay and the northwest for furs, etc., and in general trading, visiting every northern State and the South also.

The trade at Deerfield at one time extended over Jay and Blackford Counties, and even much farther than that. I have sold as high as $15,000 in a single year, and have taken in as much as $700 in one day. One day I bought 160 saddle hams that had been killed the day before. There had fallen a snow several inches deep, a tracking snow, so called, because the hunter could track the deer in it.

George Shaneyvelt, of Jay County, killed nine deer in one day.

The furs were coon, mink, muskrat, wiid cat, catamount, etc.

Wolves and bears and wild cats were common, and deer were very plenty.

Deer-skins were of different prices, from 50 cents to $1.

"Short-blues" were $1, i. e., deer killed in the fall whose hair was short and whose skins had a bluish cast.

In early times great quantities of tree-sugar and molasses, and of venison hams used to be wagoned to Cincinnati; and salt and iron kettles, etc., would be hauled back. I sold four tons of sugar kettles in one winter. The cost of hauling was great. At one time a quantity of salt that was worth $18 in Cincinnati, cost $20 to get it hauled from there to Deerfield.

Four-horse teams would take two or three days to get from Winchester to Deerfield.

Teamsters would cut out a road and then throw brush across to hide it so that nobody else would see the track, that the ones who made the opening might have the use of it for several trips.

"I had the first cook-stove in the county. It was brought from Cincinnati. That and another cost $100 in silver at 10 per cent premium, equal to $110 in currency. The other one was sold to Mrs. Kinnear, south of Deerfield.

"Considerable flat-boating down the Mississinewa was done after I came to Randolph.

At one time the task was undertaken to take several loads of coal down the river.

A German named Keizer, who was poor, wished me to advance goods to him and take the coal for security. I would not, but Mr. Searl let him have the goods and took Frederick Miller as security. The coal was burned, the boats were built and caulked with tow, and the coal was loaded upon the boats, as also the goods which Mr. Searl furnished to Keizer upon Miller's security.

I had about two wagon loads of furs which I put upon one of the boats, and I steered the boat on the trip down the river.

Mr. Holly steered another of the boats.

We came to Mr. McKinney's dam below Fairview, and Holly's boat got fast on a bar.

Mr. McKinney came out with his rifle and threatened to shoot if we attempted to jump his dam. We did attempt it, however, and he did not shoot.

But the boats could not cross the dam, and the merchandise was a total loss, except my furs, which I sent back by wagon to Deerfield. Mr. Searl lost about $2,000, which came near breaking him up. These boats were loaded at Ritenour's mill below Deerfield, a point at which many boats received their cargo.

At another time Joseph Hinchy and I took a boat load of flour and salt, etc., down the river. He and I built the boat, and we loaded it at Ritenour's mill. I steered the boat, and we jumped four or five dams. One of them was Connor's, which was only a brush dam, and not hard to pass.

When we got to the "Feeder dam" for the canal, they asked $10 to go through, and it would have taken all day to clear out the logs so as to permit the boat to pass. I offered $1.00 for a man to come on the boat with me and help me jump the dam. A man accepted the offer; we performed the feat and got the boat over safe. The boat was taken to Logansport, and the cargo was sold mostly to the Indians. This was done in 1839.

This Joseph Hinchy was a very eccentric man. He owned land in many places, and set out orchards far and near, planting and grafting the trees; and some of his old orchards are standing yet. He set out trees at Joab Ward's, at Wheeling, at Marion and many other places. He was a pump-maker also. [Mr. Aker says he hauled his tools for pump making on a sled with oxen. He wore only buckskin clothes.]

He used to have plenty of money, and would lend it to almost anybody that wanted it.

"Deerfield was for years a place of large business. At first the trade was to and from Cincinnati by wagon, afterward to the canal at Piqua. We used to trade largely in swine. I once drove a herd of hogs from Kentucky to South Carolina, beginning to sell them in North Carolina, and so onward till they were all disposed of.

Once in driving swine from Deerfield with 2,000 in the drove, there came a terrible freshet (about New Year's). We swam Greenville Creek twice. The hogs swam the creek. We lost none, but some we had to pull out by the ears. The trip to Cincinnati took twenty-one days. There were about ten hands with the drove. I got for the hogs $6 net. Pork, however, was very variable, and sometimes fell very low, and many have been bankrupted thereby.

"I once traveled six weeks in Kansas, sleeping in a wagon the whole time. My companion most of the time was an Indian, who was a trusty, faithful man.

When a young man, I traveled through the South, working at my trade; as also I was pilot on a steamboat from New Orleans to Louisville, spending five or six years in these ways. During these trips I passed through parts of North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. When a boy sixteen years old, I went as an apprentice with my master, Benedict Thomas, to Texas, from Georgetown, Ky., with a flat-boat load of furniture and saddles and bridles and dry goods. We took them on a flat-boat to the mouth of the river, on a keel-boat to Natchitoches, and thence by wagon 160 miles to the old Spanish fort, between the two Trinity's (rivers). He traded his goods for mules and horses and for Spanish hides. He stayed in Texas, and sent me to New Orleans to exchange the animals and hides for mahogany, coffee, molasses and sugar, which I did and retured home on foot. Another man came with me. We bought knapsacks and started, being twenty days on the road, and sleeping in the woods or with the Indians. One place was 140 miles (from French Camps to Fort Columbia on the Tombigbee); thence we came to Tuscumbia, and so, on home. We got provisions of the Indians—jerked meat, bears flesh and venison, and also hominy and sweet potatoes and corn bread. We passed through the Chickasaw and Choctaw nations.

My brother Archibald walked from New Orleans sixteen times, and my brother William twelve times, from 1809 and onward. They would go down with flat-boats and return on foot. The flat-boats would cost $150 and would have to be sold at New Orleans perhaps for $10. They generally made two trips a year. One of them once tried three trips, but he got sick. They commonly traveled "Carroll's Trace," from Lake Pontchartrain to Colbert's Ferry, on the Tennessee River. The "trace" stretched for miles and miles through deep, tall cane-brakes, a clear well-trodden path with thick canes on both sides of the path nearly impenetrable. The canes were sometimes thirty or fort feet high and as thick as they could grow.

In 1847, I went to New Orleans for hemorrhage of the lungs. Recovering my health, I returned home, and have lived since that time thirty-five years, enjoying still a reasonable degree of health and strength."

JOHN HOKE, JACKSON.

The settlers in 1836 were, west of Union City, Wayne Township, Thomas Peyton, Converse place; Jacob Emerick, William Anderson's farm; John Emerick, Weimar farm; north of Union City; John Sheets, Smith farm; Eli Nofsinger, north of Smith's farm, on Little Mississinewa; near New Lisbon; Amos Smith, west of New Lisbon; David Vance, William Cox, Isaiah Cox, Thomas Wiley, at New Lisbon; Andrew Debolt, at Mt. Holly, all sons-in-law of Amos Smith; Jacob Johnson, west of Mt. Holly, 1833; Seth Macy, one and a half miles of Johnson's (west); James Skinner, one mile west of New Lisbon; John Skinner, near his brother James; James Reeves, father of the Reeveses, one-half mile north of Skinner's; James Wickersham, one mile south of New Lisbon; —— Nickum, where Eli Mangas lives; Thomas Devor, one-half mile north of Allensville; John Thomson, north of Devor's; Jacobs, near Allensville, north of Mississinewa; Simmons, west, on Mississinewa; James Porter, south of New Pittsburg; Philip Storms had been at Mississinewa Crossing, but had gone away; James Warren, near Middletown, one-half mile south; John Warren, three miles west of Middletown; William Warren, laid out Middletown.

I think these settlers had been here from two to five years.

For awhile people used hand-mills to grind corn-meal.

Mr. Skinner had a mill perhaps the first, in about 1840. It was a corn-cracker and stood a few years.

Mr. Hinchy had a saw-mill and a corn-cracker one-half mile east of Allensville. They stood a long time,

Others, perhaps, had mills that I do not now call to mind. The Allensville mill was the first important and extensive mill in the region, and it is there now.

The Indians (Wyandots) used to come and hunt on Gray's Branch, but they had mostly stopped coming there two or three years before I came. A few came afterward.

The first settlers did little but hunt. They thought the country would never be filled up, but would remain a superb hunting-ground. Settlers began to come in and go to clearing farms, and then they began, too, somewhat. Hunters would come through my clearing, and say: "Are you going to clear out a farm?" "Yes, I thought I would." "Well, maybe that's the best way." The land at first was a good deal wet; half of it stood in water much of the time. Clearing and draining has dried it out pretty well."

THOMAS HUBBARD, GREEN.

"I entered 131 acres and bought, second-hand, 158 acres. I now own 150 acres. We came in a four-horse wagon, cutting our own road from White River, ten or twelve miles, taking two days.

A man, Neselrode, had a cabin and we took the cabin. I paid for my land and had $50 left. There was a cabin or two stuck around in the woods between here and White River. We came the road to Maxville, thence to Fairview. I did but little hunting, since I could get plenty of deer hams for 37½ cents a pair. I had to take a sled (I had a good team) to White River for corn, staying all night and till late next day. I bought the corn and got it ground on White River. Corn was 50 cents a bushel. I raised the first wheat in the settlement. I got a man to put in three acres for me, and when I came, in October, the wheat was up and looked nice. The crop was sixty bushels.

Flat-boats and pirogues were used to go down the river with pork, flour, apples, etc. One spring, five boats went down loaded with charcoal. The boats were "stove in" near here, and the coal was lost. The river was snaggy. One broke up in going over McKinney's mill-dam; the others were "stove in" before that. Searl, of Deerfield, owned the coal, and he was nearly broken up by the loss. They intended to take the coal to New Orleans (about 1840).

We bought the trees for our orchard of Joab Ward, of Ridgeville, in 1840. There were 120 budded trees, and they made a good orchard. We gave $9 a hundred, and we brought them down the river in a canoe.

Mrs. Hubbard remembers seeing the soldiers at Chillicothe, guarding the British prisoners in the war of 1812. Her father had just moved from Pennsylvania, and he was poor, and her mother baked buscuits and pies, etc., for the soldiers, sometimes cooking all night to supply their wants.

A Methodist quarterly meeting was held in our house before the floor was laid. The sleepers were used as seats. Afterward the children played holding meetings, singing, praying, preaching, etc., going through the whole exercise in quite a business-like manner."

MRS. SHERMAN.

"We had a splendid spring in a 'gum' seven feet deep. We lived on the "Sample Trace," leading from Sample's mill, on White River, to Lewallyn's mill on the Mississinewa. And our spring was a noted point. We came February 20, 1837. The snow had been deep. The waters were high, and, in crossing White River, we lost a bunch of keys. We never expected to see our keys again, but some one found them two or three years afterward, and they were returned to us, and we have the keys yet. My husband built a cabin on his land before we moved to it, and we lived in that cabin more than twenty years. He improved his own land somewhat, but he worked out a great deal, mowing, clearing, etc., on White River, in the older settlements. I wove, braided straw hats, etc.

New Dayton Church was built in 1877, but the graveyard has been there forty years or more.

The Methodists formed a society soon after we came, and meetings have been held, in dwellings, etc., from that day to this.

There was no school for some years after our settlement began. The people were poor and "hard run," and lived far apart.

William Wright taught once, and so did George McPherson.

Asenath Wright taught school about 1840 in a little old cabin on Reese Wright's farm, that had been a dwelling.

For fifteen years no teacher in this neighborhood could go beyond the "Single Rule" in "Old Talbot."

George McPherson was an oddity in the schoolroom. He would call "to books," sit down to read and let the school run itself. If anybody passed, the children would pop up and run to the window to see, and so on."

[Mrs. Sherman and her husband, Pardon Sherman, died in the winter of 1881–82, within a few weeks of one another, she going before her husband to try the realities of the unseen Spirit Land.]

SILAS DIXON, WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

"David Robison and Peter Hoover were here when I came; Ezekiel and George Gullett came when I did. The woods were alive with wolves and bears and turkeys and deer. We once killed two bears before breakfast. They came along down the furrows as we were passing back and forth. The dogs were called and they tried to catch the bears, chasing them and treeing them, and at length they were shot and killed.

We used to go to Moffat's mill near Richmond. I entered forty acres of land and bought forty more."

[Mr. Dixon died in the spring of 1881.]

ISRUM H. ENGLE.

"I followed brick-making in Cincinnati, also wood-sawing. I was unfortunate and lost all my property and had to begin anew. I sawed wood for several years in Cincinnati. One day I sawed and handled ten cords, sawing it once in two, and tossing it into a cellar. I was not especially tired, and thought nothing particular about the matter."

[Note.—I. H. E. is the best wood-sawyer and saw-sharpener I ever knew or heard of.]

"I have been a church member for more than sixty-five years, and an exhorter and Class-leader for thirty-five years. The religion of Christ has been a wellspring of joy to my soul all that long time. I have had deep trials, but the Lord has given me triumph over all! I have taken every number of the Cincinnati Christian Advocate, now Vol. XLVII, No. 2,500, and before that the New York Advocate for several years. I have had abundance, and have been brought low; but my treasure is in Heaven, and my heart is there also; and soon, full soon, I shall see the King in His beauty, and He will give me the riches of the glory-land!"

[Mr. Engle has moved to Jay County to reside with one of his sons, and his aged wife died there in the spring of 1882.]

PHILIP BARGER.

"The county was all woods. A few settlers were scattered here and there, but they had only cabins with small clearings that hardly made a "break" in the vast wilderness.

Settlers when Philip Barger came here:

Alexander Garringer, opposite Fairview, across the river; Martin Boots, opposite Fairview, across the river.

A Mr. Porter had lived where Fairview is, but he did not stay. Daniel Culver bought him out, and he had gone; Culver was living there when Barger came.

Neselrode lived where Hubbard is now; Hubbard bought Neselrode out in 1837, and lives there still.

Alexander Stevens settled in the east part of Green Township in 1830.

John Bone lived below Fairview (living still).

Anthony (Wayne) McKinney came in 1837.

His son, J. B. McKinney, lives now opposite Fairview, and owns 1,400 or 1,500 acres of land.

Nathan Godwin came in 1837. His son, Thomas Godwin, lives in Fairview.

John Garringer was here in 1836, where Baldwin now lives.

Martin Smith bought Garringer out in the fall of 1836.

Bennett King lived in the northwest corner of the county. He is father of William O. King, near Deerfield. Bennet King went to Missouri and is living there.

Elijah Harbour lived west of Samuel Caylor's, fall of 1835.

The Browns lived across the river; Thomas Brown and three sons.

Jonathan Green married a Brown.

The Browns had been there two or three years when he came. They sold out to Zebulon Cantrell in 1839 and left for Iowa.

Israel Wirt entered land south of the Browns about 1836, and moved fall of 1837. He died August, 1880, eighty-four years old.

Tunis Brooks lived on Brooks' Prairie; had been there two or three years.

Samuel Caylor, 1837.

John Life came spring or summer 1838.

Fairview was begun in 1837.

Alexander Garringer had a store across the river (at his cabin).

"The first mail route was from Deerfield to Granville, Delaware Co., once in two weeks, out and back, on horseback. I got the fifth number of the Winchester Patriot [H. H. Neff], and have taken the paper from that office ever since.

The first mill was built by Antony McKinney on the river below Fairview, where Wolverton's mill now stands.

First he built a saw-mill, then he added a corn-cracker, then a grist-mill. He was putting in the dam in 1838. He started the saw-mill in 1839, the corn-mill in the fall, and the wheat-mill in 1841 or 1842.

The first smith-shop was by Martin Boots, he had a shop and was a smith himself.

Alexander Garringer had a smith shop, and Perry worked for him.

First school was winter of 1837, in a little round log cabin near the bridge, on the river bank at Fairview.

Horatio Pace was the teacher, and the school was very small.

First meeting was before I came, perhaps in that round log schoolhouse.

First meeting-house was a log house in Fairview (about 1839), Methodist Episcopal.

About 1844, a quarterly meeting was held at Thomas Hubbard's. Their house was new and had no floor, and the sleepers were for seats. Bruce was the preacher.

Methodist meetings used to be held at Nathan Godwin's.

New Light meetings were held at Martin Smith's.

Churches were afterward built at Fairview.

The schoolhouse now standing is the third, log, frame, brick.

The first brick house was either Samuel Caylor's or William Ore's.

First brick-kiln was by Thomas Hubbard; 30,000 or 40,000; for chimneys, $3 per thousand.

First reapers, J. B. McKinney and Philip Barger. Barger's started first. They were the Kirby reaper, 1855 or 1856.

First threshing machine run was by Philip Stover, of Delaware County—"falling beater," "chaff piler." He thrashed first for old Elijah Harbour, and then for Philip Barger.

First justice was John Garringer, 1838. They say he kept his docket on slips of paper, and stuck them in the cracks of his cabin. Nobody else could read them. After him were Jonathan Green and then Thomas Harbour.

First grave in Fairview Graveyard was that of an old lady, Mrs Shirley, mother-in-law of Reuben Eppart. Mr. Godwin laid off the graveyard.

"Thomas Rowell was buried in what is now J. B. McKinney's pasture lot, but the exact place is unknown. It was before 1838.

Elijah Harbour, though a clergyman and an excellent citizen, was also a great deer hunter. He has often shot them from his own cabin door. One night three wolves chased some deer round his house through the snow, making paths in the snow as they went round and round.

The wolves were chased away, being followed down the river to Fairview. But father Harbour would never molest the deer on the Sabbath, and the deer would come on Sunday and graze quietly on the prairie as though they knew they would not be harmed on that day.

Mr. Harbour was famous also for holding meetings for worship and preaching, and many a Christian soul has been cheered by his warm and loving words and his fervent exhortations and prayers, and many a sinner convicted and converted through the blessing of the Spirit upon his earnest warnings and appeals.

His funeral was attended by a very large concourse of people, showing thus their respect and esteem for so useful a citizen and so loving and ardent a Christian."

AMOS ORCUTT, WARD.

"Deerfield was a small town with two little stores and a few log houses.

The settlers were (1838) Isaac Cherry, on David Harker's place; Samuel Bryson; George Ritenour, near the old chapel on the river, west of Deerfield; Burkett Pierce, across the river, west of Deerfield.

There were doubtless others, but they are not now recollected. I was a boy thirteen years old when father came to Randolph. There were a large family of us, and we had a hard, rough time.

Father died the same year I was married, and mother was left with a family of seven or eight children, several of them being small and dependent. The family was raised successfully, however. All but one lived to be married, and all but two are living still. Some of them are getting to be pretty well along in years."

JACOB CORL, JACKSON.

"Settlers in 1838: Daniel B. Miller, near Prospect; Abraham Harshman, near William Warren's; Reuben Harshman, Jackson Township, now Union City; Jacob Harshman, Jackson Township, dead; Andrew Key, Ward Township, dead; James Porter, Jackson Township, near Pittsburg; William Simmons, dead; James Simmons, dead; Joseph Lollar, near Saratoga, dead; Simeon Lucas, near Saratoga; Joseph Lucas, near Saratoga; Sam Emery near Jay County, very old, dead; George Chaneyvelt, one mile west of Pittsburg, dead; William Sizemore, near Middletown, nearly one hundred years old, dead.

There was an old settler, Mr. Nunnamaker, at Pittsburg, eighty-four years old. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and has received a pension for many years. He died in 1880."

JAMES KELLY, GREENSFORK.

"I came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1842, twenty-eight years after the first settlement. Prices then were almost nothing. Wheat was 25 cents in trade, 32 cents in Cincinnati. It had to be hauled in wagons through the mud—though there were some pikes in Ohio.

Men would go with four-horse teams, hitch their horses before and behind the wagon to feed them, and sleep in the wagon. I was offered pork (hogs weighing 200 pounds net) at 75 cents per 100 pounds, for money to pay taxes, and I did not take it.

Myself and wife went over to the Miami, helped butcher thirty-seven large hogs, cut the meat, chopped the sausage, stuffed them, rendered the lard and salted the pork. They gave us half a barrel of stuffed sausages, one large ham, one keg of lard, ribs, back-bones, etc., all we chose to carry home. We brought away meat enough to last till the next fall, all for two days' work of my wife and myself.

William Hill, father of Aaron Hill (now living south of Arba) made a pestle-mill to pound hominy. He fenced it and ran it by horse-power, getting some custom. Another man, having a corn-cracker, also made a pestle-mill, but did not fence it. He would let the mill run itself. In pounding, some kernels would scatter out, and sheep would come and pick it up. One day, when the mill was "going it all alone," a flock of sheep came picking around, till a big buck, smelling at the log, climbed up and stuck his head into the mill-hole. "Crack!" came the pestle, and knocked the buck dead. The sheep climbed up, one by one, till twenty-seven sheep lay dead around the mill, and the owner of the mill (and this was the pith of the joke) had to pay for the sheep."

NOTE.—I have given you the story as it was told. If any body doubts the tale, I cannot help it.

"Aaron Hill's father used to work oxen, and sometimes ride them. One day, Aaron rode an ox over to Eli Overman's of an errand. (One version says he went courting.) Said Eli, "Did thee ride?" "Yes," said Aaron. Said Eli to one of the boys, "Put up Aaron's beast." The boy went out, but came back, saying, "I can't find any beast." "I thought thee said thee rode." "I did; I rode an ox," piped out the bashful boy. "Go turn it to the straw-stack," said Eli."

[Aaron says the stories on him are "bogus."]

"James Clark was once driving to Whitewater, when a big walnut struck him on the back. He was fire-mad in a second, thinking somebody had struck him. He wheeled, crying out, "Who did that?" But "nary man."

A man—Mr. Cartwright—coming from North Carolina, had heard of white walnuts, and that they were good to eat. He set upon a lot of buckeyes and went to eating them. Some one asked him:

"What are you eating?"

"White walnuts."

"Like them?"

"Not overly well, but think I will after awhile."

A young fellow, whom I will not name, once went to Fort Wayne, with his brother and brother-in-law, with provisions for the Indian trade. The roads were terrible through the bogs and the marshes. The young fellow—only a lad, as it were, and a mild, gentle lad, at that—could not get his oxen through the swamps.

His brother-in-law, a wild, rough, profane fellow, would come and whip and swear, and thrash them through.

Finally, at a bad crossing, the wild fellow told the boy he would not swear for him any more; that he must get through himself. The lad tried, but "no go."

"You must swear at them."

"I don't know how; besides, I don't wish to."

"You must, or stay here in the swamp," was the unfeeling reply.

The boy, grown desperate, seized his gad, swung it over the oxen's head, and, laying on with fearful blows, broke out into a sort of half swearing, yelling as if the Indians were after him. The oxen went through, whether by the whipping, or the yelling, or the swearing. But the lad was so mortified that he offered the other all his truck money ($3 or so) if he would not tell of it. The fellow took the money and made the promise, but broke his word and told of it before he got to Spartansburg, and kept the money to boot.

Of course these tales, related by Mr. Kelly, were obtained by him from early settlers, since he himself came to the region at a comparatively late date; and it is no more than likely that they should have been stretched somewhat in the various tellings to which they had, in the course of years, been subjected.

J. PAXSON, UNION CITY.

"At Canal Dover, Ohio, a merchant proposed that I be his clerk. I was surprised at the offer, but 'took up' with it, and held it till he sold out (two and a half years). At Union City I was putting up a store for Benjamin Hawkins. He bought goods at Cincinnati, and came and put the bills into my hands, saying, "When the goods come, I wish you to 'open them out' and go to selling them." I was astonished, for I was at the first of it; but I took him at his word, and when the goods were "hauled" from Greenville (for the railroad was not in running order yet) I went to work. Afterward we agreed for my wages, and I stayed with him for some years. But he left, and I concluded to set up for myself. I chose the boot and shoe trade. I went to Cleveland and bargained for $800 or $900 worth; I could pay only part cash. Said the dealer, "That is a pretty large bill;" "yes, but I need them. If you prefer, I will let you take a note I have for a farm I sold ($550)." "Well, leave it." I did so; soon sold out, so as to need a new supply, sent cash in part payment of the debt, and for the new stock, and soon, when that note came due, he sent it to me to collect, which I did, and paid him. From that time I could always get whatever I wished. My store was the first of the kind in the city, and, of course, it is the oldest in the town. I carry now $10,000 to $12,000 worth of goods, making large sales annually, and have been mostly without a partner."

NOTE.—His failing health and feeble strength made him take in a partner a few years ago, and finally to sell out entirely in 1880, the firm being now Gordon & McKee, and still later, Gordon & Thomas.

WILLIAM STANTON, STONY CREEK.

"We passed through Cumberland Gap; they hailed us, but allowed us to pass. At Cumberland Ford we encountered Zollicoffer's army. We asked to pass their lines; Zollicoffer said, "No; you may get through, perhaps, but not here." I said, "We will not harm you; we have property North, and we wish to go to it." But still he said, "No." So we turned back through the Gap into Powell Valley, taking a circuit of thirty-five miles. We crossed Cumberland Mountains by terrible roads. It was a whole day's travel over a track but little used. But we met no army nor any soldiers. There were eight wagons in company; four stopped in Tennessee, turning aside to a settlement of Friends there. These stayed in Tennessee till spring. The other four wagons came directly forward through Kentucky.

We crossed the Ohio River at Madison. People welcomed us in a very friendly manner, one old blind man remarkably so. The people wished to make a dinner for us, but we could not stop. We stayed an hour or two, and when we started we found in each wagon nice things—pies, cakes, etc., as tokens of good will. There were about twenty persons in the company, my family having seven in number. We came through Rush County, Ind., to see relatives there, then to West River, where we stayed two months, at Absalom Dennis'. Afterward we came to Mark Diggs', arriving there in January. The main trip took us seven weeks. We got through safe and sound, thankful to find at last a quiet haven afar from storm and tempest, and a peaceful home among friends in a land of safety."

"Away from slavery." That refrain has been sung for three-quarters of a century, and solemnly, mournfully marching to its steady chorus has been the ceaseless movement of the endless column, leaving the southern plains and valleys, crossing the mountain heights, and threading the yawning "gaps," crossing the beautiful river and spreading itself at length like a fertilizing flood over the virgin Western plains. What wonder that, under the weakening power of this depletive process, the Southern land should become enfeebled and decrepit, as though worn out with deadly infirmity. This avalanche of human beings poured in a limitless flow upon these wide-spread plains has been like the vital current giving life to the new created body politic. And what we have gained they have lost, and what a loss! Why may the process now not be reversed—that as the mighty virgin West once received her life and strength through the emigration thither of the best and worthiest of the dwellers in the Southern clime, so now the West may, now and in future years, give back to the depleted and enfeebled South, depleted by a process of impoverishment extending through several generations, and enfeebled and well-nigh exhausted by a long and bloody and disastrous war—by hundreds and by thousands—the worthy and vigorous descendants of the sturdy pioneers who fled, years ago, from the plague and curse of the Southern land—the institution of human slavery? Slavery is gone, and the emptied and impoverished South-land cries out to the wealthy and populous North and the hardy and vigorous West to send from their abundant and overflowing population to restore her waste and desolate places, and to renew the prosperity of the elder, ancient time.

CHAPTER VIII.

OLD SETTLERS.

MEETINGS—PIONEERS—AGED PEOPLE.

MEETINGS.

SOME old settlers met in Moorman Way's grove, northeast of Winchester, June 8, 1861. Articles of association were presented by Hon. Jeremiah Smith, and were unanimously adopted.

Article II provides as follows: "Any person who has resided thirty-five years in Randolph County may become a member by signing these articles."

ART. VIII.—The association shall meet once annually, at such time and place as it may fix. * * * The meetings shall be held for sociability and for reminiscences of old times, manners and customs; and members shall furnish to such meetings historical sketches, from their own knowledge or recollection, for file or record, as the association may order.

At the first meeting, seventy-nine persons signed the roll. Officers were chosen as follows:

PRESIDENT.

Hon. Jeremiah Smith, Winchester.

VICE PRESIDENTS.

J. C. Bowen, Greensfork; Joseph Pearson, Washington; William Hunt, West River; David Heaston, White River; Daniel B. Miller, Ward; George Huffman, Franklin; William Macy, Monroe.

We suppose none were present from the other townships.

Martin A. Reeder, Secretary; James Clayton, Treasurer.

At the afternoon meeting, speeches were made by the following persons: Jesse Parker, J. C. Bowen, Squire Bowen, Lucinda Hiatt, William Macy, Eli Edwards, Jeremiah Smith, George Hiatt, David Heaston, Joseph Macy, John Coats, Temple Smith, Jonathan Edwards, James Clayton, George Ritenour, Zachary Puckett.

September 7, 1861, the association held its second meeting. Four persons joined.

Addresses—Walter Ruble, Daniel B. Miller, H. D. Huffman, Elias Kizer, Miles Hunt, William Kennedy.

June 8, 1862, limitation as to time changed from thirty-five to twenty-five years. Eighteen persons signed the roll.

June 13, 1863, fourth meeting, twenty-one persons joined.

Addresses—John Poelle, Wayne County; Jesse Parker, Rev. William Hunt, Hon. Jeremiah Smith; Rebecca Julian, Wayne County (written).

June 11, 1864, fifth meeting held.

Addresses—Hon. Jeremiah Smith (written): Henry Summers, William Hunt, Elias Kizer.

June 10, 1865, sixth meeting held. A large number joined.

Addresses—Jeremiah Smith, "Tornado;" Jeremiah Cox, Wayne County, Ind.; James C. Bowen, First Term of Court; Miles Hunt, Elias Kizer, Temple Smith, etc.

June 8, 1866, seventh meeting held.

Addresses—Jesse Parker (written); Elias Kizer (written); H. D. Huffman.

June 6, 1867, eighth meeting held.

Addresses—Joseph Pearson, H. D. Huffman, Gen. A. Stone, H. H. Neff, Miles Hunt, J. W. Williamson, Jesse Parker, etc.

June 11, 1868, ninth meeting held. H. D. Huffman "played school."

Addresses—Willis C. Wilmore (written); Curtis Cleny (written); J. B. Abbott, H. D. Huffman, T. W. Reece. W. D. Frazee presented a hymn book printed in 1829.

June 10, 1869, tenth meeting.

Addresses—Willis C. Wilmore (written); Isaac Jenkinson, Fort Wayne; H. D. Huffman, spelling school.

June 9, 1870, eleventh meeting. Eight members joined.

Addresses—Hon. Jeremiah Smith, H. D. Huffman, J. C. Bowen, Ithamar Pegg, George W. Vandeburg.

June 8, 1871, twelfth meeting; thirteen new members.

Addresses—H. D. Huffman, Temple Smith, W. D. Stone, Asahel Stone, H. H. Neff, Mrs. E. A. McGriff, Miles Hunt.

June 6, 1872, thirteenth meeting; seven new members.

Addresses—Jeremiah Smith, "Civil History," Winchester, Democrat; Henry D. Huffman, reminiscence.

No meetings held till September 13, 1879.

Members in all from the first, 242.

October 25, 1879, new association formed; thirty-seven members joined.

Addresses—Miles Hunt, Thomas M. Browne, W. C. Wilmore (written). Whole number, 279.

June 14, 1880, sixteenth meeting. Speaking by Miles Hunt, William Robinson, E. Tucker. E. Tucker presented portions of history of Randolph County in course of preparation by him. The project was unanimously indorsed by the meeting, and recommended to public favor.

Members in order of coming into county:

[NOTE.—The roll is defective. About half the members seem never to have been recorded in the permanent book.]

FIRST MEETING, JUNE, 1861.

Jesse Parker, April, 1814; James C. Bowen, October 22, 1814; Squire Bowen, October 22, 1814; Robert Way, May, 1816; John Puckett, May, 1816; Jesse Way, February, 1817; William Macy, February, 1817; Jonathan Edwards, 1817; Elizabeth Edwards, 1817; Abigail Clayton, 1817; Anna Reed, 1817; Jeremiah Smith, August, 1817; Armsbee Diggs, 1817; Mary Diggs, 1817; Lucinda Hiatt, 1817; Edward Wright, 1817; Elihu Cammack (born), 1817; Eli Edwards, 1817; Anderson D. Way, 1818; Daniel Wysong, 1818; George Hyatt, 1818; Benjamin Puckett, 1818; Joseph Pearson, 1818; Mary Pearson, 1818; Levi Green, 1818; James Ballanger, 1818; Elisha Shoemaker, 1818; Rachel Ruble, 1818; Catharine Edwards, 1818; William Hunt, 1819; David Lasiley, 1819; Zach Puckett, 1819; David Heaston, 1819; Catharine Heaston, 1819; Polly Wright, 1819; George Huffman, 1819; Elizabeth Huffman, 1819; William Coats, 1819; Joseph Macy, 1819; Martha Hickman, 1819; Eli Lasley, 1819; John Coates, 1819; Temple Smith, 1819; Seth Moffit, 1819; E. L. Brown (born), 1819; Rebecca Puckett, 1820; James Clayton, 1820; Christian Huffman, 1820; Stephen Huffman, 1820; John Ritenour, 1820; Walter Ruble, 1821; Henry Edwards, 1821; Fally Edwards, 1821; Nathan Rinard, 1821; John Rinard, 1821; Elias Kizer, 1821; Daniel B. Miller, 1822; Levi Ruble, 1822; Amos Mann, 1822; James Pierce, 1822; Mary Reeder, 1822; Martin A. Reeder, 1822; Sarah Thomas, 1823; Hannah Rossman, 1823; Margery Kizer, 1823; Hannah Way, 1823; Matilda Beals, 1823; Harvey Wysong, 1823; Thomas W. Kizer, 1824; Amos Smith, 1824; Miles Hunt, 1825; Eli Hiatt, 1825; N. P. Heaston, 1825; Henry D. Huffman, 1825; Stephen Moorman, 1825; Lafayette Irvin, 1825; Henry B. Cox, 1825.

Members from September 1, 1861, to June, 1863, inclusive: William Kennedy, March, 1817; Nancy Kennedy, March, 1817; Joab Ward, April 7, 1819; Charity Coffin, October, 1819; Uriah Pierce, October, 1819; Martha Pierce, October, 1819; Burkett Pierce, October, 1819; Moses Lasley, March, 1820; Henry T. McIntyre, November, 1820; Elizabeth Wright, 1820; Nancy Miller, October 12, 1820; Tarlton Moorman, April 27, 1820; Thomas Pierce, November, 1822; Lydia Pierce, November, 1822; Joseph Thornburg, January, 1827; Andrew Aker, May 18, 1828; Hannah Aker, May 18, 1828; Silas H. Moore, September 24, 1829; Israel Wright, June 3, 1830; Elizabeth Wright, June 3, 1830; Samuel Wright, June 3, 1830; Benjamin Harris, September 20, 1831; Ensley Jones, March 3, 1832; James D. Bowen (born), December 23, 1832; George Addington, September 19, 1832; Jacob Elzroth, April 16, 1833; Elizabeth Elzroth, April 16, 1833; Christian Habich, October 10, 1833; William A. Macy, October, 1833; James Evans, October, 1834; Thomas Alexander, June, 1835; Edward Edger, January, 1836; John Hoke, October, 1836; Joseph Lucas, October, 1836; Stephen Haines, December, 1836; Adam Wright, 1836; Andrew Devoss, January, 1837; Joseph Edger, January 27, 1837; Silas Colgrove, October 26, 1837; Rebecca Colgrove, October 26, 1837; John H. Dunn, May, 1838; Tyre T. Puckett, Absalom Oren, Charles Coffin.

From 1864 to 1870, names not found; 98 members; 1871–72, members joined:

William Barnes, Harrison Anderson, Andrew J. Lasley, Jacob Beals, Rebecca Beals, Priscilla Smith, Jacob Farquhar, Amos Orcutt, William Butler, John W. Hill, W. D. Stone, Henry T. Semans, William Shockney, Ithamar Pegg, Jesse Addington, Hester A. Aker, Margaret Astley, John Lindley, John D. Summers, Christian Heaston, Jacob Lasley.

1879—John Neff, aged fifty-seven, 1839; Harriet Neff, sixty-seven; Thomas M. Browne, fifty, 1844; W. S. Hunt, sixty-one, 1840; Lavina Hunt, fifty-nine, 1829; S. J. Farquhar, forty-one, 1838; Jacob A. Hinshaw, fifty, 1831; Philip Barger, sixty-five, 1838; Mahlon Farquhar, sixty-nine, 1837; W. M. Botkin, fifty-six, 1821; John Jenkins, forty-nine, 1837; C. W. Lewis, sixty-one, 1825; Mary A. Hunt, sixty-six, 1816; Nancy Hunt, forty-eight, 1831; John Connor, forty-nine, 1830; J. C. Denton, seventy-six, 1827; Julian Denton, sixty-seven, 1826; Solomon Semans, seventy-three, 1817; Tyre T. Puckett, sixty-nine, 1819; Temple Smith, seventy-three, 1819; Alfred McCanny, sixty-six, 1837; J. T. Hunnicutt, sixty-two, 1833; Alpheus Hoagland, fifty, 1832; Levi Dolby, seventy-three, 1832; Stephen Haynes, seventy-nine, 1834; Judith Way, seventy-two, 1819; Lydia Jones, sixty-three, 1817; Jane G. Edger, sixty-three, 1837; Ellen Haynes, sixty-four; Stephen Moorman, fifty-six, 1823; John Ellis, sixty-two, 1837; Lizzie Goodrich, forty, 1839; Laura E. Fisher, thirty-five, 1844; Mercy Pierce, forty-eight, 1839; Hester Aker, seventy-three, 1834; Polly Reeder; Fanny R. Teal, thirty-nine, 1840.

The loss of a part of the list of members is greatly to be regretted, but there seems to be no way to supply the lack. Many of the members are dead, but for the most part we have no means of determining the number. Very few of the first settlers are yet living.

OLD SETTLERS' LIVING.

Jesse Parker, Bethel, Wayne County, 1814, (dead); James C. Bowen, near Arba, Randolph County, 1814; Squire Bowen, Spartansburg, 1814; Jesse Way, Winchester, 1817; Elihu Cammack, near Bartonia (born), 1817, moved to Iowa in 1881; George Hiatt, near Winchester, 1818; David Lasley, near Winchester, 1819; Polly Wright, near Winchester, 1819; Temple Smith, near Stone Station, 1819; Mary A. Reeder, Winchester, 1822; Martin A. Reeder, Winchester, 1822; Hannah Rossman, Winchester, 1823; Thomas W. Kizer (born), Winchester, 1824; Amos Smith, Stony Creek, 1824; Miles Hunt, 1825; Eli Hiatt, 1825; Stephen Moorman, 1823; Lafayette Irvin (born), Winchester, 1825; Burkett Pierce, near Deerfield, 1819; David Lasley, 1819; Moses Lasley, near Winchester, 1820; Henry T. McIntyre, Maxville (born), 1820; Andrew Aker, Winchester, 1828; Israel Wright, White River, 1830; Ensley Jones, White River, 1832; James D. Bowen, Greensfork (born), 1832; George Addington, 1832; William A. Macy, Wayne, 1833; Edward Edger, Winchester, 1836; Stephen Haines, Unionsport, 1836; Joseph Edger, Ridgeville, 1837; Silas Colgrove, Winchester, 1837; Rebecca Colgrove, Winchester, 1837; Tyre T. Puckett, White River, 1820; Priscilla Smith, Stone Station (dead, winter of 1881–82); Philip Barger, near Fairview; James McProud, Green Township; John Ford, Green Township; Ruth Wallace, Monroe Township; John H. Bond, Stony Creek; Job Thornburg, Stony Creek; Joab Thornburg, Stony Creek; Susannah Diggs, Nettle Creek; William A. Thornburg, Stony Creek; Perry Fields, Ward; Jacob Corl, Jackson; Uriah Ball, Union City; Robert Pogue, Union City; John Hiatt, Winchester; J. E. Beverly, Winchester; Benjamin R. Shaw, Spartansburg; Gideon Shaw, Winchester; J. Armfield, Thornburg, Windsor; William Peacock, Jericho; Asenath Thomas, Jericho; Asahel Stone, Winchester; James S. Cottom, Winchester; Henry H. Neff, Winchester; John Neff, Sr., Winchester; W. W. Smith, Winchester; Nathan Reed, Winchester; Edward Edger, Winchester; Joseph Edger, Ridgeville; James Addington, near Ridgeville; Thomas Addington, New Dayton; John Mann, Spartansburg; Thomas Middleton, Spartansburg; William Locke, Spartansburg; Moorman Way, Winchester, died in fall of 1881; Jane Fisher, Union City (died February, 1882;) Willis C. Wilmore, White River; William C. Diggs, Jr., now residing in Iowa; Fanny Hill, Jericho; Thomas Ward, Winchester; Daniel Hoffman, Winchester; William Taylor, Spartansburg; Silas Johnson, Lynn; Eli Reece, Cherry Grove; William Chamness, West River; Isaiah Rogers, Bloomingsport; William Diggs, White River; Hannah (Mendenhall) Diggs, Winchester; Thomas Moorman, Winchester; Moses Marks, Parker; Abram Hammer, Monroe; Paul Beard, Lynn; James M. Clark, Spartansburg; James Clark, Greensfork; Henry Hoover, Wayne; Robert Murphy, Wayne; Amos Cadwallader, Greensfork; Francis Frazier, Jericho; Silas Johnson, Lynn; William Peacock, Jericho; Asenath Thomas, Jericho; Arthur McKew (died January, 1882,) John Key, Ward Township; Aaron Simmons, Jackson Township; Mrs. Reeves, Jackson Township.

PIONEERS (BY LOCATION), GREEN TOWNSHIP.

John Bone, early; Philip Barger, 1838; Martin Boots, early; Tunis Brooks, 1833; Thomas Brown and sons, 1833; Samuel Caylor, 1837; Zebulon Cantrell, 1839; Daniel Culver, early; Nathan Davis, early; John Ford, early; John Garringer, 1836; Isaac Garringer; Jonathan Garringer, 1835; William Gray; Nathan Godwin, 1837; Thomas Godwin, 1837; Jonathan Green, 1833; Elijah Harbour, 1835; Thomas Hubbard, 1837; Bennet King, early; Ulrich Keener, early; Benjamin Lewallyn; John Life, 1838; David Killburn, early; Benjamin Mann, early; Antony McKinney, 1837; William May, 1857; John B. McKinney, 1837; James McProud, early; Neselrode, early; Porter; Alexander Stevens, 1830; Martin Smith, 1836; William Vineyard; Jacob Winegartner; Israel Wirt, 1836.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

Thomas Addington, 1865; William Addington, 1833; Jesse Addington, 1834; James Addington, 1830; Thomas Addington, 1834; John Addington, 1832; E. T. Bailey, 1847; Sebastian Brunnengast, 1833; William Dembin, 1830; Joseph Edger, 1837; George Hoffman, 1838; Mr. Jones, 1830; Meshach Lewallyn, 1817; Benjamin Lewallyn, 1830; Arthur McKew, 1831; Edward McKew, 1831; George McPherson; William R. Merine, 1833; Ezekiel Roe, 1831; Abram Renbarger, 1832; Pardon Sherman, 1837; Robert Sumption, 1854; Francis Stevens, 1830; James Stevens, 1830; Andrew Stevens, 1835; Alexander Stevens, 1835; W. J. Shoemaker; William Wright; John Woodard, 1837; Jacob Winegartner, 1833.

WARD TOWNSHIP.

Alexander; William Bragg, 1832; George W. Barber; Curtis Butler; Frank Blake, 1822; Martin Boots, 1822; Eli Blount; Benjamin Clevinger, 1850; Clapp; William Doty, 1828; Edward Edger, John T. Evans, Edward Evans, Samuel Emery, Perry Fields; Lambert Fields, 1831; Jesse Gray, Samuel Helms, Abram Harsh-man, William Jackson, Henry Kizer, Andrew Key, Samuel Kane, William Kizer, Aquila Loveall; John Key, 1829; Andrew McCartney; James Massey, 1817; Massey, 1817; Daniel Mock, James Mayo; Riley Marshall, 1820; William Massey, early; Robert Massey, early; Daniel B. Miller; John Mock, Reason Malott; Joseph Orcutt, 1838; Amos Orcutt, 1838; William Odle; Burkett Pierce, 1820, Uriah Pierce, William Pogue, Robert Pogne, Robert Parsons, Francis Peake, George Ritenour, William Simmons, Samuel Sipe, John H. Sipe, John B. Sipe, Jephtha Sutton, Temple Smith, Calvin Searl; Allen Wall, 1817; John R. Warren, 1836; John Whipple, 1847.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Brockus, very early; Brockus, very early; Beach, very early; Ishmael Bundy, very early; Isaiah Cox, 1836; William Cox, before 1836; Jacob Corl, 1838; Ezekiel Clough, 1862; Chandler; Andrew Debolt, 1828 (perhaps); Thomas Devor, 1834; Henry Debolt, 1844; George Debolt, 1844; Abram Harshman, 1832; Jacob Harshman, 1832; Reuben Harshman, 1834; Isaac Harshman, 1837; Hinkle, 18—; John Hoke, 1836; Peter Hoke; Jacob Johnson, 1833; John Johnson, 1833; Seth Macy, before 1836; Mangus; Eli Noftsinger, 1830; George Porter, 1827; James Porter, 1829; James Reeves, 1832; Thomas Shalor, 1826; Philip Storms, 1826; Amos Smith, John Skinner, James Skinner, Aaron Simmons; James Simmons, 1827; William Simmons, 1828; Sizemore, Sheets; David Vance, early; Thomas Wiley, 1836; James Wickersham, 1832; James Warren, 1835; Dolphus Warren; William Warren, 1834.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

John Anderson, 1833; Branson Anderson, 1833; Edward Barton, 1846; Leven Barton, 1850; Bailey, Jacob Bennett; John T. Chenoweth, 1840; Elijah Cox, William Cox; Jeremiah Cox, 1825; Elihu Cammack (1817) 1846; John Dixon, 1832; Silas Dixon, 1832; Downing; John Foster, 1819; Mason Freeman, 1833; Francis Frazier, Farnes, Fahnestock; James Griffis, 1833; Green, 1832; Graves; Ezekiel Gullett, 1840; George Gullett, 1840; Henry Hill, 1818; Benoni Hill, 1818; Daniel Hill, 1818; John Hartman, 1848; Solomon Hartman, 1848; Peter Hoover, Sr., 1834; Peter Hoover, Jr., 1834; Fanny Hill (1817) 1836; William Kennon, 1830; Thomas S. Kennon, 1830; Hezekiah Locke, 1833; Robert Murphy, 1834; Smith Masterson, 1833; W. S. Morton, 1856; William A. Macy, 1853; D. T. Morris, 1858; Amos Peacock, 1818; Abram Peacock, 1819; William Peacock, 1819; William Pickett (1828) 1853; Poor, early; David Robinson; William Shockney, 1840; Samuel Shockney, 1840; Sheets; George Thomas, 1835; Mrs. Teeter; Williamson, 1838; John W. Williamson.

WHITE RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Thomas Addington, 1834; Andrew Aker, 1828; Thomas Aker, Michael Aker; John Aker, 1837; James Butterworth, 1846; Simeon Brickley, 1843; Thomas M. Browne, (1844), —; Thomas Butts, 1824; Nathan Butts, 1838; Thomas Brown, 1834; William Coates; Benjamin Cox, 1817; Simon Cox, 1817; John Cox, 1818; John Coates, 1819; Stephen Clayton, 1822; Abigail (Way) Clayton, 1817; James Clayton, 1822; Thomas Clevinger, 1845; George Cox (born) 1820; L. D. Carter, 1840; Edmund B. Carter, 1840; Henry Carter, 1840; John D. Carter, 1840; J. J. Cheney, 1852; John H. Cottom, 1843; James S. Cottom, 1843; David J. Cottom, 1843; John W. Cottom, 1843; Silas Colgrove, 1837; Charles Conway, 1817; Martha (Mendenhall) Diggs, 1837; William Diggs, Jr., 1816; William Diggs, 1818; Armsbee Diggs, 1817; Littleberry Diggs, 1817; Jacob Elzroth, early; John Elzroth, early; William Edwards, 1817; Jonathan Edwards, 1817; Jacob Fisher, 1826; John Fisher, 1824; Absalom Gray, 1818; Simon Gray (born), 1824; Carey S. Goodrich, 1831; Edmund B. Goodrich, 1831; John B. Goodrich, 1831; Stephen Harris, 1831; H. D. Huffman, 1820; Barnabas Hunt, 1847; David Heaston, 1819; Christian Heaston, 1819; Jehu Hiatt, 1833; Abram Heaston, 1833; David E. Hoffman, 1838; John Irvin, 1819; S. C. Irvin (born), 1827; George Hiatt, 1818; Jonathan Hiatt, 1818; Ensley Jones, 1831; Lydia (Wright) Jones (born), 1817; Thomas Johnson, 1833; William Kennedy, 1817; Nathaniel Kemp, 1841; Isaiah Kemp, 1841; Elias Kizer (1821), 1831; Thomas W. Kizer (1824), 1831; David Lasley, 1819; Peter Lasley, 1819; David Macy, 1820; Elisha Martin, 1832; John Martin, 1822; Robison McIntyre, 1819; Henry McIntyre, 1820; Hiram Mendenhall, 1837; Morgan Mills, 1821; John Monks, 1820; Tarleton Moorman, 1822; John A. Moorman, 1822; Stephen Moorman (born), 1822; James Moore, 1845; C. C. Monks (born), 1827; G. W. Monks, 1820; John K. Martin, 1837; Joseph Moffat; John Neff, 1833; H. H. Neff, 1833; John Neff, Sr., 1833; Willis Perry (colored); Mark Patty, early; Harvey Patty, 1835; Joseph Puckett, 1819; Isom Puckett, 1819; Thomas Puckett, 1820; Zachary Puckett, 1820; Tyre Puckett, 1819; James Pursley, 1831; Jesse Pursley, 1833; Peter Reinheimer, 1865; Isaac Pearson; Jesse Reynard (born), 1819; Solomon Reynard, 1817; Jehu Robinson, 1822; William Robinson, 1822; Martin A. Reeder, 1822; Mary Reeder, 1822; Walter Ruble, 1824; Nathan Reed, Alfred Rossman; Leroy Starbuck, 1831; Durant Smith, 1829; Walter Starbuck, 1831; John Starbuck, 1831; Ezra Stone, 1839; Asahel Stone, 1839; William D. Stone, 1839; John Sample, 1819; Solomon Semans, Godfrey Sumwalt, John Sumwalt; Jeremiah Smith, 1817; Paul Way, 1816; Robert Way, 1816; Jesse Way, 1817; William Way, 1820; William Way, Jr., 1826; John Way; Henry Way, 1816; Solomon Wright, 1817; Jacob Wright, 1818; John Wright, 1818; Isaac Wright, 1818; David Wright, 1818; David Wysong, 1818; E. L. Watson, 1850; Israel Wright, 1827; Samuel Wright, 1827; Willis C. Wilmore, 1831; Joab Ward, 1819; Joel Ward, 1819; Thomas Ward, 1819; Moorman Way, 1817; Judith (Wilson) Way, 1817.

MONROE TOWNSHIP.

Adams, 1836; Mr. Bowers, early; Philip Baughn, early; Philip Booher, 1835; John Baughn; William Broderick, 1853; David Call, John Craig; Mr. Carr, 1835; Andrew Cortner, Leven Cox, James Driver, Jacob Driver; Jonathan Flood, 1836; Isaac Garringer, Abram Garst; Elias Halliday, 1851; Eli Hiatt (1821), 1863; Peter Hester, 1830 (perhaps); Eli Hiatt, 1836; James Howry, 1835; Abram Hammer, 1836; David Haas; Bernard Kew, 1832; A. Lewallyn, 1845; David Macy, 1860; Aaron Macy, 1852; William Macy; Jethro Macy, 1854; John A. Moorman (1822), 1867; Joseph Macy, Andrew Martin; Morgan Mills, 1834; Moses Marks, John B. Mills, Luther Moorman, Andrew McCamy; Jonathan Peeples, 1836; John Rody, 1833; J. B. Reed, 1833; Henry Rash, 1835; Joseph Smith, 1835; Samuel Smith, 1835; Mr. Sawyer, Henry Saley, Jacob Wright, Jacob Windermaker, John F. Wood, William Wood, James Wood, Thomas Wallis.

STONY CREEK TOWNSHIP.

Isaac Amburn, 1829; Samuel Amburn, Jacob Beals; Isaac Branson, 1819; John H Bond, 1831; Joesph Bond, 1833; Abram Clevinger, John Conner, John Coons, John Casteen; John Clevinger, 1828; Jonathan Clevinger, early; Andrew J. Dye; John Diggs, 1822; William Dixon, 1829; John Demory (colored), 1825; Jonathan Finger, William Holloway, Joseph Hewitt; Jethro Hiatt, 1829; Solomon Hobaugh, John Holloway, Hosea Lamb, Morgan Mills, William Moore; Joab McNees, 1829; John M. McNees, 1829; Reuben Medlar, 1840; George Moore, 1838; Henry Moore, 1839; William Morriwether, 1840, Joseph Rooks, 1822; Richard Robbins (colored), 1826; Robert Scott (colored), 1832; James Scott (colored), 1832; George W. Smithson, Ira E. Smithson; Randolph Smullen, 1825; Amos Smith, 1829; Isaac Thornburg; John Thornburg, 1824; Joseph Thornburg, 1825; Joab Thornburg, 1825; Job Thornburg, 1825; Isaac Thomas, 1830; Nathan Thornburg, 1829; William A. Thornburg, 1825; David Vestal, 1823; Lemuel Vestal, 1825; Daniel Vestal; Solomon Wright (1817), 1829.

NETTLE CREEK TOWNSHIP.

John Burroughs, 1822; Isaac Branson, 1824; Thomas Burroughs, 182–; Mahlon Branson, John Bookout; Bright Cist, 1834; Jacob Crouse, 1832; Matthew Chavis (colored); William Clevinger, 1828; Isaac Crouse (born), 1837; Jonathan Canady, 1840; Walter Canady, 1829; John C. Clevinger (born), 1836;

M. L. Canady (born), 1848; John Clevinger, 1828; Abraham Colman (colored); Joel Drake, 1828; Mark Diggs (1821), 1827; Wilkerson Gray, 1835; John Grubbs; Jordan Halstead, 1831; William Hendricks; Solomon Hanscom, 1855; Benjamin Hunt, 1828; Antony Johnson, 1829; Reuben Johnson, 1832; L. W. Johnson, 1832; Henry Leaky, 1831; George Leaky, 1834; Christian Leaky, 1837; Henry Mossby, John Massy, Phineas Macy, Dr. Maulsby; Samuel Outland (colored), 1825; Benjamin Outland (colored), 1825; Mason Powell, Martin Scott (colored); William Shullabarger, 1823; Solomon Sparks, Enoch Sayles, Hamilton Snodgrass, John Snodgrass, William Snodgrass, Robert Scott (colored), Benjamin Skipworth (colored), Dosha Smothers (colored), Jerry Terry (colored), Ichabod Tharpe, Jacob Tharpe; Isaac Thornburg, 1830; John T. Vardeman, 1860; Thomas Wilkerson (colored), Isaac Woods (colored), Samuel Woods (colored), Jacob Woods (colored), Jesse Woods (colored); Lemuel Wiggins, 1858; George W. Wine, 1836; Hicks K. Wright, Philip Woods (colored).

WEST RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Elijah Arnold; Hugh Botkin, 1816; Joshua Ballenger, 1817; William Blount, 1817; Thomas Brower, 1817; Isaac Barnes, 1818; William M. Botkin (born), 1823; Butler; Jesse Cox, 1817; John Charles, 1845; Bela W. Cropper, 1833; Daniel Cropper, 1833; William Cox, 1823; William Chamness (1816), 1854; Nathaniel Case, 1816; Valentine Gibson, William Gibson, John Gwynn; Arny Hall, 1817; William Hunt, 1818; William S. Hunt, 1840; Stephen Haynes, 1834; David Hunnicutt, 1832; John T. Hunnicutt, 1833; John E. Hodges, 1818; Jonah Heaton, 1816; Joseph Hollingsworth, 1816; Miles Hunt; Samuel Jackson, 1817; John Jordan, 1817; David Jones, 1817; Joseph Jay, 1818; Peyton Johnson, 1834; Robert Lumpkin, 1831; James Malcom, 1817; William Macy, 1821; Albert Macy, 1819; Rufus K. Mills, 1857; Moses Martindale, 1817; Odle, 1815; Charles W. Osborn, 1857; John Proctor, 1817; William Peacock, 1818; Martin Phillips, 1816; Isaiah Rogers, 1816; A. Retz (born), 1821; William Smith, 1817; Samuel Sales, 1817; Samuel Smith; Jeremiah Smith, 1817; David Smith, 1817; Ira Swain (near), 1816; Robert Starbuck, 1833; James Smith, 1818; Evan Shoemaker, 1817; James Thornburg, 1817; Daniel Worth, 1823; Thomas Worth, 1822; Joshua Wright, 1816; Frederic Zimmerman, 1818.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Travis Adcock, 1815; James Abshire, early; William Barnes, 1837; Benjamin Bond, 1834; Paul Beard, Sr., 1817; Paul Beard, Jr., 1817; Joseph Baxter, 1824; Elijah Brock; William Benson (colored), 1843; Michael Benson (colored), 1840; John Barnes (Wayne), Alfred Blizzard, Beeson; Curtis Cleny, 1817; George Daly, 1843; W. A. W. Daly, 1843; Francis Frazier, Sr., 1817; Gideon Frazier; James Frazier, 1817; Francis Frazier, Jr., 1817; Nicholas Garrett, 1841; Thomas Garrett, 1841; Isaac Hockett; Obadiah Harris, 1817; Stephen Hockett, 1817; Jacob Hinshaw, 1832; Edward Hunt, 1817; Joseph Hockett; Jesse Johnson, 1817; Silas Johnson, 1817; William Johnson (born), 1823; Samuel Jennings, 1825; Jonathan Johnson, 1817; John Johnson, 1817; Joshua M. Johnson (born), 1831; David Kenworthy; John Moorman, 1817; Samuel Moody, 1821; Isaac Moody, 1823; Malachi Nichols, 1816; Henry D. Nichols (born), 1832; Valentine Pegg (Wayne), 1808; Thomas Phillips; Eli Reece, 1828; Samuel Smith, 1819; J. H. Stine, 1851; Edward Scott, 1820; Daniel Shoemaker, 1818; Thomas Tharpe; Edward Thornburg, 1817; Joseph T. Wood, 1866.

GREENSFORK TOWNSHIP.

Thornton Alexander (colored), 1822; Isaac Alexander (colored), 1822; William Arnold, Elizabeth Arnold; Harrison Anderson, 1835; Squire Bowen, 1814; James C. Bowen, 1814; Stephen Barnes, 1836; D. Bowles, George Bowles, Henry Bailey, Stanton Bailey; James Cammack, 1815; John Cammack, 1816; Reuben Clark, 1819; Abner Cadwallader, 1833; Thomas Cadwallader, 1833; John W. Clark, 1836; Richard Corbett, Daniel Comer, W. T. Chenoweth; Charles Crist, 1854; John Clark; Mitchell Campbell, 1850; Ira Cadwallader, 1333; Allen Davis (colored), 1833; Frederick Fulghum, 1821; John Foster, Joshua Foster; Orpha Griffin, 1830; Philip Hockett; William Hunt, 1844; Thomas Hough, 1844; John W. Hill (born), 1839; Jeremiah Horn, 1826; William Hill, 1823; P. Holland (colored), 1833; John James, 1817; James Jackson; James Kelly, 1842; William Locke, 1828; William Lewis, 1833; Ezekiel Lewis (colored), 1832; F. G. Morgan, 1830; R. H. Morgan, 1859; Henry McDonald, 1859; Samuel F. Middleton; Thomas Middleton, 1830; John Mann, 1820; William A. Macy, 1833; Issac Mann, 1816; Malachi Nichols, 1816; Issac N. Nichols, Cornelius Overman; Ephraim Overman, 1814; Eli Overman, 1815; William Osborn; Thomas W. Parker, 1814; Jesse Parker, Thomas Parker, Margaret Parker, James Peale, John Peale; John Randle (colored), 1833; Jesse Small, 1815; Obadiah Small, 1815; David Semans, 1825; Joseph Shaw, 1831; Stockdale, 1835; Collier Simpson (colored), Mrs. Small; John W. Thomas, 1814; William Taylor, 1836; Clark Willcutts, 1814; Windsor Wiggs, 1826; Willis C. Wilmore, 1831.

GREEN TOWNSHIP, PERSONS SEVENTY YEARS OLD AND ABOVE, (1880).

John Bone, 73; Anna A. Bone, 75; Rhoda Boots, 76; William McCracken, 72; Susanna Myers, 74; Zebulon Cantrell, 72; John Ford, 77; Eleanor Hubbard, 73; Thomas Hubbard, 76; Stanton Jones, 76; Rebecca Jones, 76; Margaret Jarnagin, 81; Julia H. Lipe, 76; James G. McProud, 77; Hannah G. McProud, 74; Mary Thornburg, 74; Joseph F. Vickroy, 79; John Woodard, 73.

Population of Green Township, 1,040; Fairview, 100; total, 1,140.

Eighteen persons over seventy years. Total ages, 1,354. Average age, 75.8; one aged person to every 63.3.

Oldest person in township, Margaret Jarnagin, 81 years.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

Caroline Bergwitz, 81; Elizabeth Engle, 71; Lucinda Janes, 82; William McFarland, 82; Jane N. Porter, 80; Robert Starbuck, 74; Elizabeth Sims, 74; Pardon Sherman, 78; Mary Sherman, 74; John Ullam, 82; Elizabeth Wood, 79.

Population of Ridgeville, 775; Franklin, 874; total, 1,649.

Number of old persons, 11; total ages, 857; average, 77.9; one to 150; oldest person in township, John Ullam, eighty-two years

WARD TOWNSHIP.

William Addington, 70; Sarah Alexander, 75; John Beara, 70; Mary Baugh, 78; Malinda Bergman, 75; Rosella Barber, 73; Elkanah Brouse, 73; Nancy Brouse, 70; Elizabeth Cole, 75; Amelia Courtney, 75; Mary Courtney, 77; James T. Evans, 70; Zilpha Evans, 73; Perry Fields, 76; Millie Fields, 75; Jacob Hotmere, 84; Christina Hotmere, 72; Clarissa Hale, 70; Mary Hindsley, 75; George Kemp, 75; Sarah Lollar, 72; William Montgomery, 81; Andrew McCartney, 75; Sarah McCartney, 75; Burkett Pierce, 87; Jane Ross, 75; Sarah Renbarger, 73; Temple Smith, 73; Philip Shiveling, 77; Priscilla Smith, 71; Barbara Sipe, 75; Barbara Sipe, 74; Caspar Stick, 76; John Sipe, 74; Lydia St. Clair, 74; Mary Sipe, 70; Mary Whiteneck, 80; Jason Whipple, 78.

Population of Deerfield, 102; Saratoga, 136; Randolph, 54; Ward Township, 1,570; total, 1,862.

Old persons, 38; ages, 2,835; average, 74.6; one to 49; oldest person in township, Burkett Pierce, eighty-seven years.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

Jacob Corl, 74; Elizabeth Corl, 73; Daniel Coblentz, 74; Ezekiel Clough, 78; Thomas Devor, 77; John Gittinger, 70; John Hoke, 70; Jacob Johnson, 87; Mary Johnson, 85; Jacob Mangus, 78; Elizabeth Mangus, 72; James Porter, 78; Hannah Porter, 74; Catharine Sutton, 87; Michael Shank, 95; Joseph Sutton, 70; William Sutton, 72; Aaron Simmons, 70; William Stokesbury, 72; Henry Weyrick, 75.

Population of New Pittsburg, 80; Jackson Township, 1,299; total, 1,379.

Number of old settlers, 20; total ages, 1,531; average, 76.5; one to 69; oldest person, Michael Shank, ninety-five years.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

Gessine Able, 70; Jacob Bennett, 70; Mary Blackman, 70; Isaac Clifton, 71; Sarah Conklin, 73; Ezra Coddington, 73; Silas Dixon, 73; Joel Elwell, 73; Francis Frazier, 78; Lutitia Frazier, 78; Julia Fleming, 71; Peter Hoover, 74; John Hartman, 76; Rebecca Harris, 74; Clarence Keister, 71; Robert Murphy, 75; Mary Miller, 71; William Pickett, 78; Mary Pickett, 73; Margaret Scott, 74; Susan Woodbury, 74.

Population—South Salem, 31; Bartonia, 33; Harrisville, 112; Wayne Township, 1,716; Union, 2,478; total, 4,370.

Old persons, 21; ages, 1,546; average, 73.6; one to 90. Oldest persons in township, Francis Frazier, 78; Lutitia Frazier, 78; William Pickett, 78.

UNION CITY.

Issac Burkett, 77; Sarah Baker, 78; Jacob Baker, 77; Uriah Ball, 73; Simeon Branham, 73; George W. Burgess, 72; Horace Dwinell, 70; John Fisher, 88; Jane Fisher, 77; Rachel Fitzsimmons, 78; Eleanor Farley, 70; Dennis Faley, 70; James Hook, 73; Isrum H. Ingle, 84; Rhoda Ingle, 80; Catharine Masslich, 70; John McMahan, 74; Robert Pogue, 77; Eleanor Ruby, 73; Nancy Stevenson, 77; James Thorn, 76; Eleanor Thorn, 78.

Population of Union City, 2,478.

Old persons, 22; ages, 1,595; average, 72.5; one to 112.6. Oldest person in city, John Fisher, eighty-eight years.

WHITE RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Williams Austin, 73; Andrew Aker, 77; Hannah Aker, 74; Edgar Bowser, 70; Sally Bowser, 70; Salina Boohr, 96; John Cox, Sr., 77; Hepsy Cox, 72; Eli Edwards, 72; Isaac Engle, 75; George Hyatt, 74; Lucinda Hyatt, 72; John Harvey, 70; Robert S. Hogemann, 75; Aggie Hawkins, 70; Millie Harvey, 70; Ensley Jones, 70; Margaret Johnson, 79; Thomas Johnson, 72; Philip Kabel, 70; David Lasley, 80; Hannah Lasley, 76; Jacob Muckey, 78; Mary McCrista, 79; Mary A. Moser, 79; Michael Moser, 70; Catharine Moser, 70; Louis Neff, 70; Sarah Oland, 75; Luddy Pegg, 71; Tyre T. Puckett, 70; Mary Pugh, 70; John Pickett, 71; Thomas Pierson, 81; Ann Pierson, 73; Lydia Pierce, 76; Mary Pegg, 73; Rachel Rynard, 84; WilliamRetz, 73; Mary Ramsey, 75; Charles Summers, 73; Durant Smith, 78; James Segraves, 84; Isaac Wright, 71; Willis C. Wilmore, 79; Sarah Wilmore, 77.

Population—White River, 3,288; Buena Vista, 36; Unionsport, 37; Maxville, 62; Winchester, 1,965; total, 5,388.

Old persons, 46; ages, 3,434; average, 74.7; one to 77. Oldest person in township, Salina Boohr, ninety-six years.

WINCHESTER.

Esther Aker, 73; Louisa Brown, 73; Minnie Blatchford, 81; Mary Carter, 77; Edward Edger, 76; Jacob Henderson, 70; John Hallowell, 70; James Moorman, 85; Henry Miller, 70; Daniel B. Miller, 82; Rebecca Payne, 82; Willis Perry, 86; Alfred Rossman, 72; Mary Reeder, 84; Nancy Swain, 79; Judith Way, 73; Jesse Way, 72; L. Way, 70.

Population, 1,965.

Old persons, 18; ages, 1,375; average, 74.16; one to 109. Oldest person in city, Willis Perry (colored), eighty-six.

MONROE TOWNSHIP.

Jacob Arbagast, 70; Leonard Boyce, 79; William Broderick, 70; Ellen Cox, 78, Calvin Cecil, 72; Nancy Cecil, 73; James Cecil, 79; Eli Hiatt, 78; Hannah Hunt, 79; Joseph Hewitt, 72; Sarah Hewitt, 75; Elizabeth Harrison, 71; Barbara Howland, 95; Susannah James, 76; John Johnson, 76; Sarah Johnson, 75; Abigail McGuire, 73; Elizabeth Miller, 73; Nancy McNees, 70; Catharine Miller, 72; Elizabeth Roberts, 81.

Population—Farmland, 668; Parker, 209; Monroe Township, 1,022; total, 1,899.

Old persons, 21; total ages, 1,587; average age, 75.5; one to 95. Oldest in township, Elizabeth Roberts, 81 years.

STONY CREEK TOWNSHIP.

Isaac Amburn, 90; John H. Bond, 71; George A. Carman, 71; Elizabeth Carman, 72; Jacob Driver, 73; John H. Denton, 76; Ruth Faulkner, 71; Elizabeth Helun, 76; William C. Holmes, 77; Elizabeth Holloway, 72; Catharine Hiatt, 86; Esther Lynch, 75; John McNees, 74; Hannah Meriweather, 72; Mary Moore, 71; Benjamin Pugle, 71; Ira E. Smithson, 80; Amos Smith, 80; John Service, 71; Mary Service, 74; Susanna Thornburg, 83; Job Thornburg, 78; Joab Thornburg, 85; Elizabeth Thornburg, 85; Sarah Terrell, 77; Mary A. Weaver, 70; Solomon R. Wright, 78; Margery Wright, 82.

Population—Windsor, 134; Stony Creek, 1,206; total, 1,338.

Old persons, 28; ages, 2,138; average 76.4; one to 47.8; oldest person in township, Isaac Amburn, ninety years.

NETTLE CREEK TOWNSHIP.

Thomas Bookout, 73; Nancy Bookout, 71; Hugh Bailey, 75; Joshua Chamness, 73; Rebecca Chamness, 71; Susan Diggs, 72; John Grubbs, 86; Mary Grubbs, 76; Nancy Gilmore, 75; Wilkerson Gray, 78; Joshua P. Hunt, 74; Miles Hunt, 71; Antony Johnson, 80; Elizabeth Johnson, 85; Hannah Lamb, 75; Theodore Lamb, 80; Elizabeth Milton, 73; Jacob Mulford, 72; William Oakerson, 70; William Snodgrass, 70; Martha Shires, 76; Sarah Segraves, 77; Wood Weaver (colored), 72; Margaret Wine, 73.

Population—Losantville, 52; Nettle Creek Township, 1,417; total, 1,469.

Old persons, 24; ages, 1,798; average, 75; one to 69. Oldest person in township, John Grubbs, eighty-six years.

WEST RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Nancy Adamson, 71; Jane Brewer, 72; William Butler, 76; Reuben Bias, 70; Elizabeth Clark, 73; William Chamness, 87; Elizabeth Earawas, 79; Michael Grace, 75; Jonathan Hunt, 70; Matilda Hoover, 70; Andalusia Harvey, 79; John Jenkins, 70; Peter Ladd, 75; Martha Lamb, 72; George Moore, 71; Sarah Macy, 75; Lydia Maxwell, 75; Elizabeth Mann, 71; Martha Mendenhall, 79; John Porter, 70; Martin Scott, 79; Beulah Starbuck, 86; Ira Swain, 70; Aaron Schmuck, 70.

Population—Huntsville, 163; West River Township, 1,634; total, 1,797.

Old persons, 24; total ages, 1,785; average, 74.6 years; one to every 75. Oldest person in township, William Chamness, eighty-seven years.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Lydia Ashby, 78; Simon Adamson, 73; Sarah Brumfield, 78; Rebecca Bales, 73; Jacob Bales, 73; Elen Bond, 78; Sarah Baxter, 79; Sara Bodie, 79; James Blansett, 73; Caleb Cogshall, 82; Margaret Cogshall, 75; Catharine Daly, 75; Susan Fudge, 72; Philip Farmer, 73; Hillery Green, 77; Mary A. Green, 80; Elizabeth Gordon, 73; Nancy Hinshaw, 79; Martin L. Hardwick, 77; Elizabeth Hardwick, 72; Rachel Harrold, 76; Ann Hinshaw, 74; Silas Johnson, 78; Rachel Jeffries, 73; Mary Lykens, 74; Moses Lasley, 70; Anna Lykins, 76; Jesse Mills, 70; Deborah Mills, 70; Benjamin Miller, 73; Rebecca Miller, 77; Lutitia Neal, 78; Susanna Puckett, 72; Rebecca Phillips, 77; Deborah Rockhill, 87; Isaiah Rogers, 86; William Rash, 92; Eli Reece, 70; Phœbe Stout, 82; Jesse Stetler, 80; Sarah C. Sharp, 87; Daniel Thomas, 80; Mary Thomas, 75; Hiram Wilkie, 70; Mary E. York, 80.

Population—Lynn, 239; Bloomingport, 141; Rural, 37; township, 1,922; total, 2,339.

Old persons, 45; ages, 3,463; average, 77; one to 52. Oldest person in township, William Rash, ninety-two years.

GREENSFORK TOWNSHIP.

Charlotte Arhart, 75; William Benson, 74; Malinda Brown, 71; Squire Bowen, 75; Lydia C. Banks, 81; James C. Bowen, 78; Mary Cook, 75; Maria Cotman, 86; Charles Crist, 79; Mary Crist, 70; Keturah B. Chenoweth, 76; James Clark, 75; Esther Dempsey, 71; Baker Elliot, 70; Jesse Flood, 70; Stephen Grave, 70; Thomas Hough, 73; Elizabeth Hammond, 79; James N. Hart, 73; Mazania Horn, 70; Enos Hiatt, 74; Samuel Kesler, 70; Robert G. Kinsey, 70, William Locke, 75; Hannah Locke, 72; William B. Lewis, 70; Thomas A. Middleton, 80; William Moore, 70; Abraham Manning, 84; John Mann, 75; Mary McDonald, 70; Hannah Morgan, 80; Lovitt Mitchell, 71; Nancy

Newbern, 85; Philip Pennington, 72; David Pierson, 80; Margaret Parker, 73; John Randle, 84; Priscilla Shoemaker, 70; Elnora Slick, 79; William Taylor, 81; Tabitha Taylor, 77; Lucinda Thompson, 80; Manlove Thomas, 77.

Population—Spartanburg, 209; Arba, 109; township, 1,809; total, 2,127.

Number of old persons, 44; total ages, 3,308; average age, 75.2; one to every 48.3. Oldest person, Maria Cotman (colored), eighty-six years.

CHAPTER IX.

CEMETERIES.

IT is thought that a general account of the cemeteries, their location, the names of persons buried respectively in each (so far as can be ascertained from tombstones, or otherwise), with age, date of death, etc., would be of interest as a part of the general history of the county. It is greatly to be regretted, however, that so many of the pioneers who are known to have died within the county have no memorial discoverable, by way of tombstones or otherwise, that may tell to succeeding generations when, where, how long they lived and acted among men. We would fain hope that the next ages may show improvement in this respect, though nothing done as to coming generations can ever supply the lack of care in the past.

As a rule, the names of persons not less than sixty years old are given.

CEMETERIES—LOCATION.

African Methodist, Section 12, Town 19, Range 12, Stony Creek Township; Alexander's, Section 1, Town 16, Range 1, Greensfork; Arba, Friends, Section 33, Town 16, Range 1, Greensfork; Buena Vista, Section 9 Town 19, Range 13, West River; Catholic, Union City, Section, 23, Town 18, Range 1, Wayne; Cedar, Friends, Section 26, Town 20, Range 12, Stony Creek; Cherry Grove, Friends, Section 4, Town 18, Range 14, Washington; Dunkards', Section 13, Town 18, Range 1, Jackson; Dunkirk, Friends, Section 26, Town 20, Range 14, White River; Fairview, Section 4, Town 21, Range 12, Green; Fountain Park, Section 20, Town 20, Range 14, White River; Gilead, Disciples, Section 21, Town 16, Range 1, Greensfork; Griffis family, Section 25, Town 17, Range 1, Wayne; Hoover's, Section 12, Town 17, Range 1, Wayne; Hopewell, Protestant Methodist, Section 30, Town 21, Range 13, Green; Huntsville, Section 28, Town 19, Range 13, West River; Jericho, Friends, Section 20, Town 20, Range 15, Wayne; Johnson's family, Section 33, Town 18, Range 1, Jackson; Liberty, Section 32, Town 19, Range 14, Washington; Little Creek, Baptist, Section 13, Town 18, Range 12, Nettle Creek; Losantville (south), Section 16, Town 18, Range 12, Nettle Creek; Lynn, Friends, Section 11, Town 18, Range 14, Washington; Maxville, Methodist, Section 20, Town 20, Range 13, White River (new one named Woodlawn); west of Maxville, Section 26, Town 20, Range 12, Stony Creek; Mt. Zion, Methodist, Section 2, Town 19, Range 14, White River; Neff, family, Section 33, Town 20, Range 14, White River; N. Dayton, Section 35, Town 21, Range 13, White River; N. Lisbon, Disciples, Sections 11 and 12, Town 18, Range 1, Jackson; Peacock's, family, Section 10, Town 20, Range 15, Wayne; Pittsburg, Section 6, Town 21, Range 15, Jackson; Pleasant Hill, east of North Salem, Section 3, Town 21, Range 15, Jackson; Pleasant Hill, north of Farmland, Section 1, Town 20, Range 12, Monroe; Pleasant Ridge, north of Huntsville, Section 15, Town 19, Range 15, West River; Poplar Run, Friends, north of Pleasant View, Section 12, Town 19, Range 12, Stony Creek; Prospect, Methodist, Section 24, Town 21, Range 14, Ward; Rehoboth, Methodist, northwest of Farmland, Section 2, Town 20, Range 12, Monroe; Ridgeville (old), Section 12, Town 21, Range 13, Franklin; Ridgeville (new), Section 12, Town 21, Range 13, Franklin; Ritenour's, Methodist, Section 18, Town 21, Range 14, Ward; Salem, "Boundary," Section 32, Town 19, Range 13, West River; Saratoga, Section 6, Town 20, Range 15, Ward; Sheets, Section 28, Town 18, Range 1, Wayne; Smith's, family, Section 5, Town 18, Range 13, West River; Snow Hill, Section 23, Town 19, Range 14, Washington; Spartansburg, Section 10, Town 16, Range 1, Greensfork; Steubenville, Section 13, Town 21, Range 12, Green; Sparrow Creek, Friends. White River: Swingly, southeast of Windsor, Section 32, Town 20, Range 12, Stony Creek; Thornburg (Hardshaw), Section 4, Town 20, Range 12, Stony Creek; Union Baptist (colored), Section 13, Town 19, Range 12, Nettle Creek; Union, southeast of Windsor, Section 5, Town 20, Range 12, Stony Creek; Union Chapel, west of Bloomingsport, Section 11, Town 18, Range 13, West River; Union City, Section 26, Town 18, Range 1, Wayne; White River, Friends, Section 22, Town 20, Range 14, White River; Whitesell's, Section 8, Town 20, Range 15, Wayne; Windsor, Section 29, Town 19, Range 12, Stony Creek; Wiggs,' southeast of Spartansburg, (Norwich, old Quaker cemetery); Winchester, Section 20, Town 20, Range 14, White River. Thus there are, early or late, within the bounds of the county, not far from sixty burial grounds, public or private, besides others, mostly family grounds, concerning which no information has been obtained. Some of the cemeteries are in beautiful condition, being cared for in a neat, tasteful, becoming manner. Many, however, have been allowed to go out of repair, presenting a melancholy and forsaken aspect.

ALEXANDER GRAVEYARD.

John Kays, buried about 1839, first person buried there.

Lewis Burden, father of "all the Burdens," died January 1, 1848, aged 66 years 5 months.

Benjamin Lewis, father of Ezekiel Lewis, very old, date of death not known.

Milly, wife of Benjamin Lewis, very old; died perhaps in 1856.

Thornton Alexander, Sr., died September 10, 1851, 72 years.

Ezekiel Lewis, died December 8, 1858, 61st year.

Margaret Shaffer, "Aunt Peggy," died about July, 1865, 65 years.

Mary Davis, wife of Allen Davis; date of death not known, 56 years 6 months.

Collier Simpson, died October 8, 1865, 76 years.

Mary Ann, wife of Collier Simpson, died December 9, 1865, 66 years.

Sarah A., wife of R. Holly, died December 24, 1866, 85 years.

Allen Davis, died about 1870, 80 years.

Abraham Cotman, died in 1876, 85 years.

Polly Burden, widow of Lewis Burden, died in 1876, supposed to be 100 years old, or even more than that.

Susan Robbins, wife of Richard Robbins, died January 7, 1877, 52 years.

Richard Robbins, died February 26, 1878, 78 years.

Silas Burden, died in 1879, 62 years.

Phillip Holland, died about 1872, 83 years.

Cesar Peale, very old, died in the winter of 1880.

ARBA (FRIENDS') CEMETERY, GREENSFORK, SOUTHEAST QUARTER OF SECTION 33, TOWN 16, RANGE 1.

Sarah Murray, died September 5, 1846, 65 years.

Henry Horn, died September 8, 1846, 59 years.

Sidney Barnes, died in 1852, 62 years.

Samuel H. Middleton, died July 28, 1856, 62 years.

John W. Thomas, died April 8, 1859, 72d year, (2d settler.)

Mary W., wife of Obed Macy, died December 24, 1861, 78 years.

James Ellis, died August 10, 1864, 64th year.

Milla Ellis, died October 1, 1864, 65 years.

Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Parker, died May 31, 1865, 65th year.

James Lewis, died October 6, 1865, 70th year.

Isaac Clements, died June 13, 1866, 70 years.

Elizabeth Clements, died January 23, 1868, 74th year.

Paul Newburn, died August 16, 1866, 62d year.

Benjamin Moorman, Sr., October 6, 1866, 84 years.

Mary Cadwallader, died February 13, 1867, 65 years.

Jeremiah Horn, died July 27, 1869, 66 years.

Rachel, wife of Harman Bailey, died July 15, 1870, 66 years.
James Longfellow, died September 6, 1871, 71 years.
John Tharp, died December 3, 1871, 80th year.
Richard Corbitt, died May 1, 1872, 74 years.
Sarah, wife of Edward Thomas, died October 17, 1872, 100 (said also to be 104) years.
Edward Thomas, died March 9, 1873, 80 years.
Hiram Hill, died March 17, 1873, 60 years.
Lemuel Wasson, died March 6, 1873, 76th year.
Jabez Hiatt, died June 21, 1874, 66 years.
Rachel, wife of Benjamin Elliot, died June 20, 1875, 61 years.
William Chenoweth, died October 18, 1876, 74 years.
Edward Thomas, died January 11, 1877, 78th year.
Wesley Harmon, died March 6, 1877, 65th year.
Anna, wife of John Tharp, died September 27, 1877, 83d year.
Seth Gardner, died March 12, 1878, 71st year.
S. W. Maines, died July 18, 1878, 63d year.
Jacob Horn, died November 10, 1878, 71st year.
Elizabeth, wife of James C. Bowen, died February 17, 1879, 66 years.
Didamia, wife of Joseph Skinner, died April 30, 1879, 77th year.
Jemima, wife of William A. Macy, died May 24, 1879, 75 years.
Ailsey, wife of I. E. Moore, died July 3, 1879, 74 years.
Martha Wiggs, date of death not stated.
William Wiggs, date of death not given.

BARTONIA CEMETERY, WAYNE, SECTION 26, TOWN 17, RANGE 1.

Balser Cramer, died July 23, 1863, aged 63 years.
Benjamin Bright, died February 24, 1870, 66th year.
James L. Bright, died February 26, 1870, 70th year.
Matilda Trammel died December 12, 1871, 64 years.
I. W. Trammel, died March 5, 1872, 72 years.
Abigail Bright, died January 1, 1875, 65 years, mother of fifteen children.

BUENA VISTA CEMETERY (WEST OF THE TOWN), WEST RIVER SECTION 9, TOWN 19, RANGE 13.

Thomas Gillum, died February 9, 1845, aged 66 years.
Jane Gillum, died May 15, 1855, 72 years.
Robert McCracken, died September 23, 1858, 73d year.
Urith McCracken, died August 1, 1861, 74th year.
Elizabeth, wife of James Hurst, died May 29, 1864, 72 years.
Alexander S. Starbuck, Company C, Ninth Indiana Cavalry, died at Indianapolis September 8, 1865, 18 years.
Thomas Brooks, died January 28, 1868, 78th year.
Fountain Murray, died February 16, 1878, 67 years.

CATHOLIC CEMETERY, UNION CITY, IND., TWO MILES NORTH, SECTION 23, TOWN 18, RANGE 1.

The Catholics have a cemetery two miles north of the city, on the Salem Pike, embracing a suitable quantity of land to answer the purposes of burial for many years to come. The ground seems well suited to the end intended, being dry and rolling, and capable of the adornment suitable for so sacred a spot. The location is greatly retired, one would think rather too much so for readiness of access, since the distance from town requires a journey of two miles from the church for every interment; however, the road thither is always in good condition.

A large congregation of Catholics reside at Union City, on both sides of the line, and in the vicinity, and many burials occur among that class of our fellow citizens.

Ferdinand Wiese, died January 11, 1861, aged 63 years.
Patrick Ragan, died October 31, 1869, 60 years.
Gertrude Wiese, died May 10, 1872, 73d year.
Joseph Schranz, died November 5, 1874, 62d year.
Thomas Burke, Mayo County, Ireland, died November 26, 1878, 56 years.
Daniel Kitty, died October 21, 1879, 64 years.

CEDAR CEMETERY, FRIENDS, STONY CREEK, SECTION 26, TOWN 20, RANGE 12.

Joseph S. Bond, died November 17, 1840, aged 61 years.
Rachel Bond, died October 28, 1842, 62d year.
John Harrold, died November 29, 1840, 92d year.
Phebe Thornburg, died March 14, 1869, 60th year.
Nathan Thornburg, died August 18, 1875, 65th year.
Eunice Bond, died January 24, 1870, 64 years.
William Whittaker, died March 31, 1872, 72d year.
Erastus Lucas, died December 1, 1872, 62d year.
Elizabeth, wife of Reuben Medlar, died February 22, 1874, 60 years.
Charity Hubbard, died February 1, 1874, 69 years.
Joseph Hubbard, died September 7, 1878, 75 years.
Esther Fodrea, wife of William, died February 23, 1876, 64 years.

CHERRY GROVE CEMETERY, WASHINGTON, SECTION 4, TOWN 18, RANGE 14.

Thomas Peirson, Sr., died May 1, 1821, aged 85 years.
Samuel Robbins, died February 14, 1837, 74 years.
William Peirson, died August 10, 1831, 70th year.
Edward Thornburg, died December 19, 1834, 83d year.
Elizabeth Peirson, died June 4, 1835, 71 years.
Elizabeth Peirson, died December 31, 1836, 68th year.
Martha Hockett, died February 4, 1839, 78 years.
Mary Harris, died October 7, 1844, 71st year.
John Pegg, died March 13, 1846, 75 years.
Jane Woodard, died December 14, 1846, 74 years.
Lydia F. Watkins, died April 27, 1850, 74 years.
Abram Hunt, died September 9, 1851, 67 years.
Mary, wife of Isham Good, died February 4, 1853, 67th year.
Alice Frazie, wife of John Frazie, died May 25, 1855, 78 years.
John Frazie, died September 17, 1860, 80 years.
Keziah Thornburg, died February 4, 1861, 92d year.
John Frazier, died September 10, 1861, 82d year.
Jonathan Johnson, died March 14, 1862, 61 years.
Samuel M. Cook, died June 4, 1862, 80th year.
Samuel Hillson, died August 19, 1862, 64 years.
Rachel Marine, died March 25, 1863, 60 years.
Joseph Baxter, died August 22, 1863, 76 years.
Joshua Chamness, died December 19, 1863, 63 years.
Sarah Bond, died June 24, 1864, 75th year.
John E. Ballard, Company F, First Indiana Cavalry, died October 24, 1864, 29 years.
Phebe Blizzard, died March 15, 1866, 89 years.
Nicholas Garrett, died December 5, 1866, 78th year.
Mary, wife of Isaac Beeson, died January 6, 1867, 78th year.
Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Peirson, died May 3, 1867, 66 years.
Lydia, wife of Joshua Chamness, died July 12, 1867, 75th year.
Miriam Charles, died March 25, 1867, 66th year.
Martha Peirson, died June 25, 1867, 78 years.
John Peirson, died February 9, 1868, 77th year.
Andrew Farquhar, died March 8, 1870, 57 years.
John Marine, died March 17, 1871, 71 years.
Nancy, wife of Samuel Robbins, died September 14, 1871, 88th year.
Absalom Dennis, died November 10, 1872, 65 years.
Robert Miller, Sr., died March 22, 1874, 77 years.
David Smith, died July 25, 1874, 62 years.
Sarah B., wife of Clayton Stevenson, died November 5, 1874, 63 years.
Benjamin Hunt, died November 11, 1874, 62 years.
Edward Thornburg, died November 24, 1874, 71st year.
John Ozbun, died April 5, 1877, 83d year.
Clayton Stevenson, died January 10, 1877, 60 years.
Keziah Thornburg, died April 20, 1877, 71 years.
Meekey, wife of Nathan Hockett, died July 54, 1877, 69 years.
Elijah Hinshaw, died March 3, 1878, 62 years.
Nathan Hockett, died August 11, 1878, 80th year.
Margaret, wife of Jesse Stettler, died July 13, 1878, 83 years.
Thomas Adamson, died October 13, 1878, 60 years.
Mary, wife of Samuel Hillson, died November 27, 1879, 59th year.

Rebecca Thornburg, died November 10, 1880, 76th year.

Elizabeth Hoggatt, born January 7, 1793; date of death and age not given.

GERMAN BAPTIST "DUNKARD" CEMETERY, NORTH OF UNION CITY, IND., JACKSON SECTION 13, TOWN 18, RANGE 1.

Eli Noffsinger, born April 6, 1806, died October 8, 1872, 67th year.

Abraham Root, died May 2, 1876, 77 years.

Elizabeth Root, died May 8, 1876, 77th year.

Barbara Flory, wife of John Flory, died August 28, 1876, 73d year.

George Retry, died October 20, 1876, 62d year.

This cemetery is comparatively new, having been in use some ten or eleven years only.

DUNKIRK CEMETERY, FRIENDS, THREE AND ONE-HALF MILES WEST OF WINCHESTER, SECTION 26, TOWN 20, RANGE 14.

Great numbers of graves have rough stones, with no inscriptions.

W. H., died 1833.

Joseph Puckett, Sr., died November 7, 1835, 51st year.

Mary Puckett, wife of above, died November 14, 1846, 60 years.

Jesse Green, died September 14, 1838, 60th year.

Sarah, wife of Jesse Green, died September 27, 1873; 102d year, a widow thirty-five years.

Samuel Ruble, Sr., died October 17, 1839, 62 years.

Rachel, wife of Samuel Ruble, died in October, 1844, 62 years.

James Wright, died July 24, 1851, 55th year.

John Wright, father of Solomon Wright, died November 13, 1851, 77th year.

Sarah, wife of Walter Ruble, died January 22, 1852, 60th year.

Catharine, wife of Stephen Hoffman, died October 27, 1852, 63 years.

Stephen Hoffman, died October 17, 1868, 86 years.

Emsen Wright, died November 22, 1853, 56 years.

Rachel Wright, died May 29, 1857, 56 years.

John Demory, died November 9, 1860, 76 years (colored).

Lecy, wife of William Thomas, died, October 9, 1860, 61st year.

Solomon Reynard, died January 5, 1861, 63d year.

Nancy, wife of Willis Perry (colored), died September 1, 1862.

Epitaph.—"I was a slave, freed by a lawsuit prosecuted by David White, the Quaker. May God bless his name! My husband's freedom was bought for $675. He made the money on rented land. Who of you that tauntingly say of my race, 'They can't take care of themselves,' have done better?"

Rachel, wife of Levet Ruble, died August 16, 1864, 54th year.

Levet Ruble, died January 19, 1871, 66th year.

Martha, wife of William Tocus, died September 17, 1866, 66th year.

Elder Zachariah Puckett, died April 1, 1867, 61st year.

Elizabeth Huffner, died March 21, 1879, 60 years

Ruth Green, died March 10, 1880, 74th year.

Dunkirk Graveyard is one of the oldest in the county. It is full of graves, and doubtless contains the bodies of many old settlers. It has, however, but very few tombstones, and the places of burial of these ancient pioneers can never be known. Great numbers of rough, unlettered stones are found thickly set over the cemetery, and many unnoted hillocks raise their melancholy heads above the consecrated ground, but they yield no token of the one who may chance to lie buried deep beneath them. Why should it be thus? And shall this state of things continue through the ages to come? God forbid!

FAIRVIEW CEMETERY, GREEN, SECTION 4, TOWN 21, RANGE 12.

Robert McKinney, aged 61 years.

Joseph McKenney; Revolutionary soldier, 90 years.

Elizabeth, wife of Nathan Godwin, died July 24, 1843, 59th year.

John Miller, died April 15, 1856, 61st year.

Samuel McClure, died in November, 1858, 75 years.

Catharine Hall, died December 1, 1860, 90 years.

Elizabeth Gilbert, died May 4, 1861, 63d year.

Thomas J. Rees, killed at Pittsburg Landing April 7, 1862, Company E, Thirty-sixth Indiana, 21st year.

Barbara McClure, died December 31, 1862, 80 years.

James Campbell, Sr., died January 24, 1863, 71 years.

Abigail, wife of Rev. Abner Wolverton, died August 6, 1863, 52d year.

Marvel G. Street, Company E, Thirty-sixth Indiana, died at Murfreesboro, Tenn., April 22, 1863, 35 years.

Eliza, wife of Moses Friddle, died October 14, 1863, 63d year.

James Sullivan, died August 20, 1864, 63 years.

Ailcey, wife of James Sullivan, died July 6, 1868, 64 years.

Thomas A. Gustin, Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana, died October 20, 1864, 34 years.

Oliver Sullivan, Company A, Eighty-fourth Indiana, died July 13, 1864, 25 years.

Loring B. Morris, Company E, Thirty-sixth Indiana, died November 15, 1864, 21 years.

Franklin L. Keever, Company E, Nineteenth Indiana, died April 12, 1865, 25 years.

Alfred Evans, Company H, One Hundred and Thirtieth, Indiana, died April 9, 1865, 34 years.

Michael Goons, died December 4, 1865, 68th year.

Catharine, wife of Joshua Coram, died February 26, 1867, 74 years.

Eli Jarnagin, died April 22, 1867 (soldier), 23 years.

Randall Lockhart, died May 27, 1867, 65 years.

Elizabeth, wife of John Bone, died October 20, 1867, 61 years.

Elizabeth Ulm, died December 23, 1867, 76 years.

Susannah, wife of George Sites, died October 25, 1818, 60 years.

Adam Keener, died December 3, 1869, 89th year.

Rhoda, wife of Rev. Elijah Harbour, died July 15, 1870, 82 years.

Rev. Elijah Harbour, died Seytember 13, 1872, 84 years.

Prudence, wife of T. G. Harris, died September 15, 1871, 72 years.

A. B. Webb, died December 20, 1872, 61 years.

Antony W. McKinney (war of 1812), born in Kentucky in 1794, and died August 26, 1873, 79 years.

Caleb Manor, died July 21, 1874, 68th year.

John Life, Sr., died March 30, 1875, 75th year.

Joel Wilson, died April 1, 1875, 70th year.

William Rees, died May 9, 1875, 69th year.

Jacob Wise, died June 8, 1875, 77th year.

Nathan Godwin, died November 3, 1875. 96th year.

Charles May, died September 18, 1876, 84th year.

Rebecca, wife of John Campbell, died Oct. 25, 1879, 61 years.

Laban Hickman, died January 7, 1877, 70 years.

Isabel Beekman, died March 6, 1877, 59th year.

T. C. Harris, died March 22, 1877, 78th year.

Robert N. Judy (soldier), died September 4, 1877, 32 years.

FOUNTAIN PARK CEMETERY, WINCHESTER.

Three different burial-places have been set apart in the vicinity of Winchester for the use of her citizens.

First Cemetery.—Charles Conway in 1834, established a graveyard near and east of the lot now occupied by the Christian (Disciple) Church. The intention had been to locate the burial ground east of Salt Creek, but for some reason that was never done.

The place was on some accounts unsuitable, and most that have been buried there were afterward removed.

Second Cemetery.—In 1844, David Heaston permitted the use of a spot southwest of town, in a bend of Mud Creek.

This ground, though in use as a cemetery for thirty-six years, was most unfit for the purpose. The soil was wet, and to drain it was nearly an impossibility; yet several additions were made, two by A. J. Neff, who owned the lands adjoining, and one by Mr. Heaston himself.

The first addition was 151½x227½ feet in size, and contained seventy-seven lots, and was recorded August 22, 1862. The second addition was made by A. J. Neff, on the south side, consisting of thirty-six lots, recorded July 19, 1867.

The third addition also was donated by A. J. Neff, on the north and east sides, containing 126 lots, and recorded August 14, 1876. But the citizens were unreconciled to the inconveniences of the place, and, while on the one hand many took the bodies of their friends elsewhere for burial, on the other efforts were made to obtain a more suitable location.

In 1877, a petition signed by five-eighths of the tax-payers of the place was presented to the town authorities, praying prompt action by them upon the matter.

A committee of nine persons was appointed, three from each ward, to wit: First Ward, A. Stone, A. Teal, J. J. Cheney; Second Ward, J. M. Hodson, R. Bosworth, L. W. Study; Third Ward, T. W. Kizor, J. M. Carver, J. W. Diggs. This movement proved a failure, and the committee never reported. Shortly afterward Gen. Asahel Stone purchased grounds of Christian Houston, south of town, comprising forty acres, at a cost of $4,000; had it surveyed and platted in a most curious and picturesque manner at a further outlay of $300; and, on the first day of March, 1880, he, in conjunction with his worthy wife, executed a deed of the property, under the name of "Fountain Park Cemetery," to the town of Winchester, under a suitable Board of Control, and with regulations intended and adapted to secure neatness, taste, beauty, quiet, and every proper characteristic of a resting-place for the dead, naming also three persons as a Board of Control, viz., Asahel Stone, H. H. Neff and T. W. Kizor.

The gift was thankfully accepted by the Trustees of the town, and, on the 3d day of July, 1880, the tract was dedicated as a burial ground in perpetuity, in the presence of a large and interested assembly.

Addresses were delivered by Rev. B. F. Foster, Rev. A. I. Luellan and Hon. T. M. Browne. The addresses were worthy of the occasion. The one delivered by Gen. Browne especially was a gem of the rarest kind. Utterances found therein are worthy to be engraved in imperial marble, and set in memorial archways above the entrance to the consecrated ground in which repose the moldering bodies of our loved and lost.

"Is it true, as some would teach us, that we are all afloat on a trackless sea, with neither chart nor compass to direct nor to guide, at the mercy of the winds and the waves, simply drifting, drifting aimlessly and hopelessly until some fierce storm wreck our vessel and the shattered bark go down beneath the fathomless waters without the hope of resurrection? True, indeed,

> 'None, none return from those quiet shores,
> Who cross with the boatman cold and pale;
> We hear the dip of the golden oars,
> And catch the gleam of the snowy sail;'

and then the voyager passes out of sight; but, because we see no returning sail shall we believe that it has gone down in endless night? May we not still have faith that it has anchored at the other shore? * * * That spirit is immortal has been the almost unchallenged conviction of the master minds of all ages, and the bed rock of every system of religion. * * * The profoundest depths of our being respond to this faith in an endless life. * * * Let us abide therein until the end. * * * It will cheer us in life and be our solace in the hour of death. It will give our lives at all times and in every struggle a heavenward side.

"I am now done. It seemed to me fit that in this solemn presence and upon this sacred occasion, I should speak a word for that faith that lightens the very darkness of the tomb. Let the stones that may be erected in these sacred precincts be not monuments of pride nor ambition, nor wealth nor even of sorrow, but rather let them be memorials of a people's faith in an overruling God, and of an endless life beyond the grave."

Thus far, Gen. Browne. His whole address is even more sentimental, devotional and profoundly religious than those of the clerical gentlemen who spoke from the same platform on that interesting occasion.

Many lots have already been purchased, some burials have been made, a few removals from the former burial-ground have been effected, and more are in contemplation. The gift of the generous donors is duly appreciated by a grateful community, and future years and ages will preserve and revere their memory. It may be not amiss to remark that the whole amount of funds to be received from the sale of lots, etc., above the expense of attendance is to be applied to improving and beautifying the hallowed spot, that the ideal of the generous donors may be completely realized, and that the sacred inclosure may come to be, as swiftly pass the rolling years, still more and more worthy the cultured and refined sentiment of an intelligent, sympathetic, Christian people.

FOUNTAIN PARK CEMETERY, WINCHESTER, SECTION 29, TOWN 20, RANGE 14.

Ezra Stone, born May 11, 1791, and died August 23, 1848, 57 years; removed from old cemetery.

Rebecca, wife of William Badgley, died February 2, 1859, 86 years; removed from old cemetery.

Eliza Kizer, died March 6, 1867, 67 years; removed from old cemetery.

Margery, wife of Elias Kizer, died October 30, 1869, 70 years; removed from old cemetery.

Joseph A. Badgley, died July 14, 1868, 68 years; removed from old cemetery.

Elijah Stevens, died October 15, 1869, 62 years; removed from old cemetery.

Abigail, wife of Joseph A. Badgley, died January 27, 1881, 82 years.

John Jenkinson, removed from old cemetery.

Mrs. Jenkinson, wife of above, removed from old cemetery.

Moorman Way, died August 17, 1881, 73 years.

Mrs. Way, wife of above, removed from old cemetery.

Mrs. Goodrich, long time widow of Hon. E. B. Goodrich, died in September, 1881, about 80 years.

GILEAD CEMETERY, GREENSFORK, SECTION 21, TOWN 16, RANGE 1.

Joseph Shaw, May 6, 1857, 64 years.
Sarah Shaw, March 10, 1860, 62 years.
Joseph Smith, October 5, 1857, 77 years.
Rebecca Smith, September 14, 1869, 83 years.
Susannah, wife of Uriah Ball, September 4, 1864, 59 years.
David Kinsey, October 17, 1865, 85 years.
Fannie Elliot, July 25, 1867, 63 years.
Miles Elliot, April 6, 1880, 84 years.
Hannah, wife of Peter Deverage, July 20, 1868, 67 years.
Samuel Armstrong, August 31, 1869, 72 years.
Rebecca Horner, April 20, 1873, 82 years.
Miriam Clark, August 2, 1875, 66 years.
Pharaoh Clark, February 21, 1877, 73 years.
Elizabeth Gray, February 22, 1878, 73 years.

GRIFFIS CEMETERY, WAYNE, SECTION 25, TOWN 17, RANGE 1.

James Griffis, October 1, 1859, 61 years.
Margaret Griffis, February 2, 1869, 54 years.
George Elston, January 8, 1872, 59 years.
Elizabeth Elston, February 6, 1872, 53 years.
George McClure, about 1870, 65 years.
Mrs. McClure, about 1875, 70 years.

The above is only a private burying ground, on a beautiful knoll, in the middle of the "Old Griffis Farm," and but few persons have been buried there.

HOOVER CEMETERY, TWO AND ONE-HALF MILES SOUTH OF UNION CITY, SECTION 12, TOWN 17, RANGE 1.

Sarah wife of John Dixon, March 31, 1842, 51 years.
John Dixon, March 12, 1865, 75 years.
John Anderson, March 4, 1850, 65 years.
David Wasson, December 9, 1850, 75 years.
Barbara Hoover, wife of Peter Hoover, April 3, 1852, 76 years.
Peter Hoover, November 16, 1858, 82 years.

Catharine Law, December 7, 1852, 82 years.
Lewis Blackman, February 18, 1856, 62 years.
David Williamson, May 5, 1857, 76 years.
George Woodbury, Company H, Eighty-fourth Indiana, died at Franklin, Tenn., April 18,1863, 32 years.
Priscilla, wife of John Anderson, January 17, 1863, 77 years.
Flora, wife of David Wasson, December 21, 1865, 84 years.
Nancy, wife of Benjamin Dixon, December 18, 1868, 67 years.
Ann, wife of Ezekiel Pritchard, March 18, 1870, 62 years.
Samuel Downing, M. D., July 7, 1871, 66 years.
Hannah, wife of Abraham Teeter, December 17, 1872, 90 years.
John M. Williamson, May 26, 1874, 62 years.
John Louder, August 25, 1875, 70 years.
Sarah Louder, March 3, 1874, 66 years.
Abner Anderson, December 8, 1877, 67 years.

HOPEWELL CEMETERY, GREEN, SECTION 31, TOWN 21, RANGE 13.

Ebenezer Walker, May 24, 1852, 77 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Samuel Fansher, August 17, 1853, 65 years.
Daniel Culver, Sr., April 16, 1854, 82 years.
Samuel French, July 15, 1857, 67 years.
Esther, wife of Samuel French, April 29, 1858, 67 years.
Jacob Tramar, August 15, 1867, 63 years.
Rev. Jonathan Flood, October 22. 1867, 86 years.
Joseph Gantz, May 18, 1870, 59 years.
Jesse Harrison September 20, 1870, 62 years.
Elizabeth, wife of J. H. Smithson, February 10, 1872, 63 years.
Robert McCracken, June 14, 1872, 61 years.
Sarah, wife of above, December 9, 1874, 62 years.
John S. Bunsold, June 10, 1873, 63 years.
Edith, wife of T. M. Silvers, August 13, 1873, 66 years.
Malinda Green, November 11, 1874, 65 years.
Julien Green, December 29, 1874, 72 years.
Peter M. Silvers, December 17, 1875, 67 years.
Jacob Bales, May 3, 1875, 70 years.
Rachel R., wife of above, July 28, 1875, 62 years.
Mary, wife of Philip Wetzel, March 12, 1876, 60 years.
Isaac Holloway, February 23, 1877, 86 years.
William Cortner, February 24, 1879, 89 years.
Catharine, wife of David A. Green, September 3, 1879, 51 years.

HUNTSVILLE CEMETERY, SECTION 28, TOWN 19, RANGE 13.

Mary, wife of Col. John Hunt, Fleming County, Ky., April 24, 1843, 74 years.
Hugh Botkin, February 27, 1851, 60 years.
Catharine Jones, March 4, 1851, 86 years.
Sarah, wife of William B. Hunt, October 16, 1855, 85 years.
Nancy Lamb, July 29, 1856, 87 years.
John Lynch, March 31, 1857, 62 years.
Jesse Gaines, November 11, 1859, 80 years.
Lucy, wife of above, September 30, 1863, 81 years.
Elizabeth Jones, July 11, 1859, 63 years.
James F. Jones, husband of the above, Campbell County, Va., July 17, 1868, 81 years.
Benjamin Harris, June 12, 1863, 75 years.
John Harris, November 26, 1863, 73 years.
Celia B., wife of above, August 18, 1878, 74 years.
William Z. Pascall, Company C, Ninth Indiana Cavalry, died at the hospital, Indianapolis, May 2, 1864, 19 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Jonathan Butler, July 26, 1864, 81 years.
Jonathan Butler, January 18, 1868, 92 years.
Benjamin Edwards, July 30, 1865, 67 years.
Jesse Z. Paschall, January 11, 1865, 70 years.
William A. Lamb, April 8, 1868, 65 years.
Rev. Bazil Hunt, Fleming County, Ky., October 30, 1869, 80 years.
William Miller, born in Donegal County, Ireland, in 1804, and came to America in 1844; died March 2, 1869, 65 years.
Mary, wife of William Caberson, July 27, 1870, 67 years.
Nathan Garrett, October 7, 1871, 65 years.
Benjamin G. Lamb, volunteered July 26, 1862, in Company D, Sixty-ninth Indiana Regiment; discharged June 3, 1865, and died August 29, 1872, 33 years.
William Harris, Campbell County, Va., March 8, 1873, 70 years.
Jacob Ross, June 30, 1873, 81 years.
Isaac Mann, August 3, 1874, 79 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Bela W. Cropper, October 30, 1875, 81 years.
Bela W. Cropper, died in 1874, Baptist preacher, 83 years.
Rev. William Hunt, 1877, 86 years.
Laura, wife of Stephen Haines, March 26, 1878, 73 years.
James Vanlandigham, March 9, 1880, 69 years.

Jericho (Wayne Township, Section 30, Town 20, Range 15).—Rachel Buckingham, September 7, 1844, 70 years.
Joshua Buckingham, October 15, 1854, 85 years.
Mary, wife of Benoni Hill, May 12, 1856, 67 years.
Benoni Hill, August 20, 1870, 82 years.
Hannah, wife of Thomas Wells, September 18, 1862, 64 years.
William Nixon, November 13, 1865, 84 years.
Hannah, wife of Simon Cox, October 11, 1865, 54 years.
Amos Peacock, July 24, 1850, 63 years.
Hannah, wife of Amos Peacock, September 8, 1867, 74 years.
Benjamin Schooley, May 24, 1867, 78 years.
Aaron K. Schooley, November 12, 1868' 77 years.
John J. Peacock, June 22, 1868, 58 years.
John Price, January 9, 1869, 65 years.
Mariam Cox, wife of Joshua Cox, December 24, 1872, 74 years.
Solomon Hinshaw, February 2, 1872, 55 years.
William B. Cox, April 13, 1873, 72 years.
Henry Hill, May 2, 1874, 83 years.
Avis (Woodard) Hill, August 15, 1875, 79 years.
Amy, wife of Thomas North, April 22, 1875, 76 years.
Thomas North, June 8, 1878, 77 years.
Margaret, wife of William B. Cox, July 20, 1876, 75 years.
Hannah, wife of James Smith, December 1, 1877, 75 years.

Jericho is an old burial-ground. Very many graves have only rough, unmarked stones. Some have initials, with neither name, age nor date. Is it too late, even yet, to supply the lack and to betoken the resting-places of the dead, sacred to affection? It is surely something remarkable that a people like the Friends, so kind, so loving, so affectionate, so full of veneration for the departed dear ones, so penetrated with sympathy for the afflicted, should have, in ages past, felt it incumbent upon them to deny to their worthy and lamented dead a fitting public memorial at the spot of their burial, that the visitors to the sacred inclosure, through generations long to come, may feel their hearts bound as by a solemn and indissoluble tie to the souls of all the noble and worthy dead that have fallen asleep in Jesus since first the forest wilderness began to become the peaceful abode of civilized Christian men and women. And will they not be convinced at length that the gentle and tender spirit of Christian love by no means forbids, but on the other hand, requires and commands that the memory of the lamented and beloved dead shall be kept perpetually alive, not merely in the secret heart of the mourning soul and bereaved comrades left behind, but also by suitable tokens, not costly and for vain show and display, but modest and appropriate, that future times may learn where lie the mortal remains of those who were, during their lives, honored and beloved.

Johnson's Burying-Ground (Jackson Township, northeast quarter of Section 33, Town 18, Range 1).—Elizabeth (Simmons) Noffsinger, wife of John Noffsinger, born April 11, 1878; died February 3, 1867, 79 years. Her sons were Eli John, Jacob, Absalom, James, Samuel; her daughters were Catharine, Susan, Elizabeth, Lydia.

Mary Cromas, wife of Abraham Cromas, October 31, 1849, 59 years.
Abraham Cromas, March 3, 1853, 62 years.

William Goodman, 1879, 84 years.
Mrs. Jacob Johnson died in the winter of 1880–81, very old.
Jacob Johnson, August, 1881, 87 years.
John Johnson, about 1878, 88 years; probably buried here; no tombstone, however, has been erected.

Liberty (two and one-half miles north of Bloomingsport, Section 32, Town 19, Range 14).—William Rockhill, February 27, 1852, 60 years.
Jesse Brumfield, August 11, 1855, 57 years.
Jacob B. Mills, born July 27, 1798, and died May 14, 1858, 60 years.
Ezra Vandegriff, March 15, 1860, 64 years.
Daniel B. Johnson, November 3, 1861, Company C, Nineteenth Indiana, 20 years.
Henry Bramley, November 14, 1862, 60 years.
Letitia, wife of John Wood, November 8, 1863, 62 years.
Jane, wife of J. B. Mills, born February 22, 1789, and died September 1, 1864, 76 years.
Mary, wife of Pleasant Bales, December 31, 1864, 55 years.
Pleasant Bales, February 8, 1865, 54 years.
George W. Daly, February 17, 1868, 75 years.
Christian Rush, April 1, 1868, 65 years.
James Abshire, born August 1, 1777, and died July 18, 1868, 91 years.
Thomas Gordon, October 3, 1868, 62 years.
John Johnson, February 11, 1871, 58 years.
John N. Smith, September 11, 1873, 70 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Aaron Ballard, February 2, 1874, 70 years.

Little Creek (Maulsby's, Nettle Creek Township, Section 13, Town 18, Range 12).—Rachel Street, November 1, 1864, 69 years.
Mary, wife of Thomas Maulsby, December 9, 1870, 62 years.
Sarah, wife of Hicks K. Wright, August 5, 1874, 63 years.
Hicks K. Wright, April 16, 1875, 63 years.
Thomas Maulsby, January 19, 1878, 73 years.

Cemetery South of Losantville (Section 16, Town 18, Range 12).—Charles Johnson, October 22, 1832 (earliest date), 13 years.
Joseph Burroughs, September 13, 1837; not given.
William Crouse, November 30, 1838, 75 years.
Robert Lumpkin, November 12, 1842, 86 years.
Jesse Sisk, April 16, 1845, 68 years.
Catharine, wife of William Crouse, March 15, 1846, 75 years.
Pheriba, wife of Nathan Sisk, August, 1847, 73 years.
Joseph Johnson, March 26, 1848, 62 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Robert Lumpkin, August 3, 1848, 82 years.
Joseph Bookout, August 13, 1855, 69 years.
Paulin Seagrave, May 7, 1857, 62 years.
Reuben Johnson, December 18, 1858, 68 years.
John Burroughs, September 6, 1862, 70 years.
Mary, wife of Hosea Sisk, June 6, 1863, 60 years.
Mary, wife of Reuben Johnson, August 11, 1863, 69 years.
Mary, wife of Jesse Oxley, July 22, 1864, 68 years.
Sarah, wife of Joseph Bookout, March 26, 1872, 76 years.
Richard Vanlandigham, May 20, 1872, 72 years.
Damaris, wife of Jesse Chambers, January 3, 1876, 65 years.
Charles Burroughs, March 10, 1876, 82 years.

Lynn—Friends (Washington Township, Section 11, Town 18, Range 14).—Samuel Peirson, March 14, 1837, 79 years.
David Kenworthy, May 22, 1843, 72 years.
Elizabeth Benson, January 31, 1844, 77 years.
Phebe, wife of Samuel Peirson, January 3, 1848, 80 years.
Moses Farmer, January 23, 1849, 83 years.
Hannah Beard, June 2, 1851, 72 years.
Sarah Farmer, September 16, 1853, 83 years.
Paul Beard, Sr., March 14, 1857, 77 years.
Obadiah Harris, Jr., March 5, 1858, 84 years.
Leroy Davis, October 15, 1859, 61 years.
John Moody, October 29, 1860, 72 years.
Mary Moody, September 7, 1862, 66 years.
Thomas Clevinger, November 26, 1866, 68 years.
Isaac Moody, August 3, 1869, 73 years.
Jennetta, wife of Leroy Davis, January 28, 1871, 80 years.
Permelia, wife of M. B. Culphur, March 24, 1872, 73 years.
Elizabeth H. Platt, November 11, 1874, 64 years.
Reuben Farmer, February 25, 1874, 69 years.
Mary, wife of Thomas Clevinger, June 3, 1875, 75 years.
Agatha, wife of John B. Picket, July 20, 1875, 62 years.
Millicent Moody, December 8, 1876, 60 years.
Aaron Rich, July 4, 1877, 71 years.

NOTE.—Lynn Graveyard is an ancient burial-place, and contains the dust of many of the pioneers of Randolph; but rough stones, or none at all, show where some of these aged fathers and mothers lie.

Woodlawn (new, Maxville Township, Green W. Williams, proprietor; 258 lots. Location, north side of the pike, opposite the old Maxville Cemetery, east of Maxville; recorded January 15, 1875.

Maxville (old and new, east half of Section 20, Town 20, Range 13, White River Township).—Jesse Pursley, December 4, 1862, 87 years.
Robison McIntyre, September 15, 1871, 85 years.
Mary McIntyre, October, 1854, 73 years.
Rebecca Mills, October 11, 1872, 78 years.
Morgan Mills, April 30, 1878, 84 years.
Armsbee Diggs, March 9, 1872, 72 years.
Mary Diggs, November 14, 1872, 72 years.
Tarlton Moorman, December 30, 1875, 93 years.
Peter S. Miller, January 5, 1876, 67 years.
John Sumwalt, October 10, 1876, 90 years.
Mary, wife of Solomon Mason, 1878, 71 years.

Maxville Cemetery would seem to be an ancient burial-ground, though, for some reason, but few old persons have tombstones therein. One would suppose that many more have been deposited beneath this hallowed ground, but the earth gives no sign.

Cemetery West of Maxville (near the toll-gate, Section 26, Town 20, Range 12).—Margaret, wife of Thomas Watson, March 18, 1853, 88 years.
Elizabeth Swain, December 30, 1859, 64 years.

Miller's Burying-Ground (Schoolhouse No. 6, Ward Township, northeast quarter of Section 23, Town 21, Range 14).—Lucy Ann Poorman, wife of John Poorman, September 2, 1875, 57 years.
Joseph Lollar, December 15, 1869, 69 years.
Kindred Smiley, buried at No. 6, Schoolhouse; no tombstone.
John Branneman, buried in the summer of 1880, 82 years; no tombstone.

Mt. Zion (White River Township, Section 2, Town 19, Range 14).—Thomas Butts, August 8, 1848, 70 years.
W. E. Fitzgerald, February 15, 1851, 105 years, Revolutionary soldier.
Sarah Fitzgerald, September 7, 1851, 92 years.
Josiah Pennington, January 5, 1852, 79 years.
Alley Pennington, November 2, 1855, 76 years.
Rachel Shockney, September 8, 1855, 67 years.
Susannah, wife of John Haas, August, 1857, 60 years.
Sarah Shockney, October 17, 1862, 59 years.
Charles Shockney, April 7, 1863, 65 years.
James H. Surface, August 1, 1863, 20 years, Company C, Sixty-ninth Indiana Regiment.
Jacob L. Fudge, September 8, 1867, 63 years.
Elizabeth, wife of John Ousler, July 7, 1856, 68 years.
John Ousler, May 17, 1852, 74 years.
Samuel Shockney, September 23, 1859, 66 years.
Catharine, wife of Valentine Oyler, July 17, 1873, 79 years.
Valentine Oyler, March 19, 1852, 69 years.
John M. Lucas, August 22, 1869, 60 years.
William Kennedy, December 21, 1876, 77 years.
William Shockney, July 3, 1875; 75 years.
John M. Bishop, January 2, 1874, 81 years.

NOTE—W. E. Fitzgerald, 105 years old, was killed by falling from a load of oats that he had loaded himself. He was strong and sprightly, though so old, and, except for this accident, might have survived for years. Mrs. William Kennedy died in the spring of 1881, 84 years.

Sarah, wife of John M. Bishop, November 1,1880, 62 years.
Hannah Ireland, February 3, 1864, 63 years.
Elam Ireland, October 31, 1875, 80 years.
William Robison, August 29, 1874, 72 years.
Catharine, wife of Peter Forbes, July 12, 1870, 85 years.
Abel Hinshaw, June 11, 1876, 77 years.
Daniel Moore, August 30, 1876, 63 years.
Susan C. Neil, September 28, 1876, 79 years.
Jerusha Stine, October 3, 1876, 66 years.
James W. Stine, October 16, 1876, 64 years.

Neff (near poor-house, Section 33, Town 20, Range 14).—Susannah, wife of Charles Summers, September 15, 1847, 85 years.
Dennis Kelly, March 29, 1849, 64 years.
Susannah, wife of John Neff, October 5, 1854, 80 years.
John Neff, September 25, 1856, 85 years.
Mary, wife of Dennis Kelly, September 15, 1866, 77 years.
Polly, wife of Jacob A. White, January 7, 1878, 75 years.
Mrs. Thomas Johnson (sister of Col. H. H. Neff), August, 1881, old. The above would seem to be rather a private family ground, belonging to the Neffs and their friends, though some of that name are buried elsewhere.

New Dayton (Bear Creek Graveyard) White River Township, Section 35, Town 21, Range 13; size, 122 square rods; John Ray, proprietor; number of lots, thirty-five; recorded September 25, 1872. Bear Creek Graveyard, second addition, John Ray, proprietor; number of lots, 110; Section 35, Town 21, Range 13; recorded August 11, 1877.—Maj. Brown, April 7, 1855, 63 years.
Catharine, wife of Maj. Brown, April 15, 1855, 71 years.
William Platt, August 28, 1861, 75 years.
John N. Gettle, Sr., March 29, 1862, 77 years.
Esther, wife of James Stanley, November 22, 1862, 67 years.
John Addington, Company A, Eighty-fourth Indiana, September 12, 1864, 23 years.
Dorcas, wife of W. R. Addington, September 6, 1869, 60 years.
William R. Addington, October 5, 1875, 73 years.
Francis Bergwitz, August 16, 1872, 80 years.
David Booher, March 16, 1874, 76 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Walter Ruble, November 11, 1874, 68 years.
Jane, wife of Salathiel Dodd, February 25, 1875, 76 years.
Robert Stephen, December 29, 1875, 61 years.
Joshua Mattbie, September 25, 1875, 62 years.
John K. Puckett, March 7, 1876. 73 years.
Elizabeth, wife of George W. Smithson, April 4, 1876, 80 years.
John Winship, September 7, 1876, 82 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Luke Hollowell, October 8, 1877, 62 years.
Margaret Manser, December 5, 1877, 77 years.
Walter Ruble, December 8, 1878, 89 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Joshua Maltbie, June 29, 1879, 55 years.

New Lisbon (new, Charles Trine, President Lisbon Cemetery Company; 601 lots; Section 11, Town 18, Range 1, across the pike from the Lisbon Church, in Jackson Township; recorded October 5, 1875.

NOTE—The old cemetery is a short distance south of the new one, and on the other (the east) side of the highway.

New Lisbon (Disciples,' Jackson Township, Sections 11 and 12, Town 18, Range 1).—Julia Sutton, October 1, 1849, 55 years.
Cornelius Sutton, born June 20, 1780, and died August 30, 1859, 79 years.
Mary Boles, November 26, 1850, 76 years.
George Debolt, June 20, 1853, 60 years.
RachelDebolt, December 30, 1861, 65 years.
James Ferrill, October 3, 1854, 72 years.
Elizabeth Ferrill, March 26, 1857, 73 years.
Samuel W. Hughes, January 5, 1856, 72 years.
Rachel Wickersham, September 15, 1855, 70 years.
James Wickersham, October 7, 1873, 93 years.
Rev. Thomas Wiley, September 23, 1862, 52 years.
Rachael Banta, February 6, 1863, 59 years.
David Banta, October 6, 1867, 71 years.
Betsey Lambert, January 26, 1865, 74 years.
Jonathan Lambert, born January 15, 1819, and died September 24, 1869, 71 years.
Andrew Stone, February 2, 1866, 81 years.
Peter Yeiser, March 27, 1867, 65 years.
Mary Yeiser, January 29, 1871, 72 years.
Lucinda Thomson, wife of J. Thomson, October 24, 1876, 64 years.
James Reeves, 1874; old; ten children, six living.

Norwich (old Quaker, near C. Crist's, southeast of Spartansburg, Section 15, Town 16, Range 1).—This cemetery was established in 1825, and is still in use for purposes of burial. A large number have been interred here, but only a few old persons have tombstones, as follows:
Aaron Adams, 70 years.
Esther Miers, 1870, not given.
Samuel Ruby, not old.
James Moore, October, 1875, 99 years.
Hannah, wife of James Moore, April 20, 1869, 85 years.
John Randle (colored), September 27, 1881, 85 years.
Windsor Wiggs, 1856, 63 years.
Sarah, wife of Windsor Wiggs, August 4, 1881, 84 years.
Like some other cemeteries in this region, it lies in the midst of a farm, nearly half a mile from any public highway, and with no avenue of entrance.

Peacock Graveyard (one and a half miles northeast of Jericho Meeting-house, Section 30, Town 20, Range 15).—Abram Peacock, 1833, over 70 years.
Aaron Hill, 1855, over 80 years.
Amy Cox, 1850, over 80 years.
David Lyle, 1850, over 60 years.
Mrs. Rhoads, 1850, very old.
Rebecca Manor, daughter of old Mrs. Rhoads, 1825; old.

NOTE—This yard has no tombstones, and George and Asenath Thomas gave me the above from memory, and the statements are only approximations, and possibly not very close ones at that. The burial-ground is private, and only a few have ever been deposited therein.

New Pittsburg (Jackson Township, Section 6, Town 21, Range 15).—Archibald McFarland, June 10, 1850, 77 years.
Mary, wife of Archibald McFarland, May 10, 1857, 81 years.
William Simmons, March 24, 1849, 51 years.
Mary, wife of William Simmons, December 5, 1860, 53 years.
Esther Marsh, wife of Jesse Marsh, December 10, 1856, 56 years.
Phebe, wife of Arthur Trew, December 12, 1857, 79 years.
Nancy Fields, wife of Lanceford Fields, February 22, 1861, 52 years.
Lansford Fields, May 11, 1866, 66 years.
John Stick, October 27, 1867, 79 years.
Elizabeth, wife of John Albright, February 6, 1871, 61 years.
Susannah McFarland, wife of Joseph McFarland, April 26, 1872, 58 years.
Joseph McFarland, November 6, 1879, 62 years.
Julian Stick, wife of Casper Stick, May 1, 1876, 66 years.
Silas Richards, July 7, 1878, 58 years.
Thomas Croyle, early settler, buried in the old cemetery; reinterred in the new; no stone; very old.
Nunnamaker, soldier in the war of 1812; drew pension; died in the summer of 1880, 84 years. There is an old cemetery near Pittsburg, but it is out of repair and not in use, and we do not know whether any tombstones are there or not, since, in fact, we did not discover its precise location.

Pleasant Hill (east of Salem, Jackson Township, Section 3, Town 21, Range 15).—William Cline, August 23, 1853, 107 years.
Bell Woten, May 17, 1856, 91 years.
Demas Lindley, November 29, 1857, 73 years.
Jane, wife of William Cline, January 27, 1862, 61 years.
Henry Delmy, August 26, 1863, 83 years.
Thomas P. Smith, December 30, 1863, 73 years.
Mary, wife of Thomas Peden, October 14, 1866, 56 years.
Thomas Peden, April 12, 1868, 76 years.
Susanna, wife of Demas Lindley, July 2, 1869, 72 years.
Mary, wife of Henry Denney, April 30, 1870, 63 years.
Rev. Tyler Weld, July 6, 1870, 61 years.
Stephen Marine, June 14, 1870, 67 years.

Barbara, wife of J. Zeiler, April 3, 1871, 65 years.
James Lambert, October 16, 1871, 63 years.
John Moore, January 15, 1872, 63 years.
Charles Simmons, born March 26, 1799, and died March 16, 1872, 73 years.
Catharine, wife of Abraham Walters, May 19, 1875, 88 years.
John Lindley, September 5, 1875, 60 years.
John Zeiler, October 3, 1877, 74 years.
James G. Constable, March 8, 1878, 68 years.
Nancy, wife of James G. Constable, December 28, 1879, 66 years.
Nancy, wife of Thomas Devor, February 6, 1880, 68 years.

Cemetery one and a half miles north of Farmland, Section 1, Town 20, Range 12.—John Cox, August 13, 1866, 90 years.
Leven Cox, August 17, 1876, 78 years.
Peter Hester, very old; no stone.

Pleasant Ridge (West River Township, Section 15, Town 19, Range 15, was laid out about 1842, by John Jenkins. The first burial was a child of John and Frances Jenkins October 30, 1842, child 4 years. The interments in these grounds have been few).—Frances C. S. Jenkins, wife of John Jenkins, January 3, 1877, 66 years.
John Kepler, January 24, 1848, 85 years.
Isabelle Shearer, February 16, 1853, 70 years.
Mrs. Kepler, very old. This cemetery is connected with a Presbyterian Church, established some thirty-five or forty years ago. The edifice is still standing in the graveyard, but no worship has been held therein for many, many years.

Poplar Run—Friends (Stony Creek Township, northwest quarter of Section 12, Town 19, Range 12).—John Diggs, January 22, 1863, 60 years.
Catharine Diggs, October 29, 1867, 64 years.
Frederic A. Pettibone, February 2, 1874, 73 years.
Mark Diggs, June 14, 1878, 79 years.
Henry W. Moore, May 9, 1879, 75 years; no stone.
Solomon Hanscom, 60 years.
Margaret Hanscom, 60 years.
Restore Lamb, age not given.

Prospect (Ward Township, Section 24, Town 21, Range 14, east of Deerfield).—Mary Cooper, wife of Ezekiel Cooper, January 20, 1846, 81 years.
John Witt, September 28, 1847, 67 years.
Mary Pogue, wife of William Pogue, December 30, 1854, 73 years.
William Pogue, March 12, 1856, 76 years.
Mary, wife of E. Bragg, November 3, 1857, 53 years.
Mary, wife of W. Bragg, July 16, 1858, 74 years.
Nancy, wife of Michael Bannon, February 12, 1863, 69 years.
Michael Bannon, February 3, 1870, 82 years.
Ahaz Cartwright, August 20, 1863, 77 years.
Susan, wife of Walter Smiley, September 11, 1865, 64 years.
Salome, wife of John Sarff, September 13, 1869, 69 years.
Abraham Harshman, September 15, 1868, 68 years.
Susan, wife of Robert Pogue, March 10, 1871, 65 years.
Nancy Ann, wife of Daniel B. Miller, December 18, 1872, 67 years.
James Warren, June 27, 1876, 92 years.
Judge Daniel B. Miller, spring of 1881, 83 years.
Milly, wife of Perry Fields, February, 1881, age not given.
Reuben Harshman, spring of 1881, age not given.
William Sizemore, 1877, 96 years.
Esther Sizemore, 1850, 66 years.
Jediah Sizemore, 65 to 70 years.

It is rather remarkable that in a cemetery so old and so celebrated as Prospect, no more monuments of elderly persons are found. Whether it is because few are buried there, or because the placing of memorial stones has been neglected, we cannot tell.

An old Cemetery; many graves; few tombstones; many old settlers doubtless lie sleeping beneath the grassy sod, but no human eye can designate the spots where they respectively wait the last great day.

Rehoboth (four miles northwest of Farmland, Section 2, Town 20, Range 12).—Minors L. Fowler, March 9, 1863, Company C, Nineteenth Indiana, age not given.
George Cowgill, June 15, 1865, 72 years.
Rhoda, wife of Philip Lykens, April 27, 1866, 71 years.
Celia, wife of George Cowgill, July 2, 1867, 82 years.
Margaret Brinkley, September 13, 1871, 58 years.
Abram Grove, September 29, 1876, 72 years.
Jacob Windermaker, no stone, died perhaps in 1865, 75 years.
Mr. Chessman, no stone, died perhaps in 1866, 75 or 80 years.

Ridgeville (east of town, new, Franklin Township, Section 12, Town 21, Range 13).—Peter Dailey, January 10, 1879, 71 years.
Pennell Mendenhall, April 16, 1871, age not given.
Hugh Williamson, October 26,1873, 73 years.
Mary Anna Williamson, May 2, 1878, 73 years.
Nancy, wife of Peter Dailey, August 21, 1877, 81 years.

The old Ridgeville Graveyard is in disuse and neglected. Most of the interments in the region are made in Ritenour's Cemetery, as the oldest and most carefully kept burial-ground in the region. One would have supposed that a place settled as long as the vicinity of Ridgeville has been, would have had a carefully preserved cemetery, dating back from the olden time. Such seems, however, to be not the fact. Indeed, the extensive settlement of the neighborhood was accomplished only much later than the original entry into that wilderness by the Lewallyns, the Kizers and the Wards. The old graveyard at Ridgeville appears to have been unsuitable, and, therefore, little used, and the new one has been opened for interments only for a short time.

Ritenour's (west of Deerfield, Section 18, Town 21, Range 14. Addition to the old one, size, 90x120 feet; number of lots, forty-four; location, between Deerfield and Ridgeville, south side of Mississinewa River, by the old chapel; recorded October 13, 1865. Ritenour's Addition, seventy-two lots; size, 80x242 feet; recorded October 23, 1866).—Edward McKew, June 29, 1850, 88 years.
Aquila Loveall, 1851, 67 years.
John Way, March 10, 1851, 90 years.
Charles Sumption, February 10, 1852, 61 years.
Susanna, wife of Philip Rarick, Sr., January 30, 1853, 71 years.
Catharine, wife of Edward McKew, December 16, 1858, 63 years.
Patience, wife of Jacob Clark, February 12, 1859, 66 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Burkett Pierce, February 17, 1859, 62 years.
Elizabeth, wife of George Ritenour, December 4, 1859, 69 years.
Ezekiel Roe, June 20, 1860, 73 years.
John Woodbury, May 10, 1860, 71 years.
Joseph Berry, September 3, 1862, 89 years.
James Q. Odle, Company C, Thirty-ninth Indiana Regiment, wounded at Shiloh, Tenn., and died June 18, 1862, 22 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Ezekiel Roe, October 9, 1862, 67 years.
Barbara, wife of Joseph Berry, September 9, 1863, 83 years.
Eve, wife of Robert Parsons, September 16, 1863, 78 years.
Robert Parsons, October 18, 1863, 80 years.
Elizabeth, wife of George Ritenour, August 27, 1864, 69 years.
Granberry B. Nickey, Seventh Indiana Cavalry, died at Memphis April 7, 1864, 28 years.
John Willy, March 12, 1864, 71 years.
George Meek, June 17, 1864, 78 years.
Mary, wife of Joseph S. Baker, November 27, 1865, 63 years.
Mildred, wife of George Ritenour, August 29, 1865, 71 years.
Sarah, wife of John Kinnear, March 12, 1867, 75 years.
Margaret, wife of Josiah St. John, October 28, 1868, 76 years.
Hannah, wife of Robert Starbuck, April 8, 1869.
Catharine, wife of Michael Wimar, December 28, 1866, 67 years.
Michel, wife of Adam Hollowell, April 10, 1870, 88 years.
Sarah, wife of William Shoemaker, Sr., August 12, 1871, 75 years.
Eve, wife of J. P. Ulrich, born in Baden Everstadt, Europe, in 1807, and died December 16, 1871, 65 years.

Joseph Lewis, February 14, 1872, 65 years.
John P. Champe, August 14, 1872, 65 years.
Samuel E. Turner, October 2, 1870, 71 years.
Christena, wife of James Hester, January 9, 1873, 72 years.
Catharine Clapp, December 19, 1873, 63 years.
Samuel Sipe, January 18, 1874, 75 years.
Abigail, wife of A. Collins, March 17, 1874, 71 years.
Mercy, wife of Joseph Lewis, April 13, 1874, 68 years.
Christian Heaston, April 18, 1874, 67 years.
Isabella, wife of Christian Nickey, December 30, 1874, 70 years.
Elizabeth, wife of George E. Thompson, December 20, 1876, 70 years.
David Riddlesbarger, January 29, 1876, 81 years.
Sarah, wife of Joseph Elliot, May 24, 1876, 62 years.
John Fetters, May 13, 1876, 67 years.
William Dail, June 6, 1876, 63 years.
Daniel Mull, September 22, 1877, 60 years.
Christopher T. Henisser, September 13, 1876, 67 years.
James Hall, April 5, 1880, 81 years.
George Ritenour, no stone, very old.
Andrew Ritenour, no stone, very old.
Mrs. Andrew Ritenour, 1879, no stone, very old.
Isabella, wife of Ephraim Jellison, October 2, 1841, 63 years.
Ephraim Jellison, May 8, 1846, 73 years.
John Vaughn, September 31, 1864, 69 years.
Thomas Jellison, September 20, 1864, 66 years.
Rebecca Jellison, wife of Thomas Jellison, March 28, 1864, 66 years.
Frederica, wife of Martin Heniser, February 12, 1877, 70 years.
Sarah, wife of Christian Heaston, April 18, 1874, 67 years.

A Mr. Clawson is thought to have been the first burial in Ritenour's cemetery, date not known. In 1836, it had come to be extensively used. Perhaps 200 persons had by that time been laid to rest there, from the whole region for eight or ten miles around, and, perhaps, farther even than that.

Salem (on boundary near Swain's Hill, Section 32, Town 19, Range 13).—Catharine, wife of Frederick Zimmerman, March 7, 1856, 80 years.
Frederick Zimmerman, died in 1835; don't know where he was buried, no age given.
Barton Andrews, November 14, 1856, 64 years
Elizabeth Tallman, January 5, 1857, 73 years.
James Tallman, husband of the above, February 4, 1857, 74 years.
Lieut. Salathiel D. Colvin, in the battles of Shiloh and Stone River; wounded at Chickamauga, and died at Chattanooga October 9, 1863, 36 years.
Rachel Andrews, September 29, 1867, 69 years; an earnest Methodist.
Joseph Macy, February 18, 1869, 66 years.
Jonathan W. Hunt, November 8, 1873, 59 years.
Nancy, wife of Albert Macy, July 24, 1874, 97 years.
John C. Retz, August 4, 1876, 66 years.
Hardy Evans, March 18, 1877, 77 years.
Sarah E., wife of William Browne, 73 years.
Saratoga (Ward Township, Section 6, Town 20, Range 15; James T. Evans, proprietor; 110 lots; recorded June 9, 1874).—Ann, wife of John A. Warren, April 21, 1878, 63 years.
Mary, wife of John R. Warren, October, 1879, 52 years.
David Almenrode, June, 1880, 65 years.
Hiram Gillum, July 27, 1871, 67 years.
Mary Ann, wife of John A. Bransz, March 10, 1875, 62 years.
Elizabeth, wife of E. C. Hendrickson, February 5, 1876, 60 years.

Saratoga Cemetery is new, the town itself having had an existence only a few years.

Sheets' Graveyard (near Union City, Section 28, Town 18, Range 1).—Lydia, wife of A. Sinks, April 24, 1858, 62 years.
Peter Weimar, August 31, 1859, 60 years.

Never much used, and now lying in the corner of a field, wholly neglected, the stones lying broken and prostrate on the ground, a sad sight, a forsaken, forgotten graveyard, left to the weeds or the ruthless plow desecrating the hallowed soil.

Snow Hill (Washington Township, Section 23, Town 19, Range 16).—John Hinshaw June 18, 1855, 72 years.
Margaret, wife of John Hinshaw, February 17, 1860, 69 years.
Isaac Robbins, October 22, 1865, 72 years.
Samuel Hiatt, March 12, 1866, 61 years.
John N. Derickson, November 7, 1876, 69 years.

Originally in connection with a Methodist Church, but that has been gone for many years.

Sparrow Creek (north of Buena Vista; Section 33, Town 20, Range 14).—This graveyard is much out of repair. Few tombstones are found. Daniel Beals' grave is there, who was quite aged. Several Addingtons lie there, but no gravestones, except Daniel Beals,' show an age beyond sixty years. Many graves appear, but nearly all have only rough stones, without any mark or definite token. A Friends' Meeting-House was once here, but it has been gone for forty years or more. The cemetery has an old fence around it, but the only way of access is through an old field, and it is, perhaps, fifty rods from the highway.

Spartansburg (Greensfork Township, Section 10, Town 16, Range 1).—Ephraim Bowen, Sr., August 20, 1858, 89 years.
Hannah Bowen, September 1, 1844, 67 years.
Elizabeth Ranney, September 7, 1859, 72 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Abram Manning, February 16, 1862, 69 years.
Caleb Manning, August 22, 1864, 64 years.
Mary Jackson, August 5, 1863, 66 years.
Hosea Knox, January 3, 1869, 73 years.
Jesse Manning, August 4, 1871, 75 years.
John McKim, May 26, 1873, 61 years.
Mary, wife of Thomas Hough, July 1, 1873, 66 years.
James M. Bailey, October 22, 1873, 64 years.
Margaret, wife of Philip Hulvey, August 21, 1874, 73 years.
Elizabeth, wife of William Sasser, January 1, 1877, 64 years.
Mary Ann Patchin, February 27, 1879, 65 years.
Edward Jackson, February 26, 1879, 79 years.
Steubenville (Green Township, Section 13, Town 21, Range 12).—Benjamin Morris, March 28, 1846, 88 years.
Moses Meek, March 22, 1846, 75 years.
Hannah, wife of Moses Meek, September 1, 1862, 80 years.
William P. Gray, November 7, 1860, 72 years.
Mary, wife of William P. Gray, October 18, 1861, 72 years.
Hannah, wife of John Dull, January 3, 1876, 50 years.
Elizabeth, wife of Zebulon Cantrell, July 2, 1872, 61 years.

A church was built here in early times, but never finished, nor used for worship.

Swingly (one and a half miles southeast of Windsor, Stony Creek Township; Section 32, Town 20, Range 12).—Catharine, wife of Christian See, August 18, 1836, 49 years.
Mary, wife of Elias King, March 1, 1845, 68 years.
Jane, wife of Moses Neely, March 26, 1848, 62 years.
Agnes, wife of Henry Jones, July 26, 1848, 66 years.
Moses Neely, April 3, 1853, 72 years.
Margaret Clevinger, January 26, 1867, 76 years.
Samuel Clevinger, Sr., June 7, 1867, 81 years, soldier of 1812 probably.
Daniel Kegerries, born May 25, 1806, and died September 4, 1868, 62 years.
Jacob Helm, September 10, 1869, 65 years.
Mary A., wife of Daniel Kegerries, November 6, 1874, 58 years.
Soldier, no name nor stone.

Thornburg (Hardshaw Township, Section 4, Town 20, Range 12).—Abram Clevinger, very old; Eunice, wife of the above, very old. We learned but little concerning the above burial ground. It was once with a Friends' Meeting-House, but the meeting was "laid down" (discontinued), and the graveyard has been but little in use for many years. We did not succeed in making it a visit. That is the only one (so far as we are aware) to which we failed to give a personal examination, being prevented therefrom by unavoidable circumstances.

Union Baptist (Colored) (southeast of Pleasant View, Section 13, Town 19, Range 12).—Amy, wife of Robert Scott, 1864, 84 years.

Robert Scott, buried at Dunkirk in 1848, 78 years.

Betsy Stafford, very old.

Rev. Samuel Jones, 62 years, Baptist,

Isom Davis, 70 years.

George Smith, old.

Betsy Jones, very old.

Wells White, old.

Jacob Boone, very old.

Charity Boone, 80 years.

Note—No stones; graveyard neglected.

Union (two miles south of Windsor, Section 5, Town 20, Range 12)—Drummond Smithson, December 31, 1844, born July 12, 1754; one year old when the old French war broke out; twenty-two years old (lacking eight days), at the signing of the "immortal declaration," died aged 90 years.

Mary, wife of Drummond Smithson, January 16, 1851, 97 years.

John Fletcher, August 20, 1854, 60 years.

John B. Sample, August 23, 1854, 64 years.

William Moore, October 7, 1855, 88 years.

Winney, wife of William Moore, October 17, 1855, 95 years.

John Fetters, December 30, 1859, 59 years.

John M. Driskill, Company B, Thirty-sixth Indiana, died at Nelson's Furnace, Ky., February 26, 1862, 25 years, Simon Driskill, died at Nashville, Tenn., March 25, 1862, 23 years.

William S. Driskill, Company B, Thirty-sixth Indiana, December 31, 1862, 21 years,

Mary, wife of William Jackson, February 17, 1864, 63 years.

Mary B., wife of Samuel B. Clevenger, May 24, 1864, 55 years.

Alexander Campbell, May 19, 1865, 61 years.

Mary, wife of John Fetters, October 7, 1865, 63 years.

Samuel B. Clevenger, November 30, 1865, 64 years.

Solomon Faulkner, born June 26, 1799, and died August 25, 1867, 68 years.

Elizabeth Wolfe, wife of Michael Wolfe, November 4, 1867, 72 years.

Catharine, wife of Wesley Clevinger, September 20, 1868, 60 years.

John A. Clevinger, May 25, 1869, 43 years.

Jinzy, wife of William Moore, January 27, 1870, 74 years.

Michael Wolfe, born March 18, 1791, and died March 21, 1870, 79 years.

Susannah, wife of E. T. Thornburg, November 4, 1872, 60 years.

Rev. Samuel Hardesty, February 11, 1873, 44 years.

Wesley Clevinger, June 8, 1873, 67 years.

Rebecca, wife of Isaac Amburn, June 28, 1873, 76 years.

John Dudley, March 24, 1874, 83 years.

Mary, wife of Ira E. Smithson, July 13, 1874, 75 years.

William B. Thornburg, December 26, 1874, 33 years.

Sarah, wife of Samuel O'Donald, January 23, 1875, 70 years.

John Parker, February 16, 1875, 82 years.

Samuel O'Donald, May 6, 1875, 71 years.

Margaret, wife of James Neely, June 20, 1875, 64 years.

James Neely, March 8, 1876, 67 years.

John N. Odle, November 3, 1876, 54 years.

John W. Dudley, December 2, 1876, 34 years.

Mahlon Clevinger, February 20, 1877, 60 years.

Docia, wife of John Dudley, February 3, 1878, 77 years.

Elder George W. Terrell, March 22, 1878, 74 years.

Henry Pool, August 30, 1878, 43 years.

Margaret, wife of Amos Smith, November 3, 1879, 76 years.

Ruth, wife of Solomon Faulkner, born August 21, 1808, and died June 2, 1881, 73 years.

Three soldiers, no name nor stone.

At the first grave in Union Cemetery, Mr. Clevinger, then a young man, stuck into the ground a sprig of a tree, and the sprig is growing still, a pretty large tree. Union Cemetery is large, finely situated, and well cared for, and it seems to be extensively patronized.

Union Chapel (west of Bloomingsport, Section 11, Town 18, Range 13).—Ann, wife of Isaiah Rogers, February 21, 1849, 55 years.

Jane Mumbower, December 6, 1849, 68 years.

Rachel, wife of William Davisson, January 23, 1852, 73 years.

John Simcoke, July 11, 1853, 86 years.

Robert Willis, February 22, 1857, 88 years, soldier of old wars.

Edward Fennimon, December 29, 1858, 78 years.

John W. Cox, Company F, Thirty-sixth Indiana; enlisted September 1, 1861; wounded at Chickamauga, and died at Chattanooga October 8, 1863, 18 years.

William Engle, Thirty-sixth Indiana, wounded at Shiloh, 21 years.

William Botkin, Sixty-ninth Regiment Indiana, was in the battle of Richmond, Ky., and died at St. Louis February 6, 1863, 21 years.

Mercy, wife of Joshua Sharp, June 2, 1863, 65 years.

Mary Ann, wife of Edward Fennimore, September 19, 1868, 93 years.

Pryor Harvey, December 8, 1869, 68 years.

Samuel W. Fennimore, April 10, 1872, 65 years.

Susanna, wife of Robert Penery, October 27, 1873, 66 years.

Thomas Phillips, April 9, 1874, 82 years.

Caleb Fennimore, March 24, 1876, 61 years.

Susan, wife of W. A. Mumbower, November 22, 1876, 62 years.

Peter Botkin, November 24, 1876, 72 years.

Robert Willis, a soldier of 1812; date and age not known; Capt. Craig, of the last war; William Daugherty and wife, who were very old, are buried at Union Chapel. He was a poor man with a large family, but was a hard worker, and cleared up during his life vast tracts of land.

CEMETERIES, UNION CITY.

The first burying ground for Union City was laid out by Hon. Jere Smith and Dr. J. N. Converse, north of the original plat, chiefly between Howard and Plum, and somewhat north of Division street, and including what is now Oak Grove, the elegant residence and grounds of E. L. Anderson, Esq.

There were 517 lots for private owners, and Lots 25 and 26 besides. Some burials took place there, but the ground seemed not suitable, and it was but little used, and at this time many, perhaps most or all of the bodies, have been removed.

Other grounds were selected, an association was formed, and a new cemetery was established. Union City Cemetery Association was formed February 4, 1863. The first Trustees were Finley Maloy, James White, Isaac P. Gray, John L. Rosenbush, Joel N. Converse.

The company first bought six acres of land of Joel N. Converse, west of the present city limits, between the pike and the railroad. They next (in 1867), bought about one acre of Joel N. Converse, extending the ground north to the pike. and two acres southward to the railroad; plat recorded October 21, 1870. The third purchase was twelve acres west of the creek (1874). This last tract, as also the new grounds south, has never been platted into lots. Cost of the grounds: six acres at $100 per acre, $600; three acres at $150 per acre, $450; twelve acres at $200 per acre, $2,400; total, $3,450. The original six acres were platted into 825 lots, with suitable streets between the lots, the record of the plat being made July 28, 1863, and the new purchase north has been platted. The plat was recorded October 21, 1870; number of lots, 126; size of lots, eight to thirty feet wide; price of lots in general, $1.50 per foot front; price of lots on streets, 10 per cent extra; price of lots at corners, 20 per cent extra; owners of lots, 328; price of digging graves at first, $1.50, under ten years; $2 above ten years; price of digging graves now, $3 and $4. The company has been somewhat crippled by the last purchase, being considerably in debt on account of it, and not much improvement has been attempted. However, a hedge has been set around the cemetery, and it is now in the second year's growth. The ground is well situated for the purposes of burial, being moderately rolling. Several lots have been set apart irrecoverably for the interment of soldiers, as also a considerable space for the use of non-lot owners. Many fine monuments and some costly ones have been erected at the graves of friends, and some shrubbery has been set, and fences placed around lots, and the cemetery begins to present a neat and tasteful, and even elegant appearance. Among others is found the beautiful shaft erected as a soldier's monument. It makes a fine display, and is a creditable and appropriate tribute to the memory of the brave departed. It is to be regretted that provision was not made for engraving upon the monument the several names of the soldiers at their respective interments. The Sextons have been as follows: First, Samuel Sutton, until April, 1872; second, F. A. Hinsch, until April, 1874; third, J. M. Wren, until December, 1875; fourth, B. F. Buckingham, to the present time, July 27, 1881.

No record of burials was kept for many years. The record was begun April 8, 1872, and has been continued to the present time.

The number of interments is given herewith: Rest of the year 1872, twenty-nine; whole of 1873, forty-one; 1874, thirty-nine; 1875, forty-five; 1876, sixty-nine; 1877, forty-five; 1878, thirty-six; 1879, fifty-two; 1880, forty-three; 1881 (part), forty.

The varying number of interments is somewhat striking: Last five months of 1880, thirteen; first five months of 1881, thirty-five; last three months of 1880, five; first three months of 1881, twenty-four; last two months of 1880, one; first two months of 1881, fourteen. The lowest number in one month is none; the greatest number is ten, viz., March, 1881.

This record of interments does not show the full number of deaths in the city or its vicinity. The Catholics have a cemetery in the neighborhood, and all persons belonging to them are interred in that inclosure. Many are taken to the places where friends or companions have been deposited in former years. Ever since the appointment of memorial services on Decoration Day, May 30th, (or May 31st if the 30th fall on Sunday), by the Grand Army of the Republic, appropriate and affecting, and sometimes greatly impressive observances have been held at the cemetery from year to year. The present burial-ground is apparently well suited to its objects, and will remain doubtless permanently consecrated to its sadly interesting purposes. The location is at a reasonable, yet not too great distance from the city. The ground is sufficiently rolling to present an agreeable appearance, and dry enough to answer the use to which it has been devoted, with sufficient slope, moreover, to allow a ready and adequate drainage, lying on both sides of the bed of the Little Mississinewa.

The situation is retired, yet not too much so, lying between the highway leading to the fair grounds on the one hand, and the two westward railroad tracks on the other, and only just outside the city limits. As already hinted, something has been done by way of ornamentation, many tasteful and some costly monuments have been erected in memorial of friends who are "loved, not lost;" and the whole result appears to approve the judgment and justify the discretion of those who made this second selection of a cemetery for Union City. The regulations as to entrance and deportment are strict, yet not too severe, but simply intended to secure the quiet, order and decorum needful in a place allotted to the resting-place for the dead. Location Wayne Township, Section 26, Town 18, Range 1—Amasa Payne, November 2, 1856, 84 years. Catharine Roe, January 15, 1857, 59 years. Note.—The above must have been buried elsewhere and transferred to this place, or else there was a private burying ground here before its use as a public cemetery.

Frederic Roe, October 17, 1871, 69 years.

John Hartman, March 19, 1864, 22 years, First Sergeant of Company C, Fifty-seventh Indiana Regiment, served two years and four months, and died at home.

Barbara, wife of Charles Patty, October 22, 1864, 64 years.

Rev. Timothy Colclazer, September 26, 1865, 54 years.

Isaac Beal, April 11, 1869, 60 years.

Mary, wife of Enoch Rogers, October 4, 1868, 81 years.

Mary Swain. September 25, 1868, 64 years.

James M. Worstler, July 8, 1868, 27 years.

Samuel Janes, June 29, 1869, 79 years.

Mary Morris, September 14, 1869, 78 years.

Darius Converse, March 21, 1869, 52 years.

D. French, M. D., January 26, 1870, 68 years.

Ann, wife of L. B. Pope, June 21, 1870, 75 years.

Jacob Livengood, October 26, 1870, 63 years.

Sarah, wife of J. G. McKee, December 30, 1871, 65 years.

Elizabeth Thomson, March 20, 1871, 84 years.

James McFeely, September 23, 1872, 75 years.

Ariston Dwinell (teacher), February 17, 1872, 30 years.

Edward Starbuck, Jr., September 25, 1874, 61 years.

Mary Starbuck (first wife), January 13, 1860, 40 years.

Lydia Ann Starbuck (second wife), March 27, 1863, 37 years.

Hon. Jeremiah Smith, December 28, 1874, 70 years.

Cynthia Smith, wife of the above, July 7, 1872, 57 years.

Eva G. Heck, May 1, 1875, 68 years.

Timothy Masslich, Litiz, Penn., March 4, 1875, 73 years.

Hannah, wife of William Parent, October 28, 1875, 65 years.

John Keever, September 10, 1875, 61 years.

Jacob Livengood, June 23, 1875, 63 years.

John G. Doser, August 13, 1876, 65 years.

James Rubey, M. D., December 17, 1876, 70 years.

Melissa A., wife of J. S. Lotz, March 26, 1876, 51 years.

Susan, wife of B. Harris, March 12, 1877, 84 years.

Louisiana, wife of Daniel Paulus, December 1, 1877, 68 years.

Louisa Wilkerson, March 21, 1878, 80 years.

Nathan P. Woodbury, March 15, 1878, 79 years.

John Fisher, February, 1881, 89 years.

Mrs. Masslich, mother of Bentley Masslich, summer of 1881; very old.

Jane Fisher, relict of John Fisher, February, 1882, 78 years.

White River—Friends (Section 22, Town 20, Range 14).—Thomas Wright, April 30, 1835, 74 years.

Thomas Ward, February 11, 1839, 80 years.

Margery Ward, May 12, 1843, 84 years.

Nathan Barker, April 24, 1839, 71 years.

Elizabeth, wife of Michael Hill, March 24, 1846, 62 years.

William McCristy, January 20, 1850, 84 years.

Joseph Moffatt, June 30, 1854, 78 years.

Mary Moffatt, April 19, 1855, 64 years.

Joshua Cox, May 19, 1853, 65 years.

Joseph Keys, October 6, 1854, 86 years.

Mary, wife of Thomas Nixon, March 29, 1857, 73 years.

Mary Hickman, November 1, 1857, 72 years.

Ruth, wife of Nathan Barker, April 24, 1859, 61 years.

Zachariah Hiatt, December 31, 1860, 82 years.

Anna Hiatt, December 17, 1859, 81 years.

Jemima, wife of Andrew Nesbit, June 3, 1859, 81 years.

Margaret, wife of Joshua Cox, April 16, 1861, 67 years.

Martin Comer, April 29, 1863, 70 years.

Amy, wife of Joab Ward, August 27, 1864, 67 years.

William H. Broughman, Company C, Eighth Indiana Cavalry, April 12, 1866, 20 years.

Thomas Pierce, November 5, 1868, 68 years.

David Haworth, August 2, 1868, 74 years.

Joel Ward, October 2, 1869, 81 years.

Ruth Ward, May 12, 1871, 77 years.

John Fraze, October 12, 1871, 93 years.

Abigail Fraze, September 14, 1871, 77 years.

Benjamin E. Keys, August 4, 1872, 75 years.

Jacob Hickman, March 15, 1873, 63 years.

Joab Ward, November 5, 1874, 84 years.

Sally (Wright)Coats, July 11, 1875, 86 years.

John Coats, 1878, over 90 years.

—— Coats, 1877, 86 years.

Miranda, wife of Isaac Coats, September 8, 1878, 68 years.

Isaac Coats, July 23, 1876.

White River Cemetery is very old, Friends' meeting having been established about or even before 1820. Mrs. Edwards, mother of Hamilton Edwards, resident south of Winchester, was buried in the autumn of 1881, being of a great age, 84 years.

Whitesell (three miles west of Union, Section 8, Town 20, Range 15).—Mary Weld, August 19, 1851, 60 years.

Thomas Weld, January 3, 1852, 69 years.
Eleanor Taggart, July 25, 1857, 92 years.
Jane W., wife of J. B. Lawrence, January 17, 1858, 68 years.
Samuel Conklin, March 30, 1860, 73 years.
Joel F. Smith, November 3, 1863, 18 years.
Henry Whitesell, March 7, 1868, 82 years.
William Martin, September 4, 1872, 67 years.
Jacob Whitesell, April 9, 1877, 78 years.
Mary, wife of Jacob Whitesell, November 14, 1863, 72 years.
Magdalena, wife of Henry Whitesell, July 3, 1877, 83 years.

Windsor (Stony Creek Township, Section 29, Town 19, Range 12).—Three soldiers, no stone, and, of course, no inscription.

John Dye, June 8, 1836, a soldier in the war of 1812, probably, 44 years.

Jacob Cline, February 1, 1840, soldier; must have been a mere lad, born in 1797, 43 years.

Isaac W. and infant daughter, children of Jeremiah and Cynthia Smith (Judge Jere), died August 6, 1850, and June 29, 1853, ages not given.

Luke Arnold, October 25, 1856, 60 years.

Samuel Wilson, September 9, 1858; a soldier, born in 1794, eighteen years old in 1812, 64 years.

John Gable, August 13, 1865, born in 1792, 74 years.

Christena, wife of Jonathan Clevinger, June 27, 1859, 71 years.

Thomas Wallace, February 7, 1870, 63 years.
Nancy Cline, December 10, 1870, 68 years.
John Carver, May 13, 1866, 62 years.
James Hays, September 16, 1874, 86 years.
Jonathan Clevinger, February 12, 1875, 87 years.
Amos A. Harold, December 20, 1875, 74 years.

Perry C. Gunkel, February 25, 1877, a soldier in the civil war, 36 years.

Arabella, wife of Owen O. Thomson, May 14, 1878, 59 years.

Winchester (old; David Heaston, proprietor; seventy-seven lots; location, southwest of Winchester, Section 20, Town 20, Range 14; size, 151½x227½ feet; recorded May 22, 1862. A. J. Neff's addition; location, south side; thirty-six lots; recorded July 19, 1867. A. J. Neff's second addition, 126 lots; location, north and east sides; recorded August 14, 1816. Fountain Park Cemetery, established by Asahel Stone, and donated by him to the citizens of Winchester for the purposes of a public cemetery; size of tract, forty acres; recorded March 1, 1880).

John Huston, March 11, 1849, 65 years.

Phebe Hull, wife of John Hull, Sr., August13, 1849, died of cholera, 76 years.

John Hull, Sr., born in Connecticut May 1, 1766, and died August 20, 1849, cholera, 83 years.

Susannah Reece, born April 10, 1776, and died May 31, 1850, 74 years.

Maria, wife of James Ramsey, February 2, 1852, 71 years.
Jemima, wife of Jacob Kelly, March 18, 1855, 73 years.
John Way, September 25, 1856, 78 years.
Paul W. Way, October 20, 1856, 71 years.

Rebecca, wife of William Badgley, born in New Jersey December 11, 1772, and died February 9, 1859, removed to Fountain Park Cemetery in 1881, 86 years.

Achsah, wife of Paul W. Way, May 1, 1859, 73 years.
Rev. Simeon H. Lucas, October 31, 1860, 45 years.

Hester, wife of John H. Campbell, November 29, 1860, 77 years.

Esther, wife of Edmund Burton, October 7, 1861, 66 years.

Martin R., son of E. and S. Thomas, Company G, Eighth Indiana Infantry, three years, August 3, 1862, 21 years.

Lieut. W. L. Steele, Company H, Eighty-fourth Indiana, died at Franklin, Tenn., May 16, 1863, 37 years.

Ann, wife of J. W. Steele, July 27, 1863, 63 years.

Elizabeth, wife of Jonathan Edwards, December 26, 1863, 78 years

David Ramsey, born in York County, Penn., October 17, 1802, and died June 9, 1864, 62 years.

Susannah Craig, born August 16, 1794, and died June 3, 1864, 70 years.

Erastus H. Reed, son of Nathan Reed. Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana, August 20, 1864, 19 years.

Elizabeth Neff, oldest daugher of John Neff, Esq., and wife of Jacob Elzroth, Esq., born in Botetourt County, Va., October 16, 1796, and died September 20, 1864, 68 years.

Jacob Elzroth, 1863, very old.

Capt. J. Lawrence Neff, Captain of Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Indiana, commissioned in February, 1864, Resaca to Atlanta, Franklin and Nashville; killed at Kingston, N. C., at the head of his company, March 10, 1865, age not given.

Edmund Burton, October 4, 1865, 85 years.
Cary S. Goodrich, October 14, 1865, 54 years.

John Bolender, served six years as a grenadier, three years in active service against Napoleon Bonaparte, and died December 9, 1865, 75 years.

David Heaston, December 18, 1865, born in Rockingham County, Va., came to Randolph in1819, soldier of 1812, 72 years.

Sarah, wife of Christian Heaston, May 1, 1866, 63 years.

Rebecca Pierce, widow of John B. Goodrich, born at Petersburg, Va., August 31, 1787, and died June 1, 1867, 80 years.

Polly, wife of Jehiel Hull, June 17, 1867, 61 years.
Catharine Fie, September 14, 1867, 80 years.
Christian Habigh, April 8, 1868, 69 years.
Nancy, wife of John Huston, February 5, 1869, 76 years.
Joseph Martin, June 16, 1871, 71 years.

Henry Summers, born in Augusta County, Va., July 15, 1784, and died August 10, 1871, 87 years.

Sarah, wife of Thomas Brown, December 26, 1871, 74 years.
Anna, wife of Nathan Reed, March 25, 1872, 64 years.
Henry Carver, August 19, 1872, 69 years.
Elizabeth Segraves, October 30, 1872, 68 years.
Walter S. Monks, March 28, 1873, 57 years.
George W. Monks, no stone.
Jehiel Hull, 1873, 70 years.
Ellis Mullen, November 18, 1874, 76 years.
Martha M. Watts, wife of Samuel Watts, Feb. 19, 1875, 68 years.

Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Martin, born at Parmasen, Rhein, Bavaria, in 1815, and died June 9, 1874, 59 years.

Catharine, wife of George Hay, March 26, 1876, 67 years.
Jonas Lykens, August 15, 1876, 78 years.
Catharine, wife of David Heaston, August 9, 1876, 83 years.
Thomas Brown, May 20, 1877, 85 years.
Christian Heaston, September 6, 1877, 77 years.
Philippine, wife of Henry Harmann, April 13, 1878, 68 years.
David Wysong, April 26, 1878, 79 years.
George Hay, May 15, 1878, 63 years.
George G. Gerstner, April 5, 1879, 70 years.
Edward Wright, August 23, 1880, old.
Soldier, unknown.
Mrs. George W. Monks, no stone; particulars unknown.

Promiscuous.—John Monks and wife are buried on the old Monks farm, south of Winchester; John Irving and wife are buried on the Irving farm, south of Winchester; Windsor Wiggs is buried in the cemetery on the Crist farm, southeast of Spartanburg. He died November 27, 1856; Sarah Wiggs, widow of Windsor Wiggs, died August 4, 1881; William Smith, father of Hon. Jere Smith, buried on his old farm in Section 5, Town 18, Range 13; burying ground 150 feet square, iron fence around the grave; Mrs. William Smith, wife of the above, buried at the same place; Daniel Bales, buried at Sparrow Creek Cemetery, southwest of Dunkirk.

Doubtless many persons are interred throughout the county in private grounds unknown to the general public at the present time, as also to the writer of these sketches.

In concluding this memorial to the dead, it is proper to state that great labor has been bestowed upon the subject, yet the result obtained cannot be supposed to be entirely accurate, nor fully complete. But it may be truly declared that the whole is as thorough as it was in the power of the author to accomplish; and the hope is indulged that a generous public will appreciate the difficulties of the task attempted, and forgive such defects and errors as may by a critical examination be discovered to exist.

CHAPTER X.

COLORED PEOPLE.

SETTLEMENTS—TEMPERANCE—CHURCHES—BIOGRAPHY.

PERSONS of color came so early to the county, and in such numbers, and have remained, during the years since those olden days, dwellers in these regions, and in Randolph County in particular, so extensively and so permanently, that it has been deemed advisable to give an account of them in a separate chapter.

SETTLEMENTS.

There are three colored settlements in Randolph County.

1st, Greenville Settlement, northeast of Spartansburg.

2d, Cabin Creek Settlement, on Cabin Creek, not very far from Huntsville.

3d, Snow Hill Settlement, Washington Township.

GREENVILLE SETTLEMENT.

In 1822, Thornton Alexander, Sr., with a wife and nine children, moved from Warren County, Ohio, to Greensfork Township, northeast of Spartansburg. Within a few years, he entered 300 acres of excellent land. In a short time, other colored families followed Mr. Alexander, so that a considerable settlement was soon formed. In 1833, eleven years after he had entered the wilderness, the following settlers were in the region:

Ezekiel Lewis, east of Thornton Alexander; Collier Simpson, north of Alexander; William Lewis; Philip Holland, near the Griffis farm; Allen Davis, near Jessup's Mill; John Randle, near Spartansburg, 1833.

Colored persons continued to come in until, by 1846, the settlement had been quite large. About 1845, the Union Literary Institute, a manual labor boarding school, was established for indigent youth there by the munificence of Benjamin Thomas, James Moorman, James Clemens, Thornton Alexander and others, friends of the poor, both white and colored. Land to the amount of near one hundred and eighty acres was donated, and a charter obtained from the Legislature. Rev. E. Tucker was employed as Principal, and a boarding house, by donations from friends of the cause, was erected. The school was opened in June, 1846, and for years the school was somewhat famous throughout the region. Good schools were scarce then, and large numbers of all colors attended from Randolph and adjacent counties. Colored youth were members of the school from Dayton, Piqua, Cincinnati, Richmond, Logansport, Indianapolis, from Shelby and Mercer Counties, Ohio, and even from Mississippi. Many colored youth received an education there who have since done good work for their people.

Prof. Tucker left in 1854, and, after passing through various hands, and being intermitted for several years, the institution was revived again, and Prof. Tucker took charge, and taught from 1873 to 1879.

The school is now under the supervision of Mr. Milton A. Roberts, a graduate of Spiceland Academy, a gentleman of fine talents and of high promise for future usefulness as an instructor of youth. It was originally a boarding school, but the change of times has brought it to be chiefly a neighborhood school. However, it is still accomplishing a good work for those who attend its instructions.

The settlement on the Indiana side of the State line now contains some thirty families, either owning the land or renting from others.

Most of the early settlers are dead. John Randle alone remains of the grown-up settlers, old and blind, but sprightly and cheerful. [He died, October, 1881.] Isaac Alexander, who came there as a boy seven years old, in 1822, still resides in the settlement.

Many of the men volunteered in the army and gave good service in helping to crush the rebellion and to secure freedom to the down-trodden millions of their race; and they are reaping their due reward in the enjoyment of a full citizenship, bestowed on them by a grateful country.

Some of the prominent residents now are William Shoemake, William Shaffer, Hiram Simpson, Jesse Flood, John Mason, Jesse Okey, Hiram Cotman, John M. Thompson, Lemuel Stokes, Jackson Okey, Charles Mason, Levi Linsey, Pierce Thomson, Reuben Randle, William Lewis, Douglas Holland, William Oglesby, John Randle, Sylvester Holland, Charles Fox, Thomas Burden, Isaac Alexander, Richard Goens, John W. Randle, Patrick Goodall, etc., etc.

The settlement here lies on both sides of the Ohio line, with by far the largest part in Ohio. In Indiana, a territory about one mile by three is occupied, while in Ohio nearly three miles square is covered by the colored residents. In Ohio, four school districts are to be found, with a good schoolhouse in each, three of them being new brick edifices of good construction and neat design, and schools are maintained for seven to eight months in the year.

The nucleus of the settlement in Ohio was formed about fifty-five years ago, by James Clemens, Sr., with his large family of boys and girls, there being eight or ten children, five of whom are still living. James Clemens and his wife, Sophia, are dead, both living to be about ninety years old. He took up in his lifetime about six hundred acres of land, which is now mostly distributed among his numerous descendants. The principal residents now are Charles Clemens, James McKown, Reuben Goens, William Burden, William McKown, Zebedee Bass, Asaniah Goens, Elijah P. Clemens, Windsor W. Epps, Leander Swaney, Sandy Jones, Riley Bass, Perry Clemens, Layton Clemens, A. J. Clemens, J. W. Clemens, Charles Carpenter, John Carpenter, Willson Smith, Mrs. Mahala Clemens, Mrs. Durant, Alfred Clemens, Silas Wade, Moses Jefferson, Blake Durant, Sumner Durant, Silas Robbins and many others.

In the whole Greenville settlement, some years ago, there were about nine hundred people. There is on the Ohio side a Wesleyan Church, and on the Indiana side an African Methodist Episcopal Church. The clergyman among them are: Rev. Lemuel Stokes, Indiana side, A. M. E.; Rev. Charles Clemens, Ohio side, Wesleyan; Rev. Perry Clemens, Ohio side, Wesleyan.

There are several promising young men, most of whom are or have been teachers:

Elijah P. Clemens, teacher; Windsor W. Epps, teacher and studying law; Silas Robbins, now practicing attorney at St. Louis, Mo.; Wesley Robbins, teacher, and practicing medicine; Wiley A. Robbins, farmer; John Wade, attending school; Martin Clemens, teacher and farmer; Sumner Durant, teacher and farmer; Blake Durant, teacher and farmer; Cassius F. Stokes, teacher at Kokomo, Ind.; Lee Roy Stokes, teacher at Noblesville, Ind.; Jackson Okey, teacher and farmer; Milton A. Roberts, teacher and preacher and law student.

During the nearly sixty years of the existence of this settlement, great numbers have emigrated from this "hive" and gone to other regions, to help form new settlements, or to the towns for readier access to the facilities for work. New accessions have been as constantly made to their numbers, and the growth from without and from within, combined, despite the ceaseless dropping out to Grant County, to Paulding County, to Michigan and where not, has raised the numbers in the settlement to eight or nine hundred souls. It is wholly a farming community, not having even the shadow or semblance of a town, unless, indeed, the old shell of a village at Tampico, on the Ohio side, be reckoned such, wherein no business, except liquor-selling occasionally and a blacksmith shop now and then, has been located or transacted for years.

MUSIC.

The people of color seem to have a natural aptness for music. The settlement has long been noted for the ability of many of its members in this respect. Many "schools" have been held among them there, with pleasing success.

From 1874 to 1878, a glee club existed in the Greenville settlement, composed of a few enthusiastic young persons—Elijah P. Clemens, Adeline Clemens, Richard Cotman, Philo A. Tucker (white), Jane P. Costen, Emma Goens, Ellen Goens, Elizabeth Goens and Lillie F. Tucker (white). The club took great delight together in their musical efforts, spending much time in preparing amateur entertainments at exhibitions, temperance meetings, etc., etc.

Several of the same company formed themselves into a "band of singers," and gave several concerts through the region, with good acceptance and success.

During the years that are past, many celebrations have been held in the settlement. First of August, Sabbath schools, temperance, emancipation, politics and other subjects have called the people together at various times and their white fellow-citizens as well, in great numbers, and much pleasure and profit have been imparted by the addresses and exercises upon the several occasions.

At one celebration, some thirty years ago, Hon. George W. Julian, then a young and earnest anti-slavery man, since and for many years a noted and powerful advocate of freedom and right in the national councils, and in still later times an adherent of the modern Democratic faith, gave, before a numerous and enthusiastic assembly, in a pleasant and shady grove in the Greenville settlement, a most feeling and eloquent appeal for human liberty and right, which has not even yet been forgotten by some who that day listened thereto. And it still continues, in the minds of the advocates of human freedom who knew the earnestness of Mr. Julian in that former day, and for so many subsequent years, in the advocacy of anti-slavery, to be a standing and inscrutable mystery how he could join himself to that party with principles, aims and methods still unchanged, against which, for five and twenty years, he had waged a war so fierce, so bitter, so unrelenting. But this, like the ways of the "heathen Chinee," may be one of the things which no man can ever find out.

CABIN CREEK, COLORED SETTLEMENT.

The Greenville colored settlement began about 1822, in the State of Ohio. Not long after that date, others sought for homes in the wilderness farther west, and a nucleus was formed of what became Cabin Creek Settlement, lying chiefly, perhaps, in Nettle Creek, but extending also into West River and Stony Creek, and slightly into White River Township. Colored families began to come into the region not very long after 1825, from North Carolina and Virginia, and, after a time, the settlement greatly increased, embracing several miles in extent, and comprising some eighty to one hundred families and several hundred people. During later years, the number has materially lessened, the families having sold their possessions and moved to locations more suited to their notions. There are now some thirty to forty families, forming a single school district.

John Demory came first to the western part of the county about 1825, with Lemuel Vestal, from North Carolina, Demory being the first colored person in that part of Randolph County.

Two other colored families came soon afterward—Drew Taylor, on Eight Mile Creek, and Obadiah Anderson, in the southeast part of the county. After them came Richard Robbins, Samuel Outland and Benjamin Outland, who, as to the colored settlement proper, came first, or nearly so, shortly after 1825, settling in Stony Creek Township. Nearly all the families at present reside in Nettle Creek Township. The settlement is exclusively a farming community, as there is no town whatever in connection therewith.

Afterward came Robert Scott, Willis Crane, Nathan Ward, Dudley, Jerry Terry, Abram Cotman, Thomas Wilkerson, Matthew Chavis, Seeny, Robert Ward, Isaac Woods, Edward Outland, Abram Woods, Benjamin Skipworth, Samuel Woods, John Smith, Jesse Woods, Philip Woods (father), Jacob Woods, Dosha Smothers and a large family of girls, Colman Scott, Solomon Scott. There were also many others.

The citizens in that settlement now are chiefly James Scott, Andrew Scott, Eleazar Scott, Ananiah Scott, Martin Scott, Monroe Barber, Peter Ladd, Wyatt Jennings, John Roberts, Richard Scott, Isaac Ward, David Stafford, Stephen Perkins, Burrell Perkins, Mrs. Paulina Scott, Charles Barracks, George Hill, Perry Stafford, John Sawyer, Greenberry Scott, Isaac Woods, Charles Smothers, Anderson Moore, George Outland, John Hall, Minerva Moore, Immanuel Stafford, John Watkins and some others.

It is a fact to be noted that, in the spring of 1880, a colored man, John Roberts by name, was chosen Assessor of Nettle Creek Township.

Some old fogies, like Rip Van Winkle, who were not aware that the world had moved during the last twenty years, fought hard against the attempt to elect him, and were very indignant at their failure; but Mr. Roberts has proved to be a competent and worthy officer, and the sun shines and the rain falls as in olden time.

There is also a Baptist Church, formed long ago, declining and apparently dying some years since, but revived and re-organized, and now in active operation, with a few members.

There were at one time three school districts and three schoolhouses in the settlement, which was then seven miles long and two miles wide. There is now only one schoolhouse, though some colored families attend at the white schools, and without objection or complaint.

The school is maintained by the public funds.

A colored musical band is kept up, and its members are very proud of the fact that, at the soldiers' re-unjon, held at Winchester in the fall of 1880, they gained the prize offered for proficiency and skill in performance.

There is also an African Methodist Episcopal Church in regular operation in the settlement, in which worship and services are steadily maintained.

SNOW HILL SETTLEMENT.

Some twenty years or more ago, several colored families had their attention called to the fact that there were cheap lands at a point between Winchester and Lynn, not far from Snow Hill. They resolved to settle there, and did so, and by and by a settlement of several families had grown up in that region. They are located in Washington Township, and form a separate school district. Their children appear to be making good progress, and the settlers in general are approving themselves to the people in the region round about. Since these various settlements began to be formed, many have emigrated to other places —to Grant County, Ind., to Paulding County, Ohio, and elsewhere. But a considerable number remain in each neighborhood still.

It is a somewhat remarkable fact, and one favorable to the colored settlers, and to the people of Randolph County at large, that, in 1851, Randolph County gave a good majority against the famous thirteenth article of the new constitution adopted for Indiana in that year.

The people of these settlements belong mostly to the African Methodist Episcopal and the Wesleyan Churches. They have meeting-houses and preachers, and, on the whole, are a church-going people.

The first settlement at Snow Hill was made about 1838. Gabriel Moore came into the region in 1838. Michael and William Benson moved there in 1840. Benjamin Copeland settled there about 1847. Davison Copeland settled there about 1850; Littleburn Winburn, about 1848 or 1849. Prentiss Copeland came just before the war.

Afterward came Meredith Small, Elisha Boon, Wiley Lawrence and son, Jesse Winn, Thomas Watkins, Henry Watkins, John Bragg, Isaac Watkins, James Watkins, William Culfer.

No more than ten or twelve families have been here at one time.

The families resident now are Wiley Lawrence, William Benson, Mrs. Michael Benson, Thomas Watkins, Henry Watkins, Asbury Benson, Mrs. Elisha Boon, John Bragg, Isaac Watkins, James Watkins, William Culfer.

There is an African Methodist Episcopal society and a public school. Some of the residents own the land on which they dwell; others live on rented farms. The people of the settlement are moral and industrious, and the young are intelligent and well behaved, and, by their discreet deportment, merit the confidence and esteem of the community in general.

OTHER PERSONS.

Persons of color have been residents of Randolph County outside of the settlements referred to. Among them may be reckoned, as having been for many years active and prominent among the people, William H. Demory, who resides some miles southwest of Winchester. He is an intelligent gentleman, a thrifty, enterprising farmer, and an active, worthy citizen, and has the respect of all who know him. His biography is given elsewhere in this work. His father, John Demory, is said to have been the earliest colored settler in the western part of the county. An account of his life, also, is given elsewhere.

In later years, some persons of color have become residents of Winchester and Union City. At Winchester resides an old colored gentleman by the name of Willis Perry, whose biography is given. Another enterprising colored man is found there in the person of Kent Browne, Esq., for several years an active, thriving and respected barber in that town. He became during the war an employe in the army of Gen. Thomas M. Browne, and came North with him. Kent Browne has many friends among the citizens of the county, and bids fair to achieve an honorable success.

At Union City are a considerable number of families and persons of color, special mention of whom time and room now fail to give.

Henry McDonald, who resides at Spartanburg, Ind., has been, through a long life, a laborious, worthy and reliable citizen, and still, though numbering more than threescore years and ten, is found vigorously plying his hammer and making the sounding anvil ring.

TEMPERANCE.

There have always been among this people, as elsewhere, some who would indulge in intoxicating liquors. Considerable efforts have been put forth to check the sin and the curse of drink, with at least partial success.

In about 1850 (perhaps earlier), a temperance society was formed in the Greenville settlement, and carried on with interest and a degree of success, for, perhaps, ten or twelve years. That society finally went down. In 1874, when the Murphy movement aroused the country, a new association, auxiliary to the Christian Temperance Union, was formed and kept up for several years.

The meetings were held at the two churches at frequent intervals, and great interest was maintained for a time by speeches and essays from the members, both male and female, by volunteer singing by the young people of the settlement, by addresses from abroad, etc. And to the credit of the youth of the neighborhood, be it said, that right nobly did they each and all perform the work assigned them. Some beautiful music was presented, several excellent addresses were delivered, showing what young people, when aroused to action, can do for their country and their kind.

It is a terrible commentary on the deadly mischief wrought by the sale and use of intoxicating drinks, and how nearly impossible is the task to destroy the terrible curse, that at a liquor saloon at Tampico, Ohio, in the colored settlement, on Christmas Eve, after a drunken shooting match in the immediate vicinity, and a furious fight among the parties thereto, one man was killed outright, another was so nearly killed that for a long time his life was despaired of, and still another was so badly beaten that his face was said by one who saw him the next morning to be nearly as black as that of a Guinea negro. Four men have been nearly ever since in the Greenville jail, and the first one tried (the trial taking place during the week beginning Monday, March 6, 1882), has been found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment during life, and the trial of the second is now in progress (March 15, 1882).

CHURCHES.

For many years two churches have been maintained in the Greenville settlement, viz.: African Methodist Episcopal Church, in Indiana; Wesleyan Church, in Ohio. The churches are just one mile apart. They have been established from forty to fifty years. Great numbers have belonged, from first to last, to one church or the other, and the societies have flourished more or less during the whole course of their existence.

Regular preaching services have been constantly maintained, and revival meetings have been held, continuing sometimes for weeks together, gathering into the church fellowship sometimes scores of professed converts. Many have backslidden from time to time, but many, too, have stood fast, enduring to the end, and going up to claim the promise of a heavenly mansion from their gracious Savior and Lord. Great numbers have "died in the Lord." Their bodies slumber in the dust; their happy spirits, set free from earth and its besetments and entanglements, have gone, we may fain hope and believe, to be forever with the Lord.

Some of the members of the African Methodist Episcopal Church on the Indiana side have been Robert Scott, Matthew Lewis, Allen Davis, Daniel Burden, John Randle, Reuben Randle, Levi Linzey, the Purnell brothers (three or four of them), Nimrod Lewis and many others.

Among their preachers have been Paul Quinn (late Bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church), Mackintosh, Ward, the Revels brothers, Harper, Mac Smith, Burden, Winslow, Radcliff, Chavis, Stokes and many besides.

Snow Hill.—There is an African Methodist Episcopal Church at this settlement, which is reasonably flourishing, but we have no account of it at hand. It belongs in the same circuit with Greenville and some others.

Regular Union Baptist Church, Colored.—Nettle Creek Township, one and a half miles southeast of Pleasant View.

About 1843, Rev. Samuel Jones, from Mercer County, Ohio, came to Cabin Creek settlement and preached in a log schoolhouse near the present site of the Baptist Church (a little south of James Scott's residence). He organized a church, which has remained to the present time.

The members were Stephen Patterson, Isom Davis, James Scott and wife, Thomas Robinson and wife. The meeting-house was built in 1860–65. It was for some years a lively church, and several others were formed in the region, and a little association was organized. The churches were at Newport, Greenville settlement, one in Grant County and one in Rush County.

A meeting of the association was held at Greenville settlement, in the Wesleyan Church, on the Ohio side.

The churches at Greenville settlement and Newport (Fountain City) have gone down; the others are existing still.

The church at Nettle Creek languished on account of financial troubles, but in 1878 it was formed anew, with seven persons, and now consists of nine members, as follows:

James Scott and wife, William Shoecraft and wife, Reuben Means, Keziah Scott, Ann Eliza Scott, Rachel Sawyer, Susan Amanda Wood.

At one time there were thirty-five members belonging.

The preachers have been Messrs. Samuel Jones (first), Samuel Jones (second), John Jones, Lee Van, Reuben Means, Unis B. Plane (present minister).

They have Sunday school, but not very regularly.

Cabin Creek (Colored) M. E. Church.—Began in 1833. The first meeting-house was at their old graveyard southeast of Poplar Run Friends' Meeting-House. That house has been gone many years (closed in 1865), and they have worshiped in their schoolhouse to the present time. They are now erecting a tasteful and commodious church near their public school building, which will furnish ample accommodations for worshiping assemblies for years to come. The size is 28x38; cost, $760.

Among their early members were Nathan Ward (Rev.), Benjamin Skipworth (Rev.), Burrell Jones (Rev.), Job Felton, Willis Crain, Harrison Hurdle, Elisha Hurdle, Hardy Evans, B. Perkins, Elias Watkins, Richard Robbins, John Smith, James Ferguson, Alexander Williams, William Davison (Rev.), Benjamin Outland, Samuel Outland.

Some of their preachers have been John Turner, McIntosh, Dove, Davison, Ward, William Trevan, Skipworth, Stokes, Winslow, Quinn, Crosby, Crosby, Daniel Burdon, Harper, Price, McSmith, Nichols, Alexander Smith, Chavis.

The members now are P. Perkins, Charles Smothers and wife, Peter Ladd and wife, Maria Stafford, Edward Bolden and wife, Minerva Moore, Anna Weaver, Rev. Isaac Ward, Elias Watkins, Mary Jane Smith, Mahala Perkins, Eveline Jennings, Emily Barber, Rebecca Wood, Armeta Wood, etc.

The settlment used to be seven miles long and two miles wide; now, only about two miles long.

The meeting-house is in West River Township, two miles southeast of Pleasant View. A large part of the settlement is in Nettle Creek Township, though it used to extend into three—West River and Stony Creek also.

The first preacher in the settlement was Rev. Paul Quinn, then circuit-rider, afterward, during many years, Bishop of African Methodist Episcopal Church, and dying at Richmond, Ind., several years ago.

There were once eighty or one hundred families in that colored settlement, and the Methodist class was strong and flourishing. The settlement and the Methodist society are both much smaller than of old.

BIOGRAPHY.

We furnish herewith short accounts of some who were early pioneers among the colored people in Randolph County, or who have been in some way distinguished among them.

THORNTON, ALEXANDER, GREENSFORK.

Thornton Alexander, Sr., farmer, colored, born about 1780, Culpeper County, Va., a slave; but set free at thirty-six (1816). His master, Abram Sellers, brought him, with his wife and nine children, to Warren County, Ohio, in 1816. He moved to Randolph County, Ind., in 1822 (first colored settler on Indiana side in Greenville colored settlement). He entered, first and last, 320 acres of land. His patents are signed by James Monroe and Andrew Jackson. He died in 1851, aged about seventy-one years. He had fifteen children—three pair of twins. All lived to be grown but one pair of twins. He was twice married. The children were Gabriel and John, Henry, Thornton, Betsey, Joseph, Isaac and Jacob, Abraham, twins (no name), Lucinda, Mary, Joshua, Casey Ann.

Gabriel, ten children, six living; twice married; dead many years.

John, ten children, three living; twice married; died 1879, aged seventy-five years; second wife still living.

Henry, four children; died in 1846 by a tree-fall.

Thornton, five children, all living; wife dead many years; barber, Richmond, Ind.; seventy years old.

Betsey, married George N. Black; six children; dead about ten years.

Joseph, three children; dead thirty years.

Jacob, married Rebecca Clark; two children; South Bend; barber.

Isaac, four times married—Virginia Clark, Charlotte Gales, Eliza Bass, Elizabeth Alexander; five children, all living. He is the only one that still holds any of his father's land.

Abraham, died a young man.

Lucinda, died (date not known).

Mary, married Zebedee Smith; died years ago.

Joshua, died, date unknown.

Casey Ann, married —— Thomson; lives in Michigan.

Mr. Alexander was a very enterprising, hard-working citizen, entirely unlearned, but of good sense and with sound business judgment, very energetic and economical withal. Like the children of many another thriving, hard-working farmer, his family did not seem to acquire the habits of economy and thrift practiced by their father, and the whole tract, except some fifty acres held by Isaac Alexander and his family, has long since slipped from the fingers of his descendants, leaving very little to show in its place.

So sadly true does the fact turn out to be that the possession of a large property by a father, proves, in many instances, a nuisance rather than an advantage to his children. He works and saves and leaves his estate to them. They spend and lose, and ere many years are far worse off than if they had begun with nothing.

ISAAC ALEXANDER, GREENSFORK.

"When we came here I was ten years old. Spartansburg had not been begun. That ground was then a corn-field, and for several years afterward. Mr. Hawkins lived on the Hough place; Mr. Thomas, on the Dan Comer place; somebody on the Frank Morgan place; Mr. Bailey on the Moorman place, below town.

In the colored settlement, William Lewis and Philip Holland bought each eighty acres near the Griffis place. Lewis sold his, but Philip Holland kept his till his death, in 1872 or 1873.

Collier Simpson came about 1830. He died years ago.

Ezekiel Lewis came not long after T. Alexander. He has been dead a long time. His widow lives at Fountain City, Ind.

I was at the Indian payments the year the last one was made. The Pottawatomies were paid at Eel River, Pottawatomie Mills, beyond the Wabash, at Tippecanoe, an Indian town; and the Miamis at the forks of the Wabash, being the junction of the Wabash and Mississinewa.

There were perhaps five hundred of them in each place. The woods were full of them. The Indians were sent away the next season. I saw them at Piqua as they went down the canal to Cincinnati to take steamers down the Ohio and on the Mississippi for the far West.

I have resided in Canada five years."

Mr. Isaac Alexander has been married four times, the fourth wife being still living. He had no children except by his third wife. He resides on a part of his father's estate, and is growing old and feeble, though still able to do more or less work.

He is the only one of his father's large family who remains in the settlement. The rest are either dead or removed long ago to other regions.

WILLIAM BENSON, SNOW HILL.

Born a slave in North Carolina in 1798. His master's name was Roland Jones. He was set free in 1832. He came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1834, and to Randolph County in 1843. He married Mary Ann Moore in 1842. He has had eighteen children, four in slavery, fourteen in freedom. Eight of the fourteen are still living. He is a Methodist Episcopal and a Republican, and resides one-half mile south of Rural, on the railroad. Although eighty-four years old, he is still strong and hearty and in good spirits, thankful to the Great Giver of all good for all the mercies received. He states as follows:

My master's name was Roland Jones. I had a wife and four children, who belonged to Samuel Jones. He "broke up," and his property was sold by the Sheriff. My wife and children were sold on the block and taken to Alabama, and I never have heard from them since, except once, a short time after. My brother, Michael, and my mother, were freed with me, at my master's death.

My master had his fourth wife. We were to work the place and take care of her till she died, and we were to have the surplus of all we could make off the place, and Michael and myself were to have each one a horse and four sheep, and our freedom.

We took care of the widow till she died, and then we settled our affairs and moved to Indiana. We had $100 in money, and left $125 behind, which we got afterward. We came with John Jones, who sold out and moved to Indiana.

I had but little, but, by the blessing of God, I have been able to care for a family of fourteen children, and now see my eighty-fourth year, and I hope to be kept in peace and comfort till God shall see fit to call me home.

Samuel Jones, who owned my wife, was very prominent. He was High Sheriff of Rowan County; had been elected to the Legislature (both Houses) several terms, and was administrator of many estates; married into the wealthy Brown family, and got a large legacy from his wife's grandfather. My master gave a fine plantation to Samuel and Robin Jones, and took his share in slaves, and then set them free.

Samuel Jones flourished round like a "green bay tree" for awhile, and then "broke up" and "went to sticks." The Sheriff sold his property, and he "took the prison bound," as it is called—i. e., he was sent to jail for debt, but was allowed to live outside the jail under obligation not to go beyond a certain specified limit. He was a "Head Mason," and, in fact, was prominent in most matters of the region and time. Many believed that he "broke" full-handed.

Slavery was a hard and bitter thing, and I thank the good

Lord that I have been spared to see the end of that "sum of all villainies."

MICHAEL BENSON, COLORED, SNOW HILL.

Born in 1807, in North Carolina, a slave; set free by Rowland Jones (see William Benson); married Nancy Lewis in 1839; came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1840. He has had nine children; was a farmer, and a Republican. He died in 1864, fifty-seven years old.

His widow lives at Snow Hill settlement still, and remains unmarried. She belongs to the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

KENT BROWNE, WINCHESTER.

Born in Carroll County, Tenn., August 2, 1840. His mother had been freed before he was born, but she, and he, too, lived on the plantation where she had been a slave till he was twenty-three or twenty-four years old.

He went into the army as a hostler for Col. Thomas M. Browne, starting the "Cold New Year's," January 1, 1864, and continuing with him through the marches of the regiment in Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas and Texas, till the Colonel was mustered out of service, at Hempstead, Texas, in the spring of 1866. Coming with Col. Browne to Winchester in March, 1866, Kent began at once as a barber, and has followed that business ever since.

In 1867, he married Mary Burden, daughter of Marshal Burden, of Greenville settlement, Darke Co., Ohio, and they have no children.

He had no education when young, and has not taken time to acquire any since, but he is shrewd and active in business, and highly respected by his fellow-citizens in the town of his residence.

LEWIS BURDEN, SR.

Was born in South Carolina, a freeman, in 1782. He came to Tennessee, and afterward to Wayne County, Ind., and again to Darke County, Ohio, Greenville settlement—the latter movement in 1838. He had thirteen children, eleven of whom became grown and were married and nine are now living. Their names were William, James, Priscilla, Lucy, Silas, Lewis, Daniel, Thomas, Caroline, John, Joel, Sidna, Biddy. He died in 1848. His wife, Polly, died in 1876. She is said to have been several years older than her husband, and to have been upward of a hundred years old when she died, in 1876. If so, she must have been born before the Declaration of Independence was made, and she had lived through the entire period of our independent national existence.

ABRAHAM COTMAM, GREENSFORK.

Born in 1792 in South Carolina. He was a slave, owned by Joshua Hickman, a Baptist. His wife was Ann Maria Johnson, who was born in "Old Maryland," nine miles from Georgetown, D. C., about 1800. She belonged to Mr. Newsam. They were set free and came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1832, moving afterward to Randolph County (Cabin Creek settlement), and still after that to Greenville settlement.

He had three children, one of whom, Hiram Cotman, is now living.

Abraham Cotman died in the winter of 1876, aged eighty-four years. He bought two different tracts of land near Cabin Creek. First, he entered forty acres of land, and afterward bought forty acres nearer Winchester. His widow is now living, and resides in Greenville settlement, northeast of Spartanburg.

HILLRY CHAVOUS (COLORED)

was born August 10, 1829, in Charlotte County, Va., his ancestors having been free for several generations, during at least seventy or eighty years. He was one of fourteen children, thirteen of whom became grown and were married, and seven or eight are living now.

His father died in Virginia, in 1848, at the age of sixty years, having been a wagon-maker by trade, at which trade also Hillry worked in his youth and early manhood. His father was in good circumstances, owning 130 acres of land in Virginia, and he was an active, intelligent man, though without book education.

Hillry came, in 1855, to Washington City, working there at his business as a wagon-maker. In 1861, he came West to Oxford, Ohio, in 1861, going afterward to Iowa, working on a farm one year in Johnson County, eighteen miles from Iowa City. He spent three years at Michigan City, Ind., turning neck-yokes with Hostler & Myers. In 1866, he set up business in turning neck-yokes, etc., at Portland, Ind., entering a partnership with J. N. Templar of that place. He invested $2,000 in that enterprise, and was so unfortunate as to lose the whole. In 1868, he changed his place of business to Union City, at which place he remained until about 1881, when he removed to Parker (Morristown), on the Bee Line Railroad. At Union City, he was in business with various persons, Messrs. Hartzell, Mason, Stocksdale, Willson, etc. Mr. C. has very little education, but he possesses great mechanical skill, having invented several ingenious machines—as an oscillating engine, a lathe for turning neck-yokes, for both of which he obtained patents, and which seem both ingenious and practical, though, like many another skillful mechanician, he always lacks for means to make his contrivances extensively available.

He has been twice married. His first wife was Elizabeth Davis, and they were married at Oxford, Ohio. She died at Michigan City, having been the mother of four children, three of them still living. His second wife was Mrs. Anna (Ratliffe) Berry, who, though twice married, has had no offspring.

Ever since setting up business at Portland, Ind., he has been engaged in the turning business in some form. If he could command capital equal to his business activity and shrewdness, he would indeed make a stir among his fellow-citizens; as it is, he has, for many years, been wide-awake, and ever active and enterprising among his fellow-citizens.

JOHN DEMORY, FREE-BORN, HALF FRENCHMAN.

Was born in Charleston, S. C., in 1774. He married Sarah Robison in Anson County, N. C., in 1801. He came to Randolph County, Ind., with Lemuel Vestal, in 1825, on Stony Creek, near the Thornburgs. He had eleven children, as follows:

Mary, married William Weaver, living; Irvin, John, Hannah; Robert, living in Cabin Creek settlement; Charles, Coleman; William, living southwest of Winchester; Zachary; Phebe Ann, married Jacob Felters, living; Maston.

He was the first colored man to settle in the west part of Randolph County. The second there was Drew Taylor, on Eight Mile Creek. The third was Obadiah Anderson, near Wayne County.

Mr. Demory owned eighty acres of land and a house and lot in Winchester, at the time of his death, which took place in 1860 in his eighty-sixth year.

W. H. DEMORY, WHITE RIVER TOWNSHIP.

Is the son of John Demory, above mentioned. His biography is elsewhere given. We add some sketches describing his quaint and varied adventures from his own lips. He now owns the eighty acres west of Winchester that used to belong to his father. He is a prosperous and thrifty farmer.

ADDENDA.

"In 1847, I crossed the ocean as Steward on the steamer Washington to Southampton, and Bremerhaven, and Paris. Returning to New York, I shipped on the steamer Hermann to England again, and after that on the Iroquois from New York to the West Indies.

"I commenced life on ship-board in 1845, being body servant to Commodore Perry on the James K. Polk, which was burned at the Straits of Gibraltar, and accompanying the Commodore in a six-months' trip through the Mediterranean, the Red Sea, Egypt and elsewhere. Returning to New York, he went up the Hudson to Whitehall and so to Buffalo, and upon Lake Erie to bring a vessel thence through to Lake Erie, the Welland Canal, Lake Ontario, the River St. Lawrence, the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean, to Brooklyn Navy Yard. The ocean voyages above mentioned took place after my service with Commodore Perry as just related.

"In 1852, I came West to Cincinnati. I went upon the steamboat Fanny Bullitt as cabin boy, giving a bill of sale of myself to the Captain, because it was considered safer in going down the river into a slave country to be reckoned as belonging to some responsible party, than to go as a free man. Afterward shipping as Steward on the Echo, Capt. Key, I went up Red River to Natchitoches. The Echo was burned just below Alexandria, with a cargo of cotton. Going back, my next engagement was on the Magnolia, Capt. Thomson, running in the New Orleans and St. Louis trade. Capt. Thomson was the worst man I ever had to do with. On the way up the river, he fell out with me. I was folding napkins, and some ladies coming along handed me some papers, saying, 'Please hand these to the Captain.' I did so, thinking no harm. They proved to be 'kiss papers' from some candy they had been eating. He was a bachelor, and took the act as an insult, and, with an oath, kicked me severely. I turned in a flash and knocked him down. He was enraged, but, not venturing more summary measures, he put me on shore and had me arrested. I explained to the officer, and he believed me, and put me on an up-river steamer, and I got to St. Louis as soon as Capt. Thomson did. He had my baggage, and I presumed I should never get it. But I did, for shipping on the James H. Lucas, Capt. McGuire, at St. Louis, bound up the Missouri River, Capt. Thomson, coming to put some lady passengers on board that steamer, found me there; and he cried, 'Hallo, William; is that you?' I thought I was a goner, but he merely said, 'I have got your baggage locked up on my vessel for fear those niggers would steal it. Come and get it.' I feared that was a trap to catch me on board his vessel, but I wanted my baggage, and I went after it, and got it all right, and no harm came to me. We went up to St. Joe and back to St. Louis.

"My next trip was on the George W. Kendall, Capt. Norton. I shipped one time on the Itasca from Cincinnati via Louisville, and up the Mississippi to St. Anthony's Falls. At another time, I shipped as Steward for a trip up the Mississippi. At Nauvoo I went on shore and bought some provisions for the boat, as I had a right to do. The Clerk, however, who was also part owner, was provoked at me, because he generally bought them himself, and charged them up at advanced prices, thus filling his own pocket. He swore at me, and said he would settle with me at St. Louis. When there, he came at me with a club, and I caught his club with one hand and struck him with the other, flooring him. He was very bad and cruel, and those on board took my part, and I got out of the trouble unharmed.

"At another time, the Captain of the boat on which I was employed set me to guard a certain line, and to prevent all persons from passing beyond it. The people mostly submitted quietly; but one fellow, a boat-runner, refused to observe the directions of our Captain, and, saying he would not be ordered round by a Cincinnati free nigger, drew his revolver. I had a little one in my hip pocket, and, drawing it quick as lightning, I shot him in the mouth. He fell, and I ran into my room and hid my pistol. A comrade found it where I had hid it, and hid it again, and they never discovered it. I was taken and tried, but men testified that I was peaceable and never carried a pistol, and my attorney maintained the ground that the man fell somehow, and that, his own revolver exploding, he was shot in that way. I got clear once more by paying some fine and the costs. But these things were becoming too common to be interesting, and I left boat life, got married and settled down to business on the land."

HENRY M'DONALD, COLORED, SPANTANSBURG, BLACKSMITH.

Was born in South Carolina in 1814. His mother had been a slave, but was set free before his birth. He came to Preble County, Ohio, in 1839; married Mary Knowles, and has had four children, all dead; moved to Greenville settlement in 1856, and to Spartansburg in 1859. He learned the blacksmith's trade in South Carolina when a boy fifteen or sixteen years old, and has followed it ever since.

He is now sixty-seven years of age, but works in his shop still. He is a kind neighbor, and a skillful and faithful workman, and is respected and relied on as an upright and substantial citizen. He has a good property in the town of Spartansburg, including a fine house and lot, and the shop in which he follows his life-long vocation. He says of himself:

"I have no education. This fact has greatly hindered me in business. I forget so much of my work that I lose largely. I have never been troubled in any other way. People have always been friendly. I was to have had some schooling, but just then Nat Turner's insurrection broke out in Virginia, and laws were passed forbidding colored people to be taught. A free colored man who taught another free colored man got 500 lashes and was put in jail. A white man, for the same thing, was fined $500 and imprisoned. All gatherings of slaves separate from whites were prohibited by severe penalties; so I got no schooling. I went to Sunday school a few times before Nat Turner's day. In other respects, I got along very well. My apprenticeship lasted five years. I then worked for a man, furnishing the tools and he the shop. When a boy, I lost four years' work.

"My father (a white man) hired me out for four years (eleven to fifteen years), for $20, $25, $30 and $40; the money to be paid to me at twenty-one. But I never got it. He was killed in the Cumberland Mountains, having been robbed of $6,000 as he was coming North to buy land. The murderer was caught and hung. If father had lived, I should have got the money all right; but as it was, I never got it."

WILLIS PERRY, WINCHESTER.

Was born in Perquimans County, N. C., in 1795. He was a slave forty years. He was bought and set free by David White, a generous Quaker gentleman, and brought by him to Newport, Wayne Co., Ind., in 1835, with his wife and family of six children. Mr. Perry had married Nancy Mills in North Carolina, who was what was called "Quaker free"—i. e., her Quaker owner had done as much toward setting her free as the laws of Carolina allowed at the time. Their seventh child, Rachel, was born three weeks after the arrival of the family in Wayne County.

They had thirteen children in all. His wife died in 1862, and was buried in Dunkirk Burying-Ground, west of Winchester, her husband erecting a neat and tasteful monument over her grave, at a cost of $100, containing the following inscription:

"I was a slave, freed by a law-suit prosecuted by David White, the Quaker, may God bless his name! My husband's freedom was bought for $675. He made the money on rented land. Who of you that tauntingly say of my race, 'They can't take care of themselves,' have done better?"

They had no property when they came to this county, but Mr. Perry set to work at once with a hopeful spirit and an invincible purpose to attain a position of comfort and independence. He began by renting land of Thomas Hill, northeast of Newport. He had, the first year, fourteen acres of corn, raising a big crop, and fatting $120 worth of hogs. He worked his crop with an old blind horse that cost him $5. He bought an old cart "for a song," had it made into a wagon, and so on. Not many years after, he bought eighty acres of land near Dunkirk, for $770, paying $190 and giving notes for $580. Those notes he obtained at a heavy discount, getting them by the payment of $380 cash, thus saving $200 by the operation.

On this farm he resided till after the war, selling it at length for $3,000. He purchased property near Versailles, Darke Co., Ohio, remaining there three years, selling at a sacrifice; he returned to Indiana and settled at Winchester, where he still resides.

After the loss of his first wife, he married Hetty Ann Kimsey, which union proved a misfortune, since, after living with her four years, he was obliged to obtain a divorce.

Mr. Perry has no education, but he has always been steady, faithful, industrious, frugal, honest and respected.

His life has been long, and his adventures varied, he being now in his eighty-eighth year.

He is feeble in health, having suffered a severe attack of the palsy five years ago, and another attack not long since.

He belongs to no religious society, but says he is trying to live a pure and upright life, and hopes to meet his friends in heaven.

JOHN RANELE, GREENSFORK, 1833.

Lives in the Greenville colored settlement, and had been a resident there for forty-eight years. His story can best be told in his own words:

"I was born in Virginia, east of the Alleghany Mountains, in 1796, being a slave, and was sold on the auction block and taken to Georgia and sold again. The man who bought me bought also two others, who had, it seems, been stolen. The owner of the two came on, found, claimed and gained them. My purchaser kept the two, and gave me in part payment for them. I was then taken to South Carolina and sold by that owner to his mother. She came to Indiana in 1810, to get away from slavery. She owned four. She was a Methodist, and her husband a Quaker. Before his death, they both freed all they had owned; but she bought four more and brought them to Indiana. The company were my mistress, her son and daughter, her daughter's husband and the four slaves. Mistress died in 1813. Shortly afterward, I sued for my freedom. By Territorial law, a man might hold his slaves awhile by his recording an inventory of them, and, if under fourteen, they could be held till thirty-seven years old; if over fourteen, the slave could have his choice as to length of time. They put me down as under fourteen. This law had been declared void. Others had sued and gained freedom, and so I tried it, too. I agreed to give the lawyer $100 if he gained my suit. I had no money, of course, but I was in custody of the Sheriff, and he hired me out two years, my wages to follow the suit. I was set free, and I gave the lawyer an order on the Sheriff for $100, which he got, but I never got any more. When I heard my petition read, it made me charge my owner with pounding, beating, striking, tying, chaining, and I know not what all. I was scared, for I had made no such charges; and besides, the Clerk told me I must prove my affidavit, which I knew could not be done in that shape. I went on foot to see my attorney at Brookville, James Noble (and a noble old man he was, too), and said to him, 'Mr. Noble, I never told you my owners abused me. They never struck me a blow in my life.' He replied, 'Oh, never mind; you go home; we'll fix that all right.' When the jury brought me in free, he whispered, 'Now, Johnny, get your $3.25 and pay the jury.' (At that time, the successful party had to pay the jury.) I went and got the money of my employer and paid them, and I was a free man. This was at Salisbury, two and a half miles west of Richmond, then county seat of Wayne County. I had nothing, but began to work. I went to Fort Wayne in the fall of 1817 (by 'Quaker Trace') with some teamsters. From one mile north of Spartansburg there was no farm till near Fort Wayne. There were two stations—one at Mississinewa and one at Wabash. Fort Wayne was a fort and an Indian trading post. I was first married to Sarah Culpher in 1817. She died in six months. I married again in 1826, my second wife being Lydia Sawyer. I worked three or four years as a traveling pewter-molder, molding over old pewter, etc. My home was in Preble County, Ohio, and I traveled extensively, on horseback, with my tools in saddle-bags, through Western Ohio, to Dayton, Cincinnati, Springfield, Urbana, Toledo, etc., and so to Michigan and through Eastern Indiana, mostly, however, on Twin and Wolf Creeks, and on Mad River, Ohio. I made money, and saved enough to buy some land. I came to Spartansburg in 1833, and purchased seventy-four acres for $500, including three big hay-stacks. I bought more afterward, till I had 220 acres there, and finally sold it to Wilson Anderson in 1874. I tried to settle near Bethel, and bargained for some land, but the man's neighbors were so hostile that he backed out. I went to school a little in South Carolina to make up for lost time of white children. My mistress taught me some, and the rest I have picked up as I could. I tried to send my children to school at Spartansburg, but they were treated so unkindly that I took them out. Afterward, there was school in the colored settlement east of me, and I sent there. Daniel Hill, Ira Marine, Betsey Black, Ann Williams, etc., taught them. I have tried to keep posted on the affairs of the country. Ever since the anti-slavery movement arose, I have taken papers, sometimes several at once. I have had the Liberator, Palladium, Emancipator, Philanthropist, Standard, National Era, Wesleyan, etc. From the time of Bailey's death (National Era), I have taken the Gazette. When I came to Spartansburg in 1833, the colored settlers near the State line were Thornton Alexander and his large family of grown and married children; Ezekiel Lewis, Collier Simpson; William Lewis, father of Alfred Lewis; etc.; Allen Davis, near Jessup's Mill; Philip Holland, near the Griffis farm. Thornton Alexander was the first.

The old meeting-house (A. M. E.) was built about 1837. The religious work for both sides at first was done by the white Methodists. The African Methodist Episcopal society broke off first, but some stayed with the white Methodists till the Wesleyans arose. The white Methodist meeting-house was in Ohio, in the woods near the Clemens Burying-Ground. Afterward, the Wesleyans built a log church near their present one."

Mr. Randle has clear judgment, strong sense and firm principle. Mr. Ralph Pomroy, merchant at Spartansburg, once said that, if John Randle were white, he would be sent to the Legislature. He has always been an active and intelligent friend of education. He was one of the first Trustees of Union Literary Institute, and held that position for thirty years, and until age and infirmity obliged him to resign. He is now blind, but otherwise sprightly and active. His mind seems as bright is ever, his memory being sharp and vigorous, and it is a rich treat to talk with him of those old times when darkness lay heavy and thick over all the land. Mr. Randle has been many times to Canada. He moved there first in 1832, and once afterward. He has owned land there. He owned at one time 500 acres in the settlement, but now only 140 there, and in all, 300. He has had eleven children, five living—Mary, Reuben, Moses, Nathan, Elijah; William, Nathan and Elijah reside in Paulding County, Ohio; Mary lives at Oxford, Ohio; Moses is at Westville, Ohio; Reuben lives in the settlement in Greensfork; William has had eight children; Mary, five; Reuben, six; Moses has one. His second wife died in 1851, and he married Nancy Sizemore in 1857. This marriage did not prove fortunate, and they were divorced. She died two or three years ago. Mr. Randle now resides with his son Reuben. He has been for years totally blind, but enjoys otherwise excellent health, waiting cheerfully the hour when the darkness of earth shall be dispersed by the ineffable brightness of the glorious kingdom.

Mr. Randle died September 27, 1881, aged eighty-five years, and was buried in the old Quaker Graveyard, near C. Crist's.

RICHARD ROBBINS.

Born in South Carolina in 1800, a freeman, was a blacksmith; came to Wayne County, Ind., about 1820, and to Randolph County (Cabin Creek) about 1825; married Margaret Terry, daughter of Jerry Terry, and afterward, Susan Davis, daughter of Allen Davis. He had sixteen children—eleven by his first wife and five by his second—eight of whom are living. His children were Eliza, Agnes, Elwood, Nancy, John, Melinda, Reuben, Celia, Ann, Simeon and an infant; Clarkson, Wiley A., Wesley, Silas, Alonzo. Clarkson went South to teach after the war, and died there; John, Simeon and Reuben were in the Union army.

Mr. Robbins was an enterprising, thriving, intelligent man, a humble, active Christian and a highly respected citizen. He acquired a good property, and, a few years before his death, was worth several thousand dollars.

Though without early advantages, he became a man of much information. Many of his children have attained a good education.

He was a strong and thorough Abolitionist, and engaged earnestly in the work of that active body of citizens, and lived to see his race freed and enfranchised, and, for several years before his death, enjoyed the privilege of the ballot.

He was, in religion, a Wesleyan Methodist, and in politics, an unswerving Republican.

Of his sons, Wesley studied medicine, and Silas prepared himself for the law, and is now practicing at St. Louis. Mr. R. removed to Greenville settlement, Darke Co., Ohio, about 1857, and died there in February, 1877. His second wife had died about a year before. He had a fine property, which he had acquired by patient economy and thrift, but, through mistaken kindness to some of his children, his affairs became involved, and, in the administration of his estate, it proved insufficient fully to discharge the debts thus incurred. In earlier life, he was a blacksmith, and followed that laborious but useful and honorable business many years; but in his later life, he was mostly a farmer, being possessed at his death of a fine tract of land of 160 acres in Darke County, Ohio, and about seventy-five acres in Randolph County, Ind. He was buried in the Alexander Graveyard in Greensfork Township, Indiana.

JOHN ROBERTS, NETTLE CREEK.

Was elected in the spring of 1880 Assessor of Nettle Creek Township, the first colored Assessor in Randolph County—perhaps the first colored official in the county of any kind. They had an exciting time. He beat, they say, three preachers, was declared defeated by three votes, contested the election, and won by one vote. The struggle is said to have cost the contestants $50 apiece. Much feeling was aroused for a time. The novelty of having a colored Assessor in a township with so strong and aggressive a Democratic vote seemed to many to be intolerable, and some, in their haste, are said to have spoken somewhat harshly about the matter. But Mr. Roberts is really a fine, intelligent, genial gentleman, and fully competent withal; and public feeling soon quieted down, and the township is rather proud, on the whole, to have been the one to break the ice for the new departure. There are some forty-five colored votes in Nettle Creek Township, and so large a body of electors would seem to be justly entitled to official recognition, and neither party should object thereto.

Mr. Roberts has performed his official duties with dignity and intelligence, and no citizen finds any ground of reasonable objection to the work he has accomplished for the public.

JAMES SCOTT, NETTLE CREEK.

Is the son of Robert Scott, who came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1832, from Wayne County, and before that from North Carolina. Mr. Scott has been married twice, and has had fourteen children, all by his first wife. His second wife is still living. Mr. Scott has a fine farm of 120 acres, and a comfortable dwelling. He met with a serious misfortune a few years ago in the loss by fire of a nice residence erected not long before. He is respectable and respected, a member of the Baptist Church, and a sound Republican. Although past seventy years, he is active and vigorous, and altogether a fine specimen of the race to which he belongs.

His first wife was Hannah Demory, and the second, Casseline (Cox) Taylor, of Kentucky.

ROBERT SCOTT, STONY CREEK.

Was born a slave in 1770, in North Carolina; emancipated in 1779; married Amy Robbins, half sister of Richard Robbins; had twelve children, nine grown, seven living now.

He came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1821, and to Stony Creek, Randolph County, in 1832. He died in 1848, seventy-eight years old.

His children were Martin, Nettle Creek, ten children; Rachel (Outland), Michigan, one child; George, dead; Robert, dead; Amy, dead; James, Nettle Creek, fourteen children; Greenberry, Nettle Creek, ten children; Uriah, dead; Lewis, Michigan, five children; Robert, four children; Lydia, two children. There was one other, name not given.

He entered eighty acres of land, and followed farming.

MRS. JAMES SCOTT, NETTLE CREEK.

Was born a slave, at Frankfort, Ky., in 1829. Her maiden name was Casseline Cox. In 1845, she married Pallas Taylor. Her husband enlisted in the army during the civil war and died in the service. She came North in 1865, residing at Troy, Ohio, four years. In 1870, she married James Scott, he being much older than herself. She had five children by her husband in Kentucky. Her father had fourteen children. In 1872, at the age of ninety-eight, he visited his daughter in Randolph County. He was still alive in 1877, being one hundred and two years old. She has not heard of his death, if it has occurred. In 1877, he was still comparatively well and strong. She is an active, energetic, wide-awake woman.

MARTIN SCOTT, NETTLE CREEK.

Is the son of Robert Scott. He was born in North Carolina in about 1800; came to Randolph County, Ind., in about 1827; has had ten children, and lives in Nettle Creek.

Mr. Scott was one of the pioneers of the Cabin Creek colored settlement, formed some fifty or fifty-five years ago.

Many of the old settlers moved away, more of them died, and now few of the old stock are left, and the settlement itself has dwindled greatly.

Mr. Scott is a Baptist and a Republican, and a very old man, and, moreover, a worthy citizen.

WILLIAM SHOEMAKE, GREENSFORK.

Was born in South Carolina April 15, 1815, a freeman. He removed to Tennessee, marrying in that State, and residing there ten years. In 1837, he came to Wayne County, Ind., and to the Greenville settlement, Randolph County, in 1855. His wife, Priscilla Burden, was born in 1811, in South Carolina, daughter of Lewis Burden, who died in 1848. They have had three children, one of whom is now living.

Mr. Shoemake has always worked at farming, though when he came to Indiana they were very poor, arriving there with a one-horse cart, the children riding in the cart, and his wife and himself on foot. The first land he ever owned was forty acres, bought in the Greenville settlement in 1855. Since then, he has been constantly thriving, until now he owns 500 acres of valuable land in the region of his residence. Though he has no education, being unable either to read or to write, he has much general knowledge, and is a man of active enterprise. He is an unflinching Republican in politics. In the winter of 1878–79, he became the subject of a fearful persecution. A colored man of the region (in Darke County, Ohio) had been cruelly murdered by a large gang of armed marauders on the night of Saturday, October —, 1876. They were all (as they still are) unknown to the public. Some persons, however, imagined him to be one of the band. He was arrested, imprisoned without the privilege of bail, though the Grand Jury of Darke County had refused to find a bill against him; and herculean efforts were put forth, by every means that wit could invent or money could procure, to convict Mr. Shoemake of the murder of Stephen Wade. Many days were spent upon the trial, but, through the mercy of providence and the incessant exertions of his friends—since he was kept closely locked in jail for weeks before his trial—his innocence was declared by a jury of his countrymen, and he was let go free. The cost of his defense amounted to more than $2,000. Prominent among his earnest friends may be reckoned Reuben Goens, a gentleman of honor and integrity, whose untiring labors greatly aided in bringing the trial to the fortunate result attained. The public mind in Greenville seemed greatly excited by the fact that two terrible tragedies had been enacted in the same township by companies of men banded for the purpose; and there seemed to be a desperate attempt to find a victim of the public rage, and it happened that Mr. Shoemake was laid hold of as that victim, and every nerve was strained to carry the point. But the attempt signally failed, and Mr. Shoemake returned from his imprisonment to the congratulations of his neighbors and friends. The terrible mysteries still remain hidden in midnight darkness, and none but the banded gangs themselves seem to know who made up those fearful troops, that came—the first, in the edge of the evening, into the heart of a bustling village, and the second at midnight, under a moonlit sky, to a peaceful country home, where its inmates lay in quiet slumber, and in both cases shot to death the master of the house and the father of the family, with the most revolting brutality and the most fearful cruelty. That such things can occur in a civilized community, within the sound of the "church-going bell"—nay, almost within the shadow of the church itself—is, indeed, passing strange. Yet occur they did, and the blood of those men still cries from the ground in vain, uncleansed, unatoned for, unavenged. If truly the words of Holy Writ declare that innocent blood cannot be cleansed from the land but by the blood of those who shed it, there lies upon that community a most fearful curse, which shall yet arise to plague the perpetrators of such awful crimes.

Yet it by no means follows that Mr. Shoemake was one of the gang who murdered Wade, and, in fact, all attempts to show that he was one of the number proved utter failures.

Yet a numerous gang there was in each case, and terribly they accomplished their revolting crime. Yet "murder will out," and some day those tragedies, performed in secret, shall be "proclaimed upon the housetop," and the perpetrators of those fearful atrocities shall be exposed and brought to suffer condign punishment.

COLORED SOLDIERS.

As elsewhere, so here, the men of color flocked to the appeal of President Lincoln, and when allowed, offered themselves freely as soldiers in the Union army.

Some joined the Massachusetts colored regiments, and some the United States volunteer troops; and some, moreover, were taken as members of white regiments. It has been a matter of difficulty to obtain an account of the colored volunteers from Randolph, but we have done the best we could.

Eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops, James H. Gay, not accounted for.

Twenty-third Regiment United States Colored Troops, Johnson Burden, Nelson Cook, Washington Ellis.

Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops, John Perkins, mustered out November 8, 1865; John Roberts, mustered out November 8, 1865, George W. Johnson, not accounted for.

We give below brief statements concerning some of the Randolph colored volunteers.

William Shaffer, Company K, Forty-second United States Colored Troops, enlisted October 8, 1864; spent three weeks at Camp Carrington; was in the fight at Nashville, December, 1864; was detailed to hospital duty at Hospital No. 6, Nashville, Tenn.; discharged at Huntsville, Ala., October 7, 1865.

P M. B. Thomson enlisted in Company F, Fifth United States Colored Troops, September 1, 1863, at Camp Delaware, Ohio. The regiment went into the Eastern army, and was in the engagement at Deep Bottom, Va., at Petersburg, Bermuda Hundred, Fort Harrison (Dutch Gap), Fort Fisher, N. C., Wilmington and Raleigh. The regiment was mustered out at Caroline City, N. C., September 1, 1865, and the men were discharged October, 1865, at Camp Chase, Ohio.

In 1870, he joined the Twenty-fourth Regular Regiment Colored Troops. They spent two years at Fort McCarth, Texas; Laredo, Texas, on the Rio Grande, one year; Port Duncan, Texas, nearly one year and four months, till May, 1875; went on a scouting expedition to the North Prong of the Brazos River, six months; was discharged in camp September 1, 1875, having served five years in the regular army.

Levi J. Linzy, Greensfork Township, enlisted in Company G, Thirty-third Indiana, September, 1864; mustered in at Indianapolis; went forward to Chattanooga; was in hospital, sick, at Chattanooga, till April, 1865; went forward to the regiment via New York City to Newbern, N. C., and marched against Johnston; was sent to Camp McDougal, New York City, and discharged July 21, 1865.

Sylvester Holland enlisted in Forty-fifth United States Colored Troops September 1, 1864; went forward to the Eastern army, and was in the charge against Petersburg, Va.; lay sick at Fortress Monroe, and was discharged at that place June 2, 1865.

Nathan Randle enlisted September, 1863; was sick at Nashville several weeks; his father visited him there; was discharged after the close of the war, winter of 1865–66.

Other colored soldiers from Greenville settlement were Willmore Cook, William Lewis, Alfred Lewis, John Lewis, Richard Goens, William Smith (Ohio), Sylvester Scott (Ohio), Henry Costin (Ohio), Johnson Costin (Ohio), Benjamin F. Goens (Ohio), Michael Sane (Ohio), Patrick Rickman (Ohio), Clarkson Lett Shiloh, William White, Aaron McPherson, J. M. Thomson, William Randle, Alexander Mason (Ohio), Milton Oglesby, Charles Oglesby, Wiley Oglesby, Johnson Burden, Jesse Lamb (Ohio), John Patterson (Ohio), Asa Faxson (Ohio), John Robbins (Ohio), Reuben Robbins (Ohio), Simeon Robbins (Ohio).

Seventy-second Colored Regiment, John Nicholas, Lorenzo Bragg, Willmore Cook (died in service).

Members of the Forty-fifth United States Colored Regiment: Lemuel Stokes, Alexander McKown, Charles Mason, Reuben Goens, William H. McKown, Zebedee Bass, Henry Stokes, Charles Clemens, Jackson Holland, Levi Shaffer, all then belonging to Darke County, Ohio.

Doubtless others from Randolph County belonging to the colored race were volunteers in the Union army during the war of the rebellion, but we have not learned their names.

CHAPTER XI.

RELIGION.

BAPTISTS—CATHOLICS—CHRISTIANS—CONGREGATIONALISTS—DISCIPLES—FRIENDS—GERMAN CHURCHES—METHODISTS—PRESBYTERIANS—PROTESTANT METHODISTS—UNIVERSALISTS—UNITED BRETHREN—WESLEYANS—CLERGYMEN—SPIRITUALISTS—HOLINESS BAND—Y. M. C. A.—BIOGRAPHY.

RELIGION.

IT has seemed advisable to group the account of the various churches together. Hence, the statement concerning them will be found below in alphabetical order. First in order come the

BAPTISTS.

The Baptists have not been very numerous in Randolph County, though there have been some from the earliest days of the settlement of the county. Curtis Cleny, of Lynn; W. C. Wilmore and John James, of Greensfork; Ira Maulsby, of Nettle Creek; Mr. Cartwright, of Spartansburg; Bela Cropper, of West River; Ezra Stone, of Winchester; James Spray, Edward Scott, etc., have been prominent Baptists, and some religious work has been done in the region by that worthy body of Christians. Messrs. Cropper and Wilmore have been ministers of that order.

Still, large success seems not to have attended their efforts, and the number of their societies is but small in this locality. There have been churches at Little Creek, at Losantville, at Winchester and at Middletown. The one at Winchester has been long extinct. The churches at Losantville and Little Creek have been greatly disturbed by the question, among them considered important, of "Means and Anti-Means," and both are nearly or quite extinct. The one at Middletown still maintains itself, though it is not vigorous.

There are also a few Baptists of other kinds in the county, who will be described in due time.

Huntsville.—The Baptists used to have meetings at Bela W. Cropper's and Samuel Spray's, not far from Huntsville. They never had a church nor any society in that neighborhood. B. W. Cropper was a preacher, and did religious work in that region; but no church was ever planted there, so far as we have been able to learn.

Little Creek.—This society was established many years ago, and, after a time, they built a meeting-house near the residence of Ira Maulsby, who was, perhaps, their chief member. Several families belonged to that society, and for years it had considerable strength, but the removal of some members and the death of others, and also other causes, perhaps, has nearly extinguished the society.

Losantville.—This society was organized many years ago, and had a more or less vigorous and successful existence, but we do not possess the information requisite to a regular detailed account of the organization.

Providence Church—Regular.—Located at Rose Hill, Ohio, and Middletown, Ind. This society was formed in Ohio about 1840, and began to hold services near Middletown in 1860. They never had a meeting-house. Their gatherings have been held chiefly at dwelling-houses. Their meetings take place once a month, at Middletown and Rose Hill--every third meeting at the former place, at Mr. Hinkle's on Saturday, and at the Christian Church, at Middletown, on Sunday. The society intend soon to build a house for worship at Rose Hill. The first members at Middletown were Richard and Eliza Straight, Henry and Eliza Ann Hinkle, Mahlon and Rachel Peters, Silas and Mary Byrom, John Peters, David and Eliza Byrom, Rachel (wife of George) Debolt.

The preachers have been Revs. Mahlon Peters, John McDaniels, Seymour Craig, John Peters, George Cottrell. Mr. Cottrell has ministered to the church for fifteen years past. Present membership at Middletown: Henry Hinkle, wife and daughter, Ira Adamson and wife, Alvin Skinner and wife, Mrs. Mary Moore, Mrs. Elizabeth Holmes, Mrs. Mary Miller (living near Bartonia). They belong to the branch of the Regular Baptists styled Anti-Mission Baptists.

Winchester.—About 1840, a Baptist Church was organized for Winchester and the region. The meetings were held at first at John Lykins', five miles south of Winchester; afterward, at Winchester, and still later, at Willis Wilmore's, south of Winchester. The society continued for a considerable time, but the members died or moved away, and the church finally ceased. The first members were Bela Cropper and wife, James Spray, Edwin Poor and wife, George Vandeburg and wife, Ezra Stone, Willis C. Wilmore and wife, Edward Scott and wife. Afterward, Thomas Loring and wife joined the society, and probably others may have done so. The church never had a meeting-house. At Winchester, the services were held at the court house; elsewhere, at private dwelling-houses. The society never grew very much. The Deacons were Brethren Stone and Cropper. The church was a friendly band, no difficulty ever arising to mar their peace. Prayer-meetings were held from house to house, with sweet seasons of Christian love and high hope and foretaste of endless bliss in the mansions above. In Winchester, they assisted in maintaining a union Sunday school for several years.

Some of the preachers were Revs. Nathaniel Case and James Harvey. Willis C. Wilmore has been for nearly or quite fifty years a preacher among the Baptists, and an active and zealous Christian withal.

Ezra Stone was a fine Christian gentleman, who was much esteemed and greatly beloved.

Edward Scott lived east of Winchester, his wife dying November, 1880, eighty-four years old. He had died years before that time.

Spartansburg.—Hezekiah Cartwright was a Baptist residing near that town, and preaching by the ministers of that order took place at his house. We have heard of no other Baptists in that region, though there may have been such. No church of the kind so far as known was ever formed in that vicinity.

Lynn.—Curtis C. Cleny, residing near Lynn, was a Baptist, but, as his location was near Wayne County line, our impression is that he belonged to a church in that county—perhaps to the Freedom Baptist Church.

West River.—William Smith and his wife, father and mother of Hon. Jere Smith, were Baptists and were members and regular attendants upon the Friendship Church, south of them in Wayne County.

Free-Will Baptist Church—Ridgeville and vicinity.—There was a society at Father Mendenhall's, on the river, as long ago as 1860, or earlier. They began to hold worship at Ridgeville about 1868. The society have no meeting-house in the town, the college chapel being occupied for meeting purposes. At Father Mendenhall's was a hewed log church, which, however, has not been used since the society began at Ridgeville. Some of the members have been Robert Sumption, Pennel Mendenhall, John Collier (Rev.), Mahlon Sumption, William Hollowell, Egbert Payne (Rev.), Cunningham, John Thurber, Allen Baker, Dr. Farquhar, William Reed (Prof.), Asa Pierce (Rev.), and their wives. The church at Ridgeville numbered at first thirty to forty members; now about fifty. The society maintains a good Sunday school the year round, with eighty to one hundred pupils.

The preachers have been Messrs. Collier, Atkinson, Bates, Davis, Pierce, Vaughn, Harrison, etc. Preaching is held every other Sabbath. About 1867, the Free-Will Baptists undertook to establish Ridgeville College, which has been in operation ever since. The enterprise has been a struggle from the beginning, but the institution is still sustained, and it is to be hoped that it will hold its ground through the ages to come.

Stone Station Free-Will Baptist Church.—Meetings were held there during the winter of 1880–81, at which about forty professed conversion, and a church was formed, embracing twenty-five members, viz., Thomas Clark and wife, George Sperea and wife, David Ritenour and wife, Mrs. Ross and daughter and two sons, Mrs. Owens and family, Samuel Ross and wife, James Jefferson and wife, etc. They meet in the Clark Schoolhouse, and Rev. Asa Pierce is their minister. It is intended to build a meeting-house before long. Sunday school is maintained regularly.

There is a German Baptist (Dunkard) Church north of Union City, which will be noticed in connection with the German congregations. There has been, also, some work for the Baptists among the colored residents of Randolph, which is shown in the account given herein of the colored settlements which have existed in the county.

CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Union City.—This church was begun in 1854; Rev. Sheon, of Sidney, was pastor one year. Rev. Hemsteger, from Piqua, came in 1855. Rev. Clane came next and established a chapel on the farm of Mr. Weiss, two miles from town. Rev. Hemsteger came again and stayed four years. Rev. Shelhammer, from Greenville, then came, remaining till 1862. Rev. McMahon was next, till 1865. During his pastorship, a church was built on Plum, north of Oak, frame, and, about 1870, a large and splendid bell was added. Rev. Lamour was pastor from 1865 to 1870; Rev. Van Swadler, 1870 to 1871; Rev. Noll, 1871 to 1875. Rev. Quinlan succeeded, who is pastor at the present time (1882). The congregation is thriving and prosperous, with a property of four lots, a church, parsonage, nunnery and schoolhouse; as also a cemetery, out of town, two miles north on the Salem pike (see account of cemeteries). There is a splendid bell on their meeting-house, which, when it was put up, was by far the finest in town. The congregation numbers 150 families or more, and the appointed church services through the week and on the Sabbath are regularly maintained. A flourishing day school has been maintained for many years by the Catholics, which has been for a considerable time, and is now, free to all comers, through the munificence of Peter Kuntz, Esq., lumber dealer in Union City and a member of the Catholic congregation.

Winchester.—Some Catholics have been residents of Winchester from early times, and, as long ago as 1854, or even before that, priests would visit the town and perform the services of religion for the communicants of that faith. For many years, their meetings were held in private houses. Clergymen from Muncie, Indianapolis and elsewhere used to come and officiate in religious things at Winchester. About 1875, three lots were purchased on West Washington street, and a neat place of worship was erected at a moderate cost. The congregation intend to build a parsonage, but that has not yet been done. The principal Catholic families are as follows: Patrick McDonald, John Kinney, Edward Laynan, James Mack, Edward Laren, Bryan Gaffey, Dennis Laynan, Michael Doyle, John Lacey, William Fitzmaurice, Edward Fitzgerald and others. The church is out of debt and in a remarkably prosperous condition. The regular church services are held once a month, besides special services at irregular intervals. Some of the clergymen who have officiated have been Fathers Maloney, Mack, Fitzmaurice, Clark, Lamour, Noll, Quinlan. The church is connected in the same parish with Union City, and the pastor, Rev. Quinlan, of Union City, supplies also the congregation at Winchester once a month.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH—"NEW LIGHTS."

Churches and Preachers.—Ministers of the Christian Church in Randolph County: Thomas Addington, New Dayton; Emerson Addington, New Dayton; Thomas A. Brandon, Union City; Davenport, Harrisville; Moses Gwynn, Morristown; I. V. D. R. Johnson, Bloomingsport; L. W. Johnson, Losantville; B. F. Kemp, Jordan; John Manhouse, Windsor; Samuel McNees, Farmland; A. H. Oren, Peter Robison, W. D. Ross, Morristown; William Terrell, Windsor. Perhaps there may be others besides the above. Congregations: Windsor, Union Chapel (south of Windsor), Mt. Zion, Losantville, no meeting-house; Pleasant Grove, southeast of Windsor; White River Chapel, Farmland; Shiloh, north of Farmland; Mississinewa, Olive Branch, Green Township; Clear Creek, no meeting-house.

Fairview.—This church was begun about thirty-seven years ago (1845). Their meetings were held in the beginning at Martin Smith's. Their meeting-house was built many years ago (1846), but has become old and time-worn, and is not now used. For a time they had great success, and people used to turn out to their services wonderfully. The preachers have been Messrs. Wolverton, McDaniel, McNees, Holland, Aker, Minnick, Richardson and doubtless others. The members cannot now be given. The society is not at present in a flourishing condition, and their congregations are small.

Farmland.—This religious society commenced in the region in 1838, on White River, near the toll-gate. The preachers were Messrs. Barker and Batterall. The class was organized in 1838 at the schoolhouse. Shortly afterward (1839 or 1840), a log church was built, and the brick now standing, in 1850 or thereabouts. They organized at Farmland in 1854 in a schoolhouse and provided themselves with a church in 1867. They were for many years the strongest denomination in the place, though for some time they have been declining, and are now quite weak in numbers. Their members in the region have been Peter S. Miller and wife, Nathan Thornburg and wife, A. H. McNees and wife, A. N. McNees and wife, William Elwood and wife, Hiram Smith and wife, Samuel McNees and wife and others. Their meeting-house has lately been sold to the Friends, who occupy it at the present time. The names of their ministers are not at hand.

Harrisville.—This church was organized in 1865, and their meeting-house was built in 1866. The first members were about twenty-five, some of whom were William Ingle and wife, David S. Davenport and wife, Miles Scott and wife, Samuel Keister, Rebecca Shelley, Mary Duncan, Elizabeth Whitesell, etc. The Trustees at first were Henry Hill, William Ingle and Miles Scott. The pastor of the church most of the time has been David S. Davenport, resident at Harrisville. Rev. Long was preacher one year, Capron, one year, and Newhouse, two years. The church now numbers over 100 members. Preaching takes place once a month, and Sunday school every week during the summer, Jacob Conkling, Superintendent. The school averages from thirty to fifty pupils. Paul Ellinger is Elder, and Joel Elwell and Frederick Ingle are Deacons. Rev. Davenport preaches also at four other points—Ogden, Henry County; a country place beyond Muncie, Delaware County; Union Chapel, southeast of Gettysburg, Darke Co., Ohio, and at Horatio, Darke Co., Ohio. The Dunkards also hold meetings once a month at Harrisville in the Christian Church, beginning in 1880. Their preachers have been Revs. Marquis and Simmons.

Liberty Chapel,—(North of Bloomingsport), was built about 1860. Many who had been United Brethren joined the society, some of these having been previously "New Lights." The preachers have been Messrs. Jellison, Brumfield, Coates, I. V. D. R. Johnson, Davenport, King, Kemp. Some of the members have been John Johnson, Strother Brumfield, John Anderson, Curtis Bales, Isaac N. Bales, etc. There is a society, but not very large nor flourishing.

Christian Church, north of Liberty Chapel.—Was built many years ago, as early, perhaps, as 1838. The first preacher was Jesse Brumfield. There was once a good society. After awhile, the "Reformers" and they had a split and the work did not go on. The United Brethren Church supervened at Liberty, and, many years afterward, the "New Lights" again at Liberty, in 1866.

Middletown.—This society was organized about 1855, and the meeting-house was built about the same time. First members, Ephraim Dull and wife, William Cole and wife, Enos Cole and wife, James Alexander and wife, John Poorman and wife, Henry Weyrick, John Boner, Thomas Alexander, William Warren, Sr. and Jr. and wives, James Warren and wife, Joseph Hinkle and wife, Abram Alexander and wife and many others, eighty in all. Their preachers have been Revs. Sharp, Vincent, Leavell, Gettinger, William Cole, Andrew McNees, Jacobs, Davenport, Samuel McNees, Kemp and perhaps others. At times, the society has been flourishing. It became much run down, and a few years ago the Friends began religious services there and were somewhat active. The Christians, however, took up their work again, and there is a small society, with services once a month and part of the time a Sunday school.

Olive Branch.—The society was organized about 1858 or 1860 by Rev. Larkin Mullen, and re-organized about 1866. The church was built in 1870. Some of the members have been and are John Wenzel and wife, Washington Cortner and wife, David Lewis and wife, Mrs. Engle and her son, William Engle, Jacob B. Jones and wife, Mrs. Stanley, etc. Preachers, Messrs. Mullen, Holloway, Puckett, Ross, Addington, Johnson, Cortner. Preaching is monthly, three sermons at a time. Sunday school not very large. The society numbers 100 to 150 members. The present pastor is Elder Thomas Addington, resident on Bear Creek, northwest of New Dayton.

Parker.—Began in 1854. A society was formed, and they carried on their operations regularly and successfully, but for a long time they had no house of worship. They built one at length, but became involved in debt, under which load they were forced to allow the church to be sold, which was done during the present year, the society of Friends being the purchasers. Some of their ministers have been Messrs. McNees, Aker, Lynn, Ross, Gwynn, Wells, Capron, Burkett, Minnick, Addington. Among the members have been John Gunckel and family, David Gunckel, Monroe Gunckel, William Phillips and wife, Martin Phillips and wife, Leonard Boise and wife, Alexander Fowler and two sons, John Bowers and wife. The church has seen somewhat encouraging seasons. At a revival in 1864, fifty or sixty members joined them, but the interest has declined, and the debt on their hands took their meetinghouse. They hope to recover their strength and regain their standing and usefulness as a church of Christ.

Pittsburg.—This church began about 1869. Some of its members are Stephen Jacks and wife, Harvey Coons and wife, Moses Ferrell, James Malloy and wife. At one time the society was quite active and flourishing, seventy members joining in one night. They have become less vigorous than formerly, though the operations of the society still continue to some extent.

Pleasant Grove.—(Union Church, east of Deerfield). Was built in 1877, by the Disciples, Methodists and Christians, and all three use it, the society having been organized since the house was erected. The Methodists have occasional services, but no class. The members of the Disciple Church are W. B. Field, Nicholas Linkhauer, Abram Sipe, Washington Peters, Clark Peters, Enoch Peters, Joseph Marsh, George Marsh and their wives. Preaching has been by Messrs. Harrison, Youtz, Manny, Enos Polly, Solomon McKinney, etc. The Christians were organized at first before 1865. Some of the members are Joseph Warren and wife, Henry Bragg and wife and others. Preachers, Jesse Jacobs, Benjamin Kemp, Capron, etc.

Pleasant Grove.—(Northwest of Poplar Run, Friends' Church, Stony Creek). The church was built in 1846. Preaching had been established some years previously. A society was formed and a church movement was begun one and a half miles south, but that fell through, and the church was built where it now stands. Among the principal members were and are Jonathan Clevinger, Lewis Clevinger, Wesley Clevinger, Wesley Dudley, Thomas Aker, Elisha Thornburg, Avila Thornburg, Madison Clevinger, Isaac Keener, Joseph Oren, with most or all of their wives. Some of the preachers have been Messrs. Andrew McNees, Francis A. Wilkins, Larkin Mullen, Swain, Richard Brandon, I. V. D. R. Johnson, Wesley Ross, William Terrell, Edward Burke, Davenport, etc. There is a flourishing Sunday school and they have preaching services once in three weeks. It has enjoyed powerful revivals and received large additions, and is a strong and active church.

Pleasant Hill.—Was established before 1847. Meetings were held at Mr. Constable's. A frame church was built about 1850, and the present brick house in 1876. Some of the members in 1848 were Mrs. Lindley, Constable, Isaac Berkhammer, Hugh Woodin, Hiram Grice, Stokesberry and their wives and others. Some of the preachers have been Revs. Swain, William Murray, Davenport, McNees, McNees, Terrell, Jacobs, Brandon, Green, Brown (now). They have preaching once a month and Sunday school every Sabbath, some years summer and winter. There is a good congregation.

Shedville (half-mile east).—The society was formed in 1877, and the house was built in 1880. The church was organized by Rev. Kahn and Witzel at the schoolhouse south of Shedville, with about thirty-two members. The present number is about one hundred. The preachers have been Addington and Cortner. Some of the members are John McProud, J. C. Jones, J. Ford, James McProud, C. B. McProud, Henry Woodard, Jesse Pace, William Bales, Milton Meranda. The interest is strong and the attendance good, with a flourishing Sunday school.

Shiloh (two and three-fourth miles north of Farmland).—Preaching had been begun by that denomination in the neighborhood before 1853; held in a log house east of Shiloh. The meeting-house (brick) was built in 1860. Last year a new frame church was erected near the former one (1880). The preachers have been Mullen, Barber, Wilkins, Ross, Terrell, Jackson, Johnson, etc. The members have been Isaac Holloway and wife, John Mills and wife, John Goodin and wife, Philip Witzel, John Cortner and wife, Andrew Cortner and wife, etc. It has been during a portion of the time a large and flourishing society of 100 to 150 members; it is now not so large. They have had Sunday school more or less in past years, but there is none at the present time (1880).

Stony Creek (one mile west of Neff).—Was organized February 20, 1858, by Elder William Terrell, with nineteen members—S. W. Smithson, D. S. Terrell, Isaac Thornburg, George Clevenger, William Clevenger, Isaac Faulkner, John W. Sanders, Peter Helm, etc. December 5, 1859, Pleasant Grove and Stony Creek Churches united as a monthly meeting under the name of Pleasant Grove Church, with officers as follows: J. M. Terrell, Clerk; Drummond S. Terrell, Ira Smithson, Deacons; Allen Hunt, Treasurer. Members up to October 5, 1858, 103; joined, January 18, 1860, 57; joined January 25, 1860, 65; others, 4, making a total of 229 members. It would seem that a new organization of some sort was effected September 1, 1860, under A. M. and Samuel McNees, and that at some time seventy-seven names were taken. In 1865, four members were received, and, in 1867, forty-two members. Total of members, 1869, 65; 1870, 93; 1871, 90; 1872, 94; 1873, 71; 1877, 96; 1878, 97. A Sabbath school has been maintained with more or less vigor and interest. The chapel was built about 1859. The preachers have been William Terrell, A. McNees, S. McNees, E. Hodson, Wrightsman, Roberts, Elisha Thornburg, Hardesty, Tingle, William Hunt (Methodist), Mullen, Minnick, Addington, Sharp, King, Cowgill, Johnson, Ross, Chandler, Leeka, I V. D. R. Johnson (present pastor).

Sugar Creek.—The Christians have a society on Sugar Creek, holding their meetings at the schoolhouse, northeast of W. C. Wilmore's. Rev. Thomas Addington, and, perhaps others, have preached there. We have obtained no details concerning them.

Union City, Ohio.—The first Christian Church of Union City, Ohio, was organized with thirty-five members, in 1861, by Elders Henry Gittinger, Harrison Vinson and C. M. Sharpe. Elder Gittinger was the first pastor. Other pastors were H. Vinson, C. M. Sharp, A. W. Brodrick, J. Jacobs, J. Weeks, T. S. Wells and T. A. Brandon. The society built a church, corner of Oak and Plum, at a cost of $1,300. Builder, Jacob Deardoff; dedication by Elder Joseph Weeks. A debt was contracted by the building of the church, which the society could not pay; the meeting-house was sold to the United Brethren and the church was disbanded.

Unionsport.—The Christians have had preaching in this neighborhood for many years, though mostly in private dwellings and schoolhouses. About 1868, when the woolen factory was new, a meeting was held by them therein with good results, and there has been a society ever since. Some of the members have been Absalom Oren, J. C. Bates, William Aikens, Samuel Gillum, Mr. Merriwether, James Pursley, David Moore, Andrew Moore, Mr. Fister, John Moyer. Preachers, Isaac V. D. R. Johnson, Absalom Oren, Mr. Cropper, etc. The society occupies at present the meeting-house between Buena Vista and Unionsport.

Windsor.—The church was built in the fall of 1859. Rev. Larkin Mullen was the preacher. Others have been Messrs. Minnick, Wells, Wilkins, Elisha Thornburg, William Terrell, T. Addington, Humphrey, etc. The class at one time was strong and flourishing, but is not nearly so large now. Members, Mr. Gable and wife, John Woolford and wife, John M. Terrell and wife, Jacob Carver and wife, Joseph Thornburg and wife, Elisha Thornburg and wife, T. W. Thornburg and wife, Amburn and wife, Amos Smith and wife, Jonathan Thornburg and wife, besides others. The church stands near the cemetery and the schoolhouse a short distance southeast of town.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Winchester.—About 1870, a church of this order was formed at Winchester, embracing a small number of members. Measures were taken looking to permanent occupancy of the field; a subscription was raised for a meeting-house, a lot was purchased, a preacher engaged, etc. The movement, however, seemed not to succeed, and, though the organization may never have been formally dissolved, yet for some years no direct, definite activity has been shown, any further than that the place has been visited occasionally by Rev. L. P. Rose, Congregational Home Missionary Agent for the State of Indiana, and that religious services have been conducted by him in Winchester during his visits to the place. Rev. J. G. Brice, clergyman and missionary agent, resided for many years at Winchester, preaching and lecturing and making collections for missionary purposes through portions of Indiana and Ohio. Not very long ago, he removed to Weston, Mo., where at the latest knowledge he was living in a green and vigorous old age. Congregationalists have been residents of the county at various times and dates, but for the most part they have united with other branches of the Christian body. A Congregational Church was once attempted at Buena Vista by Rev. J. G. Brice about 1846, but no success attended the effort.

DISCIPLES' CHURCH.

This body of Christians (called sometimes Campbellites, from Alexander Campbell, and sometimes Reformers and also Christians, etc.), came into this region shortly after their first rise, and formed churches at various points. Some of their early preachers, such as Elder Benjamin Franklin and others, assisted in planting their societies in this county and the ones adjoining. Some debates have been held here by their champions with opponents in doctrine or practice, and, from the first, the adjacent portions of Wayne and Randolph have been to them congenial ground. (See Reminiscences of Rev. H. C. Tillson.) Yet there are now only a few churches of the order in the county, some accounts of which are subjoined hereto. Their societies at present are Union City, Winchester, Spartanburg, Gilead, White River Chapel, New Lisbon. Preachers, C. G. Bartholomew, J. T. Shaw, I. P. Watts, W. D. Stone, Revs. Vinson (father and son), Sloan, Polly, Ellis, etc.

Bethphage (south of Spartanburg).—The meeting-house below Jesse Jordan's was built very early, being, perhaps, first in the county built by the Disciples. It was erected probably about 1838 or a little later. Bethphage was a famous place in its day; one or more debates were had, which were largely attended; at least, one powerful revival was held, perhaps more, and many members were gained to the Disciples, and the membership became so numerous and extensive that two congregations were at length formed—one at Sugar Grove near Benjamin Elliot's, southeast of Spartanburg, and one at Gilead, southwest of the same village. They were built in 1854 or about that time, Gilead, probably, somewhat later, and Bethphage went into disuse. A special detailed history of Bethphage, with membership, etc., has not been obtained. Some of the preachers were Elders Franklin, Swallow, etc. The latter held a series of meetings with very powerful results, bringing in many new members.

Gilead.—Was built somewhat after 1854, as one of two churches growing from the society at Bethphage. It continues to this day a flourishing society, with preaching, Sunday school, etc. Some of the members have been Henry D. Nichols, Isaac Nichols, Murray Chenoweth, Columbus Chenoweth, Harvey Platt, Henry Thomas, John Mann, James Peelle, John Peelle, Samuel Hill, etc, John Kelly, James Kelly, several Hills, Mr. Throckmorton, with the wives of most or all of the above.

New Lisbon (Jackson Township).—Was formed July 7, 1839. Several preachers had held meetings some years before—Elihu Harlan, Hosea Tillson and perhaps others. Meetings were held at private dwellings—first at Thomas Wiley's; also at Mr. Reeves,' Mr. Skinner's and elsewhere, and, in the summer, in the grove. The first members were Thomas Wiley and wife, John Skinner, James and Anna Skinner (parents of Mrs. James Reeves), James Reeves and wife, Putnam and Milly Campbell, Charles and Perlina Smith, William Pratt and wife. Thomas Wiley and Charles Smith were chosen Elders, and John Skinner, Deacon. The first church was of hewed logs and it stood near the old cemetery, having been built before 1839 and named Carmel Meeting-House. The second church was a nice frame edifice, and was built in 1855. The society is at this time (July, 1881), building a large church near the site of the second one. The preachers have been Thomas Wiley, John Thomson, William Murray, Valentine Thomson, George W. Thomson, Farrell Vincent and Enos Polly. They were without regular preaching for a long time. Mr. Polly has been their pastor most of the time for ten or twelve years. Their Sunday school began about twenty years ago, and, though awkward and irregular at first, has grown to be a prosperous school. The society may be regarded at present as in a flourishing condition. Some of the chief members, besides the original members above mentioned, have been James Wickersham and wife, Abram Smith and wife, Jacob Mangas and wife and children, David Banta and wife and children, William Ross and wife, Isaac Beal and wife, James Lambert and wife and doubtless many others not now recollected. The New Lisbon Church was the first built in the township. The Baptists had preaching in early times at Mr. Beach's, near Allensville and in that neighborhood, but their church wss built in Jay County, near North Salem. The new Disciple Church was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies in the presence of a large and interested congregation on Sabbath, October 24, 1881. Some statistics, etc., of the church are as follows: By 1843, there had been fifty-one members; by September, 1867, there had been 346 members in all. There was a revival in August, 1871, and twenty-two joined at one time; twenty-five joined in 1873; fifty-five in 1874 (forty-seven in December); eleven in 1875 and twenty-five in 1875. At the renewal of the society in 1871, there were seventy-one members, and 176 have joined since that time. In all, there have been 522 members, of whom some 170 still belong. The size of the new meeting-house is 37x55 feet, and it cost $2,-000. The building committee are Eli Mangas, Daniel Mussulman and George Warner.

Salem (four miles southwest of Union City).—Was established about 1843. For a considerable time the church flourished. A meeting-house was built some thirty years ago, and there has been a large and thriving society. Among the preachers have been Messrs. Barnhill Polly, W. D. Stone and others. By removals, deaths, etc., the church has been greatly reduced, and for some time preaching has been intermitted. We have no definite account of the society.

Spartanburg.—As early as perhaps 1838 or 1839, or may be sooner, meetings began to be held in Greensfork Township by the Disciples. A Christian (New Light) Church had existed before that time at Bethel, Wayne Co., Ind., and, at the time the Disciples arose under the lead of A. Campbell, the society at Bethel divided, a majority going with the Disciples. The Christians afterward built a church at Hollandsburg, and both societies remain till this day. Before very long the Disciples began to hold meetings in Randolph County and a society was formed in the region south of Spartanburg. Between 1839 and 1846, probably about 1840, a hewed-log meeting-house was built, largely by the efforts of John Sterling, who lived where Ephraim Bowen now resides, east of Jesse Jordan's place, between Jesse Jordan's and Joshua Thomas.' That church stood for many years and was a famous center of religious influence in its day. Before that house was built, meetings were held at the old school-house north of the Jordan place. The hewed-log church was called Bethphage, and in that house the noted debate was held between Benjamin Franklin, the distinguished Disciple preacher, and Mr. Randolph, one of the leading Methodist clergymen of the time. In the same church, Rev. Swallow conducted a revival meeting, as the result of which eighty converts joined the Disciples. The same Randolph above named engaged in several debates upon slavery with Moorman Way, Pusey Grave, Arnold Buffam, and perhaps others at Arba, Bethel and may be elsewhere. Some of the early Disciple preachers were Elders Tillson, Franklin, Elihu Harlan, Valentine Harlan, Miller, Windsor, Swallow and others. The revival under the labors of Rev. Swallow so increased the numbers and enlarged the bounds of the society, that, in process of time, two other houses were built—Sugar Grove, southeast of Spartanburg, in about 1854, and Gilead, southwest of Spartanburg, some years later. Some of the chief members of the Bethphage Church at first were John Sterling and Arthur Hagepeth and wife, Mr. Howe, etc. The meetings there were at length discontinued, and the church itself has been removed for many years. The Sugar Grove Church also has fallen into disuse for some time. The society at Gilead still continues to be flourishing, with an active Sunday school. Some thirteen years ago, or about 1868, a society was gathered and a church was built at Spartanburg, which still stands and is occupied by the society in that vicinity. Some of the chief members there are Clement Alexander, James Rubey, Jeremiah Horn, Benjamin Shaw, Levi Hill and others. A Sunday school is held in connection with the church, which is reasonably flourishing from year to year. In the fall of 1881, Elder Ellis, pastor of Winchester, began preaching work with the Spartanburg congregation also. A series of meetings was held, lasting several days, with the result of a renewal of religious interest and the prospect of a higher Christian life among the members and in the community. The Superintendent of the Sunday school, during 1881 and 1882, was Charles F. Tucker.

Sugar Grove (near Ben Elliot's place).—This church was built in about 1854, being erected by a portion of the Bethphage congregation, out of which two societies grew—Sugar Grove and Gilead. This church was used for meeting purposes till the Spartansburg Church was built, after which it gradually ceased to be used, though it is standing at the present time. We have not a particular statement of the items of history connected with this congregation, although some additional information may be found in the statement concerning Spartansburg and vicinity.

Union City.—Was organized in 1858 by Rev. Thomas Wiley, with twenty-four members. The Trustees were Simeon Branham, Thomas Wiley, Isaac Beal, J. E. Paxson. The first Elder was Rev. Thomas Wiley, who was also pastor. The original records are lost and the first Deacons and Clerk are unknown. The pastors have been Revs. Wiley, Barnhill Polly, Thompson, Harrison, Moore, Aylesworth, Howe, Tully, Bartholomew and Sloan. The Elders are Henry Polly, B. F. W. Stewart, W. H. Anderson, John W. Starbuck, James White, Jefferson Gist. The Deacons are William Strawbridge, James M. Warren, E. L. Anderson, D. L. McDonald. The Trustees are Simeon Branham, William H. Anderson, Thomas Jones, Ephraim H. Bowen, Gabriel Fowler. Clerk, William Commons; Treasurer, D. L. McDonald. Number in Sunday school, 200 to 275. Superintendent, William A. Wiley. Pupils, 175 to 250. Teachers, twenty-five. Secretary, B. F. W. Stewart. Choir Leader, William A. Wiley. Their church building was the first house of worship erected in the town. It was a frame, 40x45 feet, commenced in 1853, completed in 1858. Jere Smith gave a lot to the society at first and afterward another, at the solicitation of Simeon Branham, Esq., one of the Trustees. The house became too small for the increasing congregation, and the society have erected a massive brick edifice, 48x92½ feet, Gothic style, J. C. Johnson, Fremont, Ohio, architect. The cost of the building complete was $13,500. Since the organization, 622 persons have been connected with the church and the present number of members is 450. Series of meetings have been held from time to time in addition to the regular and constant weekly and Sabbath services, by the pastor and others, and great numbers have been brought to profess faith in Christ and to submit to the seal of the covenant in the ordinance of baptism. The congregations in this society are large, attentive and interested, and the various services of the sanctuary are well sustained. The Superintendent of the Sunday school, William A. Wiley, has held that position from the commencement. The church has a fine organ and a large and well-trained choir, whose skill and spirit add greatly to the interest of the sanctuary service, and William A. Wiley is also leader of the choir. Elder Bartholomew resigned the pastorship in the summer of 1880, and the position remained vacant for some months, the pulpit services being supplied meanwhile by Rev. Polly, one of the Elders of the congregation. In January, 1881, Elder Sloan, late from Richmond, Ind., was called to be pastor of the church, and was installed to the position with simple and impressive ceremonies. Elder Sloan enters upon his new labors with this large and interesting flock under favorable auspices and with encouraging tokens of unity and harmony among the people of his charge, and of increasing interest by the members of the society in the work which the Lord has committed to their care in the great vineyard. The first members were about twenty-four in number, among whom were Rev. Thomas Wiley and wife, Simeon Branham and wife, Isaac Beal and wife, Barnhill Polly and wife, Peter Nickum and wife, John Harlan and wife, Austin Williams. In January, 1866, there were 135 members; at the close of 1869, 125 members. In the succeeding years, the number of persons joining the church was as follows: 1870, 32; 1871, 10; 1872, 7; 1873, 22; 1874, 58; 1875, 51; 1876, 86; 1877, 126; 1878, 14; 1879, 25; 1880, 67. The Elders have been Thomas Wiley, Barnhill Polly, Uriah Ball, David Polly, John Harlan, Valentine Thomson, N. Bowles. The Deacons have been Cornelius V. Harlan, James White, Levi Hill, Henry V. Polly, David McDonald, J. T. Shaw, J. J. Downing, William Pinkerton, Isaac Beal, Samuel Sutton, B. F. W. Stewart.

When the enterprise of building the new church was set on foot, the following gentlemen were chosen as a Building Committee, viz.: William H. Anderson, David Polly, William A. Wiley, Simeon Branham, E. H. Bowen, John W. Starbuck, John L. Frank, J. R. Jackson (resigned from ill health).

The foundation of the church was laid during the fall of 1875, and the building was first occupied for religious services on the first Sabbath of March, 1878.

The cost of the edifice was about $13,500. Before the organization, in 1858, Union City had been a point of missionary work from the first settlement of the town.

This church is very prominent in the denomination, being among the largest in the State. Several large religious conventions have been held at this place with this congregation, the latest in 1881, being a large and enthusiastic assembly, and lasting nearly a week.

White River Chapel (north of Snow Hill).—There was preaching at Timothy Hinshaw's and elsewhere for six or eight years, as far back, perhaps, as 1850, or sooner.

The church was built in 1856.

The members of the society were Uriah Ball, Isaac Engle, Timothy Hinshaw and wife, Riley Lloyd and wife, and others.

Preachers, John Carnahan, Thomas Wiley, Thomas Burnan, Moses Swallow, Mr. Henry, etc.

The society is at present dormant. The Friends now use the house for worship and Sunday school.

Winchester.—Elders Butler K. Smith and George W. Thompson, the former residing near Indianapolis and the latter at Union City, Ind., held a meeting in the Disciples' Church at Winchester, Ind., August 25 and 26, 1866; and on Lord's-Day, August 26, 1866, the brethren and sisters were formed into a church by agreeing to a covenant as follows:

"The undersigned, met together on the fourth Lord's-Day in August, 1866, at the Christian (Disciples') Church in Winchester, in Randolph County and in the State of Indiana, agree to accept the Bible as the revelation God has given men, and as their rule of faith and practice; and hereby enroll ourselves as a Church of Christ, at Winchester, Ind., and promise and covenant to labor faithfully as servants of Christ to build up His church upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone."

First members—Jeremiah Smith, Isaiah P. Watts, William D. Frazee, Joshua C. Multbie, Elizabeth C. Maultbie, Elias Clevenger, Martha M. Clevenger, Robert R. Williams, Vashti Williams, Sarepta C. Williams, Mary E. Browne, Beulah Leak, Malinda Patty, Sarah Ireland, Minerva Shaw, Sarah Irvin.

Whole number of members, 122; present number, 50.

Several have died, among whom is Judge Jeremiah Smith, who departed this life December 28, 1874, and whose funeral services were conducted by Rev. G. W. Thompson. His remains were interred in the Union City Cemetery.

The first Deacons were appointed September 9, 1866—R. R. Williams, Joshua C. Multbie.

R. R. Williams was also Clerk and Treasurer. In 1868, he moved away, and, March 29, 1868, Edmund Engle was chosen in his place.

Trustees were elected January 16, 1875, as follows: Thomas M. Browne, I. P. Watts, Edmund Engle.

Elders elected December 26, 1875: I. P. Watts, James Houser, Felix Simms.

Deacons were chosen: Nelson Toland, Edmund Engle (chosen before).

Deaconesses: Elvira Toland, Minerva Shaw.

A new meeting-house was built during 1875–76, and dedicated June 4, 1876.

The church has maintained regular Sabbath services, as also social and prayer meetings and Sunday school.

Rev. I. P. Watts has been their regular preacher for several years.

Many persons have preached, and sometimes protracted meetings have been held, with various results.

The congregations have been small, but the church has courageously maintained its ground with a settled purpose to bear aloft the standard of the cross.

The Sunday school numbers from thirty to forty pupils.

The clergymen who have preached to the church at Winchester have been G. W. Thompson, Butler K. Smith, Jeremiah Smith, I. P. Watts, Wm. D. Frazee, E. Goodwin, Samuel Matthews, Uriah Ball, R. T. Brown, —— Wayand, Barnhill Polly, Thomas Munnell, Hardin Harrison, Benjamin Franklin, Elder Davis, J. O. Beardslee, Enos W. Polly, J. H. Vinson, H. T. Morrison, Russell T. Prichard, J. W. Ferrell, George W. Bailey, T. B. Scoville, D. H. Gary, C. A. Burgess, —— Belding, J. C. Tully, C. G. Bartholomew, N. A. Walker, J. B. Ludwig, Felix Simms.

Their first meeting-house had been built by the Presbyterians some years before, being a small frame structure, which is still standing, but has not been used as a church for several years.

The present place of worship is a substantial brick edifice, in the south part of town, on Meridian street.

In the fall of 1881, Elder Ellis was engaged as their Pastor, who has a fine reputation as an active and reliable worker, and who appears to give good satisfaction.

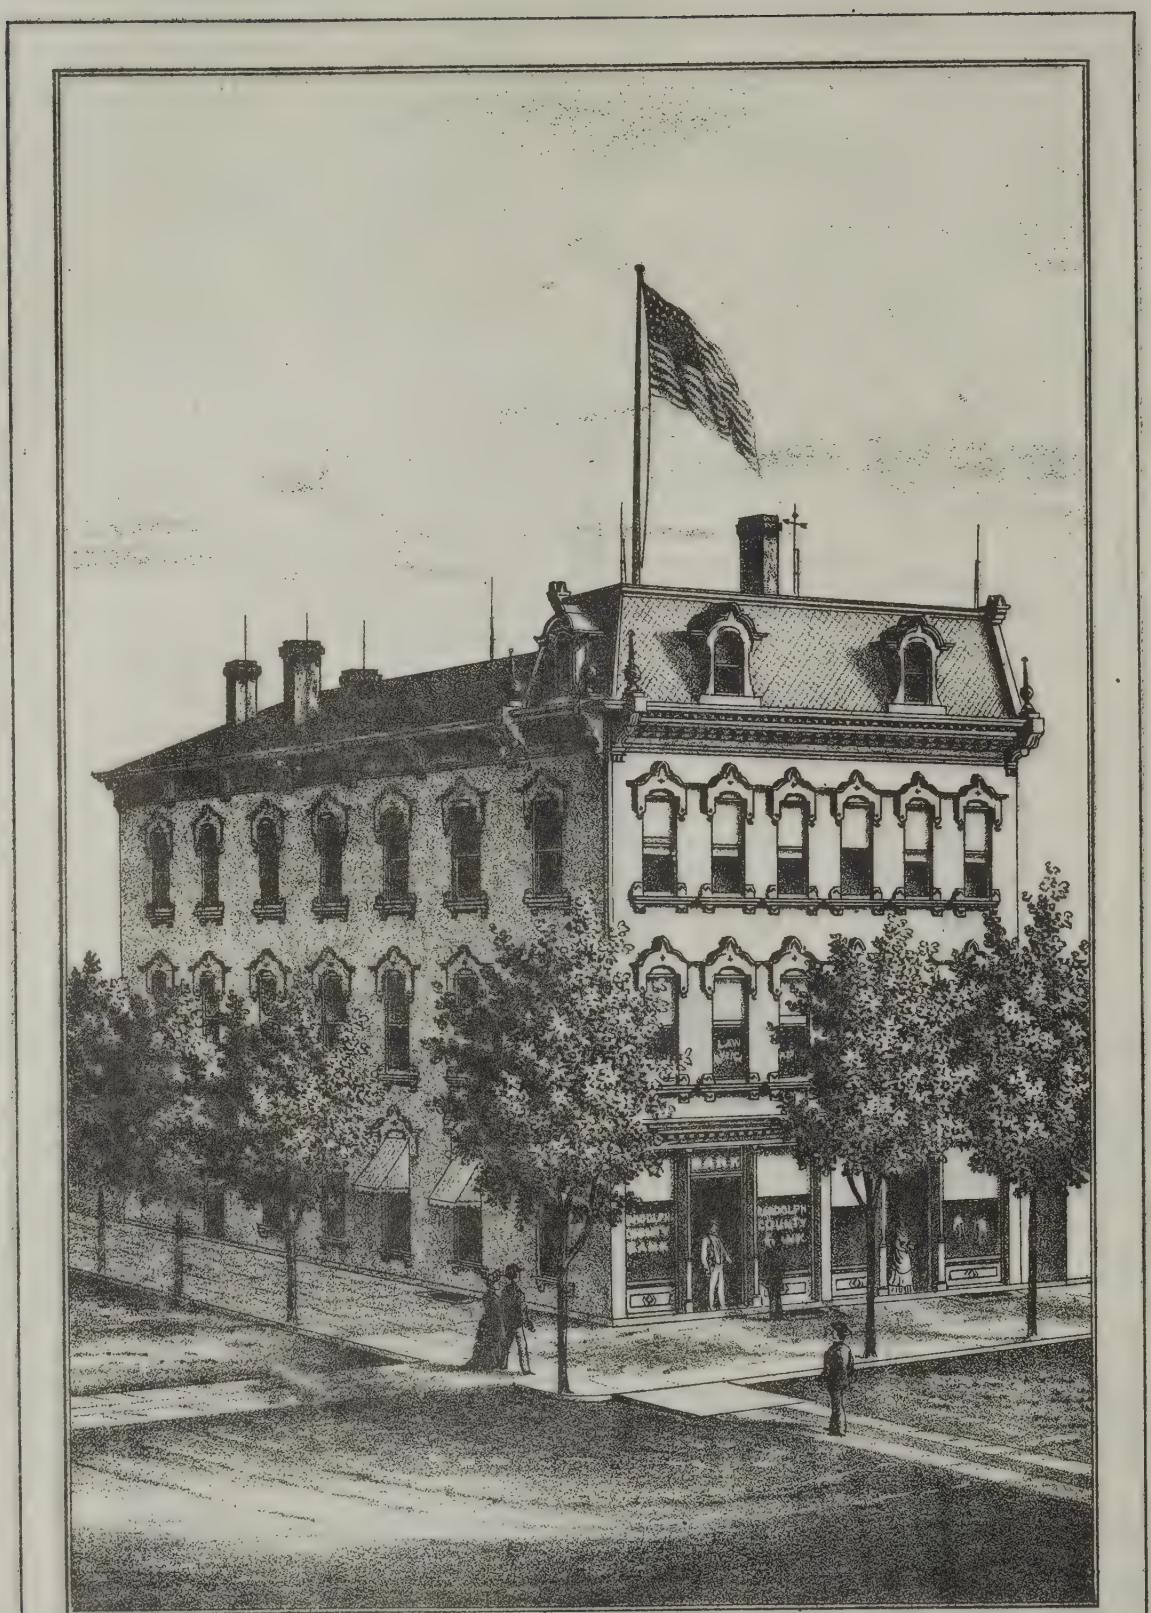
A series of meetings has been in progress during the winter of 1881–82, with considerable effect and several accessions.

FRIENDS.

The first settlement of Friends known in Indiana was in 1806. The first meeting-house was built of logs. The first yearly meeting for Indiana was opened in 1821. The old Friends' meeting-house at Richmond was first occupied in 1824,

CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

MAIN ST. WINCHESTER. RANDOLPH, CO. IND.



RANDOLPH COUNTY BANK, WINCHESTER, RANDOLPH, CO. IND.

and the present one in 1878. George Fox began to preach in England in 1647. There are now in the world twenty-six yearly meetings of Friends. Indiana Yearly Meeting used to embrace all the territory west of Ohio. There are now in those bounds four Yearly Meetings, Indiana, Western, Iowa and Kansas. Indiana Yearly Meeting has thirteen Quarterly Meetings, and is held at Richmond, Ind., and has 18,000 members. Western Yearly Meeting was set up in 1857, and is held at Plainfield, Hendricks Co., Ind. It has fourteen Quarterly Meetings. Kansas Yearly Meeting was set up in 1872. It is held in Leavenworth, and has four Quarterly Meetings, and 5,000 members. Iowa Yearly Meeting is held at Oskaloosa, and has eleven Quarterly Meetings, and 10,000 members.

FRIENDS' MEETINGS.

Winchester Quarter, including Poplar Run, White River and Cherry Grove, monthly. Poplar Run, monthly, including Poplar Run, Cedar and Farmland, preparatory. Cherry Grove, monthly, including Cherry Grove, Lynn and Bloomingsport, preparatory. White River, monthly, embracing White River, Jericho, Winchester, preparatory. Arba, preparatory, belongs to New Garden, monthly and quarterly.

MINISTERS.

Poplar Run, monthly, Elihu Carter, John Osborn, John H. Bond. White River, monthly, Elkanah Beard, Irena Beard, Jesse C. Johnson, William Cox. Cherry Grove, monthly, Ruth Johnson, Ira C. Johnson, Mrs. Joel Mills. Arba, Mrs. Parker; Charles W. Osborn, belongs to White River Quarterly; William Robinson, Jericho.

Statistics, Winchester Quarter—Members, 1,930; parts of families, 205; males, 929; isolated persons, 127; females, 1,009; ministers, 18; families, 314.

Winchester Quarterly Meeting embraces three Monthly Meetings—White River, Cherry Grove and Poplar Run. White River Monthly has meetings for worship: White River, Jericho, Winchester, Muncie. Cherry Grove Monthly, has Cherry Grove, Lynn. Poplar Run Monthly has Poplar Run, Cedar. There are several other meetings wiich have been held as follows: Middletown, west of Union City (discontinued); Penn, Pike, Jay County; West Chester, Jay County; Camden, Jay County; Olive Branch, Randolph County; Farmland, Morristown, Buena Vista, and two in Michigan. The total membership is over 2,000. Arba Preparative Meeting belongs to New Garden Quarterly Meeting, which meets at New Garden, Wayne County.

Recorded ministers belonging to Winchester Quarterly Meeting in 1881: William Cox, Jericho; Cynthia Reed, Cherry Grove; Jonathan Hodgin, Cherry Grove; Levi Jessup, Cherry Grove; Ruth Johnson, Lynn; Ira C. Johnson, Lynn; Elkanah Beard, Winchester; Irena Beard, Winchester; Martha B. Thornton, Winchester; John Osborn, Cedar; William Wright, Cedar; Lyndley M. Jackson, Cedar; Lydia Ann Wright, Cedar; Levi Cox, White River; ——Cook, Long Lake, Mich.; Alice B. Bergman, West Chester; Della Branson, Poplar Run.

Hardshaw was established before 1831, and laid down about 1834.

Cabin Creek was established in 1834.

Sparrow Creek was set up about 1836, located about one and a half miles west and one mile south of Dunkirk. There is an old cemetery at Hardshaw, and also one at Sparrow Creek.

Sparrow Creek meeting-house was burned not very long after the meeting was established, and it was never rebuilt.

Cabin Creek went mostly Anti-slavery in 1843, and continued such until that society died out. A new meeting, called Cedar, was set up at the same place in 1860, which is now strong and flourishing.

Poplar Run was set up in 1846, after the "separation." The leaders were Mark Diggs, John Diggs, Henry Moorman, Eli Townsend. Recorded minister, Elihu Carter. Their meeting-house was first of logs; the second, and present, is a frame, built in 1856.

Poplar Run and Cedar compose a Monthly Meeting.

Dunkirk was established about 1822, and laid down about 1856. It became wholly Anti-slavery, and has never been renewed since that body of Friends dissolved their organization.

At Cedar Creek, in 1881, has been built a new and very neat and convenient meeting-house near the old place of worship. The new house was first occupied for service, though unfinished, in August, 1881, for the Monthly Meeting. The occasion was a blessed season and the attendance was large. Many Friends were there from a distance, and the assembly were deeply sensible of the overshadowing presence and melting power of the precious Spirit to cause all hearts to flow into one free channel of Christian love That consecration of their new house of worship will long be remembered by the Friends who were present as a bright and blessed time to all their souls, and a day to reckon from as the beginning of new and still better things.

Arba was formed about 1815. They built, during the fall of that year a pole cabin meeting-house of the most primitive kind, with neither fire-place nor chimney, which served both as school-house and church for some years. After a considerable time a new, hewed-log church was built, which was occupied for worship for some thirty years, which, nevertheless, gave place in turn to a neat and plain brick structure, which now opens its welcome doors on First and Fifth Days, as well as at other times for the gentle, quiet, loving Friends to assemble "in the spirit" to wait on the Lord according to His appointment for the sweet and refreshing tokens of His gracious presence, and for the power of the life-giving Spirit to work in their souls that which is well pleasing in His sight. The members at times have been Thomas Parker, Jesse Overman, Ephraim Overman, Eli Overman, Jacob Horn, Thomas Cadwallader, Micajah Morgan, John Thomas, Clarkson Willcutts, Aaron Mills, William Hill, John Cammack, Frederic Fulghum, Francis W. Thomas, and many others.

Preachers—Francis W. Thomas, Adaliza Parker, Milly Hunt, and perhaps others.

There now about two hundred members, or thirty families or parts of families.

The present members, some of them, are Aaron Hill, Jacob Hill, William Hunt, Henry W. Horn, Henry Horn, Nathan Overman, Jordan Fulghum, Clarkson Fulghum, William Fulghum, Jonathan Rogers, Joshua Thomas, Manlove Thomas, Silas Horn, Calvin Pucket with their wives and families, and others besides them.

A new meeting was formed within their bounds a few years ago, by the name of Beech Grove (in Wayne County).

The Friends at Arba are an active people, engaging largely in mission work, holding religious meetings, establishing First Day schools, having temperance meetings, etc. Some five years ago an enthusiastic temperance gathering was held in the grove near the north toll gate, being addressed by Hon. T. M. Browne, Rev. Marine, then of Richmond, and others. The assembly was large, and great interest was taken, and much good was done.

The Society of Friends at Arba, established about sixty-six years ago, has maintained a solid existence, and enjoyed a steady, substantial growth, quiet, peaceful, united, they have pursued the "even tenor of their way," manifesting a constant and unwavering abiding in the things that make for peace and truth and mercy and righteousness and Christian love. Though making but slight apparent noise and stir in the great world, yet their quiet and gentle power has been like the words of the sacred writer: "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass."

Besides the Friends, preaching has been had at the place more or less from time to time; but no permanent lodgment was ever made by any society but the Friends, so far as known. The Episcopal Methodists have made it a preaching point to some extent, and the Wesleyan Methodists once had regular meetings for a considerable time, but they were discontinued.

Buena Vista (between Buena Vista and Unionsport)—The church was built about 1870, by a union effort of all classes, and was then given into the charge of Friends. There was no Society in connection with the meeting-house, but Friends from abroad made appointments for a time. Their meetings have, however, been given up, and the house is occupied once a month by the Christians (New Lights).

There was once a Quaker Church standing about in the middle of the burying-ground. It was built by Thomas Gillum, perhaps thirty years ago, say 1850, or thereabouts.

Cherry Grove is one of the group of Friends' Societies formed by that branch of Christian believers during the first years of settlement in Randolph County.

About 1820, Arba, Lynn, Cherry Grove, White River, Jericho and Dunkirk had all taken their beginning in religious work; and, except Dunkirk, every one of these meetings hold fast to its place and its work among men.

The exact year of the establishment of each one is not easy to tell at the present time. Each one of them grew up, naturally, as it were, by the gathering together of those who, in each locality, were of one heart and one mind in the worship of the Lord. They had been sober and devout worshipers in the Southern land, and they brought with them, deep settled in their inmost souls, their love of God and man and their hope in Christ, and their sense of obligation to be the Lord's, and to live and die for Him. And almost the very first thing done by them was to plant the tabernacle of the Lord in the wilderness; and, through rain and sunshine, and winter's cold, along forest trails and over paths dimly traced by blazed trees, on horseback or on foot, did those sturdy pioneers obey the command of their Lord not to "forget the assembling of themselves together."

The history of one is substantially the history of all. One in spirit, in faith, in love and hope, and in their views of the appropriate methods of Christian work and worship, this group of Friends' Societies have gone on, hand in hand and heart with heart, in their loving service of their Divine Master.

The chief members of Cherry Grove at first were Stephen Hockett, John Osborn, Jonathan Johnson, John Pegg, Caleb Reece, Thomas Frazier, Curtis Bales, James Jay, Gideon Frazier, Edward, Joseph and Nathan Thornburg, etc.

The recorded ministers from time to time, during almost two-thirds of a century have been Thomas Frazier, the only one for many years, Elizabeth Pearson, Elwood Osborn, Jonathan Hodgin, Levi Jessup, Seth Reece, Huldah Reece, Cynthia Reece, Martha Johnson.

Some of the members at this time are, in addition to most of the above ministers: Isaac Osborn, Davis Pegg, Eli Reece, Calvin Johnson, Elkanah Osborn. There are about eighty families belonging to the Preparative Meeting, with about two hundred and eighty persons, including children.

It is worthy of remark, as showing the sincerity and permanancy of the religious convictions of early Friends that the ministers among this group of meetings were, for a long time, very few. Jericho had none, Cherry Grove had but one, Arba had but one, Dunkirk had only one; and for many years Jericho Friends would meet on First and Fifth Day, winter and summer, rain or shine, regular as the sunrise, and sit in absolute and ceaseless quiet with neither prayer, nor exhortation, nor song, under the gentle power of the purifying and comforting Spirit, cherishing in their waiting souls the lovely Christian graces. The meeting-house now standing has been in occupancy for about twenty-two or twenty-three years.

The first house was log, built where the schoolhouse now is. The second was frame, built in 1838. That was burnt down in about 1856, and another, the present one, was erected the next season.

The meeting-house stands upon a delightful knoll, being one of the finest church sites in the county.

Cherry Grove Monthly Meeting was set up in 1822; the Preparative Meeting was established some years before that time.

Dunkirk.—The first meeting-house at Dunkirk was built in 1822, and the second and last one in 1830. The Friends there were led by Isom Puckett for thirty-six years; when he died, the church went down (1856).

The Dunkirk Society as a body went with the Anti-slavery Friends, and the meeting went down before that body dissolved its organization.

The first house was built of logs, with puncheon floor, earthen fire-place in the middle of the floor, without any chimney, the smoke escaping through an opening in the middle of the house.

Among those who helped to build it are Jerry Reynolds, Isom Puckett, Jesse Green, Elijah Jackson, John Wright, Solomon Reynard, Solomon Wright.

It was situated on the Paul Way farm. The church is still standing. The graveyard is used for purposes of burial, though much out of repair. It is to be regretted that the early Friends were so unwilling to place memorial stones over the graves of their dear departed, since by that neglect all memory of most of those ancient pioneers will speedily pass from among men. Dunkirk has scores, perhaps hundreds, of rough stones set up as a token that at some time some friend or relative was deposited beneath; but who it may have been, or when the act was done, or what the age or sex of the one above whose dust the "dumb token" still remains, that lifeless, that letterless stone will not reveal, and no mortal now living can tell, and the secret is forever hidden. The tomb is locked, and the key is thrown into the river, and perpetual darkness rests down upon the rolling wave!

That ancient graveyard would be regarded by coming ages as a thrice sacred spot, and all the more could future generations read upon the fair face of the slabs of unmoldering marble the names, the ages, the virtues of fathers and grandfathers and great-grandfathers in a long, backward-extending line of honored and venerable, but now wellnigh forgotten ancestry!

In New England and the East there are no spots like those ancient "God's acres," where whole generations of ancestors lie entombed, and where, moreover, the monuments above the lifeless dust of the departed dead preserve in fadeless freshness the memory of those who in their appointed lot and place, in ages long gone by, served well their generation according to the will of God.

In Old England there is no spot upon her honored soil like that wonder of the world, the mausoleum of the British Empire — the burial place of the great, the honored, the renowned, the venerated among that mighty nation—Westminster Abbey. And think of being buried in Westminster Abbey with no stone to mark the resting-place! To be honored with a niche among that congregated host of heroes worthy and beloved, and yet to lie utterly unnoted and wholly unknown among that company of England's best and noblest, even as though bleaching in the blank and empty desert, or as though in the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

And Dunkirk, in the Randolph woods, though a humble, is yet a sacred, spot; and could we, as we repair thither, but point out the graves of the worthy sires and grandsires, and of the aged mothers and grandmothers who have in that solemn place been buried out of sight until the Archangel's trump shall sound, after they had well fulfilled the mission which the Great Master above had given them to do, instead of being, as it now threatens speedily to become, simply a ruinous old inclosure, rough and unsightly, with uncouth, shapeless stones projecting uselessly from the hillocked earth, that same Dunkirk, hidden away in the recesses of the forest, would grow to be, and more and more as the years and the ages roll, become a veritable "temple of Mecca," a shrine sacred to love and affection, and to reverence of the lamented dead.

Erect the gravestones and preserve the cemeteries, and let suitable and imperishable monuments mark the resting-places of the "dear ones long departed," not indeed for vain and costly show, or in the way of proud and senseless display of aristocracy and pride, but under the gentle power of affection and with a sincere and worthy purpose to preserve to the public through succeeding generations the knowledge and the memory of those who, during their lives, were devoted to friendship and kindness and the love of God and man.

Farmland.—Benjamin Morris, of the Cedar Preparative Meeting, has a minute from that society allowing him to hold meetings at Farmland. He does so every other week, Sabbath and Sabbath evenings. There are about thirty members. Their services were at first held in the old schoolhouse. During the present year (1881), they have bought the old Christian (New Light)

Church at a cost of $350, and are undertaking, under the leadings of the enlightening Spirit, to establish in that village a permanent, religious work, in connection with their order of faith and practice.

Jericho was established about 1820. They built a log cabin, with no windows, but merely holes for light with shutters. The seats were poles with legs. The women's side had a big fireplace, but the men's side had a hearth in the middle of the room, with a hole in the roof above to let the heat and smoke out. They would use coals from the fire-place, bark, etc., that made but little smoke. Benoni Hill, Henry Hill, Amos Peacock, Abram Peacock, Elijah Cox, and William Cox, with their wives, formed the meeting.

There was no minister for fifteen years. The first preacher was John Jones, about 1835. Other preachers have been resident among them, though not very many.

In 1843, a division took place in the society at Jericho, a large company adhering to the Anti-slavery Friends. A new meeting-house was built near Henry Hill's, and it was occupied, perhaps, for twenty years. The Hills, the Peacocks, and others were prominent in this "separation" at Jericho. After the abolition of slavery, the Anti-slavery Friends disbanded, and most went back to the "body." In about 1878, another division occurred at Jericho arising from the fact that the great body of the societies belonging to the Richmond Yearly Meeting (and, perhaps, to others), have decidedly changed their methods of procedure and their modes of worship from those which had been prevalent for many years. Some of the Jericho Friends were unwilling to yield to these changes, and set up a meeting for themselves. The two divisions occupy the same meeting-house, the old society meeting in the forenoon, and the new in the afternoon. The "new" would to outsiders appear to be the "old," but since the Yearly Meeting has also changed, those who persist in the old methods are reckoned to be the "new" society. Both, curiously enough, claim to be in the spirit, and to be using the methods, of the original Quakers. The "new methods" certainly differ very greatly from those forty and fifty years ago. How it was at first, we are unable to say. The members of the meeting in harmony with Richmond Yearly Meeting are George Thomas, Frances Frazier, Asenath Thomas, and many others.

The members of the other meeting are William Peacock, Clarkson Peacock, —— Peacock, Elijah Peacock, William Robinson, —— Gilbert, with their wives, as also perhaps others.

The Jericho Friends are a steady, God-fearing, kind and generous people, trying to walk in the leadings of the Spirit, and following peace and good-will toward their brethren and their fellow-men; and it would seem, to those who look on, a matter of sincere regret that the little group of faithful Christians, small enough even in the whole, could not so far walk in unity as to continue to be one in outward work and modes of worship, even as they doubtless are in substantial love and desire for Christian purity and spiritual advancement.

Lynn was formed very early in the history of the county, perhaps as soon as 1818, or thereabouts. The chief members were Paul Beard, Sr., Jesse Johnson, Francis Frazier, James Frazier, —— Kenworthy, Travis Adcock, John Moorman, Obadiah Harris, and others not now known. The ministers have been Obadiah Harris, the first, and for many years the only one, Ruth Johnson, Ira Johnson, Cynthia Mills, James Mills (moved to Kansas), Elkanah Beard, Irena Beard (the two last missionaries to India and elsewhere). Travis Adcock, and others removed to Iowa about 1837. The church now standing is very old, having been built more than forty, and perhaps even fifty years ago. It was erected about 1830. The Friends at Lynn have always had among them those who were active in every good and benevolent work, and their record is abundant and honorable in labors for Christ, and for the upbuilding of His cause among men. Their first house was of logs, built about 1820. The Friends at Lynn are now (summer of 1881), erecting a new house of worship on the west side of the pike, near the toll-gate south of the village of Lynn.

Norwich (near Charles Crist's).—A meeting-house was built and a graveyard established by the Friends near Charles Crist's, southeast of Spartanburg, very early, probably as soon as 1825.

The ground (one and a half acres) was given to the society by four men jointly.

The religious society was discontinued about 1840, or perhaps sooner. The cemetery is still in use, though not in very good repair.

The donors of the tract were Stanton Bailey, Cornelius Overman and two others. We have been unable to obtain more definite information as to this society, as it has been extinct forty years or more, and those who had to do with it are gone from the region long years ago.

Parker.—The Friends have held meetings at this place for some six years. The Friends who have attended, and have ministered as they were 'led by the Divine Light,' have been Della Branson, Benjamin Morris, Isaiah Jay, Martitia Carter, John Osborn, John H. Bond, Lydia Wright.

The resident Friends are Elkanah Morris and wife, Barclay Smith and wife, Andrew Dragoo and wife, Dr. Rogers and wife, Martin Phillips and wife, Philip Cultice and wife, P. B. Barnes and wife, Lydia Jessup, Willson Jessup, Hannah Miller, Fanny Morris, Charles Long, Jacob Wells, Sallie Wasson, L. H. Karns and others.

In the summer of 1881, they bought the house that had been the Christian meeting-house, and they now occupy it for regular religious service, striving humbly to wait on the Lord in quietness and unity in the way of His appointment, trusting in the fulfillment of His gracious promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

Sparrow Creek.—The meeting was organized about 1835. Dunkirk, Jericho and White River had been joined in a monthly meeting. Sparrow Creek Meeting-House was built, and Dunkirk and the latter were made into a monthly meeting. The house was a good frame building, with two rooms, for males and females, and it was built about 1835. It was burned some years afterward, during a winter school, through the means of a stove-pipe.

The society undertook to build again, and got the frame up, but in some way the matter failed. The members were some of the Pucketts and the Bealses and others. The graveyard still remains, and has some care, though it is in bad repair.

In 1839, Arnold Buffum first lectured in Winchester on abolition, and he came out and spoke also both at Dunkirk and at Sparrow Creek, and afterward formed an anti-slavery society at Dunkirk. At that place, "Old Billy Hunt" (Rev. William Hunt) challenged a discussion upon slavery. Dunkirk and Sparrow Creek Quakers went nearly en masse for abolition.

Friend Methodist, Union, Southeast of Windsor.—Rev. John Smith, a United Brethren preacher, came into the neighborhood where John Thornburg lived about forty-five or fifty years ago. Upon his preaching, the people liked his doctrine well, and a Union Church was formed by Methodists and Friends. Some of the chief members were John Thornburg, George W. Smithson, G. Wesley Terrell, William Moore, John N. Terrell.

The log church near the cemetery was built in 1838. Their meetings were very interesting, and did much good. The church was thriving and prosperous while John Thornburg (who was a minister) lived among them. After his death, divisions arose, the meeting-house was sold, and another was erected farther south, and gradually the Friend Methodist Church became a thing of the past. The cemetery, with the church, is there yet, and is patronized for purposes of burial for miles around. The graveyard is located upon a sightly knoll, making a pleasant appearance. Many graves are there, and a large number of tombstones raise their heads above the friendly soil to betoken to friends and passers-by where rest the remains of the sleeping dead.

White River.—This meeting was "set up" about 1820. The chief families were those of Benjamin Cox, John Wright (blacksmith), Jonathan Hiatt, Simon Cox, Thomas Ward, Joseph Moffatt, and perhaps more besides. Of these pioneers of church work among the Friends, none are living. All have passed on to their reward, and many, very many, of their bodies lie sleeping in the silent graveyard beside the church, where, for so many faithful years, they met to worship Him who wishes for His followers only those who worship in spirit and in truth.

The ministers belonging to White River cannot now be stated. One of them is Levi Cox. Neither have we at hand the names of the principal members of the society.

The present meeting-house has been standing many years, having been built in about 1840.

Before its erection, and from the beginning of their settlement, the Friends had, what everybody else had, for the same purpose, in the "wooden country," a log church, and many a season of sweet and rich and melting communion with the "Spirit which giveth life" and bringeth peace to the waiting, believing soul, did those quiet, humble, God-fearing Friends enjoy amid the mighty forest shades, afar from the din and bustle of the busy mart, and from the thronged places of concourse where hundreds or thousands congregate for business, for pleasure, or even for the worship of Him who filleth all in all. For sixty years, that quiet spot has witnessed, week after week, the approach of the worshiping groups as they drew near the sanctuary of the Holy One to assemble themselves together in the name of the Lord; and still, week by week, the grandchildren and the great-grandchildren of those aged fathers and mothers of the olden time follow the footsteps of their venerated ancestors who planted the worship of Jehovah in those unbroken woods, and in meekness and humility they bow their souls in solemn adoration, and lovingly wait and earnestly wrestle and pray for the overshadowing and indwelling presence and power of the same spirit who visited, ages ago, the first Christian dwellers in these lands.

And thus may it be from generation to generation. Ages hence, may the descendants of the pious worshipers of the former years in these quiet retreats still come as of yore to the same consecrated spot, and find ever the ancient promise true that "the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting, and His righteousness unto children's children."

Winchester.—Although Randolph County has been filled with Friends ever since its first settlement, and nearly a dozen preparative and several monthly meetings have long existed within its limits, yet, strange to say, that society never had regular established service in Winchester till a few years ago. Elkanah Beard took up his residence in the town in 1873, he and his wife being prominent ministers among Friends, and they began to hold services for worship after the manner of their society in the same year, the meetings being held in the City Hall.

The interest gradually increased till in 1875, and a preparative meeting was established, as also a monthly and quarterly meeting, not far from this same time. A neat and convenient meeting-house was erected in 1876.

The resident recorded ministers are Jesse C. Johnson, W. C. Brown, Elkanah Beard, Irena Beard and Mary Matilda Parker. Meetings are held Fifth-day nights and First-day mornings and nights, congregation ranging from forty to one hundred and fifty. An interesting Sabbath school is held in connection with the society.

Winchester Quarterly Meeting comprises Randolph, Blackford, Delaware and Jay Counties, and embraces meetings as follows:

Lynn, Cherry Grove, Poplar Run, Cedar, Winchester, Jericho, White River, Olive Branch, Farmland, Parker, Randolph County; Muncie, Delaware County; Blackford, Blackford County, Penn, Pike, Westchester, Jay County—fifteen in all.

The monthly meetings are three in number—Cherry Grove, White River, Poplar Run.

More than nineteen hundred members are included in the quarterly meeting. Five preparative meetings, as also Dunkirk, now extinct, and Arba, belonging to New Garden Quarterly Meeting, in Wayne County, were established nearly at the first settlement of the county, say between 1815 and 1824. Of these, Arba is supposed to have been the first, being established in 1815.

The Friends at Winchester have been active during the winter of 1881–82, and much good seems to have been produced by their religious labors there and elsewhere.

ANTI-SLAVERY FRIENDS.

For some time before 1842, a trouble had been arising among the Friends in Richmond Yearly Meetings on the question of abolition. While professing to be anti-slavery, the great body of the meeting were unwilling to co-operate with Abolitionists in their work of arousing the nation to the sin and guilt of slavery, and disapproved of those who did so co-operate, notably condemning Charles Osborn, who was a Friend of high character and great simplicity and earnestness of spirit. This action caused a split, and a new society was formed by the name of Anti-slavery Friends, with their yearly meeting at Newport (Fountain City), Wayne Co., Ind. Much activity prevailed among them for several years, and a large number of Randolph Friends joined the new society. Cabin Creek and Dunkirk Preparative Meetings did so almost entirely. A new meeting was formed at Jericho. The movement continued for some twenty years or more.

Near its beginning, the London Yearly Meeting, to which the Friends throughout the world look up with reverence as the great mother of them all, interested herself in the trouble, and sent a deputation of Friends to visit the "recusants" and try to reconcile them to the "body."

Their labors proved fruitless, for the time, at least, and Anti-slavery Friends, with their simple ways, in Hoosier cabins, and dragging their ox sleds through Indiana woods, made themselves merry over the rich and haughty English Quakers as they wended their slow and toilsome way through the wonderful mud from point to point and from cabin to cabin, offering to buy oxen to hitch to their costly carriages to haul them through the terrible mud and well-nigh impassable mire, making ceaseless trouble to the backwoods Hoosiers by their disagreeable and unsuitable aristocratic ways, obliging whole families to sleep out of doors, or at least outside the dwelling, because their ladyships could not possibly sleep in the same room with a man (besides their own husbands), and what not.

But the Anti-slavery work found other channels, and the "body" softened down considerably, and the mutual yearnings after re-union prevailed, and the Anti-slavery Friends, such as chose, were received back to the "body" and no questions asked.

Among the leaders and prominent Friends in this region engaged in the Anti-slavery secession were Charles Osborn, William Hough, Dr. H. H. Way, Nathan Thomes, Benjamin Thomas, Benjamin Stanton, Joel Parker, David Willcutts, Walter Edgerton; and in Randolph County, nearly all the Friends in Dunkirk and Cabin Creek Preparative Meetings, and numbers at Jericho, and some elsewhere, among them the Hills and the Peacocks, etc., at Jericho; the Pucketts, etc., at Dunkirk; the Bonds and the Wrights at Cabin Creek, etc., etc.

The Anti-slavery movement in general was indeed a "thing of life." Though exceeding small as to numbers, they made up that lack by excess of activity and overflowing zeal, causing the country to echo from side to side with their strong and not too gentle condemnations of the system as such, and of all its practicers and abettors in high places or low, especially in high stations. Osborn, Lundy, Garrison, Wright (Elizur and Theodore), Green, Lovejoy, Codding, Birney, Buffum, Pierpont, Goodell, Tappan, Whittier, Child, Bailey, Garnet, May, Leavitt, Douglass, and a great multitude of compeers, set themselves the task, under God, of overthrowing American chattel slavery; and for years the world stood and jeered and mocked, and cursed and mobbed alternately, tarring and feathering, and egging and stoning and flogging, and sometimes even killing outright the despised Abolitionists, who were truly hated by all men. But time sped swiftly on, and the thunder rolled and the lightning flashed, and the storm burst; and, when the sky cleared itself once more, slavery lay dead, and the slaves had been made freemen. And the faithful band, its ranks sadly thinned, shouted, "Hallelujah! Glory to God!" They felt like marching forth as did Miriam of old, among the Hebrew maidens, with timbrels and dances, singing as they marched, "Sound the loud timbrel over earth and sea! Jehovah hath triumphed, His people are free!"

And now the devoted band are dead almost to a man. A few, and a very few, and only those of the younger class, are still in the land of the living. Most of their names are lost to history, but their work remains, and their record is on high.

The "Underground Railroad" had many adherents and abettors in Randolph, and great numbers of refugees from slavery were sheltered and helped on their way toward the North Star by faithful friends dwelling in the region.

GERMAN CHURCHES.

We class the German churches of various kinds together, and arrange them in a single group, though of several different orders.

GERMAN BAPTISTS (DUNKARDS).

The first of these people in America emigrated from Swartzeau, Germany, to Germantown, Penn., in 1719.

For many years, their hardships were great and their progress was slow.

Christopher Saur, one of their number, in 1748 printed the first German Bible made in America, and edited the first paper ever issued from their church, and perhaps from any religious body.

Their first annual conference, so far as known, took place in 1778.

The first meeting-house known was built in Franklin County, Penn., in 1798. There must have many built before that time, one would think, though in old times much religious work was done in private houses, barns, schoolhouses, etc.

The first brother that settled in Virginia was John Garber, at Flat Rock Valley, in 1777, who built up a large congregation. From this church Jacob Miller came to near Dayton, Ohio, in 1800. He raised twelve children—nine sons and three daughters. Three of his sons became ministers, and reside in Indiana, doing much work for the Gospel there.

The German Baptists have eighty-five congregations in Indiana, and seventy-five in Ohio, mostly with extensive membership and large houses for worship.

Their churches are found in twenty States, and number more than one hundred thousand members.

Eleven newspapers are published under their auspices, and they have three colleges—Mt. Morris, Ill., by Elder J. W. Stein; Ashland, Ohio, by Elder S. G. Sharp; Berlin, Penn., by Elder James Quirter.

In Darke County there are four congregations—Ludlow and Painter Creeks, Hillgrove, Oakland and Palestine.

In Randolph County, Ind., there is but one—Union City, one mile north of town.

In Darke County, Ohio, adjoining Randolph, they have twenty-three resident ministers and nine houses of worship. Sometimes one church or congregation will have several meeting-houses. Thus, Union City Church has two—one north of Union City, and one southeast of Hillgrove, Ohio.

Baptist (north of Union City, Ind.).—About 1826 or 1827, by a council held at William K. Marquess' (Samuel Parent's, a German Baptist Church was organized and called Greenville Creek Church. Their preaching was supplied by ministers from a distance, who came on horseback, along narrow, winding traces, and often through deep mud and water, to bring sinners the tidings of salvation, and not without the abundant blessing of the Lord of the vineyard.

In 1830, John Crumrine was elected to the ministry at the house of Susannah Crumrine. In 1836, William K. Marquess was called to the service of the church as a preacher.

In 1848, a church was organized near Union City, with about seventy members, of whom only six or eight are now living here.

Brethren Crumrine and Marquess were the first resident ministers. Rev. Crumrine moved to Wabash County, Ind., in 1852, and Rev. Marquess died November 9, 1857. Their preaching points were in Preble, Miami, Darke and Mercer Counties, Ohio, and Randolph, Wayne and Henry Counties, Ind. The places were Harris Creek, Stillwater, Ludlow, Fort Recovery, Greenville Creek, Union City, Winchester, Deerfield, Bloomfield, Grandville, Hagerstown and Blue River.

Many of the members have died, and great numbers have removed to the West.

In 1852, Thomas B. Wenrick was chosen to the ministry, and ordained in 1854 or 1855, being the first resident Elder.

William K. Marquess, Jr., was chosen about 1855, and Eli Dickey, William B. Simmons, Samuel Puterbaugh and Benjamin Bowman, have since been elected in this church as ministers of the Word.

Eli Dickey moved to Ohio about 1870; the others reside here still. Stephen Miller and George Peters moved to the bounds of this church for a short time.

In 1870, the first house of worship was built on the State line one mile north of Union City (in Indiana). The size is 44x56 feet, and the cost was $3,250, and there is a cemetery in connection. The second meeting-house was erected in 1878, about a mile southeast of Hillgrove, Ohio, at a cost of $650, with a size of 32x44 feet.

The church is large and flourishing, enjoying peace, harmony and the blessing of the Good Shepherd.

The names of the first members cannot now be given. Some of them have been and are as follows:

William K. Marquess (Rev.), John Crumrine (Rev.), John B. Wenrick (Rev.), Eli Dickey (Rev.), William B. Simmons (Rev.), Samuel Puterbaugh (Rev.), Benjamin Bowman (Rev.), Stephen Miller (Rev.), George Peters (Rev.), Frederick Roe, John Zumbrun, G. W. Marquess, Adam Simmons, S. Blocker, D. Blocker, John Knife, P. Wimar, J. Emerick, J. Kunkle, E. Noffsinger, Elizabeth Noffsinger, Mr. Deal and family, George Royer, —— Conoway.

There are, as already stated, two churches. The communion is held once a year, in the house north of Union City.

The name of the society was changed, December 25, 1868, to Union City Church.

The number of members January 1, 1881, was 225.

Zion Church (Evangelical) Emmetsville.—The church began in 1865. Meetings were held at Mr. Zimmerman's till 1879, at which time the society built a meeting-house just east of Emmetsville, a frame, 28x46 feet, at a cost of $1,200.

The first members were Emanuel Zimmerman and family, George Weiss and family, Peter Young and family, Jacob Young and family, Philip Bretch and family. And there have joined the society since, George Allmann and family, John Blouch and family, Christian May and family.

Preaching once a fortnight, but worship and Sunday school every Sabbath. Service both English and German.

There is one church like this at Winchester, and no other in the county.

Evangelical Association, Winchester.—There were members belonging to this denomination before 1833, but no class. At that date, Christian Habbich came to Winchester, and a class was formed, and religious services have been maintained ever since. For about thirty years, meetings were held in private dwellings. In 1863, a church was built on Franklin street, west of the public square.

The members in 1855 were Habbich (three families), Ulrich (one family), George Hay, Philip Schmidt.

Since then, some of the chief members have been George S. Keller, C. and G. Kizer, Schrickengost, Wietz, Boltz, Sayler, George W. Meier, Andrew Lewis, etc.

Preachers—Messrs. Shafer, Bretch, Wales, Evans, Uphaus, Buchman, Brechster, Dreier, Hosstetler, etc. The present Pastor is Rev. Launer, and he resides in the place. The church is a mission church. The Pastor supplies three churches—Winchester, Emmettsville and Richmond; preaching, in both languages, once in two weeks. The congregation sustains a Sunday school, as also a prayer meeting. The number of members is about eighty. The church, with the lot, cost about $2,000.

The society is evangelical, believing in conversion and experimental religion. Only two are in the county, at Emmettsville and at Winchester.

Dutch Reformed (Pittsburg).—This society began about seventeen years ago, and their meeting-house was built about 1870.

Some of their preachers have been Revs. Colliflower, Stuck and Weaver.

Their members have been the Shaneyfelts, Rickards, Stick, Nunnamaker, Lammot, Ravenstein, De Lawter, Iliff, etc.

Lutheran (Union City) was organized about 1857, by Rev. Thomas Lacker, residing near Greenville, Ohio, with A. Abel, Sr., as Elder, and T. Rosenbush and C. Schneidermann as Trustees.

The ministers have been Rev. A. Reefecker, Darke County, Ohio; Rev. J. Loefler, first resident Pastor, nine years; Rev. J. A. Spangenberg, eight months; Rev. E. Behme, several years; Rev. A. Michael is present Pastor (1881).

Until 1860, the congregation worshiped in private dwellings, stores, etc.

Their meeting-house was built (Plum, north of Oak) in 1860–61.

The congregation increased greatly under the ministry of Rev. Loefler. When the church was dedicated, there were but thirteen members, yet the house was free from debt.

In 1867, the church withdrew from the General Synod (New Lutheran), and joined the Joint Synod (Old Lutheran), with which it is now connected. Number of members, about one hundred and fifty; number of families, about fifty.

The Sunday school has ten teachers and seventy-five pupils; congregational schools held during summer months; religious instruction every Saturday morning, and lectures on the Catechism every other Sunday afternoon.

This church is the only Lutheran Church in Randolph County. Darke County, Ohio, has twelve, mostly German. Some of the societies date back thirty-five or forty years. In the United States, there are 2,700 ministers, 4,740 congregations and 600,000 communicants.

The religious services in the society are well attended by interested congregations.

Reformed (two and a half miles south of Fairview).—The church was formed about 1860, and their house was built in 1862.

The chief members were the Seitzes and the Campbells, and the preacher was Rev. Weaver.

The society has of late flourished less than in former years, though at present the interest seems to be reviving.

METHODIST CHURCHES.

Early Methodism (from "Indiana Miscellany," W. C. Smith.)—Methodism was introduced into Clark's Grant as soon as 1802. Rev. Hugh McCull settled on the White Water, in Wayne County, in 1805, and for sixty years or more he blew the Gospel trumpet, dying 1862, in his one hundred and fifth year.

The first circuit in Indiana was the White Water Circuit, formed in 1807, and belonging to the Ohio District and the Old Western Conference.

This circuit extended from the Ohio River north as far as there were any settlements.

In 1808, Joseph Williams was preacher in charge, and John Sale was Presiding Elder.

They found upon the circuit 185 white members and one colored.

In 1809, Indiana District was formed, containing six circuits—Illinois, Missouri, Coldwater, Maramac, White Water and Silver Creek—two in Indiana.

The territory comprised the whole of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri.

Silver Creek embraced the southern portion of the State, and White Water Circuit lay north of Silver Creek Circuit.

In 1809, White Water had 352, and Silver Creek 188.

In 1810, White Water alone had 484.

In 1811, Moses Crune was preacher in charge and a great favorite.

For two or three years, the services were held mostly in the forts, which had been built for the protection of the frontier settlers. The preachers would go around and travel from fort to fort.

In 1813, White Water had 847, and the five circuits 2,176.

In 1814, the preacher was David Sharp; in 1815, William Hunt; 1816, David Fraley; 1817, Benjamin Lawrence; in 1818, William Hunt.

In 1818, there were seven circuits and nine preachers, with 3,044 members.

One of the first meeting-houses in Indiana was built in 1808, called Meeks' Meeting-House, standing on Clear Creek, a mile or so southeast of Salisbury, Wayne County, old county seat.

One sermon from Augustus Jocelyn, in particular, from 2 Peter, ii, 22, "The dog is returned to his own vomit, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire," was long remembered as a fearfully powerful sermon upon backsliding and backsliders.

The third Methodist meeting-house was at Boston, and called Salem Meeting-House, where was built up a strong society.

The first frame meeting-house was at Centerville, under Rev. James Havens.

Camp-meetings were a power in those days. Great numbers were converted in them.

The first camp-meeting in Indiana, so far as known, was in 1810, and was held in Wayne County, a mile southeast of Salisbury. Thomas Nelson and Samuel Thompson were preachers in charge, and John Sale was Presiding Elder.

In a short time, the place of meeting was changed to Rev. Hugh McCull's land, and annual camp gatherings were maintained for many years.

From 1819 onward for years, two preachers were assigned to one circuit. The assignments for White Water were as follows, including, at this time, all the points of Randolph County:

1819—Allen Wiley, Zachariah Connell.

1820—Arthur W. Elliot, Samuel Brown.

1821—James Jones.

1822—Allen Wiley, James T. Wells.

1823—Russell Bigelow, George Gatch.

1824—John Everhart, Levi White—8,292 members in Indiana.

The second Methodist meeting-house in Wayne County was built on land belonging to John Cain, three miles northwest of Richmond, called Cain's Meeting-House. It was of logs, 18x22 feet, and the dedication sermon was preached by Rev. John Summerville. The text was a queer one—Zech., x, 4, "Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle-bow, out of him every oppressor together." But doubtless the discourse was, like many in those days, a powerful effort, for men in those sledge-hammer times made a "business" of preaching. And in that humble sanctuary, such men as Moses Crume, John Strange, Walter Griffith, Alexander Cummins, Augustus Jocelyn, James Jones, Arthur W. Elliot, Russel Bigelow, Allen Wiley and James Havens proclaimed the Gospel of Christ to entranced throngs of hardy pioneers; and a Gospel it was—sweet, strong, clear—a portion to each, both saint and sinner, in due season.

1825.—Three districts were in Indiana—Madison, Indiana and Illinois.

1826—James Havens, circuit-rider.

1827—James Havens, John T. Johnson.

1828—T. S. Hitt, James Scott; 12,090 members in Indiana.

In 1823, White Water Circuit embraced all Franklin and Wayne Counties, and parts of Fayette, Henry and Randolph Counties.

Rev. John Gibson was a powerful preacher, and died in 1818, or near that time.

Rev. Allen Wiley, when holding a two-days' meeting near Salisbury, in 1818, had a text given him with a request that he would preach from it, and a pledge that the writer of the request would attend and listen to the discourse. The text was taken, the request was read to the assembly, and a grand sermon was the result. The text was, "God said to Moses, 'I am that I am,' and He said, 'Thus shall ye say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you.'"

Mr. Smith said it was discovered that the person who sent the text to Mr. Wiley was a young lawyer by the name of Dally, and that he left shortly for New Orleans.

We give an incident in the life of Hon. James Rariden, adding also a few items of his history:

He came to Indiana very early, stopping at Salisbury, and obtaining the position of Deputy Clerk under David Hoover. He entered the law, with remarkable power, eloquence and success. He was not a Christian, and was habitually profane. One day, his little son, who had been at church, said to his mother, "Mother, the preacher said that swearers will go to hell, and pa swears." The remark startled Mr. Rariden, and he declared, "I will quit swearing at once." Whether he did or not we do not know. He was liberal, though quaint and original in his method of showing it. One day, a subscription for money for a horse for Rev. Everhart, containing sums of 10 cents to 25 cents, and so on. "Why," said he, "this will never buy a horse for anybody." He went out immediately, bought a horse and gave it to the needy minister, and let the "picayune" subscription go its way.

Camp-Meetings.—The first camp meeting in the United States is said to have been held near Red River, Kentucky, in 1799, by two brothers McGee, one a Presbyterian and one a Methodist. It was induced by the great effect of preaching at a meeting in the neighborhood previously, and produced a wonderful revival, being followed by others in various places.

The first in Indiana Territory is thought to have been on the White Water Circuit, between Brookville and Harrison, conducted by Rev. Hezekiah Shaw, in 1808.

The third in the Territory was in 1810, between Richmond and Centerville, by Elder John Sale, and after that, camp meetings were held yearly at the grounds of Rev. Hugh McCull, a famous pioneer preacher, who died in 1862, in his one hundred and fifth year.

Many camp-meetings, grove meetings, etc., have been held in the county. Some of them have been at Spartansburg, Fairview, Mt. Zion, Union Chapel, Ritenour's, and of later years, at Union City Fair Grounds, Winchester Fair Grounds, Arba, Windsor, Ridgeville, Shiloh, Chenoweth's (near Bartonia), and other places besides. They were once a great power for good, mixed with considerable evil. The roughs would go for mischief, but the Spirit of the Lord was there in power, and brought many a haughty blasphemer to the foot of the cross.

The camp-meetings of later years seem but feeble echoes of the old-time gatherings in the leafy woods. The mischief is there in abundance, but the offsetting, wrestling, conquering, converting, new creating Holy Ghost power is all too seldom seen in modern days. In fact, they seem, in many cases of late, to be conducted simply as a money speculation, and the Spirit of Power is absent.

The Methodist Episcopal societies are Union City, Winchester, Spartansburg, Bartonia, Huntsville, Mt. Pleasant, three and a half miles southeast of Huntsville, Lebanon, one and a half miles northeast of Huntsville, Macksville, Mt. Zion, southeast of Winchester, Unionsport, Thornburg Chapel, Windsor, Pleasant View, Union Chapel, west of Bloomingsport, Farmland, Morristown, Saratoga, Pittsburg, Ridgeville, Lynn, Vinegar Hill, Losantville, Concord, Fairview, Deerfield, Rehoboth, northwest of Farmland, New Dayton, Pleasant Hill, north of Farmland, Bloomingsport, New Pittsburg, Mt. Pleasant, west of Bloomingsport, on the boundary, and perhaps others.

Bartonia.—A class was established there (at Mr. Bailey's) about 1848, and the meeting-house was built about 1850. Edward Barton was Class-Leader. Some of the members have been Edward Barton, James Bailey, William Shockney, James Jackson, William A. Macy, Ephraim L. Bowen, Chenoweth; William Locke, Manning, Manning, Spencer, and their wives.

Preachers have been Messrs. Stout, Hollinsworth, Wright, Hull, Black, etc. (see Spartansburg).

The class still exists, though it is small.

Mr. Chenoweth, during his life-time, prepared a grove upon his land for the holding of meetings, and in the summer time, religious services are often held there.

He died a few years ago, and his decease has been a great loss to the community and to the society.

William Locke, who, for many years, was a warm-hearted member of the Bartonia Class, also removed not long ago, and no one remains who can fill the gap his absence has created.

Bloomingsport.—The class was first held at Jeremiah Tharpe's, south of Bloomingsport. A log house was built, perhaps about 1828. The trustees of the society were John Stevens, Nathan Frazier and Thomas Phillips. The present house was built in 1849.

Other members have been Laban Tharpe, William Chamness, William Webb, Caswell Bachelder, Alfred York, Daniel Hiatt, Harbor Pierce.

The class numbers about forty at the present time.

Deerfield.—The class was formed about 1837. The meetings were held at first in a log schoolhouse east of town, then at Perry Fields' for some years, then in a log schoolhouse half a mile south of Perry Fields', and in other places also. The church at Deerfield has been built about thirty years.

Some of the early members were Anthony Ritenour, Perry Fields, Caleb Odle, William Odle, Ephraim Collins (exhorter), William B. Fields (exhorter).

Some of the preachers for Ritenour's, Prospect and Deerfield have been Revs. Burns, Bartlett, Hall, Bradshaw, Bradbury, Kent, Campbell, Newton, Herrick, Ramsey, Blake, Kerwood, Madden. The present incumbent is Rev. Harrison.

Among the present members are Fletcher Barrett, David Harker, John Garwin, Perry Fields, Willis Whipple, Isaac Thomson.

Fairview.—The Methodists began to hold services at the first settlement of the region.

Rev. Elijah Harbour moved in very early, and he was a local preacher, and did much toward planting religion in that part of the county. Preaching was held at Nathan Godwin's, near Fairview; at Mr. Pendry's, in Delaware County; and at John Booth's, in Jay County. A log church was built in Fairview about 1839, and a frame house in 1849, which is standing yet, having been remodeled in 1874.

Some of the early members were Nathan Godwin, Bennet King, John King, James McProud, John Life, Elijah Harbour (Rev.), Caleb Manor (Jay County), John Booth (Jay County), William Richardson, with their wives.

Names of preachers: Messrs. Harbour, Ackerman, Bradbury, Brandshaw, Bowers, Leech, Sales, Smith, Hull, Bruce, Barrett, Phillips, Strite, Sells, Woolpert, Parrot, Donald, Robinson.

They have a Sunday school numbering sixty to seventy pupils.

Thomas Godwin says that he came of age while Rev. Bradshaw was circuit-rider, and that the preacher was at Thomas' father's house on the day that he (Thomas) was twenty-one. The young man, wishing to play a joke, said to his father, "Put your thumb on my head." The old man did so. Thomas, slipping quickly from under his father's hand, said, "There, father, I have slipped from under your thumb." The clergyman was surprised and pleased to boot, at the freshness and oddity of the jest, insomuch that he spoke of it many years afterward.

Farmland.—A class was formed some time before 1866. The Christians were more numerous. Both meetings were held in the schoolhouse at first, but, in 1868 or 1869, the Methodists built a church, and gradually increased in numbers and influence, eventually gaining a prominent standing.

Among the members in 1866 were John S. McIntyre, Samuel McIntyre, William R. Oliver, Charles Wall, Mr. Kelley (preacher—returned to Virginia).

Members since that time: John A. Moorman (Rev.), Elias Holliday, John H. Denton, Lewis A. Gable, James S. Davis, M. W. Diggs, S. C. Grimes, K. L. Mull, etc.

Preachers—Moses Marks, W. R. Jordan, McMahan, J. H. Peyton, Roberts, McKegg, J. W. Lowry, Jackson, Spellman, A. J. Lewellen, Charles Bacon.

The society numbers about eighty members. Sunday school has eighty to one hundred pupils, and is sustained all the year, being a live, wide-awake, prosperous school.

Hunt's Schoolhouse (one mile south of Pleasant View).—A class has existed there twenty years or more. Some of the leading members have been John A. Hunt, George Howell, Elizabeth Hunt and sons.

At Pleasant View there is Methodist preaching, but no class, preaching being held once in three weeks, and Sunday school every Sabbath. The preacher now is Rev. Peck.

Lebanon (between Huntsville and Winchester).—This church was built in 1867. Its members are Edward Butler and wife, William Butler and wife, Jonathan Butler and wife, Ackerell Lamb and wife, Joshua Campbell and wife, John T. Harrison and wife.

The preachers have been Rhodes, Wones, Harvey, Wolverton, Bowen, Peck.

Meetings have been held also at Beech Grove Schoolhouse, near Woods' Station.

Lynn.—The Methodists began at Hopewell, in Wayne County, very early, one mile south of Mr. Curtis Clenny's. Mrs. Shoemaker (daughter of Curtis Clenny, who came to near Lynn about 1815), who is our informant, joined the Hopewell Class in 1831.

In 1844, preaching was established at Mr. John Moody's, southeast of Lynn, and a class was formed, and the meetings were held in dwellings for many years. About 1850, or possibly sooner, the Methodists had preaching in a log house on the Freestone farm.

The Methodist Church at Lynn was built about 1855.

Some of the members of the class at Mr. Moody's were John Peale and wife, John Moody and wife, Elijah Benson and wife, Elizabeth Shoemaker, Mrs. Elizabeth Benson.

Some of the members at Lynn were Pierce Hollingsworth (local preacher), John Peale and wife, John Clenny and wife, and others not now recollected.

Preachers—Messrs. Burns, Cooper, Stout, Smith, Bradford, Wright and many others.

There have been great revivals in connection with the Lynn work. At one meeting, 150 members joined.

In 1861, a powerful awakening occurred, the meeting lasting a month.

Of late years, the work has much declined. A few years ago, the place was abandoned as a preaching point. At length it was resumed, along with others that had been dropped, four or five being thrown into a missionary circuit. The work revived, and the circuit became self-supporting. However, the society has dwindled, and at present (1881), no regular meetings are held, and there is no Sunday school.

Maxville.—Meetings were held at John Sumwalt's, and a class was organized about 1821 or 1822. Several other preaching points were established not far from the same time—George Ritenour's, on the Mississinewa; William Kennedy's (Mt. Zion, southeast of Winchester), etc. Mr. Kennedy belonged first to the class at Ritenour's, and attended class there, he and his wife going on horseback through the woods eight miles though preaching was held also at Kennedy's cabin.

Another nucleus of Methodism was among the Hunts, in West River, "Old Billy Hunt" being a preacher for fifty years or more.

Some of the early preachers were Richard Brandreth, sixty years ago, then a lad in his teens, still living, an old man, at Piqua, Ohio, a physician and a clergyman: Messrs. Wood, John S. Smith, living; John H. Hull, 1837; Ansel Beach, 1838; Francis Carey, William Dickerson, Colbreth Hall (married "Old Billy Hunt's" daughter), William Hunt, etc., etc.

Membership—There were but few members of the class at Sumwalt's for ten or fifteen years—John Sumwalt, one and a half miles south of Maxville; Godfrey Sumwalt, at Sampletown Cross Roads; Jacob Sumwalt, who lived in the vicinity; Walter Ruble and his wife; Caleb Odle, Mrs. Tarlton Moorman and others.

The church at Maxville was first built in 1838, near the mill, a frame.

The house was burned, supposed to have been done by an incendiary, in 1847. The present house was built about 1856.

Early members at Maxville, besides the ones named: Robison McIntyre, who had been a Presbyterian, but who became an active Methodist; Henry D. Huffman, also a Presbyterian, but an efficient worker; Alexander McIntyre, John McIntyre.

Present members: Mrs. McIntyre (widow of John McIntyre), Charles Schultz (local preacher), Charles W. Paris, Stephen Moorman, Rudolph Good, David Addington, Stephen Brickley, etc.

Mt. Pleasant (West River, on boundary).—Methodist meetings were held at Mr. Freeman's, then at Shoemaker's, and afterward at Brother John Grubbs.' A log church was built perhaps in 1838, two miles west of Mt. Pleasant, and Salem Church, two and a half miles north of the boundary, at about the same time. The present Mt. Pleasant was built about 1865. The one west of Mt. Pleasant was Asbury Chapel.

The members have been Barrett Barnett, John Retz, Mr. McGunnigal, John Jordan, Mr. Freeman, John Shoemaker, John Grubbs, George Jordan's sons and others.

Preachers have been (some of them) Messrs. Hall, McMahan, Fish, Metz, Spellman, Roberts, Strite, Rhodes, Freeman, Mann, Shackelford.

A Sunday school is held every Sabbath. There are about fifty members, and a good congregation attend the services of the church.

Mt. Zion (southeast of Winchester, near William Kennedy's).—Preaching began in this vicinity very early, when only paths and trails traced their winding way among the forest trees. Mr. Kennedy was an ardent Methodist, and the preachers soon found him out, and his cabin was the circuit-rider's home for many years. His wife and himself used to go on horseback through the woods to near Richmond, and to Ritenour's Church, between Ridgeville and Deerfield, in those ancient days. Probably a pole cabin answered the purposes of worship, after having met in the dwellings of Brethren Kennedy, Lucas, etc.

A log church was built in about 1836, which answered the desired end till 1868, at which time the present neat and tasteful edifice was erected.

The first interment in the cemetery is supposed to have been Mrs. Wheeler, which took place in (we do not know the date).

Some of the pioneer members of the Methodist Class in those times, when men and women gathered among the forests for worship, and not for show, were as follows:

William Kennedy and wife, John M. Lucas and wife, David North and wife (he is still living and resides in Kentucky), Tyndall and wife, Pierce Hollingsworth and wife (local preacher), William Hollingsworth and wife (local preacher), Stephen Williams and wife (local preacher).

The early preachers cannot now be given. Some of the later ones have been Revs. Stout, Cooper, Jenkins, Newman, Newton, Thomas, Butts, Cain.

Chief members now: Nathan Butts, John R. Phillips, Henry Tisor, Anna Holiingsworth, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Gard, Mrs. Keplinger, etc.

Mt. Zion has been an important station from the beginning. Much of the time, a Sunday school has been in operation, though there is none at the present time. It is true, also, that this class has seen times of depression and discouragement, such a season existing at the present time.

New Dayton.—There was preaching as early as 1837, at the very first settlement of the region. The first Sunday school in the region was organized by Rev. J. G. Brice.

The meetings were held at a schoolhouse near Isaiah Milner's, on the present pike from Olive Branch to Stone Station. A class was organized at an early day and the services were held at various places—at Mrs. Helms' and elsewhere.

It has been, on the whole, a good, substantial class, dwindling sometimes, and given up two or three times by the conference; but it would not stay "dropped," and still struggled on, determined to live. In 1877, a tasteful and convenient church was erected near the cemetery, and the class feel well repaid for the conflict they have endured for nearly forty years.

Some of the members are, or have been, James Addington (exhorter) and wife, Isaiah Milner and wife, Simon Lighty (exhorter) and wife, Eli Hiatt and wife, Jesse Addington and wife, L. W. Sherman and wife, Mrs. Pardon Sherman, Hannah Rose, etc.

Preachers—Messrs. Barrett, Lank, Heustis, Harbour, Bradshaw; Brice (Congregational), Pierce, Newton, Spellman, Ockerman, Elijah Harbour, etc.

A good Sunday school is sustained, with from sixty to eighty pupils.

Pittsburg.—The Methodists began here about 1853. Preaching was held at James Porter's. Afterward, a log church was built at Walnut Corner, south of Pittsburg. A frame church was built at Pittsburg about 1860, but the society went down not very long after.

Some of the chief members have been Robert Kemp, Lansford Fields, James Porter, Mrs. Puterbaugh, William Fields, the Keys, the Iliffs, etc.

Parker.—This society has been in operation ever since the town started, but they had no church till 1872.

Some of the chief members have been Messrs. Daugherty, Friddle, James Cecil, Ezra Cecil, Knapp, Ephraim Cecil, Peter Deal, John Morris, J. L. Miller.

There are sixty or seventy members. They have a Sunday school. Rev. Holdstock is their pastor now.

The class belongs to the Selma Circuit, though it formerly was attached to the Windsor Circuit.

Pleasant Grove (near Granger Hall, two miles north of Spartanburg).—The church there was built about 1847, and remained till about 1860. Some of the same members who afterward formed the Bartonia Class were prominent in building Pleasant Grove Church and sustaining religious services there. Being so near both Spartanburg and Bartonia, the class could not very long maintain a separate existence.

Pleasant Hill (one and three-fourths miles north of Farmland).—The class was formed in 1858, by Rev. John B. Burt. The house was built in 1860.

Some of the early members were Leven Cox and wife, William Broderick, —— Van Ormond and others.

Preachers have been Messrs. Burt, Lacey, Phillips, Jackson, Roberts, Redkey, Boydon, Jordan, Spellman, Lewellon, McKegg, Bacon.

The number of members now is between thirty and forty. Some of them are William Sumwalt, James Fryer and wife, Ellen Cox, James Roberts and wife, William James and wife, Rebecca Shaw and wife, William J. Macy and wife, Jesse Cox and wife, Simon Heffer and wife, William Broderick and wife, Benjamin Sumwalt.

Prospect (east of Deerfield, Ward Township).—There was an early preaching place near this house. The circuit-rider used to make Riley Marshall's one of his points away back at the beginning of things. Mr. Marshall came about 1821, and the time of the commencement of preaching dates back nearly to that day. The meeting-house was built about 1845. It has been used until within a few years, and this neighborhood has been, since the first settlement, an important point to the Methodists. But the house had become so out of repair that it was scarcely fit for use, and, Saratoga having grown up as an active center of business, the new church was built there; and "Prospect Meeting-House" stands, neglected and forsaken, beside the ancient cemetery, one of the oldest in the county, "where the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep," a sad memorial of the melancholy changes that come over the face of human affairs as the ages roll. The cemetery is still in use, and will probably continue so.

Judge Daniel B. Miller, a venerable pioneer of this region who had removed from his early haunts to spend his declining years at Winchester, directed his mortal remains to be borne, nevertheless, to old Prospect Cemetery, to sleep amongst those of his pioneer neighbors and associates.

The new church at Saratoga has been standing only a short time, being, however, a commodious, substantial structure of brick, erected thus in hope that the coming generations may find therein a place to worship God, and that time's rude, destructive hand may not again, in either the near or the not too distant future, force those who shall dwell in the land in the coming ages to build anew the walls of their temple, or find, mayhap, still other seats of piety and devotion.

In the ancient cemetery at Prospect Meeting-House lie very many old men and women, pioneers of the region. Some of them, as may be seen in the record of cemeteries, have tombstones erected above them to preserve to coming generations for their memory a name among the living. But for many—alas, how many!—this burial in the cold, cold ground has been a cutting-off from memory, as well as from sight; and the day is soon to come, perhaps has already dawned, when no man knoweth their sepulcher, and no man will know till the blast of the Archangel's trumpet in the midst of the rending sky shall reveal the final resting-place of each of the myriads of earth's departed ones.

Besides Riley Marshall's, meetings were held at D. B. Miller's and at Samuel Helms.' Mr. Miller had a vacant building, which was used, and afterward Mr. Helms erected a large brick dwelling, and the upper part, being all in one room, was occupied as a meeting place, and they say it made a first-rate assembly room.

Some of the early members were Samuel Helms, Daniel B. Miller, Riley Marshall, Ezekiel Cooper, Samuel Milligan—also Ephraim Collins, Perry Fields, Lansford Fields, William Fields, Sr., Martin Fields, Robert Pogue, Bennet Evans, Edward Evans, Andrew Key, etc., etc. (For preachers, see Deerfield.)

Rehoboth (west of Shiloh, northwest of Farmland) was built about 1853. The frame is now being torn away to be replaced by a new one the present summer (1881).

The members have been Abram Hammer, John Craig, Alfred McCamy, Jacob Windermaker, John Windermaker, Joseph Hammer, Jacob Simmons, George Morris, Stephen Willey, Cooper Morris, Richard Horner, etc., etc.

The society would seem to sustain an active and vigorous existence, and to maintain its hold upon the community.

Ridgeville.—The Methodists began to hold services about 1856, first at Mr. Renbarger's, afterward at a schoolhouse in Ridgeville, as also on the Dilly farm, two miles northwest of Ridgeville, and at Robert Collier's, northeast of the town. Class was held and services were established fifty or sixty years ago at Ritenour's, as elsewhere related.

Members in the region have been George E. Thomson and wife, Benjamin Lewallyn and wife, Abram Renbarger and wife, George Ritenour and wife, William Munden and wife, Obadiah Hall and wife, James Odle and wife, Caleb Odle and wife, Robert Starbuck and wife, William J. Shoemaker and wife, Mr. Wysong and wife, Arthur McKew and wife, Hannah Ward, Mrs. Ann Addington, George Gagner and wife.

Preachers—Messrs. Sell, Pierce, Herrick, McDaniel, Waymon, Metz, Harrison, etc.

Sunday school is kept up, and a commendable activity prevails in church affairs.

Ritenour's.—A class was formed at this point very early. Mr. George Ritenour joined the Methodists when a boy, in Virginia, and he settled on the Mississinewa before 1820. Preaching began probably shortly after 1820. Class was held at his house, and perhaps elsewhere in the neighborhood, for fifteen years possibly. The log meeting-house, standing yet (1881) was built about 1836. It has stood vacant many years, ever since Deerfield Meeting-House was built.

Some of the members were George Ritenour (exhorter), William Odle, Caleb Odle.

When the Deerfield Class was formed, that absorbed the older class and service, and Ritenour's became a thing of the past.

Ritenour's Class and Graveyard and Church were probably the first of the kind on the Mississinewa River. William Kennedy and his wife used to ride on horseback through the forest by blazed trails to Ritenour's to meeting.

Camp-meetings were held in that neighborhood, and John Key, now residing east of Deerfield, says his father used to move down to the camp-ground for the meeting upon truck wheels. In fact, that log church, now for a quarter of a century desolate, and still standing, grim and black, like some Old-World ruin, was, in those old times, a famous place; and to hear the sermons delivered in the power of the Spirit, to the eager, spell-bound assemblies thronging within and around that once sacred shrine, scores and hundreds of fervent worshipers flocked, for miles and miles through the grand old woods, along the dim blind trails, or with no track at all, on horseback or on foot, to reach the sanctuary and join in the shouts of praise and the sacred hallelujahs that made the echoes ring.

Salem (on boundary line, near Swain's Hill).—John Grubbs, an early pioneer, coming to Nettle Creek among the first, was in olden days an enthusiastic Methodist and a wide-awake local preacher, and he has done a great work in building up religious society through this region.

A church was built for the Methodists at the Salem Burying-Ground many years ago (1838). It was used a long time, but went down about 1855, and Concord Meeting-House was built not far from that time, and the new church became the place of worship for the Methodists of that region, and for others as well.

The cemetery is still used for purposes of interment, but the meeting-house is a thing of the past, and not the slightest mark or memento of its existence is to be found.

Some of the ancient members have been John Grubbs, still living, eighty-eight years old, and sick and helpless, but strong in spirit and rejoicing in Christian hope; Antony Johnson, very old; Hicks K. Wright, died a few years ago. (John Grubbs died triumphant a few days after our visit to his dwelling.)

Spartansburg.—Methodist preaching began in Greensfork Township the earliest in the county. The first preaching was by Rev. William Holman, of Louisville, Ky., at the house of Ephraim Bowen, probably in 1815, and a meeting for worship and exhortation was held at the same place by Stephen Williams, local preacher, not very far from the same time. A class was formed soon after, and preaching was held and class conducted at Ephraim Bowen's, and at Squire Bowen's and James C. Bowen's for thirty years or more. About 1830, William McKim settled at Spartanburg, and preachers from the Ohio Conference established meetings at Mr. McKim's. Some years later, about 1837, a meeting-house was built at Spartanburg, on a lot given for the purpose by Mr. McKim, who laid out the town. This house stood until 1857, when a new church was erected by the Methodists, which is occupied by them at the present time.

Some of the early preachers were Revs. Holman, Williams, Lawrence, Beck, Hull, Bruce, John L. Smith, Richmond, Bradbury, Burns, Swazy, Hollingsworth, Cooper, Wright, Sublett. Some of the later preachers have been Newton, Thomas, Curtiss, Bicknell, Cain.

Spartanburg and the region used to be famous for religious activity. At one time, the class was so large that the house would be filled and two leaders would conduct class at the same time on opposite sides of the room. Camp meetings were held, and extensive revivals took place, bringing great numbers to a profession of Christ.

Some of the early members were William McKim, William Borders, Christopher Borders, William Locke, James Fiers, Ephraim Bowen, James C. Bowen, Squire Bowen, William Dukes, Stephen Dukes, Thomas Middleton, William A. Macy, John Bates, —— Chenoweth, etc., etc.

Some of the present members are Squire Bowen and wife, James C. Bowen, Harlan Hunt and wife. Julius Moore and wife, Richard Bunch and wife, William Jackson and wife, and others.

A Sunday school is held, consisting of from forty to sixty pupils.

Steubenville.—The Methodists built a church at Steubenville about 1845, but it was not finished, and was never dedicated to religious purposes. The cemetery laid out with it is still used to some extent.

Thornburg Chapel (Stony Creek, north of Neff Post Office).—Preaching began in the neighborhood in 1840, by Rev. William Bradbury. Meetings were held at Abram Clevinger's and elsewhere—sometimes in the woods, again in an old store building put up by Jonathan Clevinger, then in an old log house on the western part of William Hewitt's farm, etc. The church was built in 1857, and it is standing yet.

About 1850 and onward, camp-meetings were held yearly for several years, and great power was manifested, and also great results achieved, through the divine mercy. Rev. Morrison was one of those on the work in those days. The meetings were orderly and impressive and convincing. They were continued many days. People moved to the grounds and dwelt in the tents erected for the purpose during the continuance of the meeting, and gave up their souls to the power of the truth and to the enjoyment of religion.

Some of the early preachers were Messrs. Bradbury, Leech, Smith, Stout, Morrison, etc.

Among the first members were Joseph Hewitt and wife, Randolph Smullen and wife, George A. Carmian and wife, etc.

John A. Grubbs, Isaiah Rogers, Kerwood and William Howell often came and exercised their gifts of exhortation among the people. The church used to have grand and gracious seasons in former days. The work has declined in later years.

Members now: William Hewitt and wife, Lindsay and wife, G. A. Carmian and wife, Smith Smullen and wife, Margaret Hewitt, Joseph Gilmore and wife, John T. Thornburg and wife, Jacob B. Clevinger and wife, Milton Smullen and wife, Susan Clevinger.

Sunday school is maintained, and the class is attached to Trenton Circuit.

Union Chapel (west of Bloomfield).—Preaching began in this neighborhood nearly sixty years ago, being held at Christian Edmonds' and at Thomas Phillip's, who came in 1821. Rev. John Strange, famous in the history of pioneer Methodism, was among the first preachers. Rev. William Hunt also labored in this region.

There was first a log church, built as early as 1830 or sooner. A frame church was erected in 1862, and the present year (1881), a new meeting-house is in progress.

The circuit in early times used to be Huntsville, Economy, Union Chapel, Bloomingport, Hopewell, Spartanburg, Mt. Zion and Mt. Pleasant (old Snow Hill).

Christian Edmonds donated the lot for the church.

The members, some of them, were Christian Edmonds, Isaiah Rogers, Hugh Botkin, Peter Botkin, Jesse Cox, Joseph Rogers, Daniel Worth and others.

Preachers—Messrs. Strange, Beck, Fairchild, Swank, Ansel Beach, Moses Hall, Bruce, Hull, Smith, Caney, Burns, Hunt, Lank (senior and junior), Farnsworth, Kelso, Medsker, Morrison, Meck, Mark, Smith, Barnes, Spellman, Strite, Phillips, Roberts, Bowen, Canann, Pierce, Newton, James Johnson, Rammel, Smith, Anderson, Kerwood, Cain, Harbor, Huestis.

The present class numbers forty-five.

Union City.—It was organized by Rev. Colclazer, of the Deerfield Circuit, in 1852, the first year of the existence of the town. The first class were Henry Debolt, wife and sister, R. T. Wheatly and wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Livengood (member still). They were joined soon after by J. T. Farson and wife (local preacher), S. L. Carter and wife (members still).

The first preaching place was Henry Debolt's house, then the "Bee-Line Boarding Car," then Hawkins' warehouse, then Scanlan's Hall, then White's warehouse (which was burned).

In 1858–59, their first meeting-house was built, a neat, commodious brick, on Columbia, north of Oak.

In 1869–70, a large edifice was erected on the southwest corner of Oak and Plum, and carried so far as to be occupied for worship. In 1880, the house was completed, at a total cost of $18,000. The house is large and commodious, having the main audience room in the second story, and the school room, class rooms, etc., in the basement. The building externally makes no pretensions to architectural beauty, but the audience room is tasteful and beautiful, and in all its appointments worthy of an intelligent and cultivated people.

They have a neat two-story frame parsonage near the church, built in 1874.

Their preachers have been Revs. Colclazer, Newton, Stout, Blake, Meudenhall, Templin, Rhodes, Sparks, Greenman, Simpson, Lynch, Barnes, Vigus and Meck, and now Greenman again.

Number of members, 343 (February, 1881).

First Board of Trustees—S. L. Carter, R. T. Wheatley, Henry Debolt, C. Saxton, J. T. Farson.

The Trustees since 1876 have been R. Wiggs, R. S. Fisher, W. T. Worthington, B. Masslich, R. T. Johnson, J. S. Starbuck, S. L. Carter, Simeon Dunn, J. M. Shank and J. M. Hartzell. R. Wiggs has removed to Kansas, and R. S. Fisher is dead. B. Masslich is Secretary of the board.

Methodist Sunday school was organized in 1853, by Rev. J. T. Farson, Superintendent. Pupils, twenty-five. Place, Bee-Line Boarding Car. F. Maloy was Superintendent from 1857 to 1870; 1856, ten teachers, eighty pupils; 1860, twenty teachers, 130 pupils. In 1871, J. S. Starbuck became Superintendent. After him have been Messrs. Tansey, Doty and Mitchell. In 1880, there were thirty-eight teachers and 278 pupils.

The church has a good organ and an efficient choir.

There have been many awakenings and revivals connected with the work of this church, some of them extensive and powerful, and a wholesome activity pervades the membership.

The Methodists commonly have large and attentive congregations.

The occasion of the dedication of the completed church was one of great interest (1880). The audience room was literally "crammed" above and below. The sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. ——, of Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio, and was highly spoken of as a powerful and scholarly effort.

The raising of the funds needed to complete payment for the house was interesting and almost dramatic.

In April, 1880, the Indiana Annual Conference was held at Union City, comprising some four hundred members, lay and clerical.

The sessions continued ten or twelve days with great and increasing interest. Several powerful sermons were delivered, and on the last Sabbath of the conference, a discourse by Bishop Foster to an excessively crowded assembly was pronounced to be the grandest sermon ever listened to in Union City.

Three most interesting and affecting occasions were witnessed in the Methodist Church during the winter and spring of 1879–80: First, the dedication of the church; second, the funeral of Prof. G. F. Mead, Superintendent of Union City Schools, who died after an illness of one week, February, 1880; sermon by Rev. Meck, Pastor; third, the funeral of Robert S. Fisher, who died after a week's illness; sermon by Rev. Meck, Pastor.

On all three of these occasions, the services were attended by a densely crowded and deeply affected assembly. Especially were the two funeral services intensely impressive, the community having been deeply wrought upon by the solemn and mournful circumstances, and absorbed in intense sympathy for the families and friends of the deceased.

A series of meetings was held during the winter of 1880–81, lasting several weeks. A deeply interesting state of feeling resulted, and the members were greatly quickened and strengthened, though but few apparent conversions took place. Some prayer meetings for Sunday schools have been held in addition to the usual and regular stated meetings, in which a deep interest in that department of church work has been developed, and good results in increased activity in the Sunday school will doubtless show itself in the future history of the congregation, and the spiritual advantage of the rising generation will be greatly enlarged.

As specimens of the growth of the church from year to year, the number of probationers received at different times is given: February, 1859, 121; December, 1860, 24; March, 1863, 17; May, 1865, 21; February, 1867, 18; January, 1869, 20; January and February, 1870, 44; January and February, 1871, 22; in 1872–74, 32; in 1875, 72; in 1876–77, 314; in 1878–80, 40.

Number of members between 1859 and 1861, 124; number of members February, 1881, 355; number of probationers February, 1881, 43.

Local preachers in connection with the work have been J. T. Farson, David Strallham, F. Maloy, G. W. Arnold, P. Y. Gebhart, C. L. Carter, B. H. Reed, H. Reitenour, M. L. Reynolds, P. S. Stephens.

The Stewards at the present time are T. S. Johnson, Jacob Haney, R. B. Castle, A. B. Cooper, J. F. Ruby, S. H. Dunn, Thomas Mitchell, S. A. Foster.

The Class-Leaders are Robert Pogue, William T. Worthington, H. H. Lefevre, A. A. Hutchinson, William Pogue, Thomas Simpkins, H. S. Foster, William Locke, E. M. Tansey, J. S. Starbuck, Morris Doty, Jane Crabbs, Laura Kelly, Mollie Pogue, J. G. Harlan.

The church has paid, during 1879 and 1880, about $6,000 for church debt and improvements, and about $200 yearly for benevolent operations.

From 1852 to 1859, Union City was simply a point upon Deerfield Circuit, and the class had hard work to live, averaging, for several years, seven members. In 1859, it was made a station, with $100 missionary appropriation. It remained a missionary station five or six years. Since about 1865, it has been self-supporting, and for several years it has been, as it still is, a strong and vigorous society.

During the winter of 1881–82, a protracted meeting was held of some six weeks or even longer. For nearly two weeks, it was conducted by Rev. Harrison, sometimes called the "boy preacher," with some, though not remarkable, results. In all, perhaps, sixty or more persons were added to the society.

Rev. Greenman, the present pastor, seems a faithful and vigorous worker, and the church is much strengthened by his earnest labors for the cause of the Redeemer.

Unionsport.—Methodist services have been held in the region for many years. Elza Lank, Sr., held a series of meetings at Unionsport years ago, and a strong revival was the result. Others also have preached in the neighborhood. The meeting-house at Unionsport was built about 1868 or thereabout.

Some of the chief members of the society are, or have been, John Lumpkin, John Botkin, Mr. Cropper, Mr. Elliot, Stephen Haines, etc., etc.

Vinegar Hill.—Mt. Pleasant (Old Snow Hill) was transferred to a schoolhouse southwest of W. A. W. Daly's residence, and the preaching point is called Vinegar Hill.

About nineteen years ago, several stations were formed into a mission, and Rev. George Jenkins was put upon the work. The points were Spartanburg, Arba; Lynn, Bartonia, Mt. Zion and Vinegar Hill. He continued the work during three years, but in the second year the work became self-sustaining, and Vinegar Hill has been a point in the circuit ever since.

Some of the members are James Barnes and wife, Jacob Hinshaw and wife, Meredith Hinshaw and wife, Zimri Hinshaw and wife, Absalom Hinshaw and wife, and others.

Windsor.—About 1830, Rev. Robert Burns, from Wayne County, came to the region, preaching the Gospel. He established a class at Abram Clevinger's.

Members have been (in early times), besides others, Randolph Smullen and wife, William Moore and wife, Bezaleel Hunt and wife, Jonathan Fryer and wife.

Preaching was held at times at Fryer's, and at Hunt's also.

A hewed-log church was built at Windsor in 1839, and in 1859 a frame, which stands yet.

There have been as many as 140 members. The number now is small. Some of them are Mrs. Odle and family, John Odle, Widow Odle, Armfield Thornburg and wife, Robert Tweedy and wife, Fanny Wallace. Preacher at the present time, Rev. Carey.

There is a Sunday school of thirty to fifty pupils.

Winchester.—Methodists established themselves very early in the county, the first services of that denomination being at the house of Ephraim Bowen, near Arba, about 1815.

How early they began to hold meetings at Winchester we have no information. The records of their early operations in that place have not been discovered.

The first written account at hand is that of a deed for a lot, given in 1853, by George W. Monks. The date of the deed was July 14, 1853, and the Trustees at that time were W. H. Fitzgerald, Jehiel Hull, John H. Cottom, William Allen, William Gorsuch.

Winchester was made a station in 1859, and about that time the church which is now standing was built, since it was dedicated October 2, 1859, with appropriate services. The station was attached to Muncie District, but for several years past it has belonged to Richmond District, and all that time to North Indiana Conference.

At first, and for a long time, the state of religion was low, and the churches had but a feeble influence.

There have been, however, several seasons of revival power, which brought in, at the times of their occurrence, many souls to the church, and the Methodists shared very largely in the revival spirit.

At present, the interest in religion in connection with the Methodist congregation is only moderate, the worldly spirit of the time seeming to depress the power of godliness among the people.

The first quarterly meeting connected with Winchester as a station was held June 4, 1859. The record of that meeting shows as follows:

S. Lamb, Presiding Elder; John H. Peyton, Pastor in charge; Missionary Committee, S. H. Lucas, Jehiel Hull, Charles Sexton, William Kennedy, Elias Kizer.

Three Sunday schools were in operation—one at Winchester, one at Mt. Zion, the place of the other not known.

The report of 1861 states the numbers for the Sunday school at Winchester at 225 pupils and twenty-five officers, and the library at 500 volumes; and the Sunday school at Mt. Zion at sixty pupils and ten officers, and 100 volumes in the library.

H. J. Meck was pastor in 1860.

S. Stout had charge in 1862, but, becoming Chaplain of the Eighty-fourth Indiana, S. H. Rhodes was assigned to his place.

In 1863, the meeting-house was valued as $4,000, and the parsonage then in existence at $700. When that parsonage was built we do not know. Another parsonage was built, which is still standing.

In 1863, O. V. Lemon was Presiding Elder, and C. P. Wright was pastor in 1864. In 1865, Benjamin Smith was Pastor.

In 1867, W. H. Goode was Presiding Elder, and M. H. Mendenhall was pastor in charge. The church was valued at $5,000, and the parsonage at $1,800.

In 1868, S. C. Miller was pastor in charge.

In 1869, M. Mahin was Presiding Elder, and M. A. Teague was pastor in charge. In 1873, W. R. Kistler was pastor.

In 1874, E. Holdstock was Presiding Elder, and R. Tobey, pastor.

In 1875, W. O. Pierce was pastor, and a new parsonage was built, at a cost of $1,310. In 1876, B. A. Kemp was pastor.

In 1877, the official members were as follows:

Trustees—John W. Williamson, E. B. Reynolds, John W. Diggs, Asa Teal, R. A. Leavell, W. A. W. Daly, John Richardson, Asahel Stone, Lee Ault.

Stewards—H. H. Neff, John Wright, Lee Ault, C. W. Diggs, J. S. Fisher, Dennis Kelly, Augustus Engle, Jacob Henderson, George A. Diggs.

In 1878, M. H. Mendenhall was Presiding Elder, and W. O. Pierce, pastor.

In 1879, E. F. Hasty was Presiding Elder.

In 1880, P. Carlan was pastor in charge.

In 1881, Horace M. Herrick became pastor, and has charge of the congregation at the present time.

Number of members on record at difierent dates: 1866, 147; 1869, 96; 1870, 140; 1880, 147.

The Sunday school seems to have been in constant operation.

Some of the Superintendents have been James S. Ferris, E. B. Reynolds, J. B. Routh, A. J. Neff, C. W. Diggs and E. H. Butler.

Doubtless others have been also in that position, but the records are silent as to the fact.

Among the members of the church at different times have been C. S. Goodrich, George W. Monks, S. M. Lucas, W. B. Pierce, E. J. Putnam, Thomas J. Hull, C. A. Avery, John W. Williamson, John M. Lucas, R. Deem, J. C. Roberts, C. Saxton, J. R. Brown, William Daugherty, A. J. Neff, B. F. Diggs, Melissa Diggs, Amanda M. Way, E. B. Reynolds, W. A. Thomson, Elias Kizer, J. S. Fisher, Jesse Bates, R. A. Leavell, H. H. Neff, John Richardson, J. B. Routh, John Thornburg, E. T. Chaffee, Thomas C. Livingston, C. W. Diggs, E. H. Butler, W. F. Houser, Edward Bates, W. A. W. Daly, R. D. Spellman, Jacob W. Henderson, J. S. Ferris, F. A. Engle, J. W. Diggs, S. McClure, Andrew Aker, H. W. Bowers, J. W. Jarnagin, Dennis Kelly, O. V. Lemon, James Ennis.

It is presumed that the foregoing list comprises only a small number of the members. Doubtless there have been many others equally worthy of mention.

Pastors have been Revs. Peyton, Meck, Stout, Rhodes, C. P. Wright, Walker, Smith, Mendenhall, Miller, Teague, Kistler, Tobey, Pierce, Kemp, Spellman, Carlan, Herrick.

Several superannuated preachers are now resident at Winchester, and are connected with the church there. Among these are P. A. Hagerman, O. V. Lemon, R. D. Spellman.

The operations of the Methodists in Winchester must have begun much sooner than any date mentioned in the above statement. Preaching services used to be held in the court house certainly before 1840, and perhaps as early as 1830, or even sooner than that. No account, however, has yet been found of those early religious efforts. Randolph County has been alive with Methodism from the very start, and surely the county seat can not have been neglected by their pioneer preachers.

During the winter of 1881–82, revival meetings were in progress, in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church in Winchester, which seemed to have a salutary effect upon the community, and which resulted in bringing a considerable number into fellowship with the church.

PRESBYTERIANS.

This branch of the Christian Church has never flourished much in Randolph County. Individual members have resided therein, and sometimes efforts have been made to establish societies, but the members have always been too few to make a permanent lodgment, and the persons would abandon the attempt and generally fall in with some other church.

Robison McIntyre, at Maxville; Mr. Jenkins, north of Buena Vista, etc., are specimens of the fact stated, as also Henry D. Huffman, west of Winchester; Robert Murphy, south of Union City; Benjamin Dixon, Wayne Township, near Salem; David Wason (Ohio), Mrs. Williamson, State line, south of Union City, etc.

Buena Vista.—A meeting-house was built some years after the Pleasant Ridge Church was erected, but an attempt was made to form a Congregational Church from the members of the Presbyterian Church. As a result of the effort, all failed, and the meeting-house at Buena Vista has been for many years occupied as a barn by Robert Starbuck, on whose land it is situated.

Pleasant Ridge (two miles south of Buena Vista).—Was formed November 28, 1842, at a schoolhouse near Mr. Hogeland's, one mile north of Huntsville, Ind. There were eighteen members, as follows: Jacob B. Kepler and wife, John Starbuck and wife, Cyrus Starbuck and wife, John Shearer and wife, James Shearer and wife, John Jenkins and wife, Isaac Hogeland and wife, Parker Jewett and wife, Joseph C. Kepler, Patience Smith. Jacob B. Kepler, John Shearer, John Jenkins were chosen Ruling Elders. Between 1842 and 1849 inclusive, twenty-six members were received, making a total of forty-four members. The church, however, did not continue, but about 1852 it ceased to be active, and has become wholly extinct. A log meeting-house (very good for the time) was built by the church at the beginning of their existence, about 1842. A graveyard also was established, the first burial in which was in 1842. The preachers at different times were Revs. J. S. Brice, E. R. Johnson, I. N. Taylor, Thomas Spencer and Andrew Loose. The house is yet standing, but has long been used for secular purposes, being now occupied as a carpenter shop.

Salem (Wayne Township).—Not long after 1835, a New School Presbyterian society was begun in the Gullett neighborhood, south of Union City. Some of the members were Robert Murphy, Benjamin Dixon, David Wasson (in Ohio), James Wasson (in Ohio), Mrs. Williamson and others. The preacher who had ministered to them died, and the society became extinct; some of the members joined elsewhere. Mr. Murphy united with the Protestant Methodists, Mr. Dixon with the Disciples, etc. The society had no meeting-house, but held their services in a schoolhouse.

Union City.—Was first organized in the house of Martin Cox, Washington Township, Darke Co., Ohio, by Rev. Isaac Ogden, Presiding Missionary, November 8, 1835, with six members. The ministers have been Revs. Gulick, Ogden, Meeks, Campbell, Drake, Lower, Eastman, Coulter, Ziegler. Mr. Drake was pastor seven years, and received into the church 167 persons. The greatest number of additions in any one year (1851) was thirty-eight. The church was changed to Union City in 1862. The first meeting-house was a log building near Martin Cox's, now used as a wood-house at Cox's Schoolhouse. One of Martin Cox's sons preserves the puncheon door as an old-time relic. The next house was what is now the German Reformed (brick) Church at Hill Grove, Darke Co., Ohio. The first services in Union City were held at the Methodist Church. The greatest number of members at any one time before the removal to Union City was fifty-seven. Six years after the removal, there were but forty. The greatest number at one time was 127. The church built a meeting-house on Union street, south of Oak, in 1863, and occupied it till about Christmas, 1879, at which time they dedicated their new tasteful and elegant edifice, on Howard, north of Oak; cost $1,200. Their present pastor is Rev. William Coulter (1880). The congregation enjoys the services of a small but excellent choir, with Miss Ella R. Ferguson, organist. The Elders have been C. W. McKee, —— Hand, Levi Reck, L. B. Pope, T. L. Steele, John Gettinger, Simon Hedrick, James Wasson, W. D. Moore, James Hanlin, J. W. Torrence, David Ferguson. Deacons, Simon Hedrick, Daniel Clapp, Robert J. Clark, S. R. Bell, Charles S. Hook. Number of members since organization, 175; number of members at present, sixty-five. Sunday school was organized in 1867, with Simon Hedrick, Superintendent, continuing as such for several years. Others, James Hanlin, M. C. Bemis, &c. Present Superintendent, S. R. Bell. Number of teachers, twelve; number of pupils, fifty to seventy-five. The Presbyterian Church and congregation have been less numerous than some others in the city, and have suffered some serious trials in the course of years, but they are now united in the support of a worthy pastor, who is leading them steadily and faithfully onward in the work of their Master and Lord. Mr. Coulter resigned his pastorship January, 1881, which left the church destitute for the time. Rev. Ziegler was called to the pastorship in the spring of 1881. He is a young but efficient laborer, and the church and congregation appear pleased and satisfied with his ministrations, and he is greatly acceptable to the community at large.

NOTE.—Before the removal of the present society from Hill Grove, Ohio, to Union City a New School Presbyterian organization was attempted, in about 1860 or 1861, holding their meetings in Paxson's Hall. The members were few, and no regular preaching was maintained. Occasional services were held for a time, but the church did not continue long, but gave up to the one which has been previously described.

Winchester.—A New School Presbyterian Church was formed there about 1842 by Rev. J. G. Brice. Some of the chief members were Samuel Ludy, James Brown, Esq., and Mr. Morrison. They maintained services for twelve or fourteen years, and, in 1853, undertook the erection of a meeting-house, which, however, they could not finish. Their preachers have been Revs. Brice, Spencer and Loose. About 1854, an Old School Presbyterian Church was formed. Some of the members were Dr. Craig, Dr. Ferguson and others. There were some dozen members at first, and after a time the number had increased to forty. Several of the New School members joined also. In 1857, the new organization bought the unfinished house, and, completing the same, used it for purposes of worship. The preachers were Messrs. Holliday, McCullock, Chapman and Campbell. This organization prospered reasonably for some years. About 1865, several prominent members removed—Dr. Ferguson, to Union City; Judge Brown, to Minnesota, etc., and, in 1868, the church was dissolved by direction of Presbytery, and their meeting-house passed into the hands of the Disciples' Church. In November, 1881, a Presbyterian Church was organized at Winchester, and arrangements were made for regular services in connection therewith. The names of the members and the details of the action spoken of have not been furnished us. Religious services were held for some weeks during February, 1882, by Revs. Ziegler, of Union City, and McCaslin, of Muncie. A good attendance took place, but the results of the effort we are unable to state. They maintain an active and flourishing Sunday school.

PROTESTANT METHODISTS.

Deerfield.—This body of Christians has never been numerous in Randolph County. About 1837 or 1838, they established a preaching place at Charles Sumption's, north of the river, opposite Deerfield, and maintained it for ten or twelve years. There were but few, Charles Sumption and his family being the chief members. Rev. Elisha Barnett was the preacher, having been previously an Episcopal Methodist. About 1850, Rev. Mr. Young, a Protestant Methodist clergyman, was active and prominent through Randolph County, but no detailed statement of his labors or of their results is at hand, and of him we can at present say no more.

Hopewell (southwest of Fairview).—The society was organized before 1845. The first preaching was by Rev. Jonathan Flood at his own house, he being the pioneer of his denomination in the region. The first church was a frame, built about 1853. The society was small. The principal members were John Woodard and family, Jonathan Flood and family (wife and four children), William McCracken, etc. There are now about sixty, as also there is a Sunday school of sixty to seventy pupils. Preachers, Messrs. Flood, Howly, Williams, Patty, Bodell, Outkelt, William Williams, Bateman, McCollum, Conn, Jones, Richmond, Prim (present minister). There used to be a circuit, with three points—Hopewell, Bear Creek (in a schoolhouse) and Deerfield. Hopewell alone has survived. Some of the members are Howell French and wife, John McCamish and wife, John Q. French and wife, Samuel French and wife, Lorenzo Gantz, John Demint, William Bailey and wife, William Mills and wife, Matilda French, Christopher James, William James and others. Preaching occurs once in three weeks.

UNIVERSALISTS.

Spartanburg.—Meetings have been held by this class of religious professors for some years past in Spartansburg and the vicinity, in groves, in the Disciples' Church and perhaps elsewhere. Some adherents to that body reside in the neighborhood, though no society has been formed there and no church has been built by them at that place. And, so far as the writer is aware, except the house at Union City, no place of worship belonging to the Universalists exists in Randolph County, and the one at Union City is not regularly occupied. Some persons holding to that form of faith reside at Winchester, and presumably elsewhere in the county. It is our impression that they have had at times a Sunday school at Winchester, but none exists at the present time so far as known.

Union City.—The first organization was had January 9, 1860. Trustees, Dr. J. N. Converse, Dr. D. French, Silas Coats; and a lot for a church was deeded to the society by Hon. Jere Smith. About 1872, Dr. French having died, and Silas Coats gone to Kansas, S. S. Converse and John Drake took their places. A neat, convenient church was built and furnished for $4,000. In 1873, a parish was organized, and Rev. Elihu Moore became pastor, with Sabbath school, etc. There is at present no pastor and no stated religious services. An occasional meeting is sometimes held by a minister from some other place. March 25 and 26, 1882, Rev. L. J. Spencer, of Palestine, Ohio, preached for the congregation three discourses—Immortality, Resurrection, Death of the Soul.

UNITED BRETHREN.

Statistics.—The churches in Randolph partly belong to White River Conference and partly to an Ohio Conference. White River Conference has two districts, viz., Dublin and Marion, and the two have seventy-nine ministers. Dublin District has ten circuits and twenty-two classes. Marion District has eleven circuits and twenty-three classes. Several of the churches in the county belong to a conference in Ohio.

Churches and Ministers.—Churches, Antioch, Losantville; Bethel, Greensfork, north of Clark's Schoolhouse; Emmettsville; Liberty Chapel, north of Bloomingport; Mt. Pleasant, southeast of Spartanburg; Mt. Zion, northwest of Losantville; Saratoga, Sparrow Creek, Union City (Ohio), White River Chapel, Nettle Creek (Vardeman's), Zion, south of Steubenville. Ministers, G. H. Byrd, Jennings, Jesse Barnes, J. D. Vardeman, George Maddox, S. D. Warwick, Samuel Kerns, S. W. Keister (Union City, Ohio) and may be others.

Antioch.—Had a meeting-house in the beginning near the Antioch Burying-Ground, just in the suburbs of Losantville; that meeting-house ceased to be used about 1855, and the society worshiped at a house west of Jordan Halsted's. About 1875, a new society was formed in Losantville, and the society have met in a public hall up to the present time. The members of the Antioch congregation (some of them) are given below: William Johnson, William Snodgrass, Frank Burroughs, Isaac Medsker, Elisha Hearty, Daniel Hearty, Daniel Medsker, James Hearty, Wilkerson Gray, Jonathan Canada, Daniel Johnson, with their wives. Preachers of Antioch and Mt. Zion, Cornelius Van Arsdal, Andrew McNees, Larkin Mullen, James Sisk, Moses McDaniel, William Terrell, Paul Jellison, Nathan Hollingsworth, Elza Hollingsworth, Jonathan Gibson, I. V. D. R. Johnson and others. Albert Long is the preacher now (1881).

Bethel Chapel (north of Clark's Schoolhouse, in Greensfork Township).—The United Brethren began preaching about thirty-five years ago by Rev. Caswell Witt. A class was organized two miles north of the present meeting-house, at Isaac Farmer's. The meetings were held first at an old log schoolhouse, on the corner of Mr. Shoemaker's place, for four or five years; then at another a mile north, six or seven years; still again, at Hawn's Schoolhouse, until the meeting-house was built, which was done in 1867. The first house was burned in 1873, and another one was put up the same year. Some of the first members were Ezra Cadwallader and wife, Philip Hill and wife, Samuel Moody and wife, Betty Clevinger, Polly Kenworthy, Levi Kenworthy, Rebecca Horner, Eli Thomas and wife, Robert Kinzie and wife. Preachers, Messrs. Caswell Witt, Scott, Vardeman, William Witt, William Ault, John Cranor, Amos Day, Manning Bailey, Wright, Demunbren, Rusk, Small (present minister). There is a Sunday school of sixty to seventy pupils. The chief members now are Philip Hill and wife, Rev. William H. Johnson and wife, John Moody and wife, Thomas Moody and wife, John Roe Jennings and wife, Samuel Jennings and wife, James Jennings and wife, Jesse Barnes and wife, Jesse Parker and wife. At one time, there were 150 members. At one series of meetings, held by Rev. Milton Wright, more than eighty joined at once. The church now numbers from eighty to one hundred members. Preaching services are held once in three weeks, one sermon each time.

Emmettsville.—The society began in 1860. The preachers were David Gunkle and John Cranor, who formed the class. The church was built in 1863. There were at first about fifty members, some of whom were James Bailey, John Brooks, Isaac Thornburg, William May, Harvey Jenkins, William Cole, John Cole, Asaph Webb. The society grew soon to over 100 members, but it is very small now. The preachers have been Messrs. Gunkle, Cranor, Evans, Bailey, Holcomb, Rector, Stover, Vickers, Dougherty, Day, Mosher, Byrd, Hutson, Demunbren, Cook, Hale, etc.

Liberty Chapel (north of Bloomingport).—The United Brethren used to hold services at Mr. Bales' and elsewhere many years ago. The old Liberty Chapel was built perhaps as early as 1840. Some of the members were John Johnson, James Abshire, Stacy Rinear, Pleasant Bales, Jesse Mills and others. The old house went down, and a new house was built by the Christians (New Lights). The United Brethren have their headquarters for that vicinity now at Bloomingport. Several of the United Brethren joined the New Lights—John Johnson, Pleasant Bales and others of the Baleses. Some of the preachers were William Kendrick and I. V. D. R. Johnson, who now preaches for the New Lights.

Liberty (north of Ridgeville).—The society first commenced service in a cabin north of Ridgeville. The lot for the church was deeded by Mr. Baker, and the meeting-house was built about 1850. It has been out of use since 1869. The members have been Henry Kizer, Joseph Baker, Joseph Butterworth, Charles Class, Paul W. Heniser, John Sackman, Adam Jack, Thomas J. Phillips, with their wives, mostly, and others. Preachers, Messrs. Conoughey, Johnson, Miller, Thomas, William Miller, Samuel Holden, Heaston, Wilkerson, Hendrix, D. F. Thomas, Johnson, McKee, etc.

Mt. Pleasant (Pinhook).—Many years ago, the Disciples used to preach at the schoolhouse in the neighborhood, but they formed no society. In 1866, the Friends set up a mission school, which proved to be large and full of interest, numbering from sixty to one hundred and twenty. The school was kept for three seasons—1866, 1867 and 1868. The third summer, a preacher of the United Brethren Church held a meeting there and formed a society of that order. Some of the members have been the Moores, the Slicks, William Parker, Caleb Manning, Lovett Mitchell, George Alexander, Joseph Alexander, John Jackson, Philip Hill, Eli Mettler, Mr. Rankin, William Manning and others. Preachers, Milo Bailey, Cranor, Byrd, Gronindyke, Jennings, Small, etc. The society had rather died down, but Rev. James Jennings, a local preacher, held a series of meetings during the winter of 1880–81, and revived their work there and is their preacher at the present time. The Sabbath school is active and flourishing. At first, the society worshiped in the schoolhouse in District No. 1, but when the new brick school dwelling was erected, the church bought the old school edifice, and, enlarging it for their purpose, made it into a meeting-house, and it has from that time been devoted to use for religious service.

Near Mt. Zion.—This denomination used to have religious service and a society in the neighborhood of Mt. Zion, north of Lynn, forty to forty-five years ago, at Mr. Halterman's and Mr. Wheeler's, and, perhaps, Thomas Butts.[2] Several families who belonged to that denomination resides in the region, among whom were Thomas Butts, —— Halterman and his sons—Jacob, Eli, etc., Wesley Wheeler, etc. There has been no class for thirty years or more. Some of the preachers were Revs. Ault (very famous), Norris, Kendrick and others.

Mt. Zion.—Was built about 1860. It stands west of Jordan Halstead's, nearly north of Losantville. The members have been Isaac Routh, Christian Leaky, John A. Snodgrass, Miles Holliday, Jonas Johnson, William Pool, Nathan Pool, Lyman Halstead, Wesley Leaky, &c. This society is active and flourishing. For some fifteen years the society at Mt. Zion included also those of Antioch (Losantville). But about 1875, two distinct classes were formed and they so continue to this day. Preachers, see Antioch.

Saratoga.—Was formed about 1860; the church was built in 1873, and the parsonage was erected in 1880, being a neat and tasteful edifice. Among the first members were Joseph Lollar and wife, John Fraze and wife. William Fraze and wife. The society has been and is somewhat flourishing, with preaching once in two weeks and an active Sunday school. The preachers have been Revs. Hendricks, Wagener, Shroup, Bennett, Cost, etc. The present incumbent is Rev. Montgomery. Present members, Charles Fields and wife, John Fraze and wife, William Fraze and wife, Cyrus Bowsman and wife, Wesley Bragg and wife, Samuel Sipes and wife, James Evans and wife. Elisha Lollar and Joseph Shiveling are Trustees. The present pastor (1881) is Rev. Jacob Cost, and he preaches at four points—Saratoga, White River Chapel, Otterbein (north of Deerfield) and Prospect (in Jay County, between Pittsburg and Salem). The pastor for 1882 is Rev. Montgomery.

Sparrow Creek.—They had preaching twelve years ago, first, in Sparrow Creek Schoolhouse. Their meeting-house was built ten years ago (1871), northeast of Buena Vista, being a neat and comfortable frame edifice. Their members have been Jacob Houser, Peter Lasly, Jesse Reynard, Leroy Starbuck, Elisha Johnson, David Huston, John Brooks, Rector, etc. Preachers, Milo Bailey, G. H. Byrd, Milton Harris, Benjamin Holcomb, Cook, Demunbren, etc. They have no Sunday school.

Union City, Ohio side.—In 1861, a Christian (New Light) Church was organized. The congregation flourished for a time and a good meeting-house was built. A heavy debt was contracted, however, and the house had to be sold and the church disbanded. A United Brethren Church was organized in 1876, and they purchased the house. They have since continued with a good degree of activity and success to the present time. Rev. J. W. Keister is their pastor, who seems to be an intelligent, pious and devoted servant of Christ. He is heartily and thoroughly in sympathy and effort with the temperance work and all the other great Christian reform enterprises of the day, and the people feel encouraged to renew their diligence in the service of their Master. They carry on a flourishing and efficient Sunday school. The United Brethren congregation is the only one on the Ohio side. Many of the church members there belong to the congregations worshiping on the Indiana side. The population on the Ohio side is probably 1,500. A revival meeting was in progress during the winter of 1880–81 for several weeks, with much interest and many conversions. Nearly fifty united with that society during the meetings, and the church and its pastor are greatly encouraged and strengthened (winter of 1880–81). In the summer of 1881, two events of importance occurred. First, their annual conference held its sessions with that society, a meeting of interest and great religious value. Second, the church repaired and renewed the interior of their meeting-house, which was rededicated in the latter part of the summer with impressive ceremonies. Altogether, the United Brethren Church is doing a good and much-needed work in that town, maintaining the standard of the Cross among that otherwise destitute population. A still more active and successful revival meeting was in progress for many weeks during the winter of 1881–82. The congregations were large and enthusiastic, and a large number of converts have been added to the church, and a lively and growing religious interest prevails among that people.

White River Chapel (near Vardeman's, Nettle Creek). — A society was formed about 1865, and their church was built about 1872. Their members have been Joshua Maddox, George Maddox, Edmund Petro, Mrs. Gillum, James Bolin, John Vardeman, Sr., John Vardeman, Jr., Henry Grubbs, Stephen Warwick, Addison Rhodehammel, etc. For several years, the United Brethren held meetings in the old Concord Church, but each society concluded it would be best to have a house all to itself, and two houses were built, a mile apart, the Methodist Church at the location of "Old Concord," and the United Brethren a mile east.

Zion (one mile south of Steubenville).—The society began about 1860. Preaching was held in the schoolhouse by Rev. David Gunkle. The meeting-house was built in 1875. At first, there were some twenty members. The present number is about thirty-five. Some of them are, or have been, William Gray, Edward Gray, Silas Gordon, Christian Size, James McProud, Constant McProud, W. T. Gray, S. S. Clark. Preachers, Messrs. Gunkle, Cranor, Rector, Day, Rice, Demunbren, Cook, Hall, Bias. The Sunday school numbers from twenty to thirty and preaching occurs once in three weeks.

TRUE WESLEYANS.

This denomination arose in the United States chiefly by a secession from the Methodist Episcopal Church, about 1842. The movement sprang from several causes—opposition to slavery, secret societies and Episcopal power. And these three principals were declared in the new society, Anti-Slavery, Anti-Secretism, Anti-Episcopacy. The movement sprang rapidly through the country and became for a time strong and vigorous. The denomination began in this region at Newport (Fountain City), Wayne Co., Ind., in 1843, in the form of a quarterly meeting held there by ministers and lay members who were ready for the movement. Among the members of that convention were Rev. Ogden, from Troy, Ohio; Josiah Bell, Francis Root, Wayne County, Ind.; Daniel Worth, Stephen Moorman, Randolph County, Ind.; William Williams, Harvey Davis, Griffin Davis, John W. Johnson, Wayne County, Ind.; John A. Moorman, Walter Starbuck, George Vandeburg, Jonas Lykins, James Clayton and wife, Seth W. Beverly, Randolph County, Ind. As a result of that conference, the denomination took its rise in Randolph and Wayne Counties, and several classes were formed. In Randolph County, at Sparrow Creek (Buena Vista), at White Chapel, in West River Township, and at Clayton's, five miles west of Winchester. An account of the White Chapel class will be found elsewhere, which was a good strong church. At Buena Vista, some of the leading members were Walter Starbuck, George Vandeburg and Jonas Lykins. At Clayton's, were James Clayton and wife, Seth W. Beverly, John A. Moorman and Stephen Moorman. The preachers officiating at various times have been John W. Johnson, John A. Moorman, Daniel Worth, Mifflin Harker, Thomas Boucher, Jesse Pryor, Rev. Gladden, Alexander Haywood, Dr. Hiatt, Charles Clemens, William R. J. Clemens, Aaron Worth, Coate and others. The societies, except at White Chapel, were never strong, and they gradually dwindled away. The members died, or moved away, or went back to the Episcopal Methodists or Friends; or, in some cases, they stand aloof from church membership to the present time. In fact, most of the veterans of that anti-slavery conflict are no longer among the living. Some of the younger soldiers in that struggle still answer to the "roll call" of duty, but, as to the elder heroes in that fierce contest, their arms were long since laid aside; their mortal frames rest sweetly in the friendly dust, and their souls have gone to the mansions above. Their work is done; victory is gained; slavery is fallen—"is fallen," amid the happy shouts of an emancipated and enfranchised race. The Wesleyan Church at Newport (Fountain City), Wayne County, still exists, though much weakened in strength and numbers since the activity and power of that early time, when the battle against human slavery and unchristian prejudice raged fiercely throughout the land; but in Randolph County, the Wesleyan society as a denomination has wholly ceased its activity. No meetings have been held for perhaps ten or twelve years, at least but very few, and the Wesleyan work in Randolph lives only in the memory of the past.

Sparrow Creek.—Began about 1843. The meetings were held at first in a log schoolhouse near Leroy Starbuck's, on the Buena Vista pike, two miles east of that place. The building is still standing. Afterward, they were held south of that, at Shearer's Schoolhouse. The Wesleyans never had a meeting-house on Sparrow Creek. Preachers, Alexander Haywood, John W. Johnson, Dr. Hiatt, Elijah Coate and some others. Members, Walter Starbuck, George Vandeburg, Jonas Lykins, Thomas Johnson, Rufus K. Mills, John Mills, etc., etc. The society is now nearly or quite extinct, having had no public services sometimes for months together, and none at all for some years.

White Chapel (between Bloomingport and Economy).—Soon after the formation of the American Wesleyan denomination, about 1843, a class was established in the southern part of West River, in the vicinity of Rev. Daniel Worth's, who had been a Methodist Episcopal preacher, but who went with the Wesleyans. Meetings were held for some years without a meeting-house, but White Chapel was built before 1852, and the Wesleyans kept up their services till say 1872. The society has now become entirely extinct, and the house was sold and removed in 1880. The members have been Daniel Worth, Macy Bunker, Owen Williams, Aaron Worth, William Price, Henry Mullenix, William C. Mullenix, Andrew Farquhar, Mahlon Farquhar, Clayton Stevenson. The preachers have been Daniel Worth, John A. Moorman, John W. Johnson, Alexander Haywood, Charles Clemens, Mr. Coate, Dr. Hiatt, Mr. Gladden, Aaron Worth, etc. The society was, for a time, lively and active, but it gradually lost its strength, and finally fell into entire extinction.

CHURCHES, ETC., OF UNION CITY.

The churches are as follows, one of each: Methodist Episcopal, Rev. Greenman, pastor; Disciples, Rev. Sloan; Presbyterian, Rev. Ziegler; Lutheran, Rev. A. G. H. Michaelis; United Brethren (Ohio), Rev. S. W. Keister; Roman Catholic, Rev. J. H. Quinlan; Universalist, vacant.

Each of these congregations has a house of worship. The Methodists and Disciples have large and costly ones; the others, smaller and less expensive ones, but sufficient for their respective needs. Each congregation, except the Universalists, has a resident pastor and regular weekly services and a Sabbath school.

The Methodists, Lutherans, United Brethren and Roman Catholics have each a parsonage. The inhabitants of the town are largely religious, and most of the principal citizens are active members of some religious society. The temperance sentiment of the place (Indiana side) has always been very strong and active; and, though many vigorous efforts have been made to establish the whisky business, those efforts thus far have always been failures.

The various temperance organizations of the day have been in operation from time to time—Sons, Templars, Alliance, Crusaders, Murphy societies, etc., etc. There is now an Independent Temperance Society in operation, having a hall and holding meetings several times a week (1880–81).

On the Ohio side, unhappily, the sentiment has been the other way, and, though there exists over there a strong and vigorous temperance feeling, it remains in the minority, and a large number of drink-shops are allowed to squander the hard earnings and desolate the homes of their unfortunate victims. The history of the various churches in Union City is given in the appropriate place under each head.

Several clergymen are residents of the town besides the pastors of the churches. The principal ones with the pastors are Rev. H. J. Meck, pastor M E. Church, Oak street (gone); Rev. C. G. Bartholomew, pastor of the Disciples' Church, North Howard street; Rev. W. M. Coulter, pastor Presbyterian Church, North Howard street (gone); Rev. Michaelis, Lutheran, North Plum street; Rev. Quinlin, Catholic, North Plum street; Rev. Keister, United Brethren (Ohio side); Rev. Reynolds, Methodist Episcopal; Rev. T. A. Brandon, Christian, North Howard street (gone); Rev. Stephens, Methodist Episcopal, east side of town; Rev. E. Tucker, Congregational, North Plum street; Rev. H. B. Polly, Disciple; Rev. W. D. Stone, Disciple, West Oak; Rev. Sloan, Disciple, North Plum (gone); Rev. Ridenour, Methodist, West Oak; Rev. Carter, Methodist, North Union; Rev. J. T. Shaw, Disciple, North Columbia; Rev. Vinson, Disciple, Ohio side; Rev. Vinson, Disciple, West Oak; Rev. Oldfield, Methodist, North Howard; Rev. Ziegler, Presbyterian, North Howard, Mr. Bell's.

NOTE—Several of the above have removed from the city.

Resident clergymen of Winchester are Revs. Herrick, Watts, Ellis, Brown, Johnson, Beard, Lemon, Spellman, Launer and perhaps others.

SPIRITUALISTS.

Unionsport.—This people have held meetings at times at Mr. Lamb's and at Josiah Mendenhall's. Some years ago, they held two or three grove meetings on the lands of John Lewis, near Unionsport. They have no settled organization at the place, but several persons in the vicinity are inclined to that faith, and think they have evidence that their friends who died years ago have appeared to them in material form, have spoken and in other ways proved their actual bodily existence. Spiritualism has found some adherents in past years in Winchester, and probably there are some of that way of thinking there at the present time; but, so far as we are aware, no public services or other demonstrations or exhibitions are now held in that town. What the condition of things may be in this respect there or in the county at large at the present time we are not informed.

HOLINESS BAND.

Union City.—The "Holiness Work" commenced in Union City under the labors of Rev. Mr. Lynch, pastor of the Methodist Church, about ten years ago. Father Carter was the first to enjoy the blessing, under the labors of Brother Lynch, during the revival of 1870–71, and he continued to enjoy that blessing and a sense of full acceptance and a perfect salvation till the close of his long and useful and devoted life. He spoke of his enjoyment of full salvation at every class-meeting, and showed by his daily walk that he possessed what he professed. During the summer of 1871, Brother Lynch, with about thirty of his members, went to Urbana Camp-meeting, he being anxious that they should avail themselves of this opportunity of seeking the blessing. About twenty of the members from Union City professed to receive the baptism of perfect love at that place. Weekly meetings were held for six years in the promotion of Holiness, but after that time the interest somewhat abated, and the meetings were permitted to close and gave place to the Cottage Prayer-meetings, held by the Young Men's Christian Association. Five years ago (1876), in the meetings conducted by Rev. Mr. Vigus, the work revived again and several professed to receive the blessing, but no special meetings were held till 1878. In the spring of that year, a young man by the name of Crouser came to Union City, and held meetings for three or four weeks in the Methodist Episcopal and United Brethren Churches and the surrounding country. His extreme doctrine seemed to cause a division of sentiment among Christians to some extent. One result of his meetings was the formation of a "Holiness Band," who have held their separate meetings once or twice a week. The band has numbered from twelve to twenty persons. During the summer season, they have held many meetings in the country, going sometimes twenty miles for that purpose. At the present time, about sixty persons in Union City profess enjoyment of the blessing of Holiness; and, on the whole, the work is on the advance. Two camp-meetings have been held at Union City Fair Grounds for the promotion of the cause, one by the Holiness Band, in connection with the Warsaw Holiness Camp-Meeting Association, and one by the Methodist Episcopal Church of Union City and the association just named. The meetings took place in the summers of 1879 and 1880. During the winter of 1880–81, a series of meetings were held in Union City under the direction of the Holiness Band, at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, continuing some two weeks. At the present time three meetings are held weekly in this interest—Tuesday evening, at the Methodist Episcopal Church; Friday evening, at the United Brethren Church, on the Ohio side, and one by the Band on Sabbath afternoon. Some opposition has been developed in process of time, both in the churches and outside of them, and the advocates of Holiness have borne a measure of reproach and evil speaking on account of their faith in this behalf; but grace has vouchsafed them meekly and joyfully to endure reproach and persecution for their faith in the grace of full salvation applied to their souls. The doctrine of Holiness as held by them may be briefly stated thus: There are two states of Christian experience—a lower and a higher state. The first is commonly attained at conversion, in which the soul is turned to God and set upon his services; but the passions remain still with more or less power to tempt and distress and sometimes to lead astray the struggling soul. The second is gained by prayer for and faith in this special blessing; and in this second or higher state, the power of temptation in the mind is wholly removed, and the soul is fully saved from sin and enabled by the strength of divine grace to live wholly free therefrom and in the full enjoyment of perfect love. Some hold that the power of appetite and passion is wholly destroyed; others seem not clear in their view upon this latter point. With many the doctrine of Holiness exists as a firm and steadfast and intelligent faith in the power of Christ to save them from present sin and a humble and constant reliance upon and a trust in Him for entire freedom from known and constant transgression, coupled with a deep conviction of their helplessness in themselves and their need of entire dependence upon Christ for His indwelling power constantly put forth to accomplish their full salvation from the power and the fact of sin. In others, there would appear to be somewhat a fanaticism and a kind of imagination of freedom from sin while yet it is clearly evident, to others, at least, that the persons in question possess their full share of human infirmity, both in the power of passion in their souls and in the actual yielding thereto by them. In fact, some of the professors of Holiness show that they are no better than other men. The practice of such naturally brings the doctrine into disrepute. A special doctrine of Holiness would seem to have been maintained of old in the Christian Church, notably by the Methodists in the time of Wesley, and for many years after that day and more or less down to the present time. The Methodists as a society, however, appear to have declined from their early faith and practice in this respect. Among most professors of religion at present, the "Doctrine of Holiness" as held by its special advocates is judged to be rather fanatical and somewhat injurious to the influence of religious truth in the community. One thing, however, must be admitted to be correct—that the faith of the churches in the attainability of a high degree of Christian purity is far too weak, and that they need to awake to the great command, "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

In the spring of 1874, a paper was circulated and signed by twenty-two persons, residents of the city, containing a call for a meeting for the formation of a Young Men's Christian Association for Union City and vicinity. The meeting was held in May, 1874, and officers were chosen as follows: James F. Rubey,

President; J. N. Hoover, Vice President; M. A. Harlan, Secretary; Simon Hedrick, Treasurer; John S. Starbuck, Corresponding Secretary; Bentley Masslick, Levi Reck, W. T. Worthington, John C. Read, J. N. Galloway, Executive Committee. A constitution was adopted, some of the features of which are given below:

PREAMBLE.—We, the subscribers, actuated by a desire to promote evangelical religion among the young men of Union City and vicinity, and impressed with the importance of forming an association in which we may labor together for the great end proposed, do hereby agree to adopt for our government the following constitution:

Name—Young Men's Christian Association of Union City.

Object—Salvation of young men through Jesus Christ, and the promotion of evangelical religion.

CLASSES OF MEMBERS.

1. Active, church members by the payment of $2 a year. Resident pastors, free.
2. Associate, persons of good moral character, by payment of $2 annually; ladies, 50 cents.
3. Sustaining, persons as in "Second," by payment of $5 at one time.
4. Life, by payment of $20 at one time.
5. Honorary, elected by a two-thirds vote, having been proposed at a previous meeting.

The association occupied a room at No. 38 Columbia street. In June, 1874, Messrs. Hedrick, Starbuck and Rubey report attendance upon a Young Men's Christian Association Convention at Dayton, and state that they found an excellent spirit pervading the assembly and great enthusiasm in the prosecution of their work. In December, 1874, a Young Men's Christian Association Convention was held at Union City. Rev. L. J. Templin was appointed to deliver the welcoming address on the part of the association, and the pastors of the churches were invited to do the same in behalf of their respective societies.

December 22, 1874, the city was districted and committees appointed to canvass the town to get children and youth into the Sunday schools.

December 29, 1874, it was decided to hold "Cottage Prayer-meetings," that is, meetings in private houses throughout the city.

May 3, 1875, Rev. L. J. Templin was appointed delegate to the national convention at Richmond, Va., May 26, and Brethren Worthington, Foster, Hedrick, Fisher, Masslich, Read and Starbuck delegates to the district convention at Richmond, Ind., on the 15th and 16th instant.

November 14, 1875, "Week of Prayer" observed throughout the city and at the reading-room, and a union Sabbath meeting at the M. E. Church, November 21, 1875. Services as follows:

Sabbath, November 14—Reading-room, conducted by Fisher and Wiggs.

Monday, November 15, ditto.

Tuesday, November 16—First Christian Church, Union City, Ohio, Gebhart and Worthington.

Wednesday, November 17—Presbyterian Church, Starbuck and Read.

Thursday, November 18—Methodist Episcopal Church, Hedrick and Haulin.

Friday, November 19—Friends' Church, Knight and Fleehart.

Saturday, November 20—Disciples' Church.

Sabbath, November 21—Methodist Episcopal Church, Hedrick, Starbuck and Fisher, with meetings during the week at the reading-room, at 8:30 A. M. and 6:30 P. M., for prayer.

The series of meetings was continued till Tuesday, December 14, 1875.

Moved to new room in Hartzell building in December, 1875.

July 1, 1876, Brethren Fisher and Starbuck were appointed delegates to the International Convention at Toronto, Canada, to be held July 12, 1876.

November 6, 1876, twenty-one meetings reported to have been held during the summer and fall in the region, and much good accomplished.

In the spring of 1877, James Moorman presented a large brick building to the association.

November 12, 1877, report of work for the year shows as follows: Sabbath meetings held, 26; services, 188; members attending, 376; accessions to the church, 56; cottage prayer-meetings held, 111.

February 11, 1878, report made that the course of lectures by Prof. J. C. Fletcher had resulted in a debt on the association of $11.25. The association met for the first time in their own property.

December 16, 1878, reported forty-seven country and village meetings, with good attendance and interest; thirty-five cottage prayer-meetings, twenty-three Bible readings and twelve Murphy meetings.

November 17, 1879, report of cottage prayer-meetings during the year, eighteen. School in progress at Bennett's Schoolhouse from April to September, with a good interest and an average attendance of fifty. Other meetings reported, thirty.

November 23, 1880, report twenty cottage prayer-meetings and twelve religious services elsewhere.

For several years, great activity was shown by the association and much good was accomplished. The past year, their work has been mostly suspended, though the association still exists. They own the building donated by James Moorman, estimated to be worth $2,500, with a debt of $250. During a portion of the time, Sabbath Bible meetings for reading and study were held at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, but the Sabbath is so fully taken with regular meetings in connection with the various churches of the city, leaving little or no time for any outside work that but few could be found who would attend the Bible readings, and they were at length discontinued.

In November, 1881, the week of prayer was observed in Union City by a union meeting, as follows: Presbyterian Church, Monday and Wednesday evenings; United Brethren, Tuesday and Friday evenings; Methodist, Thursday evening and Disciples' Church, Saturday evening. Some interest was manifest and a considerable attendance was obtained during the week at the various houses of worship, though only a bare fraction of those who should have taken part in this renewal of prayer and effort for the souls of the young to bring them to regeneration and salvation.

PROMINENT MINISTERS, ETC.

Below will be found biographies of a few persons out of the many who have in days past been active leaders of religious sentiment, or earnest workers in the cause of Christ in the region. They are given, not because they are the most important among the noble band of Christian heroes whose lot has fallen in these parts, but because these persons were especially accessible, or because the facts concerning their life and work were within reach. The denomination, as also the township to which they respectively belonged is pointed out with each statement.

Rev. Thomas Addington, Franklin, Christian, was born in 1829, in Wayne County, Ind. His father moved to Randolph County, Ind., in 1834, settling one and a half miles southeast of Maxville. He married Martha Ann Hughes in 1851. They resided on his father's farm until 1865, and from that time mostly on Bear Creek, in Franklin Township. They have had five children, all living, and two married, and the oldest, Emerson, is also a preacher. T. A. attended the common schools, as also the Union Literary Institute, and Liber College in Jay County, Ind., and was ordained a minister of the Christian denomination, sometimes called New Lights, in 1858. He is a talented, influential and useful preacher, and his field of labor has extended through Randolph, Jay, Blackford and Wells Counties, etc. Elder Addington gave us a brief statement of the society to which he belongs, which we subjoin.

Between 1792 and 1802, three separate bodies of Christians arose in different and distant localities, entirely unknown to each other, and from different sources.

In the East, from the Congregationalists and Baptists; in the South from the Methodists, and in the West (Cane Ridge, Ky.), from the Presbyterians. Their chief men were: In the East, Dr. Smith; in North Carolina, Elder Jones; in Kentucky, Elders Stone, Purviance, Thompson, etc. By and by they became acquainted, and united on this basis:

I. The Bible the only guide.

II. Christian character the only test of membership.

III. Christian the only name.

In 1823, the followers of A. Campbell organized as Disciples, and were early known as such; but Elder Barton W. Stone, in the Christian branch, adopted Campbell's views, and took many with him, and the name also; and since that time many of the Disciples claim the name Christian. The original Christians claim, however, that the name "Christian" as a modern denominational appellation, belongs rightfully to them, and not to the Disciples.

Elder Addington has preached extensively and successfully in the region in connection with the Christian (New Light) Church. He is reckoned a prominent clergyman, and is doing much good among the people to whom he preaches.

He is, in politics, a Republican, having in his early life been an Abolitionist. One of his sons though a young man, is an ordained preacher in the Christian Church, and gives high promise, by Divine favor, of future usefulness in gathering the "Lord's harvest" in the great world-field; and he has before him, if God spare his life among men, the prospect of many years of labor for Christ and human salvation.

Elder Thomas Addington is ready with the pen as well as fluent in speech, and he has contributed many valuable articles to the press upon important subjects pertaining to religion and morality.

Uriah Ball, magistrate, Disciple, was born at Woodstock, Vt., in 1807, and came to Warren County Ohio, in 1817; went down the Mississippi, spending time in Tennessee and Missouri; returned through Kentucky to Warren County, Ohio, and remained until 1829; then went to Cincinnati, and to Oxford, Ohio, in 1831; and to Randolph County, Ind., southeast of Winchester, in 1835–60. He lived at Lynn in 1860–67, and moved to Union City in 1867. He married Susannah Wrench in 1830, and Mrs. Elizabeth Bragg in 1867. He has had four children, all dying in infancy. Mr. Ball served an apprenticeship as a carpenter, and followed the business for twenty years. He was also a farmer, and besides sold goods at Lynn seven years. At Union City, he was a carpenter until too feeble to work (1877).

He was Justice of the Peace for Washington Township nine years, from 1846 to 1851, and has been Justice in Union City from 1878 to 1882. He has been a member of the Disciples' Church for forty-four years, some of the time Elder, and also Local Preacher for many years.

Rev. C. G. Bartholomew, late pastor of Disciples, Union City, was born in Brown County, Ohio, in a country log cabin, in 1830. His removals have been as follows: Clermont County, Ohio, 1850; Campbell County, Ky., 1858; Leavenworth, Kan., 1860; Jefferson College, Ky., 1861; Rockville, Parke Co., Ind., 1863; La Porte County, Ind., 1869; Indianapolis, 1872; Rush County, Ind., 1875; Wayne County, Ind., 1876; Irvington, Indiana, 1877; Cambridge, Indiana, 1878; Union City, Ind., 1879. His occupation has been teaching, preaching and medicine. Teaching and preaching, 1848 to 1863; studying medicine, 1853 to 1854, and again in 1862 and 1863 in Cincinnati School of Medicine and Surgery. He practiced medicine and preached, and was engaged also for a time in secular pursuits. Since 1872, his time has been devoted exclusively to preaching until a year or two past.

He has been largely connected with evangelical and missionary work in his denomination in Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky. He has long been a life director of the American Christian Missionary Society. Besides regular pastoral work, his evangelist and missionary labors have been abundant, and, by the Divine favor, many souls have been led to profess Christ through his means.

Mr. B. has a large and interesting family. In 1852, he married Ann Davidson. They have had ten children, seven sons and three daughters; eight still living. None are married, and seven are at home—a lovely and happy group of youth, a joy to the hearts of the loving parents, and giving high promise of activity, usefulness and success in the maturity of manhood and womanhood yet to come.

For some twenty years, Mr. B. has been a large contributor to the current literature of the time, embracing an extensive range of religious, political, scientific and social subjects. In Kentucky, during the war, he was steadfastly, openly and thoroughly Union; and, though in no sense a partisan politician, he maintains firmly sound morality as an integral part of true political science, holding with the wise man that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." He has been from the beginning to this day an earnest thorough, radical and enthusiastic worker in the great cause of total abstinence, and it is a part of his religion to abound in every good word and work.

Mr. Bartholomew has for some two years engaged in general religious work, in the regions of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, etc. During the summer of 1880, he employed some months in speaking to his fellow-citizens upon political themes, in the interests of the Republican party and the election of Garfield to the Presidency; and at the present time (April, 1882), he is a candidate for the Republican nomination as State Senator from the joint district composed of the counties of Randolph and Delaware, seeking that position from an especial desire to further the interests of the temperance cause in general and of constitutional prohibition in particular.

Elkanah Beard, Winchester, Friend, was born in Washington Township, Randolph County, Ind., in 1833, being the son of William Beard, and the grandson of Dr. Paul Beard, one of the first pioneers of Washington Township. He married Irena Johnson, daughter of Silas Johnson, and grand-daughter of Jesse Johnson, another pioneer of that vicinity. She was born in 1835, and they were married in 1852. Their residence was near Lynn Friends' Meeting-House, until 1873, at which time they removed to Winchester, which they have reckoned to be their home for the past eight years. They have, however, spent much time in other parts of the world. Both Elkanah and his wife became recorded ministers among Friends somewhat early in life; and in 1863, about a week after Vicksburg was taken by the Union forces, Elkanah went there, and in the fall his wife also joined in the work among the freedmen, set on foot by the Society of Friends. In the course of time many schools were established by them throughout the South, and Elkanah and his wife had the oversight of those in Mississippi and Louisiana. Those of which they had charge were at Vicksburg and Jackson, Miss., Beard's Levee, Papaw Island, Lauderdale, and Young's Point, La.

They remained in the South much of the time, six years, with Vicksburg as headquarters. In 1869, they came North, and went to India as missionaries, spending a year at the Holy City of Benares, on the Ganges (Benares being to the Hindoo what Jerusalem is to the descendants of Israel), establishing at length a mission at Jabulpoor, on the Nerbuddah River, in Central India, a city of 80,000 inhabitants, and dwelling in that town more than a year. Mrs. B.'s health failed, and they were obliged to return to America, having spent more than three years abroad. Mrs. B. had an abscess in the side, internally, and, for two years and four months, was nearly helpless, being unable to walk or dress herself. The physicians, both in India, and in England where they stayed two months in the vain attempt to effect a cure, as also in America, pronounced her disease incurable. She lay thus helpless for years, apparantly a hopeless case. Her mind, however, dwelt much and long on the precious and abundant promises of Christ to his beloved ones; and it seemed to her, and at length she felt sure, that there was ground for faith that the Lord would, in answer to the "prayer of faith," grant her full deliverance.

They had been eighteen months in America, and were sojourning at Richmond, Ind., when, on the morning of the 19th of January, 1874, she was healed instantly by faith in Christ. She arose from her bed that morning, dressed herself, walked a mile and a half that day, and has been well and strong ever since. Her husband and herself both declare she had not been able to walk nor dress herself during the whole twenty-eight months; but from that morning her abscess ceased and has not troubled her to this hour. It was about the time of the "Crusade," and she went out with the "praying women," kneeling in the snow, and has ever since been active and healthy.

She says: "I felt that the promises were true, and that they were mine; and I grasped the promise, and, as my faith took hold on Christ, I felt the healing power thrill through my frame as sharply as I ever felt anything, and I knew that I was well; and I sprang from my bed in an ecstacy of bliss, and, if ever a soul rejoiced and praised the Lord, I was that soul."

Mrs. B. has no theory, and offers no explanation; but she says, like the man born blind who was healed by the Savior, "One thing I know, whereas I was for twenty-eight months a helpless invalid, I arose at once healed and sound, and have been so from that day to this hour."

The mission begun by them in India has been maintained, its location being changed, however, from Jabulpoor to Ho-shungo-bad, also on the Nerbuddah River. They had two schools, and Mrs. B. spent some time in "zenana" visiting. The "zenana" is the portion of the dwelling set apart for females, into which no male person, except, perhaps, the lord of the mansion, is ever permitted to enter. Very few were open even to female visits, but some were so, and these Mrs. B. visited. Her school contained about forty "high caste" girls, from ten to fifteen years old, many of whom were already married, marriage at ten years being not at all uncommon. The pupils were taught Hindoo literature, as also they received moral and religious instruction.

The girls were "hired" to attend school, the compensation being, however, very small, according to our idea of values; ¼ to ½ a cent a day was all they were paid, which sum, even the smallest of the two named, was, nevertheless, enough to buy a pupil her dinner. Some of these girls, though of high caste, were poor, and lived at very small cost. The work of Elkanah was with the people at large, especially with the students of King's College, a Hindoo school of high rank, containing from twelve hundred to fifteen hundred young men of high promise. Many of these, as also others, were daily visitors at his house, to whom he gave religious instruction. He also made frequent visits to the temples and elsewhere, reading and speaking to the thronging crowds in those places. One part of their work was to teach to speak and read English, to prepare the young men for Government employ, and through them access was obtained to families in many cases.

The girls are exceedingly shy of men, and they must never be seen by the male sex. One day Elkanah came to the door and knocked and spoke. In a twinkling, every pupil had disappeared, in the utmost consternation.

They spent several months at first, part of the time in London, England, and part in Benares, in acquiring the Hindoo language. There are two kinds, the Hindoo, or common speech, and the Ur-du [oor doo] or court language. Mrs. B. learned the Hindoo, and Mr. B. the Ur-du, so that between the two they had both.

After nearly three years' stay abroad, they returned to America and to Lynn; and in 1873, Winchester was made their home. Since that time several years have been spent by them in missionary work among the Western Indians, beginning in 1877.

Before this, however, and the year after Mrs. B.'s wonderful recovery, they made a religious visit to California and Oregon, spending six months in that labor, visiting the scattered members of the Society of Friends in those distant regions, holding meetings, preaching, etc.

They joined Rev. E. P. Hammond in his revival work in that country, being engaged eight weeks in meetings in San Francisco, Sacramento, and in Portland, Ore.

On the way down the coast from San Francisco to San Bernardino, April 20, 1875, when about one hundred and twenty-five miles from San Francisco, the steamer ran into a deep fog and was wrecked upon the rocks almost in a moment, there being eight feet of water in the hold when the passengers were roused from their beds to face the terrible danger. The Captain was drinking and fooling away his time in the cabin, having given peremptory orders for the ship's course against the remonstrances of the pilot that they were too near the shore. The passengers escaped mostly in their night clothes, everything being lost. The wreck occurred about 8 P. M., and Mr. B. reached the shore about 1 A. M., but his wife, being in another boat, was on the waves all night, and until 11 o'clock the next day. He thought her lost. Even the Captain said, "No hope; the lifeboat cannot live in such a sea." But it did, and they met once more, and praised the Lord for all his mercies, and for that their crowning deliverance. No lives were lost, though 200 persons were on board the doomed vessel; but the ship and its cargo were a total loss.

In 1877, they began work among the Western Indians, spending two summers in traveling through the Indian Territory and elsewhere, in visiting the tribes and engaging in religious work among them. Two years also, they kept house in the "Territory," the last year of which was among the Arapahoes and Cheyennes, who are "Blanket Indians," i. e., comparatively wild and living in tents. Many tribes were visited and labored with with gratifying success.

The Modocs, wild and fierce as they were among the lava beds, are tractable and quiet, gentle, tender hearted and amiable, and very docile. The Apaches and the Camanches also were visited, and some time was spent among them.

The lives of these Friends from 1863 to the present time have been indeed remarkable in labor for the poor and the dark-minded; and their Christian efforts among the Freedmen, among the heathen of India, and the Western aboriginal tribes, and on the Pacific coast, as also through the Eastern States and the regions nearer home, have been crowned with a measure of success for which they devoutly thank the blessed Master and Head of the church that He has counted them worthy to bear and suffer for His dear name.

They have been engaged in religious work in Ohio and Indiana, as also in the East, visiting New York, Boston and elsewhere.

Elkanah and his wife feel thankful, moreover, that they have been instruments in God's hands in reviving the ancient activity and religious life among Friends, feeling certain as they do that the present revival among them is simply a return to the "old paths" of 250 years ago, when their ancestors in faith were led to wait on the Spirit and work in love and praise the Lord in gladness of heart. Mr. Beard thinks he was the first in later days to go forth and hold meetings for religious awakening with other branches of Christ's people. He joined with Rev. Elijah Coate a Wesleyan preacher, at Economy, Ind., in a series of meetings, which was richly owned and blessed by the presence and power of the gracious Lord to awaken sinners and to comfort and enlighten and strengthen saints.

In the fall of 1881, Elkanah and his wife set out anew in religious journeying through the land, expecting, if the Lord will, to spend several months in the work among churches of Christ in various regions of the country.

John H. Bond, son of Joseph Bond, Anti-Slavery friends, was born in North Carolina in 1807; came with his parents to Wayne County, Ind., in 1811; married Mary Hockett in 1828; moved to Stony Creek, Randolph Co., Ind., in 1831, and resides on the same place still. They have had nine children, and eight are living, all married. His house is at the mouth of Cabin Creek, near the Winchester and Windsor pike. He is a farmer and miller; is a Friend; was an Abolitionist and an Anti-slavery Friend, and is a Republican. He and his worthy lady are kind and gentle in spirit, meek and lowly in temper, modest in demeanor, and steadfast and consistent Christians. They were very active and prominent in the operations of the Underground Railroad, of those old times, his house being one of the stations on the branch passing up Cabin Creek toward Jonesboro and elsewhere. Mr. B. was one of the charter Trustees of the Union Literary Institute, a school established in Greenville settlement, northeast of Spartansburg, Randolph Co., Ind., in 1845, for the education of colored and other indigent youth, and continued a member of the board for more than thirty years. He was an earnest and faithful advocate of Anti-slavery truth when such advocacy was unpopular and dangerous; but he has lived to behold his views of truth triumph, and those whom for years he used to lodge clandestinely, coming to his house in the night and going in the night, conveyed through the land under cover of darkness, and helped to flee in secrecy and peril from point to point as though they had been felons while yet justly chargeable with no crime, but only "guilty of a skin not colored like our own," he has seen to rise to light and freedom, and to equal manhood and citizenship in the "land of the free and the home of the brave."

Rev. T. A. Brandon, Union City, Christian, was born in 1823, in Darke County, Ohio. His parents moved to Miami County, Ohio, in 1831, and returned again to Darke County, Ohio, in 1839. He was converted July 25, 1840, and began to preach in 1843. His ordination as a Christian (New Light) minister took place in 1845, and he has been preaching ever since —thirty-seven years. His appointments and residences have been these: Darke County, Ohio, and Jay County, Ind., 1846; Preble County, Ohio, 1845 to 1853; Mt. Healthy, Ohio, 1853, to 1856; Marion, Ind., 1857 to 1859; Dearborn County, Ind., 1860 to 1861; Hamilton County, Ohio, 1861 to 1863; Warren County, Ohio, 1864 to 1866; Miami County, Ohio, 1867; Yellow Springs, Ohio, 1867 to 1868; Pickaway County, Ohio, 1869 to 1870; Bellefontaine, Ohio, 1871 to 1875; Union City, Ohio and Indiana, 1875 to 1881. His work while residing in Union City was general, laborious and extensive. He married Susan McCullough in 1851. They have had four children, all living. In Gospel labor, Rev. Brandon has been enabled by grace to be abundant, and the Lord has granted him the privilege of witnessing much fruit from the seed sown by his hand. During thirty-seven years, he has preached 7,000 sermons, baptized 1,200 persons, and received into church fellowship between three and four thousand souls, and has married about one thousand two hundred couples. He vowed at the outset to know only "Christ and Him crucified," and God has given him strength to keep the vow. He is yet blowing the Gospel trumpet, and the good Lord is still giving him souls for his hire, and honoring the word proclaimed through his feeble lips.

The Christian denomination numbers about one hundred thousand, chiefly in New England, and the Northern, Middle and Western States, several hundred ministers, and not quite so many churches as ministers.

They published the first religious paper in the world, in 1808, the Herald of Gospel Liberty, which is published yet.

The Christian Church sprang about the same time from three distinct and independent sources—New England, the Baptists, Dr. Smith; North Carolina, the Methodists, Elder Jones; Kentucky, the Presbyterians, Elders B. W. Stone, Purviance, Thompson, etc. The great Cane Ridge revival, among the Presbyterians in Kentucky, about 1800, was greatly famous in those days, and the world has scarcely ever known its equal, and its effects remain extensively to this day. In November, 1881, Rev. Brandon removed to Lebanon, Ohio, as the pastor of the Christian Church at that place.

Thomas Butts, White River, was born in 1778; came to White River, near Mt. Zion, Randolph County, in 1824, and married Elizabeth Surface, and after her death he married again. He died many years ago, having been the father of eight children. He entered land at first, and at his death owned 240 acres.

Rev. Nathan T. Butts, White River, Methodist, was born in 1838, in Randolph County, Ind., and married Louisa Macy in 1858. His wife dying, he married again. He has six children, and lives on his father's homestead. He has been a teacher fourteen years, and is now a clergyman and a farmer.

He has represented Randolph County in the Indiana House of Representatives, and was a candidate for Senator, coming near success. Mr B. is a man of intelligence and influence. When in the Legislature, he was Chairman of the Committee on Temperance. He was in part author and framer of the famous bill sometimes called the "Baxter bill," and less frequently, but more properly, the Butts-Baxter bill, or the Baxter-Butts bill. The facts, stated somewhat briefly, are these:

Mr. Butts, after his election and before the assembling of the Legislature, had prepared a bill intended to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, and to make the liquor seller, as also the owner of the building, responsible for damage done by the sale. Mr. Baxter presented one having as its principal feature local option, so-called, in some form. Half a dozen bills in all, probably, were brought forward. The whole subject and the bills were referred to a Committee, of which Mr. Butts was Chairman. A sub-committee was appointed, of which Messrs. Baxter and Butts were members; and, by this sub-committee, chiefly by the two gentlemen named, a new bill was framed, combining various features of the other bills; and this new draft was submitted to Messrs. Baker, Harrison, Mellett, Barber and Jacobs, and perhaps others; and after additions and changes to suit their suggestions, the paper thus prepared was presented to the House of Representatives by Chairman Butts November 13, 1872, at the special session. Only one speech was made against the bill, viz., by Mr. Schmuck, and one in its favor, to wit, by Mr. Butts. Several amendments were presented, all by Mr. Butts, to perfect the bill and bring all friends of temperance to its support, and it passed both Houses, and became a law by the approval of Gov. Hendricks, February 27, 1873.

There is a fact of interest connected with his signing the bill, to wit: He was taken seriously ill, so much so that he entertained doubts of his own recovery. His anxiety for the success of the measure was so strong that he required the act to be brought to his sick room, and he signed it in bed. The vote on the passage stood (in the House), fifty-five to twenty-six. Ayes, forty-four Republicans, eleven Democrats; Noes, six Republicans, twenty Democrats.

Some points in the law were declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and it was repealed by the next Legislature. The Indiana Supreme Court has been famous, by the way, for killing measures of public utility. Many years ago it nearly destroyed the public school system by a characteristic decision, then this temperance law, and lastly the constitutional amendments, voted on in the spring of 1880 and having majorities in their favor (of those voting upon them) of from fifteen to forty-nine thousand.

The ground of the adverse decision in this last case is somewhat difficult to state. The vote was taken on the same day with the spring township elections (April, 1880), and the majority of the court seemed to hold that it could not be known that the number voting in favor of the amendments, any or all of them, was a majority of the voters present for any purpose on that day. At another time, the same Supreme Court is understood to have held that they could not know judicially that a pint is less than a quart: and that the averment that liquor was sold by the pint was not equivalent to saying that it was sold in less quantity than a quart.

Rev. William Coulter, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Union City, was born in Harrison County, Ohio, in 1844, and moved to Defiance County, Ohio, in 1853, and enlisted in the fall of 1862; but, being young and young looking, was refused. He did enlist, however, in the Twenty-first Ohio, in the spring of 1864. The regiment was in the Army of the Cumberland; was at Chattanooga, and through the Atlanta campaign; was wounded in the arm in a skirmish on the Chattahoochie, and sent to the hospital for six weeks; went through to Savannah and to Richmond with Sherman, and was discharged (mustered out), in July, 1865. He attended the Wesleyan (Delaware) University until 1868, teaching also; was licensed as a Methodist in 1868; took Deacon's orders in 1870, Elder's orders in 1872, and in 1873, joined the Presbytery. He accepted a call from Brooklyn, Mich., in 1874, and came to Union City in 1877.

Mr. C. married Kate Rosensteel in Indiana County, Penn., in 1869. They have four children. Mr. C. is, as to talent, solid rather than brilliant, quiet in manner and method, yet deep and sound in thought, and discreet in counsel and in action. Though comparatively young in years and in the ministerial work, he is decidedly a "growing man," and worthy of the confidence and support of his people. On the first Sabbath in January, 1881, by the reluctant consent of his congregation, he resigned his pastorship, and the church was for a time without a leader, and he without a charge. The society is comparatively weak in numbers, and they are scarcely able to render a suitable pastor an adequate support. Their financial burden as a congregation has been made heavier than heretofore by the purchase of a more commodious lot, and the erection of a tasteful, not to say elegant, place of worship. It is to be hoped that the severance of the pastoral tie between Mr C. and his people here will not work a serious disadvantage to either party, though it is indeed a fact that good pastors and eligible situations are more easily sought than found. Mr Coulter has removed to a pastoral work in Michigan, suffering, however, a deep affliction in the sickness and death of their oldest daughter, a lovely child, and one most dear to the hearts of the stricken parents, who was taken sick just as they were ready to remove to their new field of labor, and they remained only to see her close her eyes on earth, and to deposit her lifeless corpse in the cold and solemn tomb.

Rev. Bela W. Cropper, West River, Baptist, was born in Kentucky in 1791; married Elizabeth Ashby in 1814; came to Warren County, Ohio, in 1828, and to Randolph County, Ind., in 1833. They had fourteen children, six of whom are now living. He was a farmer, living one and a half miles northwest of Huntsville, and died in 1874, eighty-three years old. He was a member of the Baptist Church, officiating also as a preacher among them.

Isrum H. Engle, Union City, Ind., Methodist, was born in Baltimore County, Md., in 1796. His father was a Revolutionary soldier. Mr. Engle states as follows: "My father died when I was but seven years of age, in 1803, and in 1809, my mother bound me out for seven years, and my master took me to Clermont County, Ohio. I was to have had six months' schooling, but I got none. I went to school after I was free, one month. I got married, and that put a stop to school going. My wife had learning, and she taught me some. Her name was Rhoda Clough, and we were married in 1821, at Mr. Carey's, father of Sam Carey, and of Phebe and Alice Carey, College Hill, Ohio. My wife was born in 1800." They lived at College Hill three years, and eleven years at Cincinnati; they moved to Jay County, Ind., in 1838, and to Union City in 1865, and to Jay County again, to reside with his children, in the fall of 1881. He was in his younger days very active and vigorous, stating that he has sawed, handled and thrown into a cellar, ten cords of wood in twelve hours. His wife, Mrs. Rhoda Ingle, died in May, 1882, aged eighty-two years.

Rev. J. T. Farson, late of Union City, Methodist, was born in the District of Columbia in 1820, being the eldest of a large family. His father moved to Coshocton County, Ohio, where he grew up, and married in 1844. His wife's name was Harriet C. Page, and she was brought up in Knox County, Ohio.

Mr. Farson came to Union City in 1852, and moved to Urbana, Ill., in the fall of 1861. He died at Champaign, Ill., near Urbana, in December, 1869, being killed by an accident. A team of horses that he was driving ran away, and he was thrown across the railroad track, receiving from the fall a fatal wound. He was the father of eleven children, eight of whom are now living, and two are married. Three daughters are teaching in the public schools of Chicago, where they reside with their widowed mother. One, Lucia, married Bently Masslich, and has three children, residing at Union City. Another, Amanda O. Webber, resides at Urbana, Ill. One son, John, is an attorney at law in Chicago. Mr. F. learned the wagon and carriage business, and followed it while at Union City, being in partnership a part of the time with William T. Worthington. At Urbana, he was a druggist, and at Champaign a dry goods merchant. He became a resident of Union City almost at its earliest settlement, in 1852. He lived at first in a log house, near Hon. N. Cadwallader's mansion, and afterward built a dwelling on the present site of the Commercial Bank. The house was afterward removed, and is yet standing on the east side of Howard, the third south of Oak. He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church from his youth, and united with that society in Union City in the summer of 1852. Soon afterward he was licensed as a local preacher, and served the church in that capacity during the rest of his life. He was Superintendent of the first Sunday school in Union City, and he also taught one of the earliest day schools in the place. Mr. F. was an active Abolitionist, an enthusiastic Republican, and an earnest, warm-hearted Christian. He served for awhile as Township Trustee of Wayne Township. In every department of moral and religious activity his influence was strong and lively, and his labors became in every worthy enterprise a power for good.

Rev. Almon Greenman, Union City, was born in Summit County, Ohio, December 12, 1826. In 1836, his father moved to Northeastern Indiana, and settled where the town of Kendallville now is. The country was then a wilderness, most of the inhabitants being Indians of the Pottawatomie tribe. His opportunities for early education were only such as the log schoolhouse furnished. These were as faithfully improved as the necessity of helping to clear up a farm in the woods would allow. He was converted and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844; was licensed to preach in 1846, and, since the autumn of 1850, has been a member of the North Indiana Conference, except two years spent in the St. Louis Conference and stationed in the city of Springfield, Mo. His fields of labor in Indiana have been as follows: Allen and Ossian Circuits, in Allen County; Allisonville Circuit, in Marion County; Dublin Circuit, in Wayne County; New Castle, Richmond, Anderson, Muncie, Logansport, Peru, Marion, Huntington, Fort Wayne, La Grange and Union City; also four years as Presiding Elder in Goshen District. He was one of the four clerical delegates to the General Conference in Cincinnati in 1880. Not quite a year was spent in Indiana Asbury University, when Dr. Simpson, now Bishop, was its President. What little education he has obtained was mostly gained amid the hardships and poverty of frontier life. As may be seen from the above life sketch, Rev. Greenman has risen to be among the leading men of the Methodist clergy. He is now pastor of the M. E. Church at Union City, Ind., which is a large and influential society, numbering several hundred members. He is now upon his second year of his pastorate with that congregation and the work of the Lord is evidently prospering in his hands.

John Grubbs, Nettle Creek, Methodist, emigrated from Virginia to Ohio, and afterward to Nettle Creek Township, Randolph County, in 1835. He has been an active, zealous Methodist, a local preacher of that church, and faithful in his labors for Christ. He is now eighty-eight years of age, and has been for years feeble and sometimes severely sick. Upon a visit to his humble dwelling, August, 1881, he was found stretched upon his bed, gasping for breath, almost speechless and suffering great distress. At the name of Christ and the mention of Heaven, however, his aged soul revived, and he was well-nigh "shouting happy;" and, in broken accents, he tried to tell how near he was to "heavenly glory." He has been twice married, and his second wife, herself an aged matron of seventy-seven years, was patiently caring for her afflicted husband, and earnestly striving, though mostly in vain, to assuage his woes. His home is some two miles nearly east of Losantville. [A few days after the interview described above, he did indeed "go shouting home." His poor old body lies moldering in the grave, but his happy soul is at rest in the Kingdom].

Rev. Elijah Harbour came to Green Township, Randolph County, in about 1833 or 1834. He raised a large family and spent a long life upon the homestead of his choice, dying at length in 1872, after tarrying upon these mundane shores more than his full fourscore years—eighty-four years five months and twelve days. His wife, Rhoda, had preceded him to the Spirit Land more than two years. She died May 30, 1870, aged eighty-two years two months and twenty-three days. Mr. Harbour was a Methodist and a local preacher, and was active and successful in helping to spread the knowledge and the practice of godliness through those frontier regions. The religious exercises in connection with the interment of his earthly remains were very largely attended, and they were followed to the grave by a great throng of sympathizing neighbors and friends.

Daniel Hill, Wayne Township, Anti-slavery Friend, was born in Wayne County, Ind., in 1817; came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1818, being the son of Henry Hill, late of Jericho, Wayne Township, Randolph Co., Ind. He has had three wives and four children. He resided some forty years or more at Jericho, and then removed to New Vienna, Ohio, where he now resides. He was, through his early and middle life, a farmer and a carpenter. He is now publisher of peace papers, books, etc., at New Vienna, Ohio. He was a prominent Anti-slavery Friend, and an original Trustee of U. L. Institute, resigning in 1878, after thirty-three years' service. Daniel Hill was Senator from Randolph County at Indianapolis four years, doing for the public faithful and energetic service. He has been long and largely trusted and highly honored by the Friends, to which body he belongs. He is a recorded minister among them, and has traveled and spoken extensively as such, and also as a lecturer in the cause of peace and of Sunday schools. He is an enthsiastic friend of total abstinence and of every good and philanthropic enterprise. His temperament is cheerful and even jovial; he is kind and warm-hearted, but firm as the rocks upon every question of principle. His character is altogether that of an excellent and trustworthy citizen and of a consistent and exemplary Christian. He publishes the Friend of Peace, the Sunday School Worker and a variety of publications upon kindred subjects, which spread throughout the land a sweet and tender and quiet, but yet a powerful and efficient influence for good upon the nation, to check the spirit of ambition and war, and bring the world to the real and universal practice of the true and peaceful Gospel of Christ.

Rev. William Hunt, Huntsville, Methodist, born in Virginia in 1790, and removed to Kentucky in 1791; was a Methodist preacher in 1812; preached in Sullivan County, Ind., in Kentucky, Madison and Clark Counties, Ohio, and White River Circuit, Indiana (1816); emigrated to Randolph County, Ind., in 1818. He married Matilda Smith in 1817; then Mary Smith; had nine children; died in 1877. He became a preacher in 1812, and followed it more or less all his life. Six children are still living. He was a farmer; in his early life, he "rode circuit," but latterly he "located." He was a preacher sixty-five years. He laid out the town of Huntsville in 1834.

William S. Hunt, West River, was born in Kentucky in 1819; came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1840. He married Laura Hunt, daughter of Rev. Wm. Hunt, in 1841, and has had twelve children, all living to be grown; ten are now living—seven married; he is a farmer and owns 300 acres; was Justice of the Peace seventeen years, and Township Trustee nine years; is a strong Republican and an active and respected citizen; a worthy and reliable man, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. Alpheus Jennings Lewellen, Farmland, Ind., Methodist, is the son of Philip Lewellen, and he was the son of Thomas Lewellen, who was the grandson of one of three brothers who came from Wales to America in a very early day. His grandmother Lewellen was a daughter of Benjamin Jennings, who came from England and settled in Somerset County, Penn., in 1776. A. J. L. was born in Randolph County, Va., in 1824, came to Indiana in 1837 and settled in the eastern edge of Delaware County. He served as an apprentice to the cabinet-making business, with Messrs. Nottingham & Swain, in Muncie, in 1844 and 1845; came into Randolph County in 1845, and resided at Windsor. He married Eleanor Kinert, of Windsor, from Pennsylvania, in 1846; he lived at Georgetown in 1851 and 1852, and sold goods. In 1853, he moved to Iowa, remaining till 1863, when he returned to Indiana. He was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of the Langworthy Circuit, Upper Iowa Annual Conference, in 1862, and, in 1863, took charge of the Montpelier Circuit, North Indiana Conference, O. V. Lemon, Presiding Elder. He was admitted on trial by the North Indiana Conference, at Knightstown, Ind., April, 1864, being ordained Deacon in 1866 and Elder in 1868. He has served in the following charges: Montpelier, Warren, Alexandria, Lincoln, Xenia, Boxley, Tipton, Jerome, Eaton and Farmland. Revivals have been enjoyed in each of the above charges, with accessions to the church varying from fifty to three hundred. In one series of meetings on Xenia Circuit, 125 professed saving faith and 111 persons joined the church in two weeks. He has two brothers and one sister living, and two brothers and one sister dead. His sister (who is living) married Nelson Leonard, a son of Rev. Thomas Leonard, who lived many years at Smithfield, Delaware Co., Ind., and who now resides at Fort Wayne. His brother, Z. M. Lewellen, is a farmer near Eaton, Delaware Co., Ind. His youngest brother, Philip Wesley, is a physician at Clarinda, Page Co., Iowa. He graduated at Green Castle; studied medicine at Burlington, Delaware Co., Ind.; attended lectures and graduated at Cincinnati Medical College. Mr. L. has had six children, only one living. He is stationed at present at Farmland, Randolph Co., Ind. (1880).

Rev. August George Henry Michaelis, Union City, Ind., pastor Lutheran Church, was born in Kalbe on the Saale, Prussia, in 1821; went to Berlin in 1824, educated at Berlin and in theology at Elberfelt and Barmen, 1842 to 1850; came to New York in 1851, Wisconsin in 1851, Ohio in 1852; Findlay, Hancock Co., Ohio, in 1852; Bucyrus, Crawford Co., Ohio, in 1854; Liverpool, Medina Co., Ohio, 1865; Monroe, Mich., in 1872; Union City, Ind, 1878. He married Caroline Marggraff in 1854; has had eight children, seven living; Evangelical Lutheran, Augsburg, confession unaltered. In his church are 140 communicants and thirty six voters; members of families, 300. The church has a parsonage. He keeps up, in the summer, a German school, and, at other times, a Saturday school for general instruction; in winter, catechism twice a week. He has a full congregation and the services are conducted wholly in German. Some of this congregation are among the most substantial and estimable citizens of the town, and Rev. Michaelis himself appears to be a most worthy and exemplary gentleman and a valuable member of the community.

Rev. H. J. Meck, pastor of the M. E. Church, was born in Carlisle, Penn., in 1822, and married Elizabeth Elliot in 1844. He joined the North Indiana Methodist Episcopal Conference, at Goshen, Ind., in 1855. He has preached on circuits, stations and charges as follows: Goshen, 1855; Indianapolis, 1856; Williamsburg Circuit, 1857; Hagerstown Circuit, 1858–59; Winchester Station, 1860–61; Wabash Station, 1862–63; Kendallville Station, 1864–66; Knightstown, 1867–68; Goshen District, Presiding Elder, 1869–72; Fort Wayne, 1873; Fort Wayne, Presiding Elder, 1874; Kokomo Station, 1875–77; Union City Station, 1878–80; Bluffton, 1881. They have had thirteen children, eight still living. His work has been greatly owned and blessed with revival influences, especially at Winchester, Wabash, Kendallville, Knightstown and Kokomo. Great numbers have been added to the church through God's blessing upon his labors, in some cases from 100 to 300 accessions taking place. Mr. Meck is sixty years of age, but still retains his vigor and energy of body and mind, and the church hopes for yet many years of efficient labor from this worthy servant of Christ. After serving the usual number of years at Union City, he was stationed at Bluffton, Wells Co., Ind., at which place he now (March, 1882) resides.

Rev. John A. Moorman, Farmland, Wesleyan and Episcopal Methodist, born in North Carolina in 1820; came to Randolph Co. in 1822. Has been twice married; his first wife was Nancy Hiatt; his second wife was Mercy Shaw; he has had ten children, nine of whom are living and four married. Mr. M. was a farmer mostly up to 1861; he sold goods in Farmland eleven years (1865 to 1876); has been insurance agent for ten years, Notary Public for fifteen years, clergyman for thirty-four years, among the Wesleyans for thirteen years and the Episcopal Methodists for twenty-one years. He has been a member of the Indiana Legislature for three terms—1860–64 and 1876–78. He was in the memorable "bolt" during the civil war, resigning his seat. He was Quartermaster in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Regiment, a six months' regiment. Mr. Moorman is a man of active habits and pure and sterling morals, and is in every way an estimable and valuable member of society. He is a reliable Republican, as also an active temperance man and a friend of every useful and benevolent enterprise. In early times, he was an out and out Abolitionist, and, for thirteen years, a Wesleyan preacher. Within a short time past, he has become a practicing attorney at the Winchester bar.

Charles Osborn, Wayne County, Anti-slavery Friend, was born in North Carolina in 1775; came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1819; laid out Economy in 1825; married Sarah Moorman, and afterward, Hannah Swain. He had sixteen children; their names were James, Josiah, John, Isaiah, Lydia, Elijah, Elihu, Gideon, Charles N., Parker, Narcissa, Cynthia, Jordan, Sarah, Benjamin, Anna. Six are living still—Elijah, Charles N., Parker, Jordan, Sarah and Anna (1880). Charles Osborn published the first anti-slavery paper in the United States, the Philanthro- pist, at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, in 1817 and 1818. Its motto was "Emancipation, immediate and unconditional." This was several years before Benjamin Lundy established the Genius of Universal Emancipation, and thirteen or fourteen years before Garrison began the Liberator, at Boston, in 1831. He was recorded a minister among Friends in 1808, traveled and preached a full anti-slavery Gospel, establishing manumission societies in North Carolina and Tennessee, in 1814 and 1815; and, in 1816, removing to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, he established the Philanthropist, as stated above. He traveled extensively as a minister among Friends in America, and visited Europe, also preaching in England, Ireland, France, Germany, Prussia and Holland, spending eighteen months across the ocean—1832 and 1834. He had been a worthy and trusted member of Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, but he was proscribed and deprived of his position in society on account of his opposition to slavery and colonization, in 1842 and 1843. He was dropped from the "Meeting for Sufferings" of the Richmond Yearly Meeting, nominally because he had co-operated with Arthur Tappan, William Lloyd Garrison and others outside the "Body of Friends," in earnest anti-slavery work. He was active in the "Separation," in 1842 and 1843, which resulted in the formation of another distinct Yearly Meeting, called Anti-slavery Friends. He moved to Michigan in 1842, and to Clear Lake, Ind., in 1848; he died at Clear Lake in 1850, in Christian love and joyful hope, seventy-five years old. His life was indeed one of earnest labor and endurance for Christ. God vouchsafed to his patient, waiting spirit abundance of peace and high views of heavenly things, and often a strong power to speak for His holy truth and a clear witness of gracious acceptance in the earnest service of a humble heart, and he has doubtless been called home to behold the glory of the Lord in His upper and better sanctuary. Charles Osborn's father, Daniel Osborn, was born in Sussex County, Del., in 1745, and his mother, Margaret Stout, in 1744, in York County, Penn. His grandfather, Matthew Osborn, was a native of England.

Charles W. Osborn, West River, Anti-slavery Friend, son of Isaiah Osborn, and grandson of Charles Osborn of famous anti-slavery memory, was born near Economy, Wayne Co., Ind., in 1833; attended school at Union Literary Institute and Antioch College. He married Asenath W. Wood, in 1858, and came to Randolph County, Ind., in 1860; they have had six children; he has taught school six years; he is a farmer; was an Abolitionist, an Anti-slavery man and is a Republican; he is a minister among Friends, and has been Clerk of Monthly Meeting for seventeen years; he is active in temperance, in Sunday schools and in all good things. Mr. O. is highly esteemed as a Christian and a citizen. Largely under his auspices, a grove temperance and prohibition convention was held in the summer of 1881, in a grove not far from Economy, Wayne Co., Ind., lasting three days, addressed by Mrs. Malloy, Mrs. Trego, Mr. Reynolds and other temperance workers and attended by a large, earnest and enthusiastic assembly.

Isaiah Osborn, Economy, Wayne County, Anti-slavery Friend, fourth son of Charles Osborn, was born in Tennessee in 1803. Married Lydia Worth, sister of Rev. Daniel Worth, in 1829; had eight children and died in 1846, in Wayne County, Ind.; he was a Friend, and held with the Anti-slavery Friends in the "Separation." He came to Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, in 1816; became a printer, and came to Wayne County, Ind., in 1819; went to Tennessee in 1822 and worked for Benjamin Lundy on the Genius of Emancipation till 1824 (in Tennessee); worked at Centerville, Ind., for John Scott till 1827, and at Indianapolis till 1828, when he came to Wayne County. He married Lydia Worth and took to farming and teaching. He settled a short distance north of Economy, Wayne County. After his death, his widow married Mr. Baldwin, of Union County; her second husband is also dead, and she lives a widow, gentle-spirited and peaceful, with her son, Charles Osborn, in West River Township, Randolph Co., Ind. The Osborns have been noted for their steadfast adherence to principle, and their unflinching devotion to truth and right. Isaiah settled on a farm near Economy, Ind.; was at one time Justice of the Peace, and, for many years, Assessor and Collector of Taxes; was an active member of Friends and a warm and earnest advocate of the slave, being a stern and outspoken Abolitionist of the earliest time.

Robert Pogue, Union City, Ind., Methodist, was born in 1802, in Knox County, Tenn., being the eldest of nine children. His father moved to Greene County, Ohio, in 1806, and resided there till 1835, settling in Ward Township, Randolph County, in the latter year, six of his nine children having also resided in the same county; he was a miller and then a farmer, chiefly the latter. In religion, he was a Methodist and in politics a Democrat; he lies buried in the old Prospect Graveyard, east of Deerfield. His son Robert left home at seventeen years of age, learning the trade of a distiller; at nineteen, he took up a roving life, first going into Northwestern Ohio, at the call of Capt. Riley, of African fame, for men to assist in surveying; he was too late for that, but not very long afterward, a party of three—Martin, Lewis and Pogue—set out on foot for an exploring tour through Indiana and Illinois; they passed through Connersville, Rushville, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Springfield and Jacksonville (1821); these were but small villages, and at Indianapolis they were laying the foundations of the old State House. To Connersville, the journey was a wilderness, with very few openings; to Indianapolis and Terre Haute, almost an unbroken forest, there being a little settlement upon Walnut Creek, between Indianapolis and Terre Haute. Going up the Wabash by the Indian Battle Ground, to Austin's prairie, eighteen miles above Terre Haute, they struck out boldly across the wide plains, ninety miles, to Springfield, Ill., then a mere group of cabins. Terre Haute had one hotel and two stores, and Indianapolis but little more. They saw but one dwelling-house between the Wabash and Springfield. In Springfield, not a single good house was to be found. While there, young Pogue cast his first vote, though slightly under age, yet the cause was a good one, the question of freedom or slavery in the new State, and his vote counted one for the right side—freedom. One of the three was a cooper, and one (Pogue) was a distiller, and they arranged to settle there and set up the liquor business. Lewis and Pogue returned to Greene County, Ohio, while Martin set out from Illinois with a drove of horses to Green Bay, Wis. On the route Martin was drowned in swimming a river; he swam across to get a canoe, which proved to be locked fast. In swimming back, his strength failed, and he sank only a few rods from shore. In 1824, Mr. Pogue married Susannah Vaughn, the issue of which union has been nine children, eight of whom became grown, and four have been married, and five are still living; his wife died in Union City, Ind., in 1871, at the age of sixty-four years. Becoming disgusted with the distilling business, he began making spinning-wheels for wool and flax; and, when that failed, he undertook to be a carpenter, which business, with farming, furnished him employment till he gave up work. In 1839, Mr. Pogue emigrated to Ward Township, Randolph Co., Ind. Residing there till 1866, he removed to Union City, which is still his home. He joined the Methodist Church, near Prospect, in 1842, and has been Steward, Class-Leader, Trustee, Sunday school Superintendent, or the like, sometimes two or three at once, most of the time since; he is now Steward and Class-Leader in the church at Union City. Though his father was a Democrat, Robert became a Whig, casting his first Presidential vote for John Quincy Adams in 1824; he was a Whig and then a Republican, having voted for fifteen successive Presidential elections, ending with James A. Garfield. Mr. Pogue has been active in local public affairs, especially in school matters, having been School Director, Township Clerk and School Trustee; his influence through his whole life has been for improvement in the public schools, and he feels that his efforts have not been in vain. He has suffered severely from rheumatism from his early manhood, though now, in his old age, he is more nearly free from that ailment than he was in early and middle life. Mr. Pogue is one of that happy band who makes religion the sum and substance of life, and he feels now, after forty years in the love of Christ, that the service of God is its own reward. When Mr. Pogue joined the Methodist Church, the meetings were held in Mr. Helm's chamber. Mr. D. B. Miller and Mr. Helm burnt a brick-kiln together; each built a brick house, which were nearly the first houses of the kind in Ward Township. Prospect Church was erected not long afterward, Mr. Pogue himself being the head workman (about 1845).

Isom Puckett, Dunkirk, White River, Friend, was born in Carolina before 1774; was married in Carolina to Elizabeth Kane, and came to Randolph County in 1819, settling at Dunkirk, west of Winchester; they had ten children, most of whom lived to be grown and to be married. He was a Friend, a Whig, Anti-slavery, Abolitionist, an abstinence advocate and a Quaker preacher. Under his counsel and influence as a leader, the little band of Friends at Dunkirk were foremost in works of humanity and love. He died about 1856, and was buried at Dunkirk, but no memorial marks his grave; and his own relatives could not now perhaps discover or point out the place which ought now to be to them a sacred spot, where his mortal remains found their last earthly resting-place. Anna Puckett, daughter of Isom Puckett, born about 1796, married Elijah Jackson, about 1816; had eight children; was an excellent and motherly woman, an Anti-slavery Friend in the days of that movement, a recorded minister among Friends, and of a loving, Christian spirit. She was noted in her day for being one of those "doctor nurses," to whom humankind owe so much and render so little, and was greatly skilled in the use of water and of herbs for curative purposes. Her husband was a farmer and a Friend, and died about 1863. Anna died in 1876, aged eighty years. Their children have been distinguished for their excellence, two of her children and two of her grandchildren being recorded ministers among Friends. The children of Isom Puckett in all were ten, viz., Gincy (Ballinger), Anna (Jackson), Sally (Adamson), Olive (Diggs), Nathan, Mahala (Mason), Benjamin, Mary (Harris), Lydia (Jackson), Thomas Clarkson; they were all born in Carolina, the youngest being only a few months old at the time of their emigration to Indiana. The daughters are all dead, and the three sons are supposed to be living. Nathan resides near Ann Arbor, Mich., having in 1882, removed from Richmond, Ind.; Benjamin, in Iowa, and Thomas Clarkson at Nora, Ill., of which place he had been a prominent and influental citizen since 1853, owning a fine landed property and dealing largely in stock, and engaging, also, in other active business undertakings; he has been the father of a large family of children, all but one of whom are still living. In early life, he was Surveyor of Randolph County, Ind., and he held several local offices during his residence in Illinois; his oldest son is a physician in a thriving town in Iowa. His marriage took place in 1852, his wife being Miss Emily Patchin, of North Gage, Oneida County, N. Y., and a sister of the wife of Rev. E. Tucker, now and for many years a citizen of Randolph County, residing at present in Union City in that county.

Rev. J. H. Quinlan, Catholic pastor, Union City, was born in Seneca County, Ohio, in 1843; went to school at Cleveland, New York and Milwaukee, 1861 to 1870; was ordained a Catholic priest at Milwaukee in 1870; Delphi, Carroll Co., Ind., in 1870 and 1872; he traveled for his health in the Northwest during the summer of 1872; Elkhart, Ind., 1872; Union City, 1876. The Catholics have at Union City a flourishing and prosperous congregation of 150 families, with a school of ninety to one hundred and ten pupils. Three teachers are employed and the school is maintained for ten months in the year. The school is free to all the pupils. It is supported by the income of a fund of $5,000, contributed by Peter Kuntz, Esq., a citizen of the town and a member of the congregation. The gift is truly a magnificent one, and the Catholic society have great reason to be thankful to their worthy communicant and fellow-citizen for this act of princely generosity. The Catholics have a fine property of four lots, containing a church, parsonage, nunnery and schoolhouse, all neat and convenient, though plain and inexpensive.

Rev. Thomas Wiley, Union City Disciple. Mrs. Eleanor Ruby (1835) says: "My husband, Thomas Wiley, became a preacher more than forty years ago. He was born and partly raised in Bourbon County, Ky., and had little education; he learned to write when a boy by getting a "rock-slate" and having his father set copies on the slate. In early life, he undertook to teach school, and made out very well. He had to study hard and late at night to keep ahead of his scholars, getting help in a "pinch" from Thomas Devor, to whom he felt under great obligations. Mr. W. became a missionary preacher, traveling over much of Eastern Indiana and Western Ohio and organizing many churches in the region. To show pioneer trials, an extract is given, somewhat condensed, from his diary: "April 10, 1852—Went to Fort Wayne, but found no chance for a meeting. I was behind time; they did not get my letter; it rained hard before I got to town, and the weather was very wet till next day (Sunday). The congregation had gone down; not more than five or six life-like Christians. The church was poor timber at first, and they had unworthy preachers, who have done more harm than half a dozen men could do good in twelve months. One man who had his appointment in the paper, was found playing cards and gambling among the loafers. Another was expelled from the Episcopal Church and joined the Disciples; was found to be base and was thought to have poisoned his wife to death. Like priest, like people. Doleful situation!" Mr. Wiley became weakly by incessant labor, and moved to Union City. He was made Postmaster and so remained till his death, in 1861. He owned 130 acres of land near New Lisbon. He laid out that town in 1848; the place flourished till the railroads were built and Union City was established so near. When we moved to Randolph County, the whole region was one vast wilderness. The only settlers within reach were Mr. Sheets, north of Union City; Amos Smith, north of New Lisbon; Hezekiah Fowler, father of Gabe Fowler, and Thomas Peyton, on the Converse farm. "Kid" Marquis settled on the Parent farm soon after. James Wickersham, my uncle, came shortly. There was nobody at Union City for years afterward. We used to "neighbor" with Mr. Fowler's, four miles. We would visit them, going on foot through the woods, perhaps once a year. Mr. Wiley began by hiring a hewed-log house built at first, before we moved. He got some leather and made some shoes, and took them up into the woods and paid for his work with shoes. The house was large and roomy, and we thought we had a palace. The whole northern country was settling while we lived there (1836 to 1852), and great numbers passed on their northward way. Many stayed overnight as they were struggling on toward their desired haven. We have had fifteen in one night, and we never charged them anything for their entertainment. One time we were busy with apples. My husband was absent, and I had invited some neighbors to come in and help us cut them. A stranger came and wished to stay. I told him "No, husband is absent, and we are to have an 'apple-cut' this evening." "But I will be civil, and I can cut apples, too." At last, I invited my son-in-law to remain all night and let the stranger stay. He cut apples nicely, and was very civil and jovial. I tried to "pump" him, but he would not be "pumped." Finally, at breakfast, he said: "I will tell you who I am. I am Mr. ——, one of a company who have split off from the Methodists, and we are working on our own hook. I tried to debate with one of your folks (meaning Disciple), and he whipped me out terribly." So he went on his way." Mr. Wiley broke down in health as a result of his energetic and extensive labors in the ministry, through the new and sparsely settled regions of Eastern Indiana and elsewhere, and he removed to Union City, Ind., shortly after the commencement of that town, still preaching occasionally and becoming an Elder in the newly established church of the Disciples in that place. He was also appointed Postmaster in the infant city, but his health continued to decline and in a very few years he died there. His widow married Mr. Rubey, of Wayne County, Ind., and they removed to Union City, but her second husband also died, and she now resides as a widow in the same place, aged, but active in bodily health and genial and sprightly in mental activity.

Rev. R. D. Spellman, Winchester, was born in Massachusetts in 1813, and he came to Western Reserve, Ohio, in 1817, and to Indiana in 1851. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1836, and entered the ministry in 1852. He had before that been a practicing physician, as also, in youth, a teacher three years, in Perry County, Ohio. He began the practice of medicine in 1840. His field of labor as a clergyman has been Wayne, Henry, Randolph, Adams, De Kalb, Wabash and Madison Counties, Ind.—three-fourths of the time in Wayne, Henry and Randolph. He married, in 1842, Elizabeth Beckwith, daughter of Col. John Beckwith, Colonel of a regiment in the war of 1812. They have had four children, three living. Mr. Spellman is now superannuated, and resides in Winchester. He preaches still somewhat, and engages in temperance work, which has been his delight from his youth. Mr. Spellman is now absent from home on a trip to Eastern Ohio to attend the golden wedding of his brother, Marcus F. Spellman, of Portage County, Ohio (fall of 1881). There were in his father's family seven children, and five are living now, and of those five he is the youngest. Mr. Spellman has been, since 1852 until within two years, an active and successful Gospel preacher, and he looks back upon the work which the Lord has enabled him to accomplish with gratitude for the high favor thus conferred upon him.

Edward Starbuck, Wesleyan, late of Union City, was born in North Carolina in 1813, and came with his father to Wayne County, Ind., in 1817. He resided for many years near Mt. Vernon, east of Fountain City, Wayne Co., Ind., as a farmer and brick-mason. In 1865, he removed to Union City and began business as a banker, being a stockholder and an office-holder in the First National Bank of Union City. Mr. Starbuck was three times married. His wives were Mary Vineyard, Lydia Good and Esther Ashton. He died at his home in Union City in 1874, greatly lamented by his relatives and by the public at large, and was followed to his burial in Union City Cemetery by a large, sympathizing and deeply sorrowing concourse. Mr. Starbuck was a man of strong moral and religious convictions, and of a largely benevolent spirit. He was greatly drawn to a deep sympathy for the poor and the oppressed, and was an original and life-long Abolitionist. In early life, he joined the Episcopal Methodists, but withdrew from that body and united with the Wesleyans for anti-slavery reasons, and for many years, and till his death, he maintained his connection with them, holding among them the honored position of a local preacher. Mr. Starbuck was a man of great moral worth and of deep religious feeling, active in support of religious and benevolent institutions and operations, especially those intended for the elevation of the poor and needy. The anti-slavery cause found in him a consistent, energetic and faithful advocate and supporter. He was a liberal contributor to the funds of the American Missionary Association in its work of evangelizing the freedmen. Mr. Starbuck was the father of nine children, eight of whom are living—John, Lewis, George, Elizabeth and four others. John S. has been a wholesale egg, butter and poultry dealer in Union City, Ind., and is a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a valuable and reliable citizen and an estimable and useful man. One of the daughters is the wife of Dr. William Commons, a prominent physician of Union City. The third wife is still living.

Rev. W. D. Stone, Union City, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1826; went back and forth with his father, Ezra Stone, to and from New Orleans, when a lad; came to Winchester, Ind., in 1839; attended County Seminary at intervals from 1839 to 1847, and again after the Mexican war, in which he enlisted in May, 1847, in the Fourth Indiana Volunteers as a private, and in which war he served fourteen months. Soon after its close, he married Miss Jane D. Poor, attending also the seminary under Prof. Cole; moved into the woods north of Winchester, cleared off six acres of land, and "cleared out." In 1852, they moved to Wayne Township, and afterward to various points—Harrisville, Salem, New Lisbon, Recovery, Spartansburg, etc., and now living at Union City. He volunteered in the three-months' service in the war of 1861, being Captain of Company I, Seventeenth Ohio Volunteers. The regiment was in the West Virginia campaign. On the expiration of that service, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Eighteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, and was made Captain of Company C. They were in the Army of the Cumberland, under Burnside and Schofield. He was sent at one time to Boston, Mass., in charge of a company of officers and men, to take command of a body of conscripts (drafted men) in Massachusetts, and to distribute them as might be needed. He was, among other battles, at Resaca, Ga., summer of 1864, and was wounded in the side by a shell, and was discharged July 21, 1864. His business has been teaching and preaching. The teaching has been done at many places—Harrisville, Salem, Bethel, Newport, Union City, Spartansburg, Recovery (Ohio), etc., etc. The preaching has been done in Michigan, in Miami and Shelby Counties, Ohio, and other places. He is an active, wide-awake, somewhat eccentric, but very energetic and successful, educator and preacher. He was almost idolized by his pupils, and is greatly esteemed by the churches to which he ministers. He is enthusiastic, acting on the Bible maxim, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might." They have no children, which is true also of his brother, Gen. Asahel Stone. It is a great loss to the country that so worthy a stock seems doomed to extinction, and that no children live to be an honor to the name and to perpetuate it in the land. By God's blessing, hundreds of souls have been brought upon his labors into the kingdom of the Redeemer. He is still in active service, in his fifty-fourth year, and we may hope for much service from his hands in the Master's vineyard. The cholera prevailed in Winchester in the fall of 1849. It caused a terrible panic, and many left the town. Twelve men banded together to stay and "fight it through." The doctors mostly left. Dr. Longshore came from Deerfield, thinking he could cure cholera, but he failed utterly, and as he was riding away, a man asked for a prescription for a patient. He wrote on a scrap and handed it to the man, saying, "Fill that, and give a dose every hour till he dies," and rode off as hard as he could go. Nothing seemed of any avail till a half-witted fellow in a saw-mill somewhere south of Winchester dictated a remedy which proved effectual to cure the cholera. Thomas Kizer, druggist, knows what the "saw-mill medicine" is. They had "signal taps" for each one of the twelve. One day, Joel Avery was missing. The "tap" was given, but no Joel. The town was searched, and at last he was found back of Wellcome Puckett's, apparently dead. But he was breathing slightly, and they made some strong lye, and filled a trough, and put him in, and he "bounced." It revived him, and he got well. It was a fearful time! A large number died. Some whole families were taken off. The death fiend seemed to have been turned loose upon the devoted town, unchecked, and reveling in wretchedness and desolation. Elder Stone removed from Union City in the fall of 1880, to his farm in Jackson Township, north of New Lisbon. His health, which had become quite feeble during that summer and fall, grew somewhat better, and he took up preaching and pastoral labor which he had been obliged to intermit. But it was only for a short time. His health proved still unequal to the task, and he is striving to find, though with little success, in active out-door labor and relaxation of mental exertion, a restoration of mental and bodily health and strength. During the fall of 1881, he returned to Union City to his former residence in that town, and in September they took their first trip to the prairies of Kansas.

Nathan Thomas, Wayne County, Ind., Anti-slavery Friend, was the third child of Benjamin Thomas, one of the pioneers of New Garden Township, Wayne Co., Ind. He was born about 1813, and was twice married, the last time to Mrs. Ann (Williams) Reynolds, who is still living, having been a widow since his death, nearly thirty years. Mr. Thomas had a large family of children, three of whom were by his last wife. He was wonderfully active in religious and benevolent movements; was one of the chief actors in the "Separation," and a trusted leader among the Anti-slavery Friends. He was greatly interested in the free labor movement, and traveled extensively in the South and elsewhere to aid in encouraging the production of cotton and marketing it by free labor. He was one of the Trustees of the U. L. Institute, and was greatly active in its support, and deeply interested in its success. His advantages in that early time had been but meager, yet he became an intelligent and influential man. His death occurred while he was still in the early maturity of manhood, when he was only about thirty-eight years old. The cholera swept him from among men in the fall of 1851. His early demise was indeed a severe loss, as men view things, to the community and to the country. His widow, Mrs. Ann Thomas, has been from her early girlhood a remarkable specimen of untiring Christian and benevolent artivity, restless and unceasing in her efforts to accomplish good, especially to the poor and friendless. She was born and reared in Ireland, belonging to a family of distinction in that country. One of her brothers was for many years a British military officer in India. Another was, during his life, an English official in Australia. A third died on the plains while on the way to California during the early gold excitement about that region. She returned to her native island in 1879 to visit the scenes of her youth, and it is a somewhat curious fact that, through her means, a marriage was accomplished between one of her sons and a lady of that country. He crossed the ocean during the winter of 1879–80, claimed his bride, and, returning to America in the spring, resumed his business as associated press agent in the city of Chicago; and his mother is now spending with that son in that wonderful city a pleasant and tranquil old age, enjoying the retrospect of a life spent in the active service of the Lord, and the consciousness of the comforting presence of her loving Savior.

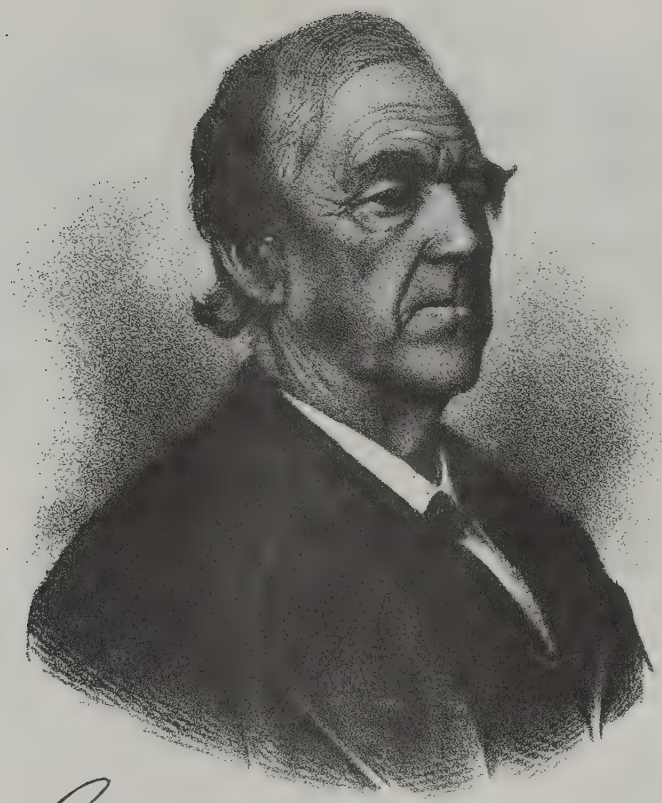
Benjamin Thomas, Newport (now Fountain City), Ind., was born in North Carolina in 1782; came to Wayne County in 1812, being the second settler north of Richmond, Ind. He married Anna Moorman in North Carolina. Nathan Thomas, their third child, was the first white child born in New Garden Township, Wayne County. Benjamin Thomas had twelve children, six of them still living. He remained on the land he entered till his death, about 1851. He was prominent in the "Separation" among Friends of the Richmond Yearly Meeting on account of slavery, in 1842–43, and was one of the principal founders of Union Literary Institute, a manual labor institution, established in 1845 and 1846, in Randolph County, for colored and other youth. He was active and influential among Friends during his whole life. He was mild and gentle in his disposition, quiet in his temper, exemplary in his life, industrious and frugal, a consistent Christian, a worthy citizen and a generous-hearted, benevolent man.

John Thornburg, Friend-Methodist, Stony Creek, oldest son of Isaac Thornburg, was born in North Carolina, Guilford County, in 1794; came to Ohio in 1813; married Susannah Bales in 1815; came to Randolph County in 1824; entered 160 acres of land two miles south of Windsor, and moved to the county April, 1825. He had ten children, four born in Ohio and six in Randolph County. Lemuel Vestal had undertaken to build a mill on Stony Creek, near Windsor. He had employed his workmen, and they had got out the timber, but he could not go on, and he sold out to John Thornburg, who put up both a saw-mill and a grist-mill, the latter grinding corn and wheat, bolting with a revolving hand bolt. That mill sawed the timber to build the first frame house in Muncie, the lumber being hauled to that place by ox teams. After owning the mills four years, he sold them to Andrew G. Dye, who, after several years, also sold to Moses Neely, who sold to Thomas W. Reese, and he built the mills anew. They have been owned successively since by Neely, Mark Patty, Johnson & Dye, William A. Thornburg, Reece & Sons, Mahlon Clevenger, John Thornburg, and now by Robert Cowgill. The mill is a good one, though it lacks power somewhat. The water is not nearly so abundant and reliable as of old. The clearing-up of the lands has dried up the ground and lessened greatly the volume and steadiness of flow of the streams, and vastly decreased their value for propelling power. John Thornburg sold his land to Joseph Rooks, and the mills to Dye, and went farther up Stony Creek, and again entered 160 acres, and built a cabin, buying out also David Vestal, with twenty-five acres of cleared land, and there he remained till his death, in 1845. His widow is living yet, with Marion Hewitt, near Neff, eighty-four years old past. After her first husband's death, she married Thomas Clevenger, who was a widower with eight or nine children, only two or three of whom were grown; and so she has raised two large families, seventeen in all, and still survives to look back with thankfulness upon the way in which, though rough and rugged, yet gracious and merciful, the good hand of the Lord hath led her through all the days of her lengthened pilgrimage on the earth, and to look forward to her speedy and abundant entrance into the heavenly mansions.

"Where she shall bathe her weary soul,
In seas of heavenly rest;
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across her peaceful breast."

Her husband, John Thornburg, was originally a Friend, but, believing in the unity of all Christians, he was prominent in forming and maintaining a congregation in his vicinity on the ground of union. It was composed chiefly of Friends and Methodists, and was often called the "Friend-Methodist." Their church was called the Union Chapel, and the graveyard near where it stood is to this day spoken of as the Union Cemetery. Mr. Thornburg was himself a preacher, and while he lived the society flourished, but after his death it dwindled, and has become extinct, most of the members joining other societies.

Rev. Ebenezer Tucker, Congregationalist, Union City, born in Cherry Valley, N. Y., in 1819, attended common schools and Cherry Valley Academy, 1826–29; Oneida Institute, New York, 1836–40; teaching winters, and manual labor summers; Auburn and Oberlin Theological Seminaries, 1841–44, graduating at Oberlin in 1844; married Lois Patchin, North Gage, Oneida Co., N. Y., September 25, 1844; Fredericktown, Ohio, 1844; Pastor Congregational Church eighteen months, 1844–46; Principal Union Literary Institute, near Spartansburg, Ind., 1846–54 (school mainly for colored youth, established largely by Anti-slavery Friends); farmer, Nora, Ill., 1854–59; President Liber College, Jay County, Ind., 1859–68; Principal Union City one year; lamp agency, 1869; New Orleans, Professor in Straight University, 1870; Tougaloo University, Mississippi, 1871–72; missionary, Raymond, Miss., 1872–73; Union Literary Institute, Spartanburg, Ind., 1873–79; Union City, 1879. He began teaching April 5, 1835, and has taught, in all, a time equal to forty-two years of eight months each. He has been a clergyman since 1844, preaching mostly without compensation, being Pastor eighteen months at Fredericktown, Ohio, and nine years at Liber, Ind. His teaching has been laborious and exhausting, but not without power for good. About four thousand youth have been members of the schools under his charge, and great numbers of young men and women in Ohio, Indiana, Mississippi, Louisiana, New York, etc., ascribe to his counsels and instructions an impulse toward light and knowledge which has urged them onward to grander heights of wisdom and usefulness. He has had six children (four living), as follows: Granville Clarkson, Caroline Amelia, Julius Edson, Laura Frances, Charles Finney, Philo Andrew. G. Clarkson, farmer, teacher, soldier, miller, died 1882; Caroline A., died, Nora, Ill., 1858; Julius E., carpenter, miller, cabinet-maker; Laura F., teacher, milliner; Charles F., teacher; Philo A., telegrapher. G. C. married Mary A. Pomroy—Emma Teagle; Julius E., married Sarah Ellen Knight—widower; Charles F. married Cinderella Maria Campbell; Philo A. married Janetta Clapp. Ebenezer Tucker's parents were both of New England descent, his father having been born in Vermont. His maternal grand parents were natives of Connecticut, the grandfather having been a soldier in the Revolutionary war at Stonington, Conn., and an early and active pioneer of Cherry Valley, N. Y. His father's father was born in Marlboro, N. H., about 1740, and his father's mother in Roxbury, near Boston, in 1747, fifteen and eight years before the French and Indian war respectively. His father was one of twins who were the youngest of nineteen children by one marriage, many of whom were born in the State of Vermont. Being married at sixteen, the mother bore nineteen children by one husband, and lived to be ninety-three years old, dying in Cherry Valley, N. Y., in 1840. They were married at Roxbury, Mass.; kept house several years in Keene, N. H.; moved into Vermont, hauling their goods with oxen, and the married couple riding on the same horse 200 miles into the Green Mountain land. In about 1790, they set out for what was then called New Connecticut, and now Western Reserve, in the winter, upon a sled, with two horses, the group consisting of husband and wife and nine children, two being twins a year old. They crossed the Green Mountains; the snow left them, and they left the sled and kept on with the two horses. One horse died, and they still pressed forward with the other. They pawned their things as they went on, the last thing disposed of-thus being the woman's shawl, seventeen



Ebenezer Tucker

RES OF GEO. RICKERT, SEC. 7, JACKSON TP, RANDOLPH CO. IND.

RES OF MRS LUCINDA BYRUM, JACKSON TP, RANDOLPH CO. IND.

miles from where they finally stopped. They quit traveling, because—because—well, because they could get no farther, ending their wearisome journey in Montgomery County, N. Y., removing shortly to Otsego County, N. Y., about fifty-five miles west of Albany. There they settled, and there they resided till they left the scenes of mortality, the husband in about 1822, and the wife in 1840, at the great age of ninety-three. Poor and destitute, they reached that hard and rugged region, and poor for forty or fifty years longer they continued to be, during their whole sojourn in this sublunary sphere; that poverty and destitution made deeper and more desperate by the sad fact that twice in that country their house was burned to the ground, the last time escaping barely in their night clothes, losing everything in their dwelling. Thus did emigration take place, and thus did emigrants live in those olden times in that Eastern land. Such a group as the one described—man, wife, nine children, one poor, woe-begone horse, wandering, strangers in a strange land—would be a sight to behold! Yet of the great crowd of descendants of these poor emigrants, scattered east and west, Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, the great body have always been, and are to this day, upright, thriving, respectable, industrious, intelligent, and by far the larger portion of the whole number God-fearing people. The tree was good, and the fruit has been good for many generations. God bless and prosper the poor, but hardy and virtuous, emigrant, and let all the people say, Amen! Let no man despise the poor and the lowly, but let all conspire to favor and to encourage the humble and desolate, for out of such shall come, in the following years, through successive ages and generations, those who shall become the strength and substance of the nation, and the pride and glory of the land! The region of New York to which they came is famous in the annals of the Eastern land. Cherry Valley was settled in 1740, 142 years ago, by intelligent and pious people from Scotland. The winter after their establishment of the colony, the snow lay in immense depth for months upon the ground, and they came near starvation. A friendly Indian discovered their condition, and kept them alive by successive trips to the settlements on the Mohawk River, some fifteen miles distant, traveling upon snow-shoes and carrying provisions upon his back for their sustenance, persevering in his friendly work till the return of spring enabled them to obtain their own supply. In the Revolutionary war, the town was burned, and the inhabitants were either killed or carried captive to Canada. One person, who was then an infant in his mother's arms, became afterward the distinguished Judge Alfred E. Campbell, of Cooperstown, N. Y., who became the author of the work entitled "Annals of Tryon County," embracing the whole of New York west of Albany County, a most valuable and interesting treatise, and crowded with information concerning those olden times. Cherry Valley was burned near the same time with the massacre of Wyoming, in Pennsylvania, both being in the Susquehanna Valley, the former town being at the head of Cherry Valley Creek, one of the sources of that river, and Cooperstown being the residence of Judge Fennimore Cooper, the famous novelist, who immortalized that whole region by the productions of his vigorous and fertile brain. Some of the families of the original settlers 142 years ago still occupy the homesteads of their ancestors. The Campbell family in particular still remain where their progenitor established his home in 1740, after crossing the stormy ocean-wave from the rocks and mountains of his native Scotland. One of his sons was a Colonel in the Revolutionary army. Gen. Washington, in his Presidential tour through New York and New England, was a guest at the Campbell mansion, and one little boy, a lad of some ten years, who saw President Washington at his father's residence at that early time, lived to be more than ninety years old, and had the honor, in Gen. Grant's administration, to be able to say that he had seen the first President and the last. When President Grant visited Troy, in the State of New York, to attend the funeral ceremonies of Gen. Wool, Mr. Campbell, then above ninety years of age, made a journey from his home to Troy on purpose to have it to say that he had seen the first President and the last. He saw and was glad, and in a short time he lay down to take his last earthly sleep, and was gathered to the sepulchers of his fathers. The ancestral graveyard in that village is, indeed, a most interesting spot, containing, as it does, the tombs of several generations. In the fall of 1880, a centennial celebration was held, attended by perhaps twenty thousand people, and addresses were delivered by Gov. Horatio Seymour and other distingulshed personages of the State and region, commemorating the capture and burning of the town by the Indians under the famous Mohawk chief, Thayandanega, or Brant, and the cruel Tory partisan, Col. Walter Butler, who, in merciless ferocity, exceeded the savages themselves, and who was himself shot and tomahawked on the banks of Oneida Creek by an Indian, who cried, in answer to Butler's appeals for mercy as the avenging savage took his scalp, "Remember Sherry Valley! Remember Sherry Valley!" The subject of this sketch was an early Abolitionist, joining that much abused and maligned group of men and women in his early youth, in 1835. He attended the Oneida Institute at Whitesboro (near Utica, N. Y.), the first collegiate school in the United States which opened its doors to colored youth. While there and at Oberlin, he became acquainted with many of the young men of color who have since become famous in the country. Among them were Messrs. Freeman, Sidney, Loguen, Whitehorne, Day, Garnett, Crummell, Rogers, Vashon, Allen, and others not now recollected. He graduated with the class of 1840, a member of which class was Rev. Highland Garnet, then and ever since—till his death in Liberia, in 1882, whither he had gone by Presidential appointment as Consul to that African commonwealth—an energetic, talented, influential and greatly successful clergyman, being, from his youth, remarkable for his oratorical ability. It is an interesting fact that Mr. Garnet was the first colored person who was permitted to speak in the United States Hall of Representatives, which he did, to a crowded assembly, on the 12th of February, 1865. He was Pastor of a church in Washington City at the time, and their choir also officiated upon the occasion. The spacious hall was crammed, both upon the floor and in the galleries, and the vast audience hung spell-bound upon his lips. One who heard the memorable discourse concludes an account of the remarkable scene as follows: "It is needless to say more. Men who went to the house to hear a colored man, came away having heard a man in the highest and fullest sense. Many who went there with feelings simply of curiosity came away wrapped in astonishment. Not only a man, but a great representative man, had spoken, and they were amazed. In fact, Mr. Garnet was the finest colored orator in the land—far superior, not, indeed, in reasoning power, yet, in dignity and impressiveness of personal presence, in the graces of finished oratory, and in the grandeur of natural and cultured eloquence, to the far-famed Fred Douglass, for so many years a prominent personage before the American public." As stated, Ebenezer Tucker graduated in 1840 from Oneida Institute, the class numbering eleven, most of whom are still living, after a lapse of forty-two years, but not one of whom he has ever seen in the flesh since the morning after the commencement, when that band of earnest young men took the parting hand and separated to their life-work for Christ and for the welfare of the human race. His business has been chiefly teaching, and, during the larger portion of the more than forty years spent in that employment, his work has been in institutions fully and warmly open to the youth who have been guilty of the heinous crime of possessing a "skin not colored like our own;" fifteen years Principal at Union Literary Institute; nine years President of Liber College; and nearly four years in Straight University, New Orleans, and at Tougaloo University, Mississippi, bringing him thus in connection with some thousands of young persons of color, many of whom have since become prominent among their people and before the country. And, though still poor in purse, he feels rich in the reward of the esteem and affection of his pupils now of the olden time, and the conviction that his hands have been enabled to scatter seed upon the furrows of the great world-field, which is even now yielding, and shall, in the growing future, continue still more largely to yield an abundant harvest for the garner of eternal life.

Rev. J. T. Vardeman, Nettle Creek, was born in Fayette Co.,

Ind., in 1815; has had three wives—Martha Jenkins, Rebecca Jenkins and Sarah Boling—and has had eighteen children. He is a farmer, and a preacher in the United Brethren Church. He joined the church fifty-one years ago, and has been a member of the United Brethren forty-two years, and a minister among them thirty-eight years. He is now Presiding Elder (1880). He was once a Representative in the Legislature. Mr. Vardeman came to Randolph County in 1860. He is active and prominent in his denomination and in the community, residing northeast of Losantville.

R. T. Wheatley, Methodist, late of Union City, Ind., was born in 1825, in Montgomery County, Ohio, and his wife in 1830, in the same county. They were married April 30, 1851, and, in June, 1851, they removed to a farm two miles northwest of Union City, Ind. They attended meeting at Prospect Meeting-House, east of Deerfield, till the summer of 1852. At that time, a Methodist Episcopal society was formed at Union City. The first members were R. T. Wheatley, Class-Leader; Sarah Jane Wheatley, Henry M. Debolt (probationer), Martha E. Debolt. These were the whole class at first. John T. Farson and wife joined in the fall, while the preacher, Rev. Colclazer, was absent at conference, and S. L. Carter at nearly the same time. They struggled along for awhile. Rev. Newton followed Rev. Colclazer, and he advised the society to disband and go back to their former connections, there being but six members. The next quarterly conference took away their Sabbath preaching and gave them only night preaching. The quarterly meeting struck a dividend and assigned the payment of their quota by the society upon a basis of eighteen members. They had seventeen at the time, the average for the year having been nine. The class met their assessment at once, which no other class in the circuit did. The Presiding Elder said that Union Class was bound to live anyhow, and he gave the society Sabbath preaching again. Mr. Wheatley and his wife returned to Ohio in the spring of 1859, having been privileged to see Union City Class grown to the dignity of a station. They now reside at Dayton, clinging still to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and striving to do good as they have opportunity.

Rev. Willis C. Wilmore, Baptist, White River, was born in Amherst Co., Va., February 17, 1801. His mother died when he was two years and seven months old. In two and a half years, his father married again. They lived in Virginia, among the mountains, till Willis was grown. In 1822, he came to Ross County, Ohio, and the next year he went to Gallia County, Ohio. In 1825, he married Sarah Love, and she is still living. In 1825, he was licensed to preach among the Baptists. He moved, in 1829, to Wayne County, Ind.; was ordained as a preacher in June, 1830, in old Friendship Church, Wayne County. He had taught school one term in Virginia, and he also taught several terms in Ohio and Indiana. In 1831, Mr. Wilmore settled among the green beeches of Randolph, in the southwest part of Greensfork Township. In February, 1832, he was struck down with what the doctors called the "cold plague," and he has never walked since. In 1836, he was elected Justice of the Peace. In 1839, he was chosen County Recorder, which office he held two terms, or fourteen years. Removing to Winchester in 1839, he was taken worse in 1848, and was brought to his present residence, which has been his home to this day, except one year, about 1863, at Winchester. Until 1848, he preached more or less, but for many years from that time he mostly ceased his labors in that field, until within some years past. They have had nine children. One died in infancy. Eight grew up, and have been married, and seven are living now—William H., five children, Ward Township, farmer; Lucinda S. (Monks), five children, White River, farmer; John L., six children, White River, farmer; Nancy A. (Adamson), ten children, White River, farmer; James W., dead, two children, dentist; Jesse W., seven children, White River, farmer; Isaac N., died an infant; Benjamin F., three children, homestead, farmer; Mary J. (Engle), one child, White River, farmer. He has been owner of large tracts of land, having purchased mostly when land was low; and, after giving every child a farm, he has several hundred acres left. In politics, he is a Republican, inclining, of late years, to Greenbackism. He is now in his eighty-first year, a cripple for the last fifty years, but cheerful and happy, and otherwise healthy. His father, William Wilmore, had fourteen children, raising thirteen of them, being a lad during the Revolutionary war, born in 1769. He died in 1853, in Jackson County, Ohio, aged eighty-four years. He was married twice. The name of his first wife was Nancy Harrison, and her grandmother died at one hundred years old. His second wife was Susan Grissom, who died at about eighty. The children were John H., born June 4, 1799, eleven children, died in Rockbridge County, Va.; Willis C., born February 17, 1801, nine children, living, Randolph County, Ind.; James, born March 21, 1803, eight children, living, Adair County, Ky.; Hezekiah, born January, 1806, died an infant; Mary Ann, born January 19, 1808, nine children, died in Elkhart County, Ind.; Rosaline, born May 12, 1810, died in Gallia County, Ohio; Elizabeth, born December 1, 1812, living in Jackson County, Ohio; Thomas, born September 12, 1814, living in Jackson County, Ohio; Rebecca, born July 19, 1816, living in Jackson County, Ohio; William R., born May 30, 1818, living in Iowa; Robert, born May 14, 1820, living in Jackson County, Ohio; Nancy, born February 17, 1822, died in Jackson County, Ohio; Levi, born July 13, 1824, died in Huntington County, Ind.; Stephen N., born September 9, 1826, living in Huntington County, Ind. So that the Wilmore connection are a great flock, and have been scattered into Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana.

Rev. Daniel Worth, Wesleyan, West River, born in North Carolina in 1795; moved to Sullivan County, Ind., in 1822; Randolph County, Ind., in 1823. He married, first, Elizabeth Swain, and afterward, Huldah (Swain) Cudi. He had eight children. He was Justice many years, and was Senator and Representative for Randolph County. He was a preacher—first, Methodist Episcopal, then Wesleyan, and an earnest Abolitionist. He was active, impulsive, firm. He spent years in preaching and lecturing upon temperance and anti-slavery, and it is claimed of him that he did more of that labor during his life than any other man of his time in the State. In his later years, he went as a missionary preacher to portions of his native State, North Carolina. There was originally a large native anti-slavery element there, and some of it was yet alive, and Wesleyan missionaries went to that region and formed several Wesleyan churches. Daniel Worth went to preach to these churches. He was arrested and thrown into prison, technically, for having sold or given to somebody there a copy of "Helper's Work," then lately published, on the charge of inciting slaves to insurrection, the penalty for which was death. He finally was bailed out and came away. He died not very long after. His second wife is living still, at Fountain City, Ind. Mr. Worth was active in the work of what was called the Underground Railroad. He was wonderfully energetic in the work of well-doing, entering into the labors for Christ and humanity with all his might. His first wife, Elizabeth Swain, was born May 27, 1798, and died May 12, 1858. His second marriage took place May 19, 1859. His imprisonment lasted four months and six days. The expenses of his prosecution were about $1,000. His death took place in Fountain City, Ind., December 12, 1862. The children of Daniel and Elizabeth Worth were these: Emily, born January 1, 1819, died September 27, 1822; Edmund B., born June 7, 1821, died October 22, 1822; Emily (second), born May 6, 1824; Sarah, born January 3, 1827; Rhoda, born October 24, 1829; William, born February 23, 1832; Lydia, born November 1, 1834; Mary K., born February 4, 1839.

Rev. Hosea C. Tillson, of Bethel, Wayne Co., Ind., was never a resident of Randolph, but he was a pioneer preacher of more than fifty years ago, and much of his early work lay among the old-time settlers of Randolph. He read a paper at a preachers' meeting held at Spartansburg, Randolph Co., Ind., February 2, 1882 (by the Disciples), and from that essay we take an abstract containing reminiscences of great interest from an eye witness and actual worker in the enterprise of evangelizing the wilderness and planting the Gospel among the forest pioneers in this region. Mr. Tillson says: "The outfit of a pioneer preacher was a large supply of the love of God shed abroad in his heart by RESIDENCES AND TANNERY OF C. GUTHEIL SHORT ST. WINCHESTER, RANDOLPH CO. IND.

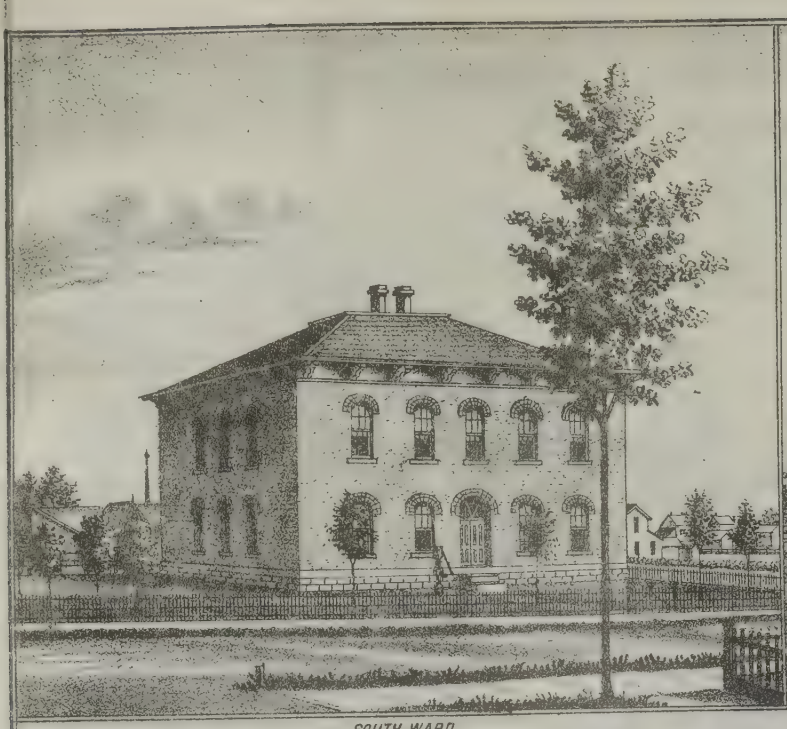
RES. OF ANDREW J. STAKEBAKE

RES. OF DR. CHARLES JAQUA

WINCHESTER, INDIANA



SOUTH WARD

NORTH WARD

CENTRAL BUILDING.

J.T CHENOWETH
J.J. BATES
JNO. L. STAKEBAKE
} SCHOOL BOARD

WINCHESTER PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

E. H. BUTLER, SUPT.

the Holy Spirit, a pocket Bible, a hymn book, a horse, a pair of saddle-bags and a large cape overcoat to keep warm in winter and to shed rain in summer, tied on behind the saddle when not needed. He took no umbrella, because it could not be used riding through the thick woods."

Mr. T. began to serve in the ministry in 1830. He preached first at Lebanon, Warren Co., Ohio, traveling to Cincinnati and Kentucky, crossing the river again at Aurora, Dearborn Co., Ind., and going thence to Wayne County, preaching and also working at his trade as a cooper.

In 1830, he first preached in Randolph County. He says: "A small settlement had been formed on the Little Mississinewa, four miles north of where Union City now is. My old school-teacher and other friends had moved up there into the woods. James Wickersham, James Skinner and Thomas Wiley were among them. I preached there to twenty persons, which was all there were in the neighborhood." Returning home through Newburg (Spartansburg), he left an appointment to preach there, in June, which he fulfilled. Some of the Friends had moved to Fort Wayne, and he was invited to visit that place, which he accomplished in August, making a three days' horseback ride through the wilderness, and thence six miles down the river, where the meeting was held in a cabin on the banks of the stream. He says: "On Sunday morning, large canoes came sailing on the river, loaded with people, and landed near, filling the cabin. One woman asked for immersion. Her request was granted, which was supposed to be the first baptism in the waters of the beautiful Maumee." Returning, scarce of money, he fed on blackberries and baited his horse on the wild grass, and, at other times, he ate black haws, thinking of John the Baptist and his "locusts and wild honey."

He continued his visits to the settlement north of Union City, in 1837, accompanied by the two Harlans, and, in 1838, began to baptize into the faith of Jesus. The settlement had increased and a cabin would not hold the people, and the men made a booth of bushes at the cabin door, with fence rails for seats, while the preachers' horses stood tied to the trees, eating corn brought in their saddle-bags. We quote again, in substance: "The first week in January, 1840, the meeting was held in Thomas Wiley's hewed-log house before his large log-heap fire. Brother Wiley cut the ice a foot thick, and, in a heavy snow storm, we baptized James Wickersham and his wife and some others, and, at night, several more by the light of hickory bark torches, thus getting both my suits of clothes wet, but Sister Wiley had them well dried by morning. In the spring of 1842, we ordained Thomas Wiley and Charles Smith Elders of the church there by the laying on of hands." In 1840, he was called by Jonathan Thomas to preach at his new saw-mill, on Clear Creek, east of Deerfield, at which place he continued to preach for three years with much success. He preached also at Brook's Creek, in Jay County, and at Petersburg and Walnut Corner, Randolph County.

South Salem, Springboro (north of Lynn), etc., were begun about the same time. He states: "We were called to Joel Howe's cabin, in the edge of the big woods west of Spartansburg, in the summer of 1839. An acre was cleared, a loose plank floor was in the cabin, but the cracks were not stopped. A large sycamore gum stood near, with a hole cut in one side for a smoke-house. The first two meetings, not more than eight persons were present, but in the early winter, at the third or fourth appointment, the house was so full of people that we could scarce get in. They had come from the settlements south out of curiosity. But the Lord was there in the power of the Spirit, and tears flowed freely. At night, we preached at Davis' Schoolhouse, south of Spartansburg, to a crowded house."

Shortly afterward, at the same house, and at Brother Silas Davis' dwelling, two meetings were held at the same hour by Brothers Valentine Harlan and Tillson, and two brethren, John Starling and Nathan Hedgepeth, were baptized at Davis' Spring. "Soon after that, Bethpage Meeting-House was built and a great work spread through all that region. * * * I am the last one of the pioneer preachers left on the shores of time in these parts, and I am 'only waiting till the shadows are a little longer grown.'" Mr. T. baptized many believers, some years more than 200. He says in his paper: "The old horse was dead long ago. The old saddle was torn up in 1843 (when I was out with Brother Franklin), but here is the old saddle-bags and Father Harlan's old hymn-book, like the one I had, and here is the old cape overcoat; and last, and best of all, here is the old backwoods preacher in good health and with as warm a heart for the prosperity of Zion as he had fifty years ago."

Mr. Tillson's description of the bluff pioneers, who were the agents in God's hand for causing the beginning of the Gospel of the Kingdom in those wildernesses is very quaint and striking:

"Joel Howe, taking his little sorrel mare with rope-rein bridle and sheep-skin saddle, and going to Bethel (eight miles) one Sunday morning dressed in home-spun clothes of flax and tow, with straw hat and feet all bare, was the angel of mercy appointed to be the herald of salvation that should open the gates of the New Jerusalem to that infant community. James Wickersham and James Skinner, two poor brethren coming down to Whitewater to buy breadstuff, urged me to come up on the Little Mississinewa and break to their famishing souls the bread of eternal life. Sister Nancy Leabo, at Walnut Corner, whose husband died, leaving her to struggle on in poverty and want, called me there to preach his funeral. Jonathan Thomas, in his shanty built of rough plank, urged me to come and speak the words of heavenly consolation to himself and his neighbors, east of Deerfield. The meetings there were held, first in a Methodist brother's cabin, then at the saw-mill, the men seated on the logs in the mill-yard like pigeons in the trees. When preaching on Bear Creek, northwest of Winchester, Brother James Level and wife came on horseback nine miles to meeting on Sunday morning, returning at evening. Souls were 'hungry for the Word' in those times and would endure hardships to reach the spots of blessing, where stood the servants of Christ to feed the eager, waiting crowds with the bread furnished from the Master's hand." Mr. T. is now (1882) about seventy-eight years old.

CHAPTER XII.

EDUCATION.

GENERAL—ASSOCIATION—SEMINARY—UNION LITERARY INSTITUTE—NORMAL SCHOOLS—INSTITUTES—TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION—FUNDS—SCHOOLS—STATISTICS—PRIVATE SCHOOLS—TRUSTEES—MUSIC—LECTURES—SUNDAY SCHOOLS—LIBRARIES.

GENERAL.

THE pioneers of Randolph were but poorly situated for education. Many of them came from North Carolina, where schools were few and far between. Still, even there, especially among the Friends, some schools were to be found, and it was not long after the early settlers had planted themselves in these woods till they began to provide, as they could, for the enlightenment of the rising generation. During the second year of their residence in their new homes, the first group of pioneers had erected a building, for the double purpose of the worship of God and the instruction of youth. In fact, these two things have been, in American history, almost inseparably connected. All through the country, both in New England and the Sunny South, as well in the distant West as in the central East, on the rugged hillsides or in the smiling valleys, either the religious meeting was held in the schoolhouse, or the school was "kept" in the church. For it has been constantly a feature of the Christian religion to welcome and to foster knowledge and intelligence. And not seldom it has happened that the school and the church have waited for neither schoolhouse nor meeting-house, but have established themselves around the very hearths of the settlers. Some wife and mother, more intelligent than the rest, who, in her bright and sunny girlhood beyond the Eastern mountains, had outstripped her rivals in reading and spelling, and who had not forgotten her learning, would "set up a school" in her own cabin and receive the attendance of the children of her neighbors, and, amid her household cares, find time for the additional labor incident to the giving of instruction. Rude, indeed, according to the modern standard, were these backwoods schools. The houses, the fixtures, the books, were all of the simplest, plainest, most inexpensive kind. A pole cabin hastily erected was good enough for the building. Split saplings, with legs inserted in auger holes at each end, answered for the seats; puncheons were amply sufficient for the floor and the door, and for the writing desks as well, laid against the wall upon pins driven into holes bored in the logs of the cabin; a dirt hearth and clay jambs (or no jambs at all), and a stick and dirt chimney, were "just the thing" to hold the piles of wood, and lead off into the upper air the smoke from the huge fires that gave meager warmth to the shivering urchins hovering around them; the light made its struggling way through "sheets of greased paper" pasted over a space made by leaving out a log along the whole side of the house. Great fires were kept up against the rude back walls by wood supplied in abundance from the surrounding forest, since the older boys would chop and carry for the purpose all needed fuel from day to day at morning or at noon. Books were few and various. A Dilworth's or a Webster's spelling book, a Testament, a Murray's English Reader, or a "Sequel," or possibly some stray history, or question-and-answer geography, the Life of Washington or Franklin, or what not, would suffice for a reader; Talbot or Pike, or some still older text-book, on arithmetic, or a slate and pencil itself alone, answered for teaching "figgers," while for writing, an inkstand filled with the juice of pokeberry, or oak bark, or witch hazel boiled with copperas, a goose-quill picked up in the fence corner or plucked from the wing of a goose, a pewter plummet for ruling the coarse and heavy paper, and possibly a ruler itself, whittled and smoothed from a piece of straight hickory or sugar tree, and in one case in fifty, mayhap, a bona fide pen-knife. These things, some or all of them, made the happy school-boy prouder than a king's son.

Such appliances for school improvement seem to the present generation to be worthless, and fit only to be laughed at; yet it is a fact worthy of food for serious reflection that, by those primitive methods, the active, enterprising, energetic, successful men and women of the past and the present, the fathers and the grandfathers of the young people of to-day, who possibly despise those rude and ancient times; that by such rough and rugged discipline as this did they gain the knowledge and the training which make them what they are and have been. Some of the most intelligent of the present older generation never went to school a day in their lives in a schoolhouse that contained a single pane of glass. And the fact is adapted to humble our pride in the gay and costly things which modern extravagance furnishes to assist in "teaching the young idea how to shoot," inasmuch as the products of those meager instrumentalities seem in many respects superior to the results which, coming from our grand and magnificent palaces, sacred to learning and improvement, we do now behold. So true it is, though the fact is little realized nor appreciated that education is accomplished, not by teachers nor by books, nor by splendid and costly houses and appliances, but by earnest, persistent personal action, by constant, laborious, thorough self-development. The poet says, "Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow," and the same truth holds in all human results. Who would be wise, or great, or good, himself must work out the grand result. God and friends and nature may aid, may furnish power and genius and opportunity, but the work itself can spring alone from the head and heart of him who desires the sublime consummation. At Arba and at Jericho, the first scholars were taught in pole-cabin meeting-houses. In Jackson Township, the first was had in the house of a settler, and taught by his worthy wife. In some places, rough buildings were erected on purpose for schools, while not seldom, other edifices, as empty dwellings, old field cabins, or even stables themselves, were fitted up, and the children were gathered therein and taught the rudiments of an English education.

Laughable, indeed, were some of the attempts at school-keeping in those old-time "woods colleges." In many cases, "readin' and spellin'" were the limits of what the school-master dared to undertake. And the books and the classes—they were wonderful in their variety. Whatever a pupil brought, that he used; and no high-fangled teacher nor nosing school committee interfered to "shut down" on the pleasure of parents or of pupils; but, as in the days of Israel of old, "every one did that which was right in his own eyes." It might chance, indeed, that a presuming youth, fresh from the schools of "Yankee Land," (though such an event was almost never known), would venture, with his armful of books, to enter the school-room door, thinking that his "Yankee books" would surely "pass muster" "out West." But no; the teacher would examine briefly, and bluntly say, "Them ar books ain't no use—take 'em home and keep 'em thar."

One of the prominent men of the county gives an amusing experience in this respect. His parents had just come to the West from "Old Massachusetts." The boy, perhaps, ten or twelve years old, marched proudly to the sylvan temple of wisdom, with his armful of New England books—Colburn's Mental Arithmetic and Adams' New Arithmetic, those mathematical gems of olden time; Greenleaf's Grammar, Goodrich's Reader (perhaps), Smith's Geography, etc. The teacher, a long, lank, gaunt, ungainly fellow, rapped on the window. The children suddenly ceased playing, and, crying, "It's books! it's books;" ran pell-mell into the log schoolhouse. School began. The teacher came along, eying askance the formidable pile of books; and fingering the one that lay on top—"Old Zerah Colburn," he opened the volume, and, leafing it over awhile, broke out, "Boy, take that ar book home and tell your 'pap' to burn it up. The man what made it did not know what he was about, and couldn't do his own sums." (The work has no answers). Taking up the grammar, he said, "That seems like it mought be a good enough book, but grammar ain't teached here, and you kin take that home too." Next came Adams' New Arithmetic, at that time one of the best text-books on arithmetic in existence. Turning the leaves over one by one, he drawled out, at length, "This is some better; the man knows how to do about half his sums. But see here; take that ar book home too, and tell your 'pap' to send Pike's or Talbot's 'Rethmetic. Them's the kind we use." And so with the rest. He made a clean sweep of the books, and the poor, crest-fallen boy, chagrined beyond measure that his "Yankee books" had thus summarily passed under utter condemnation, went home at night (or perhaps at noon) and made report to his astonished father of the reception which had been accorded to the books he had so proudly lugged to school in the morning.

But there were good teachers even then, and the memory of some is still preserved, and their work remains, and will still grow and increase for ages yet to come. The proverb is, "Good teacher, good school," or again, "Like master, like scholar," and in some cases, even in these rough and unsightly edifices, in spite of every obstacle, and notwithstanding every drawback, teaching work was accomplished, the methods and the results of which would not disgrace the finest and the most costly modern school edifice in the land.

Notwithstanding the wise and substantial foundations laid in the original constitution of Indiana, there appears to have arisen in the commonwealth a kind of jealousy against what were call the rich, for fear they might get more than their share of school advantages; and so, in the constitution of 1851, the county seminaries were killed, and the funds which had been previously devoted to their support were transferred to the public common school fund. This would seem to have been unwise, since the aid thereby rendered to the general fund would be almost infinitesimal, while yet, under the arrangements of the old constitution, a seminary might by that means have been kept in efficient working order.

Yet so it was, and the seminary, as a county institution, fell under the condemnation of the dear people, and was obliged to cease thereafter forever to be.

ASSOCIATION.

The first association for educational purposes in Randolph County, so far as now known, was formed by a company of enterprising gentlemen of Winchester and vicinity (as appears by the books of the County Recorder) in 1827. Their names were as follows: Thomas Wright, Jr., William Wright, Paul W. Way, Abner Overman, David Heaston, Caleb Odle, Thomas Hanna, Jonathan Hiatt, Jehu Robinson, David Haworth, Aaron Dolby, John Odle, John B. Wright, Jonathan Hiatt, Sr., Albert Banta, James Davis, Jonathan Edwards, William Edwards, John Wright, Jacob Porson, David Wright.

The record is as stated below:

"We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of Indiana and of Randolph County, being aware of the importance of school education, do mutually covenant and agree to and with each other, to form ourselves into a society, under the name of the Winchester School Association, and to elect out of our body three Trustees to manage the business of the society. August 21, 1827."

Paul W. Way was chosen Secretary, but who were made Trustees does not appear.

This movement would seem creditable on the part of the citizens of Winchester. Eight years or less only had elapsed since that town had been staked out in the heavy, unbroken forest, and very few families had yet made their homes in that village in the woods, so that most of the persons named must have resided outside the town.

It would have been a matter of interest to have discovered the record of the proceedings of this association, that we might have known, who live in these latter days, what those worthy pioneers were able to accomplish. But no record is known to be extant, and we can only conjecture their action.

Before the new constitution of 1851, the school system of Indiana was chiefly in embryo. Many of the school sections were sold only between 1840 and 1850, and schools were few, and mostly not very efficient. Nearly all the schools were supported (and very poorly, at that) by subscription. Some of these select schools, indeed, were not inefficient; and it is confidently claimed, and probably not without some degree of truth, that the rate of progress in those early places of instruction was far greater than in the ordinary general schools of the present day. The reasons of the fact (if it be one) are not hard to be found.

COUNTY SEMINARY.

One thing was provided for under the old constitution, indeed, and, to a great extent, carried out, in the establishment of county seminaries, which might well have been suffered to remain, even to the present day. Almost every young man, and young woman as well, of that former time, who, later in life, has approved himself as a man of mark, was helped to start in the race of usefulness and renown in those same despised and rejected county seminaries. And, had they been continued and maintained in their true spirit, and according to the ideal of their establishment, they would have stood to-day, in general efficiency for the improvement of the whole community, far above anything which the modern graded school or high school of the villages and cities has been able to accomplish. But in the convention of 1850, stinginess, or, to express the thing still more exactly, penny-wisdom and pound-foolishness, prevailed, and the seminaries were slaughtered.

The poor man cut off his own nose to spite his face, and, for fear some rich man's son might chance to go to school at the seminary, the poor cut themselves off from every possible opportunity of higher education which had been within their reach. Rich men, indeed, could do without the seminaries, since they could send their children far away, if need be; but the poor man could not. Their opportunity must be near at hand, or it can avail them nothing. And thus it would have been.

The county seminary, established by public aid, and fostered and strengthened by private as well as public favor and support, would have been, as it were, a means of higher education, constantly within the reach of every youth who should have the least desire to break forth from the dungeons of ignorance into the light and freedom of wisdom and intelligence; and the poor would have availed themselves of the opportunity far oftener than the rich.

But so it was. Demagogism prevailed, and the hen that laid the golden egg was killed, and, as in the old Grecian fable, nothing was found to reward the slaughterers for their murderous deed; so in this case no good was accomplished for the common schools to warrant the wholesale and remorseless extinction of the obnoxious county seminaries.

The same spirit that killed the seminaries ruled for a long time, and checked and choked the rising desire for learning; so that, for years, aided by the preposterous decision of the Supreme Court, communities were forbidden to tax themselves for the education of their own children. The idea that people can empower their trustees to levy taxes at discretion, under a constitution that forbids them to do the same thing themselves, is ridiculous enough. But such was the spirit of the time in high places. And while money could be spent in all manner of nonsense, none could be expended in raising the public mind out of darkness into light, and in chasing away the evils and curses attending ever upon ignorance and vice. I venture an opinion that it is as unconstitutional to-day to empower Trustees or Commissioners to use their discretion in taxation as it is or was for the people at large to be allowed to do the same thing. But the old-fogy decisions of a dark age could not kill, though they did seriously check, the rising spirit of knowledge, nor wholly restrain the advancing public sentiment of the era; and so the body of the people pay ungrudgingly enormous taxes for the support of schools for the whole people. Though the methods of application may be, perhaps, susceptible of improvement, yet the public mind of the time feels an eagerness for knowledge and a determination to raise high the standard of intelligence. Especially are the poor beginning to see that, if the rich are willing to tax themselves for the elevation of the masses it is not for them, the poor, to complain or object, since the measure is simply and almost wholly for the special benefit of the poor themselves. It has been claimed for years, that, notwithstanding the ancient drawbacks, Indiana has the best school system in the United States. This boast may be founded on fact, or it may not. One thing, at least, is true, that her schools of to-day are immeasurably superior to those of fifty or even thirty years ago. Somewhere in this volume may be found a racy sketch of a "woods school" in Randolph County, taught by no less a personage than Hon. N. Cadwallader, late Senator, and banker of Union City, Ind., said school taught by our worthy fellow-citizen in the year of grace 1845, only thirty-five years ago. But the sketch is so rich that it will bear reproducing, and we will tell the story again, partly in his own words:

"I taught in an old log building in a clearing. It had once boasted a (clay and puncheon) fire-place and a stick chimney; but the house at that time had neither, for the chimney and fireplace were wholly gone, and the end of the house was all open. The books were anything that the parents happened to have at hand at the time—Bible, Testament, Marion, Washington, Franklin, spelling book, Murray's Sequel, or anything else; and each one used whatever he brought, be it what it might. School-book uniformity was not in vogue then in that institution, but glorious liberty was the order of the day. Of course, classification was out of the question, but each urchin was head (and foot, too) of his own class."

In discipline, Mr. Cadwallader was unique. One day, he had four undergoing, all at once, on the puncheons, the solemn penalty of violated law. Two were standing face to face, with a stick split at each end, and one end snapped on each boy's nose. One had been thrown astride of a naked joist-pole overhead, while a fourth was stationed, with his hands behind his back and his nose plump up to the wall. Was not all that a sight? The State can never know how great is her loss in not having appointed Mr. C. State School Superintendent, for that original bent of genius would have wrought wonders ere this in the line of methods of instruction, of architecture, of discipline, of amusement. At any rate, such was "school-keeping" thirty-five years ago in our own beloved Randolph, full thirty-one years after its first settlement. Verily, the world moves. Doubtless our schools yet need "reconnoitering," still they are by no means what they "used to was" in the "auld lang since ago." Hence we may thank God for the tokens of advancement that we behold, and take courage and hope for the future. Forty, and even thirty years ago, the "select school" was the glory of the hour. Some active, earnest man would gather around him the aspiring minds of a neighborhood, and he would have a school indeed.

We very much question whether the ones we now have could begin to rival those glorious old-time assemblages called "select schools," where every pupil had paid his tuition, and was bent on getting the worth of his money. They needed no spurring forward. Everybody was going at the top of his bent. All that could be done was to "hold to the sled, guide it and let it go." We have often heard men remark, in later years, that their children did not learn half so much in a given time as they used to do in their boyhood and youth. The statement, when made by one of the ambitious spirits referred to above, is true. The boys could go to school only a few days, or a month or two, and they would study with all their might. The "individual" method, so much in vogue in former years, has its bright as well as its dark side; for a high-spirited youth, all alone, with none to hinder him, would sometimes go half through the "rethmetic" in six weeks, or even less. We have ourselves known a class of six go through "Ray's Higher" in twelve weeks. Now, that was work! It did not take ten years to get "through the programme," for the young man would not start till sixteen or eighteen years old, and in ten years from that time he would be married and have a family, and would have cleared up forty acres of land. Young folks used to study as for a race; and it did not hurt them, either; they did not stay at it long enough to hurt anybody.

But the subscription school, and the select school, and the pay school, have mostly had their day, and have given way to the public free school, and now the poorest can go as freely as the richest. Forty years ago, there existed in the Hoosier State only the two helps to get "out of the chimney corner"—the select school and the county seminary—chiefly the latter. Ask any prominent man now of from fifty to sixty years of age how he got his education, and he will tell you, "In the chimney corner," topped off by a term in some select school or county seminary. And, as a matter of fact, more poor country lads like "Our Cad" or "Our Tom" attended the county seminary than rich ones did. It is the "poor chaps" all over the country that make men and women of themselves by going to school. Rich young people are forced to attend, and come out dunces all the same. A poor orphan lad, who knows he has nothing but his hands and his brains and his grit to go on, studies as though he were mauling rails by the job, and by and by he comes out at the top.

By the original constitution of Indiana, a seminary fund was created. Certain moneys, among which were fines, forfeitures; etc., were devoted to this purpose. A seminary was to be built in each county, and the fund was to be applied in that way.

The first record which has been found of action as to the seminary for Randolph County is dated May 7, 1839, and is as follows:

"At a called meeting of the Trustees of the County Seminary of Randolph County, on the 7th day of May, 1839, present, Hiram Mendenhall, John J. Peacock and Edmund B. Goodrich:

"Ordered, That Carey S. Goodrich be appointed Clerk of the Board.

"Ordered, That E. B. Goodrich be appointed Treasurer, and that he call on Zachariah Puckett, late Trustee of the County Seminary, for all books, notes, bonds, papers and moneys in his hands as Trustee aforesaid; and that the said Edmund B. Goodrich report to this board at their next meeting.

"The board hath this day conditionally purchased of David Heaston a lot in the town of Winchester for the purpose of erecting a county seminary, the aforesaid purchase subject to the supervision of the County Commissioners."

And then the board adjourned until Monday, the 14th inst.

Hiram Mendenhall, Carey S. Goodrich (Clerk), John J. Peacock, Edmund B. Goodrich, Seminary Building Trustees.

Board met May 14, 1839.

Considered that the fund at command is not large enough to warrant the erection of a county seminary; therefore,

"Ordered, That the funds be loaned so as to be due May 1, 1840."

Board met February 29, 1840, and voted to commence the erection of a county seminary, and they directed George W. Goodrich to draft a plan for a building, with dimensions as follows:

Size, 35x45 feet; first floor at least three feet from the earth; first story, twelve feet in the clear; second story, ten feet in the clear.

Board met March 13, 1840, and ordered the house to be only one story.

Board met March 18, 1840, and directed advertisements for bids for building the seminary, to be put up at Winchester, Windsor, Spartansburg, Mendenhall's Mill and Deerfield.

House to be finished by May 1, 1841, and to be built of brick.

Board met April 10, 1840, and let the erection of the building to George W. Moore for $2,300, that being the lowest bid, and ordered that $20 be paid George W. Goodrich for draft and specifications.

June 1, 1841, board met, and voted to borrow from the surplus revenue fund $1,000, under a law then lately passed.

June 10, 1841, board ordered the letting of two jobs: 1. Digging well, erecting pump, building privies and leveling yard. 2. Making and fixing forty-nine desks in the school-room. Both jobs were to be done by October 1, 1841.

June 10, 1841, board met, opened bids, and let the jobs as follows: First, to George W. Goodrich, for $170; second job, to Ernest Strome, for $124.

December 18, 1841, board met and accepted, with some slight reservations, the seminary, and ordered the contractor to be paid for the same, $2,200.

January 1, 1842, board met and adopted rules for the care of the school building and other property, and for the behavior of the students.

The rules adopted were quite precise and somewhat strict, e. g.:

SECTION 1.—Be it ordained that any person or persons who shall break any glass or shall break any locks, hinges or latches, or break or lose any keys, or any of the sash, cords or pulleys, or springs, or shall tear any of the curtains of the windows, shall be fined as follows:

For each glass, 50 cents; for each lock broken or key lost, $4; for each latch or hinge broken, 50 cents; for each light or sash broken, 50 cents; for each pulley cord broken or torn loose, 25 cents; for each pulley spring broken, 37 cents; for each tearing window curtain, 37 cents; for injuring desks, seats, etc., not above 50 cents for the first offense, to be doubled for any subsequent offense; for scratching the wall, etc., not over $3; for breaking or injuring the gates or fences, not above 50 cents, to be doubled upon repetition; for injuring trees or shrubbery, not above $1, doubled for repetition.

The studies allowed were orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar, geography, algebra, geometry, surveying, philosophy, chemistry and Latin.

March term, 1842, Seminary Trustees' report to the Board of County Commissioners as below:

Receipts, $3,145.02; expenditures, $2,857.82; balance on hand, $287.20.

August 30, 1842, board ordered payment to George D. Moore, $200 for building the seminary.

The seminary opened in the spring of 1842, under the charge of Prof. James S Farris.

Mr. Farris was an acceptable teacher, and the school grew and prospered under his instruction. He remained several years, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Spencer.

Mr. Spencer continued for several years, and his successor was Prof. E. P. Cole, who retained connection for three or four years. During his administration, much was done in procuring library, apparatus, etc., for the use of the school, which, however, was all sold back to him in liquidation of debts due him as Principal of the seminary.

The school, on the whole, was flourishing and prosperous, and did excellent service in furnishing the opportunity of higher education to the youth of the county and the region.

The county seminary plan would seem, indeed, to have been a wise provision, and might well have been continued. Under the constitution of 1851, however, the county seminaries were closed, the property sold, and the avails applied to the general school fund.

During their existence very many youth were aided in their efforts after knowledge. Most who have been prominent since that time, who were then in their youth, attended the seminary more or less.

Schools were kept for awhile in the building by private enterprise, but it was finally sold by the Trustees and employed as a woolen factory by the Carter Brothers, and afterward by another as a wagon shop.

The instructions given in that institution were of a kind of which those who gave them had no need to be ashamed. Modern educators appear to imagine that before them was nothing, and after them shall be--what? And echo answers, What? Yet it is nevertheless true that the methods practiced and the results obtained by the gentlemen who presided over the labors of that seminary in those early years were good enough even for an age so fastidious and boastful as the present.

One instance must be given to show that the teachers in Winchester Seminary knew how to perform thorough work, and to make the pupils do the same.

It was the custom in that school--and not by any means a bad one, either—to have classes examined separately, and whenever any class might chance to be ready, and then to call upon a teacher of the region to conduct the examination. An arithmetic class was ready, and a neighboring Professor was summoned to the work of finding out how much that particular group of youngsters knew about "figures." The method of examination was this:

The subject of arithmetic, as found in "Ray's Third Part," was divided into topics. Each topic was presented under subheads, adapted to bring out fully and clearly its true nature, and the mutual relation of each to all the rest.

Slips of paper were prepared, each containing the matters belonging to a distinct topic. The class was numbered, and the Professor, knowing no pupil in the class, assigned to them by number the topics, simply by chance. Each pupil took his topic, and, with no opportunity for preparation by text-book or otherwise, going to the board, put the needful work thereupon, and, when his time came, explained, in a clear and connected manner, the whole subject assigned him (or her, since several of the class were females). No questions were asked; none were needed. The examiner merely sat and listened. In fact, the subjects were presented so clearly, so fully, so exhaustively, that, as the Professor sat gazing on their work, and hearing their recitations and explanations, the lines of Goldsmith, adapted, might be applied:

> And still he gazed, as still the wonder grew,
> How that bright class had mastered all they knew.

He had witnessed and conducted many examinations before, as he has done many since, and some that were by no means poor nor unworthy; yet he is, in candor, obliged to declare, that, for completeness, for thoroughness, for clearness and uniformity of knowledge, for absence of failure, for lack even of hesitation on the part of the pupils concerned, for excellence in general and in particular, that performance stands unrivaled within his knowledge. Some dozen pupils were in the class, but not a poor one among them all. Half-grown boys and timid girls alike stood the test, and went through their work calmly, smilingly and triumphantly. The author would be glad to record the names of the members of that class as a slight token of admiration for their instructor and themselves, as he feels sure that a group who, in boyhood and youth, could pass so heroically such an examination as that to which they, on that eventful day, submitted themselves, could not fail, in the coming years, to be otherwise than "men and women of mark" in the life struggle into which they were so soon compelled to plunge. But the examiner knew not then whom he was examining, nor does he know to this day. All honor to the faithful, earnest, enthusiastic, laborious, successful instructors of that olden time. By the Great Teacher it was said, thousands of years ago, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and well and confidently may the educators of "auld lang syne" appeal to the apparent, unquestionable results of their laborious energy in triumphant vindication of their faithfulness, and of their wisdom and their practical skill as well, in the department of instruction.

UNION LITERARY INSTITUTE.

After some years of pioneer school work, a new aid to education arose in the county in the shape of the Union Literary Institute, near Spartansburg, and literally "in the woods." There was the green stump of a huge oak, four feet through, not ten feet from the school-room door; and the immense tree trunk lay there, prostrate, just as it fell, with its huge body for the children to run on, and to play over and across. And the boarding house stood above several green stumps, whose trunks had been removed to make room for the house.

Prof. Tucker, its first Principal, and his goods, had been brought from Central Ohio, 160 miles, in big open wagons, by two teamsters from Wayne County, Ind., who went clear through by land to bring the young Professor, his wife and their infant child, and his few household goods, all lonely and solitary, into the Indiana woods; and to that hewed-log schoolhouse in the forest, and to the boarding house, made of timbers cut and hewed wholly from the green woods, with home-shaved shingles and studding split, like rails, from a tree, with rafters and sleepers and joists all hewed from logs, made ready with the broad-ax, the Hoosier and the Buckeye lads and lasses began to come; and, as years rolled, they came still more and more, and, during eight years and more, nearly five hundred persons from many counties and several States were at some time members of the institute.

And, as those days come up in memory, and the picture of those old-time scenes is renewed, the question presses, Why did those young men and maidens flock into that boarding house, working for their daily food, and living almost literally on bread and water at that? And the more one thinks, the more the wonder grows. Why did they come? But come they did, and for eight long, but happy and fruitful, years, did the work of that school go on, under the shadow of the wilderness, till, from sheer exhaustion, the Professor gave up his task, and pushed still farther west upon the untrodden prairie, feeling that not for the best farm in the West would he repeat the labors of those eight years, since he felt literally worn out. And well he might be. For months his days were spent thus: One recitation at home before breakfast; at 7 A. M., algebra and geometry before school; at 8 A. M., school began, and classes recited solid, without intermission, till 12 or 12:30; school 1 P. M., and recitations solid again till 6 P. M., sometimes two at once; and then at home, through the evening, till 9 P. M., classes in his own room, making fully twelve hours of solid teaching every day. This labor went on day after day and night after night for months and months. Not seldom would two classes come forward at once, and both would be put through their "paces" at the same time. It was once said of him by a friend that he could hear three classes, explain a problem in algebra and read the newspaper all at the same time. This, of course, was a terrible exaggeration, but the labor undergone during some of those years in that forest college was "fearful." These lines are written to-day not in the least by way of boasting, but simply to give the present generation some faint idea of the way in which were laid, in days gone by, the foundations of knowledge and wisdom in the Randolph woods. But the years fled apace, and the last day came, and the farewell word was spoken, and that dear old spot was left to the care of other men; and those pioneer days are gone, and cabins and hewed-log buildings are used as schoolhouses no more. And the teacher of to-day may be glad that it is so, yet he may beware not to despise those low and humble beginnings, for truly, unless those old things had been in those years long ago, when this whole region was a wilderness, the present happy and better times could never have come to pass. The change, indeed, is wondrous; from a rude log cabin, with rough puncheon floor and split-pole seats, with greased-paper cracks for light, puncheon desks against the wall, and huge fire-places, with heaps of wood piled on, sled length, and roaring in full blaze on the hearth, and $7 a month, to the comforts and even luxuries of to-day, with the princely wages that now prevail. Forty years ago, it was no uncommon thing for a teacher to go to his school-room by sun-up, and to begin to teach, even at that early hour, those who were already in waiting to take up the labors of the day. Eight hours were the regular and expected time, and that whole time had to be spent, and not seldom, ten. and even twelve hours were put in each day in the work of the school-room.

And all this for the mere pittance that now would hardly suffice to pay a boy to watch a gap in the fence!

But the question remains still unanswered—Why did those students in those old times flock to that hewed-log schoolhouse in the Indiana woods?

The answer, however, is easy. A fountain of knowledge had been opened in the wilderness, and these young people were thirsting after wisdom, and they came to slake that burning thirst.

They were determined to rise, and they pressed eagerly forward to seize the means put into their hands for that purpose.

Ah! to teach in those by-gone times was a pleasure, rather than a burden.

So anxious, so eager, so earnest were they all, that the instructor could wish the day to be forty hours long, that he might have time enough to teach his longing, hungry pupils all they desired to learn.

No urging heedless dunces, no pushing, no forcing, were needed. The eager students, hungry for knowledge, had to be held back, to be restrained, lest they should study themselves to death.

One feature of this institution, unique for those times, was that no distinction was made for race nor color nor sex. Black and red and yellow and white, male and female, have from the very beginning, even to the present hour, been welcomed without distinction to its advantages.

Established by the munificence, chiefly, of some Anti-slavery Friends, and managed by a board chosen from several religious denominations, and of both colors, race prejudice and class favoritism have been utterly banished from its walls. Even the distinction of sex, on which is founded, throughout the land, so widely varying systems and methods of training, made no difference here. Whatever a boy had to do, that a girl had to do. And the same practice the same instructor has maintained through more than forty years of his life, spent in the business of teaching. His motto was and is, "Give to each and all the best possible chance, and let each make the most and highest that he can."

And times have changed, also, for the "nigger college." In place of the hewed-log house, built among the green stumps, now stands a comfortable, sightly brick edifice, that, for five and twenty years, has opened its doors, with no warmer nor more kindly welcome, indeed, than did its predecessor in previous years, yet gladly and freely, to receive the youth of all colors and conditions, both from near and from far, inviting them, without prejudice and without distinction, to partake, without money and without price, of all the riches of knowledge that it has to offer.

Prof. Tucker left the institution in 1854, returning, however, in 1873 and remaining till 1879. After being under the management of various instructors—Messrs. Parker, Housh, Bagby, Smothers and others—the school was for a time mostly intermitted, and the chief part of the landed estate sold, the proceeds being vested in a fund, the income of which has been and is to be expended in maintaining the school. Some of the land sold has come back into possession of the institution, and they own at the present time forty acres, with the schoolhouse, teacher's dwelling and a farm residence.

The Trustees of the institution originally were Daniel Hill, John H. Bond, John Randle, John Clemens and Nathan Thomas, and besides these William Beard, William Peacock, Richard Robbins, William H. McKown, Reuben Goens, Ebenezer Tucker, Jesse Okey.

The school has a charter from the State of Indiana, vesting the property in five Trustees. The constitution of the company provides for a board of thirteen Directors, five of who are them five Trustees, and eight more are chosen by the donors to the institution, four annually, to hold for two years, and till their successors are elected and qualified.

Three of the first board are dead—Nathan Thomas, John Clemens, John Randle—the last of whom died only a month ago. Of the others, William Beard and Richard Robbins are dead. Ebenezer Tucker and William Peacock resigned their positions June, 1881. Daniel Hill, John H. Bond and John Randle, of the first Board of Trustees, resigned after having discharged the duties of their positions nearly or quite thirty years.

Of the Board of Directors, David Willcutts was a prominent member for about thirty years, much of the time being President of the Board, and very active in the care of the concerns of the school.

The present Trustees are William H. McKown, Reuben Goens and Jesse Okey, there being a vacancy of two Trustees, caused by the resignation of Ebenezer Tucker and William Peacock.

The Directors are Reuben Goens, Jesse Okey, Richard Goens, Jackson Okey, Zebedee Bass, William McKown, Levi Linsey, Andrew J. Clemens, Elijah P. Clemens.

One of the fundamental principles of the school is that there shall be no distinction in its management, or advantages on account of color, rank or wealth; and also, that the principles of the Bible as against slavery and war shall always be maintained therein, and that no person shall hold an official position in connection with the institution who does not believe in the Scriptures.

The Treasurers of the institution have been Nathan Thomas, James Moorman, Joel Parker, William Peacock, John Henley, Ebenezer Tucker and William H. McKown, the last-named being the present incumbent.

Much good has been accomplished by the institution through its slender means during the years that are past, and it is to be hoped that a still brighter future is in store for it in the time to come.

NORMAL SCHOOLS.

A few years ago, Superintendent Lesley, in conjunction with competent assistants, ventured upon the experiment of conducting a normal school for Randolph County at Winchester. The next year, one was held for six weeks at Union City, and the next year, two were in progress in that thriving town at the same time—one on the Indiana side and one on the Ohio side.

To establish and maintain a permanent normal school requires a strong effort, a persistent purpose and a numerous constituency. Union City, for a brief period, undertook to accomplish such a work.

The attempt was somewhat heroic, and, though the movement could hardly have proved a lasting success, yet, for the time, much good resulted—if not in pecuniary compensation to the teachers employed yet, to the pupils who availed themselves of the opportunity afforded.

There have been three normal schools in Union City—two in Indiana and one in Ohio.

The first (in Indiana) was somewhat fully attended, having several teachers.

The second (in Indiana) was but small, with three teachers.

The third (in Ohio) had a fair attendance, with three teachers.

Since that time, no normal for Union City has been attempted, but those who would be normalites at home have been left to pursue the even tenor of their way to their respective county seats, to the classic halls of Winchester or Greenville, where the genial, wide-awake Butler on the one hand, or the sedate and sober minded Martz on the other, will smooth their pathway up the rugged steeps of the hill of science.

Since that time, in each successive season (except 1881), normal schools have been carried on at Winchester for the present and prospective teachers of Randolph County, with commendable energy and thoroughness, and with reasonable success. Some of the teachers have been Profs. Butler, Ault, Bosworth, Marsh, Branson and Bowers, Superintendent Lesley, and perhaps others. The pupils have pursued their studies in these schools with great eagerness and with gratifying success. One thing is probably true, that, while these summer schools may do for those who are simply preparing to teach, yet, for such as have already spent seven or eight months during the year in the arduous labors of the school-room, attendance upon the normal during six long, hot and weary weeks more will be found to be virtual suicide.

If clergymen and professional men need the proverbial summer vacation, much more do teachers, whose labors are far more exhaustive than are those of either of the other classes mentioned. "Let the teachers rest" is the cry of outraged nature. Let the people and the teachers hear and heed the cry.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTES, ETC.

Most persons suppose that institutes are a thing of modern days alone, and they will perhaps be surprised to be told that, thirty years gone by, under the leadership of Prof. E. P. Cole, and with the co-operation of other instructors of that time, enthusiastic and successful institutes were held, not, indeed, as a matter of legal duty, but as a voluntary method of acquaintance and improvement.

Those who were then young, now are old, and most, perhaps all, who took part in those institutes, have left the profession, and many of them doubtless have been called from earthly labor to reward.

These meetings were maintained for several years, but the removal of some of the parties, and other things combined, caused their cessation for a time.

In 1865, the school law of Indiana was remodeled, making provision, among other things, for the holding of a county institute, requiring the closing of the schools during its sessions, and appropriating a limited amount of money from the funds of the county toward its support.

In June, 1865, Pleasant Hiatt was appointed County School Examiner, and, during his term, held one institute. Resigning in 1866, he was succeeded by Rev. John G. Brice, who had the position till the summer of 1871, but held no institute. In August of the same year, Andrew J. Stakebake was appointed to the office of County Examiner, and he revived the institutes, holding one each year of his term.

In 1873, the office of County Examiner was changed to that of County Superintendent, and in June of that year, Charles W. Paris was chosen Superintendent of Education. He continued the holding of institutes, as also he fulfilled the requirements of the school law concerning township institutes, then first made obligatory by the statute. Both township and county institutes have been maintained to the present time. Those in the townships are held monthly during the winter season, and now and then in the summer. The county institute has been in August or September, except one or two at the Christmas Holidays. They have been generally well attended, the number of members sometimes rising to nearly two hundred.

Numerous teachers at home and from abroad have assisted in giving instruction at the institutes, and many lectures have been delivered, to the satisfaction and delight of those who attended them. Prominent among these instructors and lecturers who have officiated from time to time have been Profs. Eli F. and George B. Brown, George W. Hoss, Bell, Olcott, Daniel Hough, Harrison, Butler, Bosworth, Ault, Lesley, Marsh, Branson, Tucker, etc. The intelligence and efficiency of the corps of teachers in the county have been greatly increased during the past few years and the members of the profession show a commendable determination to improve their opportunities to the utmost, and perform the best possible service to the public and to the youth placed under their care.

COUNTY INSTITUTE, 1881.

A county institute was held in August, 1881, under the direction of Daniel Lesley, County Superintendent, at the high school building in Winchester, during five days. The instruction was given by Prof. Adams, Principal of Danville Normal Institution, and Mrs. Emma S. McCrae, long High School Principal at Muncie, Ind. Both these persons are lively and interesting in their deportment and their methods, and the members were both pleased and profited thereby. The attendance was good, the numbers of teachers present more or less during the week being about one hundred and sixty.

COUNTY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

This was formed in March, 1880, with the intention of holding quarterly meetings for consultation and discussion, and the presentation of essays and addresses upon educational topics. Meetings were held during 1880, but they have been for some months omitted. In fact, county and township institutes, normal schools, etc., take so much time and scholastic labor that the experiment of an additional educational enterprise may well be considered of doubtful practicability.

FUNDS.

The people of this country have, from early times, made wonderfully munificent provisions for the education of the youth. And especially the New England colonies were, in the first ages of settlement, foremost in educating all their children, and wherever New England emigration and influence have gone, their power has been uniformly employed to foster and permanently to establish abundant means of mental and moral culture to the people at large.

But the intelligent and pious all over the land have, from the earliest times, been forward to spread knowledge and plant the foundations of learning over the country.

The provisions of the national and State governments have been abundant and remarkable.

First, the Congress of the Confederation, May 20, 1785, in an act for the disposal of the public lands, provided as follows:

There shall be reserved the Lot No. 16 of every township for the maintenance of public schools within the said township; also, one-third part of all gold, silver, lead and copper mines, to be sold or otherwise disposed of, as Congress may direct.

The famous "Ordinance of 1787" declares: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

April 9, 1816, in the act for the admission of Indiana, it was required that the people of the Territory should ratify and perpetuate the appropriation of Section No. 16 to the use of schools, which they did June 29, 1816.

In the original constitution of the State, framed in 1816, a general system of education is authorized and required. Legislation for this purpose began with the first Legislative Assembly. An act was passed at the first session, approved December 14, 1816, for leasing and improving the school lands.

The original school law of Indiana was approved January 31, 1824, incorporating Congressional townships and providing for the establishment of schools therein.

The system at first was crude, and the funds were yet to be obtained, and their source was but scanty, still a beginning was made. The fund began to be, and such has been its growth and continual increase that, in 1878, the school fund of Indiana stood at the amazing sum of $8,974,555.55, and in 1880, probably $9,500,000.

The items making up the fund may be stated as follows:

1. Congressional township fund, $2,453,106.73.

2. Saline fund, arising from the sale of land containing salt springs, $85,000.

3. Surplus revenue fund, established February 6, 1837, $573,502.96. This sum is liable to be called back by the National Government, but, during forty-five years, the fund has never been disturbed.

4. Bank tax fund, upon the old State Bank, established in 1834, $80,000.

5. Sinking fund, remaining to the State from the old State Bank, $4,767,805.39.

6. Fines, forfeitures and escheats, yielding a considerable amount.

Thus wisely and wonderfully well has the commonwealth of Indiana built upon the foundations planted by the nation, and in such a princely manner have the needs of the people for intelligence been supplied

The above has reference to the permanent State fund alone, only the income of which can ever be used, and that for no purpose except the payment of tuition.

The purchase of sites, the erection and furnishing of schoolhouses, the contingent expenses of the schools, etc., are provided for by a special tax, and the tuition fund is increased to an amount sufficient for its purpose in the same way.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES, 1880, 1881.

DISTRICTS.	TUITION.			SPECIAL REVENUE.
	Receipts.	Disbursements.	Balance on Hand.	Receipts.	Disbursements.	Balance on Hand.
White River	$8071	$5031	$3040	$2879	$1446	$1433
Washington	6150	3445	2205	2063	1563	500
Greensfork	4829	2700	2129	1583	687	896
Stony Creek	3111	1869	1242	1571	1020	551
Nettle Creek	3362	2345	1017	1443	651	792
West River	3322	1576	1746	1467	213	1254
Green	2716	1631	1085	1391	1009	382
Ward	3562	2052	1510	1528	568	960
Jackson	3962	2070	1892	1124	521	603
Wayne	4923	2565	2358	4270	577	3693
Monroe	6842	2080	4762	2938	2938	o'erdr'n
Franklin	1841	1381	460	1149	259	890
Winchester	8713	4621	4092	9865	1376	8489
Ridgeville	2083	1018	1065	483	335	148
Farmland	1437	960	477	668	393	275
Huntsville	471	265	206	87	46	41
Union City	7921	4365	3556	4053	2517	1536
Totals	$73316	$40474	$32842	$38562	$16119	$22443

The tuition fund and the special revenue form a grand total of: Receipts, $111,878; disbursements, $56,593; balance on hand, $55,285.

Thus has the State provided, and the townships, cities and towns piled up the taxes mountain high, that the children and youth of the commonwealth may enjoy the advantages of intellectual development. Such princely sums expended ought to produce immense results—much greater, in fact, than have ever yet been accomplished.

SCHOOLS OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.

There are now in Randolph County fifty-one brick, eighty-four frame and no log schoolhouses, with an estimated value of $128,245. Ten of these are expensive edifices, erected with an outlay of from $4,000 to more than $20,000 each, as follows:

Winchester—Two houses, both brick; the first, built in 1867, cost $22,000, and containing six rooms; the second, in 1879, and containing four rooms.

Union City (Ind.)—Two houses; one, brick and frame, two stories, eleven rooms; one frame, two stories, four rooms.

Farmland—One brick, two stories, four rooms, cost $12,000.

Spartansburg—One brick, two stories, three school-rooms, two recitation rooms, cost $7,000, with land, furniture, fencing, etc.

Lynn—Brick, two stories, two rooms, cost $4,500.

Edgewood (colored)—Brick, two stories, two school-rooms, two recitation-rooms, cost $1,500.

Morristown—One, brick, two stories, cost $5,000 (estimated).

Saratoga—One, brick, two stories, two rooms, $3,000 (estimated).

Arba has a one-story brick with two rooms.

Pinhook (Greensfork No. 1) has a one-story brick with two rooms.

The wages in all amount to about $40,474, and other expenditures to $16,119.

The number of houses in each township, outside the towns (and the towns), is as follows:

Jackson, 9; Ward, 12; Franklin, 6; Green, 8; Monroe, 9; White River, 21; Wayne, 10; Greensfork, 11; Washington, 16; West River, 11; Nettle Creek, 10; Stony Creek, 9; Winchester, 2; Union City, 2; Farmland, 1; Ridgeville, 1; Huntsville, 1.

NUMBER OF GRADED SCHOOLS.

Winchester—Two buildings, nine rooms, eleven teachers.
Union City—Two buildings, ten rooms, eleven teachers.
Farmland—One building, three rooms, three teachers.
Ridgeville—One building, four (college) rooms, four teachers.
Huntsville—One building. one room, one teacher.
Spartansburg—One building, three rooms, three teachers.
Arba—One building, two rooms, two teachers.
Pinhook—One building, two rooms, two teachers.
Edgewood—One building, two rooms, two teachers.
Lynn—One building, two rooms, two teachers.
Morristown—One building, two rooms, two teachers.

Schools are maintained for a length of time varying from four to nine months during the year, at a cost from the public funds of from $200 to $4,500 per year for tuition, with other expenses amounting to from $46 to $2,600. The salary of the Superintendent at Winchester and Union City is paid wholly or partly from the special revenue funds. The Winchester schools cost per year of eight months—tuition, $4,621; expenses, $1,376. The Union City schools cost, per year of nine months—tuition, $4,365; expenses, $2,517.

In these school buildings are taught, throughout the county about one hundred and sixty-seven separate schools (rooms).

During 1880–81, 211 teachers were employed—129 males and 82 females.

The number of teachers holding certificates who had been licensed by the Randolph Superintendent was about two hundred and forty.

The teachers have certificates of from six months to two years, a goodly number having been renewed after obtaining two two-year certificates, while several hold licenses from the State Board. The larger number have been educated within the county, in the high schools and the county normals, though an increasingly large proportion have attended the normal schools outside the county—Lebanon, Valparaiso, Danville, Terre Haute, and perhaps other places.

In most of the schools, all the legal branches are taught, while in many of them other studies also are pursued, as algebra, philosophy, book-keeping, drawing, etc., and in the town high schools, a regular and more extensive course of study is laid down and followed, with a good degree of exactness; and each year, some persons graduate, and receive diplomas certifying to that interesting and important fact. A larger number undertake portions of the course, dropping out here and there, not more than 10 per cent ever reaching the high school, and not more than 1 to 2 per cent gaining the summit of school ambition—graduation.

A sadly large proportion accomplish only a very ordinary knowledge of the common branches, and only a very, very few out of the whole number find themselves, on leaving school, equipped in any good degree with the wherewithal for a successful entry upon a business life career. This is a state of things which is not pleasing to contemplate, and the friends and promoters of education ought to bestir themselves to find, if possible, a sure and speedy remedy therefor.

A training more practical and a course occupying a shorter time should be furnished, that the great mass who can attend during a number of years much less than the whole, may be educated therein.

Many object to carrying the public school so far, but certainly poor persons, those who pay small taxes, or none at all, should never even dream of finding fault with the policy, since, at the cost of a few cents or a dollar, or even at no cost, they have placed within their reach the means of a reasonably thorough and somewhat extensive education. Country school-teaching will long, and possibly always, be a temporary occupation, rather than a settled business, peculiarly adapted, indeed, to those who are "preparing" for an intellectual life pursuit. It is, in truth, a Godsend to them, and, on the whole, right well and nobly do they perform the tasks allotted to them. There exists among the great body of our teachers an earnest and a wholesome, albeit a friendly, rivalry and ambition each to outdo the other in excellence and success in their sphere of action. Much time and money are spent by teachers in attending normal institutes, and normal schools, both at home and abroad, in maintaining township and county institutes, in reading educational journals, etc., etc., to the end that they may be able to rise high in the scale as educators, and to accomplish thorough and successful work. And, indeed, the spirit of ambition and devotion is greatly necessary, since more money is spent upon this one thing than upon any other single public interest. The education of youth is, perhaps, the grandest public enterprise, and it well deserves the supreme attention paid to it, and the immense outlay of labor and treasure bestowed thereupon.

The educators and the public are studying with increasing earnestness how to purify, strengthen and perfect our magnificent, costly and somewhat efficient, yet still greatly defective, system of public schools, and to bring to pass that most desirable result—complete, thorough and most effective methods of public and private instruction, coupled also with the most economical outlay practicable of public funds, and especially how to secure to a far larger number a much greater and more various range of instruction during a time more suitable to their needs.

From the county Manual for 1880, we take the following:

Daniel Lesley, County Superintendent. Trustees—Ira Tripp, White River; Joel Mills, Washington; John F. Middleton, Greensfork; William T. Davis, Stony Creek; John C. Clevinger, Nettle Creek; Levi Johnson, West River; Luther L. Moorman, Green; John B. Sipe, Ward; Peter Poorman, Jackson; Robert B. McKee, Wayne; Adam Slonaker, Monroe; Isaac N. Stratton, Franklin.

CORPORATION TRUSTEES.

Winchester—A. R. Hiatt. President; William Moore, Secretary; J. L. Stakebake, Treasurer.

Union City—W. A. Wiley, President; C. S. Hook, Secretary; William Harris, Treasurer.

Ridgeville—M. L. Sumption, H. T. Kitselman, A. H. Farquhar.

Farmland—Peter O. Hewitt, J. H. Merridith, W. B. Carter.

The County Board of Education is made up of the County Superintendent, the Township Trustees and the Presidents of the City School Boards.

In the Manual are given also (1) rules for gradation and promotion; (2) township institutes; (2) course of study; (3) plan for grading licenses and wages; (4) powers and duties of school districts, etc.; (5) text-books; (6) names of licensed teachers.

The text-books are chiefly, though not entirely, those issued by the eclectic publishers. The number of teachers holding licenses during the summer of 1880 was 242.

The grades are six in number based mainly upon the readers, the Fifth Reader being used in the last two grades.

Grammar (proper) extends from the third grade through the sixth grade. Geography goes through the third, fourth and fifth. Arithmetic begins in the second, and is continued through the sixth grade. History is assigned to the fifth and sixth, and physiology to the sixth; reading, spelling and writing, through the whole course.

Attempts are being made, with more or less success, to regulate the country-school work by a uniform system of gradation. An effort is put forth, also, to systemize the township institute work so as to make them useful for the purposes intended by the law requiring them. As to gadation of country schools, peculiar and somewhat serious obstacles lie in the way, which may, perhaps, be at least partially overcome.

We append below a brief account of some of the more important schools of the county.

STATISTICS.

Arba Graded School.—The Arba building has two rooms, and for some eight years the school has had two teachers during the winter, though some of the time the number of pupils hardly justified the outlay. Some of the teachers have been Messrs. Bond, Canada, Daly, Brown, Nichols, Glunt, with Mrs. Bond, Miss Green, Miss Teagle, etc., primary teachers. The school is under the authority of the Township Trustee.

Edgewood (Colored).—The school building belongs not to the township, but to the Union Literary Institute, a chartered institution of thirty-six years' standing. It has two rooms and two teachers, one only of whom is employed by the public funds. The pupils, however, have all the advantages of the double graded school maintained throughout the year, and the course of instruction has been thorough and extensive. A detailed account of the Union Literary Institute may be found elsewhere in this work.

Farmland.—The town was incorporated for school purposes in 1876. The first School Trustees were J. S. Davis, W. W. Fowler, L. A. Gable, and all the trustees have been these: J. S. Davis, W. W. Fowler, L. A. Gable, J. H. Merridith, P. O. Hewitt, H. F. Wood. The present school building was erected about 1868 by the Township Trustee, at an estimated cost of $12,000, running the township heavily in debt, which burden of debt has remained substantially till the present time, though indeed somewhat reduced in amount. When the town became incorporated for schools, the schoolhouse continued the property of the township, and it is so still, proving a "bone of contention" between township and village from year to year. The town school has been held, however, in the large building in the village, the Town Trustees paying a small rent to the township for the use of the house. The grading of the school has been carried on for several years, as far back at least as 1869. From that year, a Principal has been empoyed with several assistants. Those Principals have been Lee Ault, 1869–72; C. W. Paris, 1873; Mr. Atkinson, 1874–75; W. L. Lloyd, 1876; M. Bosworth, 1877–78; J. M. Branson, 1879; J. V. Stewart, 1880; John Hancock, 1881. There are three grades and three teachers employed. The statistics for 1880–81 are given below:

Primary—Enrollment, 78; average monthly, 49; average daily, 37; per cent of attendance, 75.

Intermediate—Enrollment, 63; average monthly, 42; average daily, 35; per cent of attendance, 84.

High—Enrollment, 49; average monthly, 36.7; average daily, 30; per cent of attendance, 82.

Total—Enrollment, 190; average monthly, 128; average daily, 102; per cent of attendance, 82.

Boys, 94; girls, 96. Total, 190.

The teachers for 1880–81 were: Principal, J. V. Stewart; Intermediate, Miss Mayne Wasson; Primary, Miss Flora Deal.

Green Township.—Eight schoolhouses, seven brick. The schools hold six months; wages, $1.25 to $2.50. The teachers for 1880 have been: No. 1, Lola Webb; No. 2, Leroy Dearmond; No. 3, Allen Holly, Paulina Green; No. 4, Charles M. Hubbard; No. 5, Jacob Life: No. 6, Edward E. Gunkle, Millie Blakely; No. 7, David Graham; No. 8, C. A. Rickards. The Trustees have been Silas T. Gordon, Antony Jarnagin, James McProud, Joseph Devoss, Luther Moorman.

Huntsville.—The brave little village of Huntsville has, for some reason not appreciable by the great outside world, made herself to be a "school corporation;" yet she has only one schoolhouse, one room in that building and one teacher performing all the teaching in that ambitious "burg." Nevertheless, to choose that teacher and to manage that school, three Town Trustees have to be chosen, and they have to choose three other citizens, who must in turn choose the teacher, and do "all and sundry" things needful in and about that school building and school aforesaid, that education may thrive and knowledge keep even pace with the increase of population in the town of Huntsville. Why so much machinery must be set and kept in motion to grind so small a grist "all by itself" remains a mystery. Still, the town of Huntsville sticks bravely to its school corporation, pays its own school taxes and has the luxury of a school independent of the "whole round world."

Morristown.—The school building was erected by the Township Trustee for the village. It is a good substantial structure, built in 1875, having two stories and two rooms. Jonathan L. Miller has been Principal for two years, and is engaged, also, for the current year, 1881–82. J. F. Deal was primary teacher for the past year, and is employed for the current year also. Number of pupils for 1880–81, 130; High School, 55; Primary, 75.

Lynn Graded School.—A commodious school building with two rooms was erected for the town of Lynn in about 1874, by the Township Trustee, at a cost of about $4,000. A graded school has been maintained from that time to the present. The Principals have been Messrs. Bond, Lesley, Marsh, Nichols.

The school is still under the control of the Township Trustee, the town not being large enough to warrant an act of incorporation for school purposes, or, at least, the village of Lynn not being so eager to assume the responsibility of separate and independent school existence.

Pin Hook Graded School, No. 1.—District No. 1, Greensfork Township, has had two teachers, most of the time, for eight years, and, for a part of the time, two rooms. Some of the instructors have been Misses Jennie Hill, Rich, Cammack, Messrs. Nichols, Brown, Ruby and others. Their schoolhouse is a fine substantial one-story brick, with two rooms. The school, however, of late is hardly large enough to justify a double school.

Ridgeville.—The schoolhouse at Ridgeville is an old frame building, with one room, and capable of accommodating only a single teacher. However, Ridgeville College furnishes rooms additional for three teachers besides, so that the Ridgeville "younkers" have the honor, mostly, of "entering college" in their "childhood days."

RIDGEVILLE COLLEGE, RIDGEVILLE, RANDOLPH COUNTY, INDIANA.

Ridgeville College.—Was founded by the Free-Will Baptists in 1867. Its first President was Rev. J. L. Collier. The present President is Rev. S. D. Bates, A. M. It has struggled with difficulties from the outset. The number of its students has been small; its faculty, though men and women of talent and energy, were well sustained on fair salaries till the hard times following 1873 occurred, when the income was not sufficient to pay the salaries, at which time the faculty were put upon the income to prevent increased indebtedness, as did many of the colleges of the West. A few friends, however, have clung to the institution in every struggle, and its prospects appear to be brightening. The number of its graduates has thus far been very small, as follows: Elisha Wood, John H. Sheets, B. Frank Boyer, 1876; Josephine Sumption, Elias Boltz, 1878; Alexander Wood, 1879; William J. Houck, Gabriel A. Jacobs, David M. Odle, 1880. The following resume of its affairs is condensed from its catalogue for 1880–81:

Students—Seniors, four; Juniors, three; Sophomores, three; Freshmen, seventeen; Preparatory seventy-nine; music, twenty-eight. Ladies, sixty-one; gentlemen, seventy-six.

Trustees (term expires 1881)—Rev. D. A. Tucker, Milhousen; W. F. Studabaker, W. T. Pettyjohn, David S. Harker, Ridgeville; Moorman Way, Esq., Winchester; James Hanlin, Portland; P. W. Holverstott, Marion, Ohio; Robert H. Sumption, Ridgeville. Term expires 1882: Rev. S. D. Bates, Marion, Ohio; E. C. Clough, Jordan; Dr. C. S. Arthur, Portland; Arthur McKew, Ridgeville; Rev. B. F. Zell, La Rue, Ohio; Samuel Hanlin, Portland; Dr. J. A. Henning, Redkey; Norman Lynch, Ridgeville. Term ends 1883: Rev. Asa Pierce, Dr. Allen H. Farquhar, Ridgeville; Richard Matchet, Jordan; Milton R. Hiatt, J. Collins, Ridgeville; Abram Kitchen, Springfield, Ohio; A. J. Metsner, Portland; Joseph D. Marot, Ridgeville.

The officers of the board are as follows: Rev. S. D. Bates, Chairman; W. T. Pettyjohn, Auditor; Elias Boltz, B. S., Librarian; M. R. Hiatt, Secretary; R. H. Sumption, Treasurer.

The Executive Committee are composed of the following gentlemen: Dr. A. H. Farquhar, Arthur McKew, R. H. Sumption, Milton R. Hiatt, Rev. Asa Pierce.

Faculty: Rev. S. D. Bates, A. M., President, Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy; Rev. Thomas Harrison, A. M., Professor of Latin and Greek; Elias Boltz, B. S., Professor of Mathematics and German; Miss Josephine Sumption, B. S., Preceptress and teacher of French; —— ——, Professor of Natural Science; I. N. Nason, A. M., Adjunct Professor of Latin and Greek and teacher of instrumental music; R. Fricke, teacher of instrumental music.

Rev. J. L. Collier, the first President, filled the position five years with energy and efficiency. The combined labor of superintending the erection of the college building, teaching and preaching at the same time, seriously impaired his health, and he resigned his position, much to the regret of his many friends. When his successor, Rev. S. D. Bates, assumed the responsibilities of his office, in 1872, there were not quite $1,000 raised toward the endowment of the institution. He has since that time carried it up to $30,000, besides raising several thousand dollars toward the completion of the building, the increase of the library, apparatus, etc., etc.

While he has not engaged in teaching, and all the income was needed to remunerate those who were giving instruction, he has not received a dollar from the college treasury for all the labor he has performed for the endowment of the school, but has met his expenses by labors in other directions. It will be of historical interest to state that he instructed the late lamented President, J. A. Garfield, the winter after he was on the Ohio Canal, and persuaded him to attend a seminary with him two years, rather than sail on Lake Erie. Mr. Garfield afterward stated that this was the turning point in his life, and that he was more indebted to Mr. Bates than all other men.

The college is located at Ridgeville, a town at the crossing of the Pan Handle & Grand Rapids Railroad. The building is a three-story edifice, 108x80 feet, with eleven commodious rooms, besides cellar, and chapel and halls on the second, third and fourth floors, standing on an elevated campus of about five acres, planted with shade trees.

The number of students for the current year is stated to be double that of the former year, and the prospect seems encouraging. Four courses of instruction are presented — Classical, Scientific, English and Normal.

The expenses are as follows: Tuition, $6 to $10 per term of twelve weeks; instrumental music, $10 for twenty-four lessons; incidentals, $1 per term.

Ridgeville is a thriving, quiet, moral village, free from saloons and other places of dissipation, and with good religious advantages.

Saratoga (Ward Township).—See Ward Township Schools.

Spartansburg Graded School.—In 1875, the public school building was completed, with three rooms, at a cost of about $7,000. Since that time, a graded school has been maintained, with from two to three teachers. The Principals have been as follows: Messrs. Bond, Tucker, Hahn, Bond and Polly. The public school has been mostly six months. The number of pupils enrolled varies from seventy-five to one hundred and thirty. Several times a select school has been taught in the summer. Some of the subordinate teachers have been Miss Jennie Hill, Mrs. McCoy, Emizette Wiggs, James Humphrey, Miss Penlan. The Spartanburg school edifice is well situated, the location being a beautiful knoll just south of town, overlooking a delightful valley and presenting a picturesque view of cutivated field and shady woods. Several from beyond the vicinity have, each year, availed themselves of the advantages of the school.

Union City.—The first school was taught by Miss Mary Ensminger, in the fall of 1853. The first public school was taught by George W. Brainard, 1853–54. Next, was a school by J. T. Farson, in the "Bee Line Boarding Car," standing near the old Presbyterian Church. Next, Mr. and Mrs. Osborn taught in the little brick house on the State line, north of Mr. Dixon's. Also, Miss Anderson in a house lately occupied by Mr. E. Bunch, Columbia, north of Oak. Pinneo Case taught in White's Ware House, where Branham's restaurant now is. That ware-house, with all the books, etc., was burned in 1857. During the next two years (1857–59), N. Rowe taught in a building now owned by N. Moore, on Pearl street, and Messrs. Hitchcock and Dady, in a building opposite the former Eagle office. In 1858, a brick public schoolhouse was erected, the east part of the present main building. Mr. and Mrs. Gray taught the first school in that building, and after them, William A. Wiley, with an assistant. In the winter of 1860–61, Wright and Russell opened a select school in Paxson's Hall, and Miss Amanda Farson taught a school in 1861. In the winter of 1862–63, Levi Wright and wife taught the public school. Pupils enrolled, 108; compensation, $2 and $1.13 per day. Mr. Wright continued till 1864 (April). The statistics of the last term are as follows: High School, L. Wright, $2; Intermediate School, Simon Hedrick, $1.50; Primary School, Mrs. Wright, $1. Enrollment, 201. Teachers in the following years: 1864, Mr. Frash and three assistants; 1865, William D. Stone and three assistants; 1866, J. S. Leckbider and three assistants; 1867, Elias Loofbourrow and four assistants; 1868, Ebenezer Tucker and four assistants; 1869–70, Della Posey and four assistants; 1871, Ariston Dwinell and four assistants; 1872–73, W. B. Page and four to six assistants; 1874–78, J. C. Eagle and seven to eleven assistants; 1879, G. F. Meade and ten assistants (died in February, 1880); 1880–81, F. Treudley and ten assistants; 1881–82, F. Treudley and eleven assistants.

The following is the account of teachers in Union City schools since 1866:

1866—Principal, J. S. Leckbider, $4.50; Ella Fisher, $2; E. E. Anderson, $2; Minnie Swain, $1.

1867—Elias Loofbourrow, $3; Jennie Baldwin, $2; Joanna Knapp, $2; Rebecca Wharton, $2; Mattie Wharry, $2.

1868—Ebenezer Tucker, $5.75; Mary M. Wright, $3; Miriam Grist, $2; Joanna Knapp, $2; Jennie Baldwin, $2.

1871—Principal, Ariston Dwinell. We have no account of his subordinates.

1872—Principal, W. B. Page, $5; E. P. Connor, $2.50; Olive Williamson, $2.25; Flora Rush, $2.25; Alice Parent, $2.

1873—Principal, W. B. Page, $5; M. J. Swayne, Lizzie D. Starbuck, Ella R. Ferguson, Lizzie Williamson, Jennie D. McClure, Olive Williamson, Mattie B. Powers, $2.25 each.

1874—Principal, J. C. Eagle, $1,000 a year; J. V. Stewart, $4 a day; Jennie L. French, Sallie E. George, Martha A. Wilson, Emma A. Marshall, Alice Kemp, Ruth Hutchinson, $2.50 each.

1875—Principal, J. C. Eagle, $1,100 a year; Daniel Lesley, $4.75 a day; Lizzie Meredith, H. S. Foster, $2.50 each; Cyrus Woodbury, Mrs. Willson, $2.37½ each; Mollie Banks, $2.25.

1876—Principal, J. C. Eagle, $1,100; Charles W. Paris, $4; Lizzie Meredith, H. S. Foster, $2.50 each; Cyrus Woodbury, Mollie Banks, Martha A. Willson, $2.25; A. R. Kemp, Laura Palmer, Edith Leslie, Clara S. Crane, Nettie Wiggs, $1.75 each.

1877—Principal, J. C. Eagle, $1,100 per year; Lizzie Meredith, H. S. Foster, $2.50 each; G. Reynard, M. A. Willson, $2.12½ each; Joanna Torrence, Nettie V. Wiggs, Susie Bowersox, Ella Ferguson, $2 each. [Whether there were others we do not know.]

1878—Principal, J. C. Eagle, $1,100 a year; Olive Coffeen, $3; H. S. Foster, $2.50; Ella Ferguson, M. A. Willson, $2.12½ each; G. Reynard, $2.25; Mr. Torrence, Nettie V. Wiggs, $2; Susan Bowersox, $1.75; Ella Dill, $1.50; H. R. Knauer (German and music), 30 cents per hour.

1879—Principal, Giles F. Mead, $1,000 a year; F. Treudley, $3; M. D. Ozias, M. A. Harlan, $2.50; J. C. Torrence, $2.25; Inez Bartholomew, Bell Dwinell, Susie Bowersox, Ella Ferguson, M. A. Willson, $2 each; Ella Dill, $1.50. Prof. Mead died February, 1880, and Mr. Treudley took the vacant place.

Teachers for 1880–81: Frederick Treudley, Superintendent, $1,000 a year; Mrs. M. A. Mead, High School, $540; M. A. Harlan, teacher of No. 9 and teacher of music, $720; Mrs. J. M. Knapp, No. 8, $450; Miss Aurie Hedrick, No. 7, $405; Miss May Meredith, No. 6, $360; Miss Bell Dwinell, No. 5, $360; Miss Libbie Reeves, No. 4, $360; Miss Ella Dill, No. 3, $360; Miss Ella Ferguson, No. 2, $360; Mrs. M. A. Wilson, No. 1, $450.

Enrollment for 1830: No. 1, 100; No. 2, 84; No. 3, 83; No. 4, 67; No. 5, 56; No. 6, 48; No. 7, 46; No. 8, 45; No. 9, 37; High School, 36. Total enrollment, 602; average for 1880, 388; highest monthly average, 446; lowest monthly average, 325.

The Trustees of the Union City Schools have been as follows: J.

N. Converse, Nathan Cadwallader, J. M. Jaynes, Edward Starbuck, Henry Jackson, Tilghman Tritt, David Ferguson, W. A. Wiley, C. S. Hardy, L. D. Lambert, O. C. Gordon, Allen Jaqua, H. H. Yergin, John S. Starbuck, C. S. Hook, William Harris. Present board, 1881, W. A. Wiley, C. S. Hook, William Harris.

A regular course of study has been established, requiring twelve years for its completion. Ninety-nine hundredths of the pupils in attendance never go through the prescribed course, but drop out anywhere between No. 1 and the third High School year. A few, however, do persist in the arduous chase after their diploma, and succeed in capturing it at last. The graduates are given elsewhere.

Some efforts are now being made to obtain a library for the High School, but the attainment of that desirable end is yet mainly in the future. A good beginning, however, has been made, and some fifty valuable volumes have been obtained. A praiseworthy enterprise has been inaugurated here and elsewhere to create a love for higher and purer literature, and with some success. The form the enterprise has taken has been chiefly the celebration of the birthdays of certain distinguished poets, as Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier and possibly others, by reading and reciting extracts from their works, writing essays and critiques, etc. The effect, both in this city and elsewhere, has been very good. The light of a new world of beauty and love and wisdom has dawned upon the minds of the young, and they are surprised to discover how vastly superior are Thanatopsis, Evangeline and the sweet and soft flow of the mild and gentle "Quaker Poet's" verse to the trashy dime novels, or even the blood and thunder stories or the love and murder tales of the Ledger, or the Weekly, or the Saturday Night, or any of the legion of sensational sheets that weekly spawn their noxious brood upon a gaping and astonished world.

The first schoolhouse in Union City was built in 1858, made of brick, with two stories and three rooms. The first addition was made in 1868, at a cost of $5,500, also built of brick, with two stories, two schoolrooms, two halls, a pump-room and an office. A second addition was made some years afterward, of wood, with two stories and two rooms. Another building has since been put up, made of wood, with two stories and four rooms. The main school building as now existing has the greatest amount of school room, with the smallest space of hall, entry and stairways, and withal, the most ready and convenient of access that we have ever seen. There are eight large school-rooms and an office, with only one stairway, one lower entry and one upper entry, both small. There are no halls nor passage ways properly so called. A single teacher standing at the top of the stairs can oversee almost the entire ingress and egress of the pupils of all the rooms through the entries up or down the stairway and through the outer door of the building. The course of study as at present existing may be stated in substance thus:

First Year, D Primary—Reading, charts, primer and first reader; Writing, print and script on the slate and board; Spelling, words in their lessons; Numbers, addition and subtraction, amounts not to exceed forty. Language and oral lessons.

Second Year, C Primary—Reading, second reader; Spelling, words of the lessons; Writing, slates, board and copy-books, with pencil; Numbers, fundamental operations, not above three figures, signs, Roman numerals to C; Language, short sentences, correct common errors, kinds of sentences, etc. Oral lessons.

Third Year, B Primary—Reading, third reader; Spelling, words in the lessons; Writing, Penmanship No. 1; Numbers, up to 1,000,000, subtraction, no carrying, multiplication to nines; Language, review verb, subject, predicate, make sentences. Oral lessons.

Fourth Year, A Primary—Reading, fourth reader; Spelling, McGuffey's Speller to page 50; Writing, copy-book, No. 3; Numbers, written arithmetic commenced; Geography, Eclectic No. 1, commenced. Language and oral lessons.

Fifth Year, B Intermediate—Reading, fifth reader begun; Spelling, Eclectic Speller to page 71; Writing, No. 3 copy-book; Geography, Eclectic No. 1 continued; Arithmetic, mental and written continued. Language and oral lessons; no text-books.

Sixth Year, A Intermediate—Reading, fifth reader completed; Spelling, Eclectic Speller to page 91; Writing copy-book No. 4; Numbers, mental and written arithmetic through reduction; Geography, primary geography completed; Language, continued; no text-book. Oral lessons.

Seventh Year, C Grammar—Reading, sixth reader; Spelling Eclectic Speller completed; Writing, copy-book, No. 5; Numbers, mental and written, to partial payments; Geography, Eclectic No. 2, begun; Language, grammar (in text-book) begun. Oral lessons.

Eighth Year, B Grammar—Reading, sixth reader; Spelling, selected lessons; Writing, copy-book No. 6; Numbers, mental, through Ray's Intellectual; written, through Ray's Practical; Geography, Eclectic No. 2, completed; Language, grammar continued. Oral lessons.

Ninth Year, A Grammar—Reading, sixth reader; Spelling, selected lessons; Writing, copy-book No. 7; Numbers, Higher Arithmetic begun; History, begun; Geography, physical, Cornell's; Grammar, false syntax, analysis, parsing, composition. Oral lessons.

High School Course—First Year, grammar, arithmetic, physiology, botany, algebra, German and book-keeping (elective).

Second Year, algebra, natural philosophy, rhetoric, Latin begun. Third Year, geometry, Latin completed, chemistry, United States History, United States Constitution. Spelling, definition, composition, declamation, etc., through the course.

Recapitulation—Primary Course, four years, Nos. 1 to 4, through fourth reader; Intermediate, two years, fifth reader; Grammar, three years; High School, three years; total course, twelve years.

If the great body of the pupils could spend twelve years in the pursuit of those courses, one might suppose they would thereby gain "oceans" of knowledge. As it is, one in a hundred "gets through," but where are the ninety and nine? And conjecture sadly answers, "I know not where, indeed."

The text-books are as follows: McGuffey's Reader and Speller—new series; Arithmetic, Ray's; Grammar, Harvey's; Geography, Eclectic; Geography, Physical, Cornell's; Algebra, Loomis & Ray's; History, Ridpath's; Botany, Wood's; Geometry, Loomis'; Physiology, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Steele's; Latin, Harkness'; Virgil and Cæsar.

The following are the graduates:

1876—Perry Shank, Webster Lambert, Preston Woodbury, Edna Thomas—four.

1878—Jessie Ruby, Winnie Scott, Flora Hutchinson, Ella Dill, Lizzie Wiggs, Flora Branham—six.

1879—Jennie Reed, Charles Proctor—two.

1880—May McNeal, Neva Harrison, Aurie Hedrick, Libby Reeves—four.

1881—Herbert Mitchell, Samuel Bartholomew, Alicia Fowler, Clara Hutchinson—four.

1882—Nettie B. Jackson, Clara Kavanaugh, Dora A. Clark, Jennie Hanlin, Anna Deem, Sarah A. Murray, Susan Stewart, Maynard B. McFeely, Morton H. Lambert — nine. Total, twenty-nine.

The commencement exercises, May 18, 1882, held in the capacious Methodist Episcopal Church, were of a high order. The graduation essays and orations were well prepared and finely delivered in the presence of a crowded and deeply interested assembly, the music was splendid, the presentation address was excellent and impressive, and the whole performance was such as to reflect great credit upon all concerned in any way therein.

Union City, Ohio.—There had been a school building for many years, but with the growth of the town it had become more and more unsuitable for its purpose, and, after much delay and considerable trouble, the present schoolhouse was erected, in 1872. It is built of brick, two stories high, being a plain but substantial edifice, containing at first four (but at present five) rooms. For two years, B. F. Stewart was Superintendent. G. W. Landis held the position for seven years, and F. G. Cromer was chosen as Principal during the summer of 1881. Five teachers are employed, including the Superintendent.

The School Board propose, the coming season (1882), to erect a new schoolhouse nearly the size of the present one, which will, with the rooms now in use, furnish seven rooms, and a public hall for anniversary exercises.

The enumeration for 1881 was 440, and the enrollment for 1880–81, 230. The Catholic School, in Union City, Ind., is supplied with pupils very largely from the Ohio side, which fact explains the small enrollment compared with the enumeration. A course of study has been arranged, covering about ten years, of which the High School embraces three years. The teachers for 1881–82 are as stated below:

F. G. Cromer, Superintendent and Principal of High School, $4; W. Johnson, Grammar School Department, $2.50; Miss Fanny Polly, Intermediate Department, $1.75; Sadie Hillard, A Primary Department, $1.75; Maggie Garber, B Primary Department, $1.75.

The Trustees are A. G. Gribben, President; J. J. Norris, Secretary; H. S. Stockdale, Treasurer. The school seems in a healthy and properous condition, the Principal appears well qualified for his responsible task, and, under his faithful supervision, an earnest corps of wide-awake teachers are accomplishing a successful work.

Ward Township.—John B. Sipe, Trustee. Twelve schoolhouses, two brick, ten frame, thirteen teachers. Twenty-five employed during the year, sixteen males and nine females. Seven months is the time of school. $2,680 paid for teachers; $700 paid for expenses. One graded school, two rooms, Saratoga. Trustees of township have been Olney Whipple, William Smith, two years each; D. F. Hawley, four years; Henry W. Fields, two years; Peter Stick, two years; Christian Nickey, two years; Benjamin Clevinger, four years; John B. Sipe, now [1881].

Schools in Winchester.—The first schoolhouse was a log cabin built with the corner ends sticking out. It stood on Washington, at the corner of Washington and East, west of Salt Creek. It was built before 1831. Jacob Henderson was teaching school in the old cabin, when it was burned down, with all the books, in 1836. The school was then taught for a time in the old Methodist Church; afterward, in the county seminary; still later, in the brick schoolhouse on South street; then, in a new schoolhouse on Will street; after that, in one built on South Main street. For a time, there were two school buildings, one in the main part of the town, southwest of the public square, and one on the principal street, north of the railroad Bee Line depot. The large brick edifice (High School) now standing, was built in 1866–67, at a cost of nearly $22,000, at a time when labor and material were very high, by Thomas W. Kizer, Township Trustee. The school opened in that house March 9, 1868. Another school building was erected in the south part of town, near Gen. Stone's, in 1879, made of brick, with two stories and four rooms. The cost we are not able to state.

Winchester.—Upon the completion of the graded school building, in Winchester, in 1867, Prof. Farris, who was also the first Principal of the seminary, some twenty-five years before, was employed as Principal of the public school in the new building. Since that time, the Principals have been Messrs. Cooper, Ault and Butler, the latter being now in that position.

The character of the Winchester schools has been gradually rising, until at the present time their reputation is excellent. Much effort has been put forth to provide apparatus, library, etc., for the High School, and a very creditable result in this respect has been attained. The corps of teachers for Winchester at present consists of Superintendent E. H. Butler, with Messrs. Bowers and Marsh and a sufficient number of active and efficient female instructors, besides Prof. W. S. Montgomery, a skillful and enthusiastic teacher of the science and the art of music, both vocal and instrumental.

The school statistics of Winchester are as follows: Enumeration, 670; enrolled, 560; average, 435; number in High School, 67; Senior Class, 9; graduates from High School, 32; books in library, 400. The school has a geological cabinet and chemical and philosophical apparatus.

The commencement exercises in connection with the graduation of the respective classes from year to year have become an important and deeply interesting feature of our public school system, drawing as they do from time to time immense assemblies to witness the performances. About thirty-nine of both sexes have finished the course at Winchester, only eleven of whom were males. It is somewhat noteworthy that in all the High Schools, the pupils who have continued to the end have been mostly of the gentler sex. At Union City, out of twenty-nine, only eight were of the "sterner sort."

The number of schoolhouses, together with the number of teachers in the different townships will be found as follows:

Green Township, eight districts—Eight schoolhouses, seven brick and one frame; eight teachers, six males and two females.

Franklin, six districts—Six houses, one brick, five frame; thirteen teachers, ten males, five females.

Ward, twelve districts—Twelve houses, two brick, ten frame; thirteen teachers, eight males, five females.

Jackson, nine districts—Nine houses, four brick, five frame; nineteen teachers, ten males, nine females.

Wayne, ten districts—Ten houses, five brick, five frame; twenty-two teachers, twenty males, two females.

Greensfork, eleven districts—Eleven houses, five brick, six frame; thirteen teachers, eleven males, two females.

Washington, sixteen districts—Sixteen houses, four brick, twelve frame; thirty-one teachers, twelve male, nineteen females.

West River, eleven districts—Eleven houses, one brick, ten frame; eleven teachers, all males.

Nettle Creek, ten districts—Ten houses, seven brick, three frame; ten teachers, five males, five females.

Stony Creek, nine districts—Nine houses, four brick, five frame; nine teachers, six males, three females.

Monroe, nine districts—Nine houses, five brick, four frame; nine teachers, six males, three females.

White River, twenty-one districts—Twenty-one houses, three brick, eighteen frame; twenty-five teachers, eighteen males seven females.

The following are the number of schoolhouses and teachers in the different towns:

Huntsville—One house, frame, one room, one teacher, male.

Farmland—One house, brick, three rooms, three teachers, one male, two females.

Ridgeville—One house (and college), four rooms, four teachers, two males, two females.

Winchester—Two houses, brick, nine rooms, eleven teachers, four males, seven females.

Union City—Two houses, one brick, one frame, ten rooms, eleven teachers, two males, nine females. Total, 51 brick, 84 frame; 135 in all; 167 rooms; value, $128,245.

Township Institutes within the year, 52; number of teachers, 211; males, 129; females, 82.

TOWNSHIPS.	Pupils Admitted.	Daily Average.	Number of Days.
White River	815	545	140
Washington	726	470	140
Greensfork	606	392	100
Stony Creek	397	228	105
Nettle Creek	427	254	160
West River	574	264	83
Green	328	181	120
Ward	555	336	100
Jackson	406	239	145
Wayne	712	623	140
Monroe	294	237	120
Franklin	241	126	120
Winchester, Town	591	445	160
Ridgeville, Town	180	112	160
Farmland, Town	190	126	160
Huntsville, Town	80	87	106
Union City, Town	922	628	180
Totals	994	5073	Av. 132

The average wages paid teachers for 1880 were as follows: Green, males, $1.75; females, $1.50; Franklin, males, $1.88; females, $1.53; Ward, males, $1.62; females, $1.60; Jackson, males, $1.60; females, $1.41; Wayne, males, $1.85; females, $1.56; Greensfork, males, $2.14; females, $1.74; Washington, males, $1.76; females, $1.58; West River, males, $1.87; Nettle Creek, males, $1.91; females, $1.96; Stony Creek, $2.03; females, $1.96; Monroe, males, $2.03; females, $1.76; White River, males, $1.76; females, $1.58; Huntsville, males, $2.50; Farmland, males, $3.50; females, $2; Ridgeville, males, $2.60; females, $2; Winchester, males, $4.41; females, $2; Union City, males, $4.76; females, $2.25.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS, UNION CITY, IND.

A Catholic school has been maintained for many years. The building contains two rooms, the upper room being entered by an outer (covered) stairway. The school is conducted by two female teachers and a music teacher. It is wholly free to the pupils through the income of a fund established for that purpose by Peter Kuntz, lumber dealer, a public-spirited citizen of the town and a worthy member of the Catholic Church. This school is well patronized. The number of pupils reaches and sometimes surpasses a hundred. If the Catholic friends seem disinclined to patronize the public schools, which are supported by public taxation and freely open to the whole community, it is well, at least, that by the princely munificence of one large-hearted citizen, liberally contributing out of his honorable and abundant gains for the praiseworthy object, the poorest child shall have equal opportunity at learning with the richest man in the land!

The German Lutheran pastor has for many years maintained a German school during the summer of each year for instruction in the German language.

There are every summer, also, private schools held in the public school-rooms, for such as choose to attend them. Writing schools are in progress from time to time for separate and special instruction in that important art.

Altogether, the record of Union City in educational matters has been very creditable, and her schools are reckoned to be in a flourishing condition.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES.

White River—Thomas W. Kizer, 1863–69, John W. Diggs, 1870–76; S. D. Coats, 1876–80; Ira Tripp, 1880–82.

Washington—David T. Hiatt, 1863–67; Jonathan Ozbun, 1868; Henry D. Nichols, 1869–72; James H. Dean, 1872–76; Ira C. Johnson, 1876–78; Joel Mills, 1878–82.

Greensfork—James D. Bowen, 1863; Levi Hill, 1864; James H. Bowen, 1865–66; John Harlan, 1866–67; Francis G. Morgan, 1868–69; John W. Hill, 1870–74; John W. Taylor, 1874–76; Isaac M. Nichols, 1876–80; John F. Middleton, 1880–82.

Monroe—Henry Jacobs, Robert Cowgill, 1863; Royston Ford, Henry Jacobs, 1864–65; James S. Davis, 1866–70; George O. Jobes, 1870–72; James Daugherty, 1872–76; Dennis Thornburg, 1876–80; Adam Slonaker, 1880–82.

Stony Creek—Henry C. Thornburg, 1863–76; George W. Worl, 1876–80; William T. Davis, 1880–82.

Nettle Creek—William C. Hendricks, 1863–65; William Lumpkin, 1866–74; Hicks K. Wright, 1874–75; Lemuel Wiggins, 1875–78; John C. Clevinger, 1878–82.

West River—Rufus K. Mills, 1863–65; William S. Hunt, 1866–72, 1878–81; John Hornaday, 1872–78; Levi Johnson, 1880–82.

Green—Antony W. Jarnagin, 1863–68, 1870–72; Silas T. Gordon, 1868–69; James McProud, 1872–74; Joseph C. Devoss, 1874–78; Luther L. Moorman, 1878–82.

Ward—Olney Whipple, 1863–64; D. F. Hawley, 1865–68; Peter Stick, 1869; Henry W. Fields, 1870–72; Christian Nickey, 1872–74; W. W. Smith, 1874–76; Benjamin Clevinger, 1876–80; John B. Sipe, 1880–82.

Jackson—Joseph Brown, 1863–65 (appointed), 1870–76; Paul Gettinger, 1864–65; Henry Debolt, 1866–69; Rufus G. Hindsley, 1876–80; Peter Poorman, 1880–82.

Wayne—Robert Murphy, 1863; Alexander Gullett, 1870–72; Jacob C. Macy, 1872–76; John M. Turner, 1876–78; Robert B. McKee, 1878–82.

Franklin—Levi W. Mann, 1863; E. T. Bailey, 1864–67; Isaiah C. Milner, 1868; Cyrus Blackaby, 1869; John W. Seavey, 1870–78; George Addington, 1878–80; Isaac N. Stratton, 1880–82.

Union City—Nathan Cadwallader, Joel N. Converse, J. M. Janes, 1865–72; Edward Starbuck, David Ferguson, Tighlman Tritt, Henry Jackson, W. A. Wiley, C. S. Hardy, L. D. Lambert, O. C. Gordon, Allen Jaqua, H. H. Yergin, John S. Starbuck, C. S. Hook, W. Harris. Present board, 1881, W. A. Wiley, C. S. Hook, William Harris.

Winchester (1872)—L. J. Monks, J. M. Hodson, Thomas W. Kizer, A. J. Stakebabe, A. R. Hiatt, F. M. Way (account not full), William Moore, J. L. Stakebake.

Ridgeville (1873)—M. R. Hiatt, D. W. Ward, Benjamin F. Boltz, W. S. Morritt, W. F. Studebaker, M. T. Sumption, H. T. Kitzelman, A. H. Farquhar.

Huntsville (1878)—Albert Jacobs, Horace M. Keever, William W. Miller.

Farmland (1876)—J. S. Davis, W. W. Fowler, L. A. Gable, J. H. Merridith, P. O. Hewitt, H. P. Wood. Present Trustees, J. H. Merridith, P. O. Hewitt, H. F. Wood.

Note—The above list may possibly be deficient, or even inaccurate, though much care has been exercised in its preparation.

MUSIC.

In the pioneer days, the people found but little time and had small means to devote to the cultivation or the enjoyment of the fine arts—and particularly as to music. The fact that many of the pioneers were "Quakers" was unfavorable to its extensive development, since that excellent society seem to have regarded the knowledge and the practice of that beautiful art as unnecessary, and, perhaps, even improper. That prejudice (if it be one) has at the present time greatly worn away, and the minds of the people at large have gradually been awakened to the fact that "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast;" that so far from its being a sin or a crime, or even a needless waste of time or means, it is in reality one of the greatest blessings to the human race, that the knowledge and culture thereof tend in a wonderful degree to soften the roughnesses of life, and to encourage and develop everything lovely and amiable in the human soul.

The first public movement known to the writer toward a higher degree of attention to the subject of music in Randolph County was a musical convention, or rather institute, held at Winchester in the winter of 1870–71, by Prof. W. S. Montgomery, assisted by J. D. Boggs, of Huntsville, Ohio, and William T. Giffe, then just beginning his work as an instructor in that excellent art, since grown famous both as a teacher and as an author, and now teacher of music in the schools of Logansport, Ind. This institute at Winchester was the place of his first appearance before the public as a musical instructor. Prof. Montgomery conducted a class in a course of forty-eight lessons, and, at the close of this school, the convention was held for two weeks, having three sessions each day, and giving a thorough and extensive drill in the rudiments and the practice of the noble and delightful art, and ending with a public concert. Altogether, it may be reckoned to have been a musical success, and laid a broad and solid foundation for the advancement that has since taken place in this branch of culture and refinement in Randolph County. Many of the members of that convention yet reside in the county, and look back to that "beginning of things" with great satisfaction and delight, and still stand firm and steadfast friends and helpers in this excellent work. A public lecture was delivered at the concert by a gentleman from Indianapolis, whose name is not now recollected, and altogether, great good was done.

Prof. Montgomery has since that time performed much musical work in Randolph and Wayne Counties. He has taught adult or juvenile classes (in some cases both at once) in many places throughout the county, has held some conventions and conducted several concerts. He has taught at Ridgeville, Winchester, Union City, Arba, Lynn, Gilead, Spartansburg and elsewhere. A convention was held at Ridgeville in June, 1874, assisted by Prof. Boggs—one at Spartansburg, Christmas, 1879, and one at Lynn, March, 1881. The schools were mostly closed by public concerts, the one at Spartansburg receiving the assistance of Prof. William T. Giffe. These concerts have been in every case occasions of deep public interest and of great and lasting advantage.

Mr. Montgomery is a musical instructor and performer of many years' standing, and has achieved a high reputation in his line of labor in Randolph, Jay, Blackford and Wayne Counties, Ind., during twenty-five years of energetic and successful efforts put forth in this direction, and his enthusiastic exertions have aided greatly in developing a pleasing degree of attention to the subject of music, and the knowledge of the science and the amount of skill in the practice of the art has been largely owing to his earnest work performed in its behalf.

In the fall of 1880, Mr. Montgomery was employed to give instruction in music to the public schools of Winchester, and his services have been secured for the same purpose during the year 1881–82. Music has been and still is taught in the Union City schools and probably the same thing has been done in some other places in the county. The music teacher in the Union City public schools at the present time is Prof. Harlan, who is also one of the regular teachers of the High School. Prof. Burgett and others have taught music at different times at Winchester and elsewhere within the county.

There are many organs, pianos, etc., in the region, and, on the whole, there is a gratifying and growing degree of interest taken in the subject by the citizens of Randolph, and that interest will doubtless increase still more and more in time to come. It is a fact that may be of interest, although known to few, that, forty or fifty years ago, and for thirty years or more, music, vocal and instrumental, was taught through Randolph and Wayne and other counties by a colored gentleman who was an enthusiast in the art, and, for those early times, a skillful and efficient instructor and performer. But age and infirmity have done their work, and "Old Gabe Smith" travels round to teach singing-schools and hold concerts no more.

LECTURES.

Union City has been very backward in furnishing improvement and instruction in the way of lectures. A lecture system was attempted during the winter of 1879–80 and maintained during several weeks, with only moderate success. The season was unfavorable, the evenings being occupied by religious meetings, etc., during the entire winter. The course of eight lectures by resident citizens was completed as follows: Rev. William Coulter, "Cromwell and His Times;" Rev. E. Tucker, "Liberty," a poem; Prof. Treudley, "The Heavens;" Dr William Commons, "Homer and Siege of Troy;" Dr. C. S. Evans, "Oxygen;" S. R. Bell, Esq., "Pompeii;" Rev. C. G. Bartholomew, "The Old and the New;" Rev. H. J. Meck, "Hash." The lectures were greatly enjoyed by those who were attendants upon the course, and they felt themselves richly repaid, both for the time and the money expended. The attendance, however, was but meager, considering the size and wealth and culture of the town, and the mere nominal price of tickets—50 cents for the course of eight lectures. The services of the lecturers were wholly gratuitous, yet they gave much time for the preparation of their addresses, and their efforts were worthy of a better reception.

A second lecture course was attempted by means (as before) of home talent. This series was to be historical, comprising the annals of the United States, from "prehistoric times" to the present happy, peaceful era wherein we joyful "live and have our being." The course consisted of ten lectures, with authors and subjects as follows: Dr. Willlam Commons, "Prehistoric;" Dr. Green, "Period of Discovery;" Rev. Keister, "Period of Colonization;" Rev. H. J. Meck, "French and Indian War;" Prof. Treudley, "Revolutionary Period;" S. R. Bell, Esq., "Constitution; War of 1812," etc.; Rev. E. Tucker, "Jackson and Adams," etc., first lecture; ditto, second lecture; Rev. W. D. Stone, "Mexican War;" Rev. William Coulter, "Civil War to the Present Time." The first eight were delivered by the gentlemen named. The ninth lecture was prepared and delivered by Dr. William Commons, Rev. Stone asking to be excused on account of the press of his other labors. The last has not yet (February 11, 1881) been given, as the reverend gentleman has been absent for some weeks from the town on private business. (It was not delivered at all, because he removed from the city.) This second course was like the first, highly appreciated by those who attended, but this time, also, the attendance was but meager, entirely unworthy, as to numbers, of the earnest efforts put forth by the public-spirited gentlemen who spent so much time to please and entertain an unappreciative public. Whether the watch-word for next winter will be the schoolboy's motto—"Try, try again," cannot at this time be told.

Lectures have also been delivered at Winchester at different times by distinguished gentlemen from abroad, as Rev. Mr. Fletcher, President Burgess, Prof. Fortich and others, but no special facts are at hand concerning them.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Much has been done in this department in Randolph County for many years past, and Sunday schools are held in nearly every meeting-house and some schoolhouses in the county. But we lack statistics in detail upon this subject, and beg leave to be allowed to omit further statement as to this interesting and important matter. Some information concerning it may be found in the account of the various churches.

LIBRARIES.

Many residents of Randolph possess extensive libraries. Among such may be named, as known to the writer, Hon. Thomas M. Browne and Gen. Asahel Stone, both of Winchester. There are doubtless many others who own fine collections of valuable books, clergymen, attorneys, physicians, teachers, as also other citizens of means and culture, have expended much money in gathering valuable libraries. Of public libraries, not much can be said. Many years ago, legal provision was made for township libraries, by which each township in the county and the State acquired a large number of books of more or less value. These libraries still exist to some extent, though they are sadly neglected, both as to care and use. Public libraries, other than the township libraries already mentioned, are unknown in the county. Three small circulating libraries are known to be in use—Winchester High School Library, Union City High School Library and Union City Library. All three are small, yet new and valuable, and the books are extensively read by the persons entitled to their use, and wisdom would dictate that the collections in question should be greatly enlarged. It is a fact, moreover, though probably not extensively known, that a law was passed many years ago, and is still in force, authorizing cities and towns, on certain conditions, to take stock in libraries which may have been established by private munificence; and money, whether private or public, might be put to many uses less beneficial than to create and maintain public libraries.

CHAPTER XIII.

TEMPERANCE.

GENERAL—UNION CITY—SONS—TEMPLARS—PORTER LODGES—S. S' V. & E. L.—REMINISCENCES.

GENERAL.

THE cause of abstinence from intoxicating liquors found early advocacy in Randolph County.

The Friends had for many years been taking strong and comparatively high ground against the common use of strong drink, as had also the Methodists of the earlier days, not, perhaps, strictly identical with, yet much similar to, the more modern distinctive movement.

This movement was, in fact, a gradual one, growing by progressive steps, and through various efforts during the lapse of many years, taking at length the shape of the American Temperance Society, which was formed at Boston, Mass., in about 1826, on the principle of total abstinence from ardent spirits as a beverage.

That movement spread rapidly and extensively through the settled portions of the country, and in ten years had become a general success, insomuch that the habits of drinking and offering ardent spirits, their use in harvest and at raisings, etc., as also their sale in the general stores and groceries of the country had, in very extensive regions, mostly or entirely ceased. During several years before 1836, most of the active temperance workers became convinced that the enterprise could not be permanently successful unless all intoxicating drinks were abandoned. The pledge against all such liquors gradually superseded the old pledge; and, in 1836, the American Temperance Association changed its ground accordingly, framing its pledge substantially as follows:

The undersigned, believing that the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is not necessary, but rather injurious, and that while their moderate use is continued the evils of drunkenness can never be prevented, do hereby mutually pledge ourselves to each other that we will neither use nor traffic in the same nor furnish them to others; and that in all suitable ways we will discourage such use and traffic in the community.

This ground thus taken in 1836, forty-six years ago, has been in substance the basis and foundation of all temperance action since that time. During forty years past the forms of opposition to the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and to the traffic in the same, have been legion; the principle in all, however, being substantially identical.

The detailed history of temperance work in Randolph County during those early times is supposed to be not now accessible.

The first temperance meeting of which we have an account was held at the court house in Winchester about 1830, under the auspices of the original National Association, with the pledge against distilled liquors. Temperance societies were formed extensively throughout the county, and the religious element for the most part became convinced of the correctness of the principles of the movement, and the necessity of the work proposed.

Among those who were actively engaged were Moorman Way, Paul W. Way, John Way, Henry Huffman, Thomas Fisher, Isom Puckett, William Harris, J. E. Beverly, M. A. Reeder, James Clayton, the Dunkirk Friends in general, and many others whose names cannot now be given.

J. E. Beverly, then a young man under age, was, for a considerable time, Secretary of the County Society, and Isom Puckett was at one time its President.

The movement flourished for several years, and most good people were indoctrinated with its principles. Moorman Way at one time walked eight miles to attend a temperance meeting held by a Presbyterian clergyman who was an active and talented advocate of the cause.

Soon after 1840, the movement was revived in the form of Washingtonianism. One Mr. Porter, from Cincinnati, held meetings at Winchester for that cause, and, perhaps, organized societies here, and the movement extended as before throughout the county at large, and continued to prevail for several years, with much enthusiasm.

Up to this time the various temperance societies had been open and free to all; but, as the Washingtonian movement began to show symptoms of decline, the temperance work took new shape in the form of secret associations of various kinds. Perhaps the earliest, at least one of the earliest, was the Sons of Temperance. It began in New York City, but spread rapidly westward, and was soon planted in Randolph County, in 1844. Others were Good Templars, Daughters of Temperance, Temples of Honor, etc.

These associations have done an extensive work, continuing for many years, in some cases even down to the present time.

In some respects the work done by these various societies was more restricted than the former movements, chiefly from two causes. First, many ardent temperance workers were in conviction opposed to secret societies, and could not, in consequence, affiliate with their work; and such, while deeply sympathizing with the object to be attained, and unwilling to throw anything in the way, yet felt obliged to stand aloof from active participation.

The second reason was that the various secret orders required the payment of money as a pre-requisite of membership, and as a condition of continued connection.

In the summer of 1854, a Fourth of July temperance celebration was held at Winchester. Great preparation had been made, and great display was indulged in. All the temperance orders then in vogue were present, and marched in procession in regalia. An immense crowd was in attendance, and great enthusiasm was apparent. Just before that, an event of notable importance in temperance had taken place in Winchester. A notorious saloon-keeper had defied the whole power of public sentiment and kept brazenly on with his mischievous work. He had been appealed to in every way, and especially by the ladies of the village, to cease his work and close his saloon. He refused. A citizen of the town, once honored and prominent, who had at one time been County Sheriff, having become a hard drinker, was lying sick from a debauch and prostrated with delirium tremens. He finally died with this awful disease, and while his lifeless corpse was lying stark and stiff at his wretched home, the ladies of Winchester gathered at the domicile of his afflicted widow, and, placing her at their head, formed a large and imposing procession and marched in a body to the grog shop where this man had bought much of his liquor, and sternly demanded of the keeper that he destroy his liquors and quit the business of dram selling. He refused, and they proceeded to smash in his liquor barrels, and spilled the whole in the street. Great excitement throughout the region was the consequence. The grog seller sued the women, but, owing to the fact that all their wives were engaged in the onslaught, none of the attorneys of Winchester would engage for the plaintiff, and he was obliged to get legal assistance from Greenville, Ohio, and elsewhere. The final issue of the case is not now remembered. (See Judge Colgrove's biography). The case was strongly commented on, and the spirit of the courageous ladies highly praised by the gifted orator of the day. Matthew R. Hull, Esq., who, to an enthusiastic and eloquent delivery, added a most sarcastic and fiery manner, and his invectives against the heinous traffic and all its participators were bitter and terrible.

For many years one of the most active and indefatigable workers in the various departments has been Miss Amanda M. Way, who has in later years gained even a national reputation.

E. B. Reynolds Esq., has also, among perhaps others, become famous through the country as an energetic and successful temperance orator and lecturer, having within the last year or two been engaged in the work in Kansas of bringing the temperance sentiment of that State to the point of adopting the prohibitory amendment in the constitution of that State.

Within a few years past, several new phases of the temperance work have made their appearance.

Some ten years ago, an organization intended to embrace all existing societies was formed, called the Temperance Alliance, which, for a time, did efficient work in educating the people in the principles of total abstinence.

About February, 1874, the Women's Crusade broke out at Union City, and for a brief season swept everything before it. Almost all the Christian women of the place were engaged in the work. It grew up without previous notice or preparation, and the movement seemed to be the spontaneous outburst of an overwhelming sense of the terrible power and curse of the drinking habit, and the fearful evils of the liquor traffic. The Crusade first took shape at Washington Court House, a village in Southern Central Ohio, and was taken up rapidly throughout the State. A gentleman known as the "Ohio Broad Ax," held some meetings at Union City, and told how they were doing in Ohio.

At one of these meetings, on Friday, a committee of ladies was appointed to decide upon a course of action. The Committee was Mrs. Commons, Galloway, Croner and McFeely. On Saturday, the Committee, three of them, met at Mr. Commons' office. Mrs. Commons was made President, Mrs. Galloway, Vice President, and Mrs. Croner, Secretary. A kind of constitution was drawn up, coupled with a general pledge "to do what they could." A meeting was held on Monday night, and seventy-five ladies signed that pledge. The next day at 1 o'clock, another meeting was held at the Presbyterian Church. One hundred and fifty or more ladies were present. Religious exercises were had, but no definite plan of action had been decided on. Suddenly one lady said, "Let us go to Cain's saloon." Others also said, "Let us go." The proposition was voted with a rush. A procession of about two hundred ladies was formed, two and two, and down they went, arm in arm, to Cain's saloon.

The news spread over town like wild-fire, and the citizens came crowding down, fearful of the treatment their wives might receive from the saloon men and the roughs who were also there in great numbers. The ladies entered, their leaders pushing up to the counter and commencing a talk with Cain. He brandished an article written by some clergyman or other in opposition to the Crusade in other quarters, telling "women to keep at home," and mind their own business, etc., and demanded them to "read that" and learn their duty. Meanwhile Cain, expecting prayer by the ladies, seemed desirous of having the matter over as speedily as possible, and asked the ladies if they wished to have prayers. No plan to that effect had been made, but the "spirit of the time" was on them, and Mrs. Commons, who was one of the leaders, replied that if he would keep the crowd still, they would. He said they should be still, and Mrs. Enos Turpen engaged in prayer, after singing. The whole thing was spontaneous; no plan whatever had been arranged, and they did simply what the Spirit led them to do. Mrs. Turpen made a most moving prayer. Her soul was all on fire, and she evidently spake as the Spirit gave her utterance. Some who were there said, "She prayed like an angel," and that "such another prayer was never heard from human lips." At one point the roughs seemed about to break loose. Mrs. C. glanced at Mr. Cain, and he hushed them with his fist. After prayer, he insisted that his article should be read; and Mrs. Commons, standing behind the counter, in the midst of that strangely mingled crowd—Christian ladies, their husbands and friends, the saloon keepers and the roughs, read the article. He boasted of its doctrine, written by a clergyman, and admonished the ladies to go home and be quiet and let his business alone.

Some said, "Let us go home." Mrs. Commons said, "No, I want to talk" and said to Mr. Cain, "Will you keep them still?" "Yes, I will." Mrs. Commons went on to make her speech, taking the article as the basis. She said afterward that she felt as though "the power" rested on her, and she spoke simply as she was moved upon. The crowd were restrained from doing the ladies harm, and they went home. The next day the work was renewed, and so it continued for some two weeks, and, for the time, every saloon but one was closed,

The movement could not, in the nature of things, be kept up indefinitely, and the saloons after a time, opened again to resume their work of making drunkards for money.

A legal movement was also commenced against the saloon keepers, which, however, resulted in failure from the well-known fact that to obtain evidence against saloon keepers is generally utterly impossible.

At Cain's saloon, Mrs. Commons spoke about twenty minutes, and the house was as still as death. She seemed wonderfully helped, and spoke freely and with great apparent effect. The saloon keeper seemed like a caged lion. When Mrs. C. closed her speech, she said, "Now I am ready to go;" and the ladies marched away as solemnly as though it were a funeral. The Marshal on the Ohio side, though a drinking man, declared, "No one shall harm you," and he went with them for protection as they went their round to every saloon on the Ohio side; and then they went back to the church and found the house filled with gentlemen. The next day they visited every saloon on the Indiana side. One was so frightened that he put up iron bars to his windows. He agreed to close out. Another sent a letter to the Committee offering to ship the liquor back to the wholesale house and quit the business. Four places were closed out on the Indiana side.

The Ohio side was visited again, and for some time every liquor shop but one was shut up. There had been twenty saloons, and for some weeks all were closed except one.

Suits were also brought against several liquor sellers. One offered to close up if they would drop the suit, but the Alliance would not do it.

Cain was shut up by a legal process for awhile; but after a time he began again.

The Alliance held meetings every day until October, in the Presbyterian Church, and after that once a week.

The suits that had been begun at Greenville proved a costly failure, since in a liquor loving community evidence against rum-sellers can scarcely be obtained.

The next year (1875), the ladies of Indiana met at Indianapolis and formed the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and auxiliary unions were formed in Randolph County; and, among other places, at Union City, which was more or less effective in sustaining the temperance spirit and prosecuting temperance work. In November, 1875, a National Union was organized at Cleveland, Ohio, and the Indiana Union was made auxiliary thereto.

MURPHY MOVEMENT.

Francis Murphy began his work in Pittsburgh, Penn., late in the fall of 1876. Great success attended his labors. Many temperance converts were made, and the movement spread extensively East and West. Among others the Timmony brothers joined the Murphy movement, and began to hold meetings from place to place. In process of time, they came to Galion, Ohio. Meanwhile, the Temperance Alliance work was going on at Union and elsewhere in Randolph County; but there was no knowledge in detail of the Murphy movement.

A great religious revival was in progress in Union City among the Methodists under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Vigus, their pastor. But an anxiety arose to become acquainted with the Murphy movement, and, if practicable, to introduce it there. A meeting was called at the Methodist Church for consultation. At this meeting, Mrs. Commons made a statement of what little knowledge she had gained from the papers of the time, and her nephew, Mr. Dodge, who had been in the work in Eastern Ohio, was visiting at her home, and, being present at the meeting, was called up, and he told what he knew. He stated, among other things, that the work was carried on mostly by the reformed men themselves. A committee was appointed, and another meeting was held in a few days. The committee, however, had prepared no report. The Timmony brothers were at this time at Galion, Ohio. The committee was discharged and another one was appointed to confer with the Timmony boys, and arrange for them to come to Union, if possible. The committee did so, and they agreed to come four nights. The people flocked to the meetings, and joined in great numbers, and it was clear that they ought to stay longer. But money was required to pay the rent of the hall as well as to pay the lecturers. At first a collection was taken each night, but that did not seem likely to be sufficient, and, among other things, a plan was arranged by which an individual gentleman or firm became responsible for the hall rent one night apiece. Thus the meetings were continued eleven nights. As the result, about two thousand names were obtained, and for a time drinking liquor in Union City was mostly at an end.

A reading room and rooms for amusement and recreation were hired and fitted up and the movement went on quite enthusiastically for a time. The ladies helped the enterprise much in every possible way. Among other things, they held a strawberry festival to raise funds for the Murphy club, which netted $160. But the movement flagged in interest and zeal, and is now entirely extinct. Many went out and held meetings throughout the surrounding country, and formed auxiliary clubs, thus bringing many into the work.

The enterprise was soon after set on foot at Winchester, and with great apparent effect, though the results seem not to have been permanent. Among the gentlemen who were more or less prominent at Union City in furnishing funds for the movement, were Messrs. Cadwallader, Starbuck, Worthington, Pierce, Anderson, Reeder & Bowersox, Turpen and others.

As already stated, the Women's Temperance Union was subsequently formed, and continues to the present time.

During many years, the temperance sentiment has been very strong, so much so as mostly to prevent the existence of licensed saloons. At Union City, at Ridgeville, at Farmland, at Fairview, at Spartansburg, at Lynn, at Arba, sometimes at Winchester, liquor saloons have for the most part been prevented. The history of the movement in this respect would furnish much interesting and instructive material, yet the demon of drink is like that other demon of mischief, thrusting himself into every company, and everywhere seeking whom he may devour; and many are cast down by his power. One agency for temperance employed for a time with good effect at Union City and perhaps elsewhere, was the holding of Sunday afternoon street meetings. Many were held with large attendance, and it is hoped with good results. The speeches at those meetings were good, and often eloquent, and doubtless many listened to temperance truth from the sidewalk and the street corner who would not trouble themselves to attend a meeting held indoors.

The religious denominations have been mostly active in the temperance work from the beginning, as also many who were outside the churches. In fact, good and philanthropic men and women of all shades of belief in other respects have made common cause of the temperance work, and have marched shoulder to shoulder in the grand war against the legions of king acohol.

Especially have the members of the Legislature from Randolph distinguished themselves in that body in undertaking to enact measures for the suppression of the drink traffic. Messrs. Stone, Ward, Monks, Butts, Moorman, Reeder, Cadwallader, Watson, Murray, Hill, and doubtless others not now recollected were earnest in the work, and some of them strongly radical in their views and actions.

Hon. M. A. Reeder introduced a bill for the entire suppression of the traffic. Hon. Nathan Butts was Chairman of the Temperance Committee in that Legislature which passed the so-called Baxter bill. That bill was the result of the joint labors of Messrs. Butts and Baxter, aided by the suggestions and advice of many other active and judicious friends of temperance, both in the Legislature and out of it The perfected bill was presented by Mr. Butts as Chairman of the Committee. The only speech in its favor in the House was made by him, and it passed both branches of the Legislature, was signed by Gov. Hendricks on his sick bed, with great interest expressed by him in its behalf, and became a law, only to be killed shortly afterward by an adverse decision of the Indiana Supreme Court.

The people of Randolph County take a very deep interest in the movement during the present Legislative session (1880–81), to pass laws preventing or restraining the liquor traffic, as also to enact a prohibitory amendment to the Indiana Constitution, and Hon. Mr. Murray in the House and Hon. Mr. Bundy in the Senate (from Henry County, but representing also Randolph), have been found uniformly active and voting for temperance and against the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Strong efforts have been made at different times in the Legislature of Indiana to pass stringent laws against intoxicating drinks, notably in 1854–55, 1872–73, and 1880–81. The first two laws mentioned were both killed in the courts. Liquor selling seems to be considered by the courts of Indiana to be under their special protection as though that particular method of wholesale and remediless mischief must be left untouched and unmolested, perfectly free to execute its murderous work without let or hindrance from any quarter.

A new struggle is now at hand as to the liquor traffic, to wit, its total suppression by constitutional amendment, and upon this question doubtless Randolph will give for herself a good report when the ballots are counted, and help strongly on the right side to determine the result of the popular election held for the expression of the will of the citizens of Indiana upon this vital question.

One outgrowth of the Woman's Crusade in Union City was the Young Men's Christian Association.

After the saloons had been closed by the Crusade, the ladies sent to Indianapolis for Dr. Munhall to come to Union City and organize a Young Men's Christian Association. He did so, and the following autumn the association established themselves in a pleasant location with a reading room and library. The Y. M. C. A. has been in operation with more or less activity ever since.

For a time the Y. M. C. A. and the W. C. T. U. occupied the same rooms, holding frequent meetings, and carrying forward their respective enterprises with energy and success.

The Murphy movement took hold at Winchester with a rush, and seemed for a short time to sweep everything into its current; but the enterprise soon declined, and for a long time it has shown little or no activity. In Farmland and Ridgeville, a longer life was attained, the latter place continuing its work in this respect even to the present. The Women's Christian Temperance Union is organized by townships. The County Union has a President, with a Vice President in each township.

In 1880, there was formed at Indianapolis an organization called the Grand Council. It was composed of delegates from the various temperance societies and orders in the State, such as Christian Temperance Unions, Good Templars, Temples of Honor, Blue Ribbons, Red Ribbons, Sons of Temperance, Knights Templar, etc. The chief work of the winter was the circulation of petitions to the Legislature asking for a prohibitory amendment to the State Constitution forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and also for a law to prevent, so far as possible, the evils of the liquor traffic.

In the session of 1875, Hon. M. A. Reeder, Representative from Randolph County, presented a bill for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks as follows:

REEDER'S PROHIBITION BILL.

An act to suppress the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, and for punishing intoxication:

SECTION 1. Any person or persons within this State who shall manufacture, buy, sell or give away any intoxicating drinks, for any purpose whatever, or be found in a state of intoxication, shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined in any sum not less than $5 nor more than $50, and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned in the county jail for any time not less than five days nor more than thirty days.

SECTION 2. All acts, and part of acts, coming in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

SECTION 3. It shall be the duty of the Clerk of the Circuit Court to make proclamation, as provided by law for other elections, that a poll will be opened on the first Monday in April, 1875, and at each general election thereafter, at the usual places of holding elections in the several townships and wards in the county, under the same regulations as are now provided by law, for the purpose of accepting or rejecting by ballot the provisions in Section 1 of this act, and if a majority of the legal voters of any township or ward in the county shall elect to receive the provisions of Section 1 of this act, then it shall be in full force until the next general election; but if a majority of voters shall elect to reject the provisions of this act, then it shall be void and of no effect.

SECTION 4. Whereas, an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this bill, the same shall be in force from and after its passage.

This bill proceeds on what is by many conceived to be the only true principle of law and morals with reference to the liquor traffic, that the business is fraught with such constant and widespread and inevitable mischief to the human family as to be properly and perpetually a nuisance, and that therefore the traffic is pre-eminently a crime, and that it should be forbidden and punished like any other hurtful and destructive practice.

UNION CITY.

It has been difficult to obtain any considerable detailed statement of temperance work in Union City from the beginning. The sentiment against the traffic in intoxicating drinks has always been very strong and active, proving uniformly effective to prevent the open traffic. Men have tried to obtain license to sell, but thus far without success. The methods of temperance efforts have been various. Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, Daughters of Temperance, Temperance Alliance, National Christian Temperance Union (Murphy), Crusade, Juvenile Temperance Band, etc., etc., have all borne a part in the great work. At one time, monthly street meetings were held, which sometimes drew large crowds to temperance addresses. Some temperance Fourth of July celebrations have been held. Lecturers have addressed the people. Clergymen for the most part have been faithful to their duty to draw men by the cords of love to the joyful courts of the palace of sobriety.

Yet, in spite of all, intemperance has done a fearful work even here. The unfortunate fact that the State line cuts the town in two, and that the liquor traffic is in full blast across that line, has tempted many a father, husband, brother and son to the wretched paths of drunkenness and shame. Many a solemn resolve, strengthened sometimes by a recorded oath, has melted like snow before the heat of a noonday sun, or like wax before the fire; and the "demon of drink" has driven the poor perjured wretch, over promises, and oaths, and prayers, and tears, headlong down to a drunkard's despised and dishonored grave!

An interesting account can be found in S. Branham's Reminiscences, how two saloons were "squelched" in Union City, Ind., at almost the very starting of the town. Every now and then the "Old Demon" raises his head and swears he will break loose on the Indiana side, when herculean efforts will be put forth to tighten his chain, and thus far with success.

Yet there is abundant and fearful drinking and drunkenness to boot, even on the Indiana side. Two remarks are made by the residents of Union City, Ohio—one by the temperance men and the other by the saloon-keepers. The first say, "The drinking comes chiefly from Indiana." The second say: "You pretend to try to suppress liquor saloons on your side; if you knew what and how many citizens and business men, and even church members, come regularly 'across the line' to take their 'dram,' you would be amazed and hide your head in shame."

Within a range of less than two blocks from a certain point on the Indiana side resided at one time three notorious and habitual drunkards, some of whom abuse their wives in a most brutal manner, and all three are far gone in inebriety and wretchedness. Saloon-keepers have been warned repeatedly to cease selling to them, but they disregard the warning, or else others are cruel enough to get for their besotted comrades the devilish drink, and they come home drunk as before. Words cannot describe, imagination cannot paint the ceaseless and measureless evils of the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage and of the traffic therein. Open saloons are kept across the line, but drunkenness and its curses are here and among us still.

Several efforts have been made to establish saloons on the Indiana side, sometimes accompanied with great determination to succeed, which have been uniformly met, however, by the most energetic opposition on the part of the prominent citizens of the place. A history of some of these contests would possess great interest. In one case, a few years ago, after defeating the saloonists at Winchester, before the Commissioners, they appealed to the Circuit Court and obtained a change of venue to Muncie, in an adjoining county, thinking the temperance people would not follow them. They were followed, however, in force, and, notwithstanding sharp practice, which might well be called trickery by the liquor men, they were finally defeated with heavy costs.

The history in detail of the contest against the liquor traffic in Randolph County would by itself fill a large volume. That history, however, cannot here be given at greater length than has already been done.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

The order was instituted in New York City, September 29, 1842. The object was to solidify and perpetuate the results of the Washingtonian Society. It is now composed of a national organization, fifty-seven grand divisions and nearly 3,000 subordinate divisions, embracing every State and nearly every Territory —Canada, Great Britain and the islands both of the Atlantic and the Pacific. It has enrolled as members more than three millions of persons. Its fundamental principle is, "Total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks."

Connected with the order is an association for females, entitled Daughters of Temperance, as also one embracing young persons, called Cadets of Temperance. The first division in Indiana was formed in 1846.

On the 22d day of June, 1881, the National Division of the Sons of Temperance for North America met at Saratoga, N. Y.

The order of the Sons was established at an early day in Randolph County, and for a long time seemed to flourish. In 1854, a grand Fourth of July celebration for temperance in Randolph County was held at Winchester, embracing the Sons, the Good Templars and other temperance associations. The occasion attracted an immense crowd, and the exercises were greatly impressive, and doubtless much good was accomplished.

GOOD TEMPLARS.

This order, arising in New York City about 1854, was introduced into Randolph County by the creation of Winchester Lodge, No. 3, April 15, 1854, by G. W. C. F. Hatch, of New York City. During the same year, lodges were established at Union City, Farmland, Windsor, Ridgeville, Lynn, Huntsville, Maxville and Spartansburg. The work spread rapidly in the State, fifty lodges being organized in less than a year. The Grand Lodge for the State was organized at Winchester, January 17, 1855. At this convention, forty-three lodges were represented, comprising nearly three thousand members. F. G. Hall was elected G. W. C. T., and Gen. Asahel Stone, G. W. S.

Since that time, lodges have been instituted at Bloomingport, Buena Vista, Deerfield, Morristown, Fairview, Harrisville and Jericho. These societies continued in operation many years, sowing good seed, spreading the knowledge and the practice of total abstinence, reclaiming the inebriate and saving the young from the formation of the terrible habit of drink. Most of them have ceased to work, the temperance sentiment of the time having created other channels of outflow, and developing and strengthening itself in other forms and by other methods of operation.

PORTER LODGES.

About 1879 or 1880, a gentleman by the name of Porter, who was a reformed inebriate, held many meetings and formed several "Porter Lodges" in Randolph County, chiefly in the western part. His influence seemed to be great for the time, and many were brought to espouse the cause of total abstinence through his efforts. Whether the societies have continued to flourish and what has become of their founder is to us unknown.

INDEPENDENT TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

The Murphy movement, after some years of activity, seemed to lag and die. During the winter of 1879–80, a new movement sprang up which has been in operation with greater or less degree of activity ever since. Meetings were sustained several times a week during the greater part of 1880, interspersed occasionally with concerts for amusement, instruction and pecuniary profit. At first the Association fitted up a hall in the third story of a brick building east of the Branham House. The location, however, was difficult of access, and considerably uncomfortable, especially in hot weather. During the summer of 1880, the Association succeeded in raising money and labor enough to erect a Tabernacle on a vacant lot, south side of Oak street, east of the Bowers Building. The edifice is neat, though cheaply built, and with no pretense at show or display, capable of accommodating seven hundred or eight hundred people. The Tabernacle was opened in July, 1880, by a series of temperance meetings, which were largely attended. Addresses, lectures and a temperance Sunday school were kept up in the Tabernacle until the weather became too cold, the school being under the charge of Miss Dwinell. The Tabernacle furnishes a very good place for large meetings of any kind. Several political gatherings asembled there during the campaign of 1880. The room is on the ground, and thus easy of access. It has no floor, except the earth covered with sawdust, which fact adds wonderfully to the quiet of the meetings, as there can be no noise from walking, stamping, and such things.

We are sorry to be obliged to state that this Association has entirely ceased its workings, and that the Tabernacle has been sold to pay a debt which was contracted for its construction, and it is now used as a carriage shop.

In fact, the temperance work seems to be almost wholly dormant in Union City. Efforts have been made from time to time to revive an interest, but, from some cause, with no apparent success.

SOCIETY FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF VICE AND ENFORCEMENT OF THE LAW.

This Association was formed in 1879, and is carrying on the work peculiar to its sphere with more or less energy and success. A course of lectures was held under its auspices during the winter of 1879–80. Rev. C. G. Bartholomew in a public address explained to an interested audience in the Disciple Church at Union City the reasons, the objects and the needs of the Association and the claims which it presents for the sympathy and assistance of the community. For some time (1882), the society has been inactive, and no life in its peculiar work is at this time apparent.

REMINISCENCES.

As an indication of the public sentiment in many parts of Randolph County, as a specimen of the tactics sometimes employed, we append the following from Fairview, in Green Township, as related by Philip Barger, Esq.:

"There has been a strong temperance work in this region for many years, Washingtonians, Sons, Good Templars, etc. The people generally are strongly opposed to liquor selling. Not much of it has ever been done here. Samuel Caylor once kept hotel and sold liquor.

"Several persons have tried to carry on the business at Fairview, but they have been shut up or driven out in some way. Some years ago, William Clemens set up a liquor shop at Fairview. The fruits soon began to appear—noisy and drunken men, etc. I was Justice, and I issued warrants to about a dozen drunken men who I knew got liquor there, and had Pros. Cheney come from Winchester. The men came and were examined separately, but we could get nothing from them. They had left a jug of liquor near when they came, and when they got to it again they swung the jug defiantly and drank in triumph. Some one or two with the Prosecutor and Constable had stayed to dinner, and saw and heard their defiance.

"Mr. Cheney was greatly mortified at our failure, and angry at their triumph, and he cried, 'Is any one here willing to swear out a warrant against that man for keeping a nuisance?' 'I will,' said one, It was done instanter, and the Constable posted off forthwith to serve the warrant.

"But the bird had flown. The Magistrate's summons to those customers of his had frightened him, and he put out on the double quick without waiting to see the upshot; and he never came back to answer for a nuisance.

"Another man tried it. Twelve complaints were made, and three indictments were found. One was sustained, and he was fined and sent to jail in default of payment. He bailed himself out for $100, which he furnished, and went and got drunk and died of delirium tremens. So liquor sellers have found a hard road to travel in Fairview."

The history of the drink traffic in Randolph County is full of exciting incidents. Its course has been 'evil, only evil, and that continually,' fighting, fighting, ever fightingfor its devilish power over the bodies and the souls of men, like its old father, Satan, going about like a roaring lion seeking some human prey to devour. The Commissioners of Randolph County have mostly refused to grant license to liquor sellers. It is said, indeed, that the Circuit Court has rendered a decision that in certain circumstances the law requires license to be given. Still, to their honor be it said, the Commissioners persist in their refusal, thus throwing the fearful responsibility of the unseemly and mischievous act, if it must be done, upon the court itself.

The history of the liquor traffic, and of the struggles against it in Randolph County during the years that are past, and the various success attending them at different times, if it could be written, would be full of thrilling interest. The incidents at Union City and elsewhere in this behalf have been very exciting and somewhat dramatic. The last attempt to establish the traffic on the Indiana side was strong and determined and desperate, and was defeated only by the most earnest and persistent and energetic opposition, the legal portion of which opposition was largely, perhaps chiefly, under the leadership of Seth M. Whitten, Esq., to whom the temperance community owe a large debt of gratitude for his shrewd and successful management of the contest, and who drew upon himself thereby the most bitter and malignant hatred of the liquor interest.

CHAPTER XIV.

ANTISLAVERY.

GENERAL—UNDERGROUND R. R.—WILLIAM STEELE—RUNAWAYS—STRINGFELLOW (WILKERSON GIRLS)—REMINISCENCES—NEGRO REGISTRY.

GENERAL.

A LARGE portion of the early settlers of Randolph and adjoining counties came from Carolina to get rid of slavery. Very many were Quakers, who were thoroughly hostile to the institution, and had abandoned it on principle. The Friends had been largely interested, moreover, in the Carolinas, in Pennsylvania and elsewhere, in the various movements in opposition to slavery and in behalf of the people of color which had been in progress.

It was but natural, therefore, that the Antislavery movement from 1816 downward should find active adherents and supporters in this region of country. Charles Osborn, who was among the first, and who has been claimed by some to be the very first public advocate of unconditional emancipation in the United States, lived at Economy, near the borders of Randolph County; and the doctrine had many supporters in the region. Especially was this the case in Randolph and Wayne Counties, Ind.

Among the first public advocates of abolition in Randolph may be named Moorman Way and Jehu Hiatt, still living in the county (1881). There were many others, but exactly who the author cannot now state. The Pucketts, the Ways, the Hiatts, the Wrights, the Peacocks, the Hills, the Bonds, etc., were early on the side of abolition.

About the time that William Lloyd Garrison was imprisoned at Baltimore for publishing a condemnation of the cruelty of the slave trade, Dr. Henry H. Way, of Newport, Wayne Co., Ind., arranged a discussion between Rev. Mr. Randolph and himself upon the subject of abolition.

This discussion was the first of the kind west of the Alleghany Mountains, being held about 1830, at Arba, Randolph Co., Ind.

Dr. Way, being unable to attend, engaged Moorman Way, at that time a mere youth, but active and enterprising, to take his place. The discussion lasted an entire day, and was largely attended.

In 1839, Arnold Buffum, a famous early abolitionist, lectured at Winchester, and afterward at Dunkirk and Sparrow Creek Friends' meeting-houses, west of Winchester; and shortly afterward an Antislavery Society was formed at Dunkirk, at which meeting, among other things, the slavery question was discussed by "Old Billy Hunt" (Rev. William Hunt) and Mr. Buffum, Mr. Hunt taking the Antiabolition side. Other societies were formed soon after, and much activity prevailed, and much bitterness withal. The difference of sentiment became so great, especially among the Friends, that, after several years, a large secession took place and a new society was formed, calling themselves Antislavery Friends. The yearly meeting of the new society was held at Newport, Wayne County. It had extensive support in Randolph County, some of the preparative meetings of Friends going over nearly en masse. In others new preparative meetings were formed. Dunkirk and Cedar meetings were almost wholly Antislavery. At Jericho a new meeting was set up. It should be said in justice to the members of the body that they claimed to be strongly Antislavery, but they were opposed to affiliating with outside efforts. The movement gradually drifted into politics, that phase of the movement in this region keeping pace with the general sentiment and current of action in other portions of the country.

As a specimen of political Antislavery in the early time, an account is subjoined of a Convention held at Winchester, Ind.,

May 1, 1847. The officers of the meeting were as follows: Hiram Mendenhall, President; Daniel Hill, Secretary. Moved that we nominate candidates for the various offices. Discussed by Messrs. Bennett, Tucker and Moorman Way, and adopted.

Committee on Nominations: James Clayton, H. P. Bennett and Joseph Thornburg. Moved by E. Tucker as follows:

Resolved, That it is one of the objects of the Antislavery enterprise to raise our colored fellow citizens to the enjoyment of that impartial protection and those equal rights to which as men they are entitled, and of which they are now to a great extent in this and other States deprived; and we pledge ourselves as liberty men to use our political power and influence to gain this end so far as it can be reached thereby; and to persevere therein until success shall crown our efforts.

Discussed by the mover and others, and passed unanimously.

Nominations as follows: Representatives, Benjamin Puckett, Daniel Hill; Commissioner, Ephraim Oren; Treasurer, John A. Moorman; Surveyor, Elisha Garrett.

Delegates were appointed to a District Convention, to be held at Camden, Jay Co., Ind., as follows: H. P. Bennett, James Clayton, Moorman Way, Benjamin H. Puckett, Daniel Hill, Joseph Thornburg, Hiram Mendenhall, Paul W. Way, Robert Woody, Elisha Garrett, George Addington.

Resolved [moved by E. Tucker], That we circulate petitions asking the State Legislature to repeal all laws making distinctions on account of color.

Resolved, That a Convention be held at Dunkirk (F iends' Meeting-House, west of Winchester), May 29, 1847.

Subjects for consideration, Constitution and Slavery, War with Mexico, and other Antislavery matters.

The apparent hopelessness of the crusade by Abolitionists in behalf of the people of color in Indiana will be seen when coupled with the fact that four years after this time the Thirteenth Article of the Constitution of 1851 was adopted by a majority of nearly one hundred thousand, Randolph being the only county that gave a majority against that Thirteenth Article. But the activity resolved on by the Abolitionists at the very commencement of their enterprise was persisted in for more than fifty years, until, in the spring of 1881, the famous Thirteenth Article, and every other part of the Constitution making distinction on account of color, was swept away by a majority of from thirty thousand to fifty thousand.

Among other agencies, assistance to fugitive slaves was freely given in various parts of the county from the earliest times. The Dawes case occurred not very long after the beginning of the Antislavery movement. (See account elsewhere).

The Underground Railroad, so-called, was put into operation and found many helpers and sympathizers throughout the county. The case of the Wilkerson slave girls, in the year 1839, was a most remarkable one, arousing great excitement and eliciting much sympathy from Antislavery men, and much condemnation by proslavery adherents and opponents of abolition.

The Wilkerson girls had in some way escaped from their master in Tennessee, who was, it seems, a Methodist minister, and had found their way to Cabin Creek colored settlement, in the western part of Randolph County, where their grandfather, Mr. Wilkerson, resided at the time. Mr. Stringfellow, the slave claimant, raised a large party of men in the region of Huntsville (said to have been headed by another preacher), who proceeded on horseback in pursuit of the girls. Their coming was noised round and became known, not in time, however, to effect the escape of the girls from their grandfather's house before the arrival of the slave-hunters.

Milly Wilkerson, the grandmother, sent her son or grandson on horseback with a horn, with orders to ride for life, and blow the horn to rouse the settlement; and he did it like a hero, and the colored people came pouring in from every direction, armed with clubs, hoes, axes, and whatever they could lay their hands on. The party shot at and wounded the boy in the arm as he was riding and blowing his horn, yet he did not flinch, but kept on riding and blowing as if for the crack of doom.

Milly, with the desperation of a wounded tiger, armed herself with a huge corn cutter, and threatened to cut down whoever undertook to attempt an entrance into her cabin. Meanwhile, the girls managed to escape through the back window to the woods, and thence to John H. Bond's and to Newport, and thence to Canada. Stringfellow never got his slaves again. It is said that the girls got through the crowd in the daytime, disguised as men. He, however, entered suit at Winchester against a large number of the people of that region for helping the girls to escape and hindering him from capturing them. We give below a copy of the complaint filed in the case which he brought. Mr. Stringfellow doubtless thought he was greatly robbed and terribly wronged by the escape and loss of those two girls, valued by him at $1,200. The other party, on the other hand, reckoned themselves to be doing service to God and humanity by aiding these poor fugitives in their attempt to escape from bondage.

The defendants were represented in court by Moorman Way and Samuel W. Parker, Esqs., and so sturdy a defense did they make that the plaintiff, weary and disheartened, abandoned the case in despair. (Still further details of the case are given by Judge Colgrove, which see.)

Many cases of interest took place in Randolph County, some of which are described in other parts of this volume.

The citizens of this county may well be thankful that the institution of human slavery, which made such occurrences possible, is forever numbered among the things that have been but are not.

There were various routes, more or less frequented, extending across the county. Knots of Antislavery men would be found here and there, even among a general proslavery population. One remarkable group was to be found in Jackson Township. Rev. Thomas Wiley, of New Lisbon, Milton Beach and Mr. Chandler, near Allensville, and perhaps others there, were active Abolitionists in the midst of a hostile community. Mr. Wiley, as a bold and fearless reformer, denounced slavery and the black laws, and declared he would never obey them. The Democrats, to test his sincerity, elected him to office, but he was true to his declarations and his convictions, and refused to qualify, paying the penalty instead required by the law.

Mr. Chandler was elected to some other office by the Democrats for the same reason, but he, too, refused.

The separation among the Friends, caused for a time much sorrow of heart, and much alienation; but time and the abolition of slavery have brought about a reconciliation, and most of those who had belonged to Antislavery Friends went back to the body. The larger part of those who were prominent in those times are long ago dead. Some of the younger ones are still living. Jehu Hiatt, Dr. Beverly, Job and Joab Thornburg, Daniel Hill, William Peacock, John A. Moorman, Solomon Wright, Ebenezer Tucker, Martin A. Reeder, and doubtless several others, are still living, but most have gone to their rest and their reward. As a result, the great body of the people of Randolph County became imbued with Antislavery sentiments, and ever since the Republican party arose, the county has given an immense majority for that organization. Nearly all the prominent citizens have been ranged with that party, though there have been a few notable exceptions who have boldly maintained against an overwhelming majority the doctrines and principles of the Democratic faith. They must have been unquestionably sincere, since they thereby cut themselves off from every hope of political preferment from the people of the county. Prominent among the movements in Antislavery in Randolph County may be reckoned the establishment, in 1846, of the Union Literary Institute, in Greensfork Township, northeast of Spartansburg, near the Ohio line, in the Greenville colored settlement. An account of the school may be found in the chapter on Education. The influence of the Institution was good in several ways in the elevation as to intelligence and morality of the people of color, in softening down the prejudice against color (since the school was always attended by some, and often by many whites), in standing as a steady and faithful protest against the foolish and cruel policy of ostracising any class of citizens, especially on account of color or race. The school still exists, and, after thirty-five years of labor for the outcast poor and the downtrodden ones of the land, still opens its welcoming doors to all who desire the advantages afforded within its friendly walls.

It is an interesting fact that Hiram Mendenhall, the gentleman who presented the famous petition to Henry Clay at Richmond, Ind., on the occasion of his visit to that place, was a resident of Unionsport, Randolph County. A fuller statement of the affair may be found in the notice of Hiram Mendenhall.

Another movement against slavery carried on in this region was the Free Labor Movement. Most Antislavery Friends held it wrong to use the products of slave labor; and they set on foot an enterprise to encourage free labor cotton and sugar to establish free labor gins and sugar houses, and agencies to buy and sell free labor products.

Several stores were established in the region, and it is an interesting reminiscence that at the sale of the personal estate of Moorman Way, Esq. (lately deceased), in October, 1881, a considerable quantity of goods left on hand from his old free labor store were offered.

UNDERGROUND RAILROAD.

William Steele is thought by some to have been the founder of what is called the Underground Railroad.

William Steele was a Scotchman, and second cousin to W. E. Gladstone, Prime Minister of England.

He was born at Biggar, on the Clyde, in Scotland, in 1809, and came to America in 1818. They resided first at Winchester, Va., then at Barnesville, Belmont Co., Ohio, ten years, and then at Woodfield, Monroe Co., Ohio, thirty years. He moved afterward to Kansas, and still again to Oregon in 1872. Mr. Steele died in 1880, in Oregon.

He was a pioneer in Antislavery with Benjamin Lundy.

Lundy was a saddler at St. Clairsville, Ohio, and had accumulated several thousand dollars at his trade. He called a meeting at his house in St. Clairsville in 1815, and five or six persons attended, forming at that time what they called the Union Humane Society, declaring war upon slavery. Six years afterward, Lundy commenced the publication of the Genius of Emancipation at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio.

William Steele became interested in the Antislavery work from his early youth, and is said to have reduced the assistance of fugitive slaves to a system. The organization he set on foot spread shortly throughout the West. They had signs and passwords, but had very little, if anything, in writing. Among other prominent Antislavery men Mr. Steele was honored by having a reward of $5,000 offered for his delivery in Virginia. It seems he did not care enough for the money to go to claim it himself, and no one else ever performed the job, and Mr. Steele spent his life and closed his days in the free West.

It is a wonderful thing, and yet supposed to be a fact, that no slave was ever taken from the hands of the agents of the Underground Railroad. Mr. Steele lived to see the work of the Underground Railroad accomplished, and the business of the company quietly and honorably brought to an end by the war of the rebellion and the emancipation proclamation, through which, according to the word of Scripture, a nation was born in a day.

RUNAWAYS.

For unknown ages slaves have run away. David had a runaway slave in his camp before he was made King of Israel. Onesimus ran away from Philemon in Paul's time—i. e., some say so, while others will have it that Onesimus was Philemon's brother "according to the flesh." The Seminoles in Florida were mingled with runaways from Georgia.

"Oppression maketh a wise man mad;" what, then, will it not do upon a poor woe-begone slave? Some fifty or sixty years ago, people in the Northern States began to help fugitive slaves to escape from servitude. Gradually the work grew into a system, as shown in the biography of William Steele, above written. Stations were agreed on, routes arranged, signals adopted, conductors appointed and the operation of the affair became quite regular and business-like. The secrecy with which the work was carried on made people call it the Underground Railroad. On some routes great numbers passed. Abolitionists of course, were the chief actors, though others and even proslavery men and slaveholders themselves sometimes assisted more or less. Few runaways were captured and very few Abolitionists were ever convicted for helping slaves off.

We give a few incidents below, showing somewhat the nature of the work. A colored fugitive was staying at Daniel Worth's, in West River Township. One day, as the colored man was in the house fondling the baby, pursurers came after him. Daniel was near the door outside, and talked loud. Mrs. Worth, hearing them, said, "Who are they?" The negro, looking out, knew his master, and, dropping the child, "lit out" through the back window for the "fallen timber," a half mile away. They saw him and gave chase, but he got to the timber, and to find him there was worse than to find a needle in a hay mow. He was safe. They were greatly enraged, and offered Daniel Worth $100 if he would bring the slave in, but he would not. They threatened to go and bring men and clear out the whole fallen timber, and asked Daniel how far it extended. "So many miles west, and I never heard how far into Ohio," was his reply. They came back several times, but never got their man.

Alexander Davis, a large, stout man, came from Tennessee on horseback. He could write, and wrote passes for himself. Pursuers tracked him to Economy. A lad overheard their plans and gave the alarm. He was taken to Daniel Charles', Greensfork, then to Joseph Thornburg's, Cherry Grove, then to Newport, and so to Canada. On the way from Cherry Grove to Newport he met the pursuers. It was rather dark. He knew them, but they did not recognize him. After awhile he left Canada for New York City, and sent a letter saying that he was doing well.

An interesting young man from Georgia once came to Economy. He was skillful, being a repairer of engines. Aaron Worth was attending school at the Union Literary Institute, and took him there, and he was forwarded to Canada. They never heard from him again.

Two brothers, Dawes, traveling, stopped at Winchester, having two slaves. They were tanners, and decided to locate there. They contracted for tanbark, etc., but were advised to go back to Kentucky, and sell their slaves. They concluded to do so, and to buy hides in Cincinnati as they returned. They set out at noon, and got to Newport about dark, in a double wagon. Dr. H. followed them, got a warrant at Newport, twelve men pursued and arrested them as kidnapers, and brought them back to Newport in the night. They found the law and the temper of the people were such that conviction for kidnaping would certainly ensue, and they were persuaded to emancipate the slaves. The point was this: Owners were allowed to hold their slaves while simply passing through, but their contracting in view of settling was interpreted to be in law a location; location made the slaves free, and attempting to take them away was kidnapping. They tried to prosecute Levi Coffin for his part in the transaction, but they did not succeed.

Lewis Talbert ran away from a plantation a few miles from the Ohio River, in Kentucky, and came to the Union Literary Institute. After attending school for some months, he grew so uneasy thinking of his sisters in slavery, that he could not rest, and resolved to go and get them off to the free States. He went, stayed one day and two nights on the farm; did not see his sisters, but left them word that he had been there, and that he would come again. In three weeks he was back at the school. After awhile he went again, got his sisters, brought them to the Ohio, but for some reason one sister was afraid to cross, and the other would not come without her; so they went back, and he crossed into Ohio and came on to Newport and to the Institute again. Meanwhile, he had told others how to run away, and several had left, and pursuit was made. The hunters came to Richmond, got assistance, and sixteen men came in the night on horseback to Newport. Lewis had been there, but had left. They found no fugitives. Three men started at midnight on foot to come to the Institute to tell Lewis to get out of the way. They came just at daylight, and asked, "Is Lewis Talbert here?" ,,No; why?" "Because if he is he must make himself scarce; they are after him; sixteen men came into Newport last night, and will be right up here." Lewis had "vamosed" already. They did not come after him, nor did they find him anywhere else. Afterward he laid his plans to visit Kentucky again. A confidant unwittingly revealed them, and his master's son came to Indianapolis, seized him, had him adjudged a slave, and took him bound to Kentucky. He said afterward, "That was just where I wished and had started to go; but I did not fancy that style." His friends supposed him done for; but in six weeks from the day he was put upon the train at Indianapolis, his black face popped in at the door of the Institute. "Why, Lewis, we thought you down in New Orleans by this time." "Oh no; I was never born to be sold down the river." He had been twice sold, and the trader had started his gang on the steamboat down the river. They let him be loose on the boat. He managed to get a chambermaid to cut the ropes of a boat behind and let him down into the river. He paddled for shore, and found himself in Southern Indiana, with only shirt and pants. He was taken up by some amateur hunters, but he put a bold face on it and said he was a free negro from about Richmond, and showed a genuine note of hand, signed by Elijah Coffin, President of the State Bank, Richmond. They let him go. He afterward went to Canada and became a preacher. Whether he ever got his sisters away, or what has become of them, or of him either, is not known by the writer of this sketch.

SLAVE GIRLS—CABIN CREEK.

Two slave girls were brought into the Cabin Creek colored settlement. They were closely tracked to the house where they were. A parley was held; a crowd had gathered; the girls were disguised with men's clothes and smuggled through the crowd, taken to John Bond's, then to Dunkirk, Cherry Grove, and to Newport, at Levi Coffin's. There they were concealed between two feather beds. The pursuers traced them there too, but they were never taken. The girls were sent away to Canada. (See fuller account elsewhere.)

A gentleman in Richmond had his house so fixed that slaves could be concealed so that, though his dwelling was searched over and over, time and again, while the hunted ones were there, still none were ever found. Even his children never knew until years afterward of that place of concealment. Once a company of fugitives were traced directly to his house; the house was watched outside while it was searched inside, and was watched for days and nights, but no discovery was made, the slaves were never found, and got safe off at last.

EMSLEY JONES' ADVENTURE.

One dark night a colored man came to Emsley Jones', an Abolitionist near Dunkirk, and told him that a runaway wished to see him. He went out, and the negro led him directly to a couple of slaveholders. "Where are those slaves?" "I cannot tell," said he. One of them struck him with a sharp knife to cut his throat, but only hit his chin. He stepped aside, and in the dark got out of their way; but they never found the slaves.

INCIDENTS TOLD BY JOHN H. BOND.

"I have known of twenty-five in one company. They came partly in a wagon, and some on foot from Newport, and were sent to Jonesboro or to Camden. I took one company of ten to Jonesboro; we had to camp out one night.

"Seventeen lodged at my house at once. The man who took them on went through to Jonesboro in one day and night. Pursuit was made. Three of us rode all night, and got to them at Jonesboro about daylight. The gang were dispersed into the woods, and were kept there three weeks before they could be got away. The pursuers got there before noon. Three men, Jack Page and two others, were the hunters. They hunted round for several days, but went off without their prey."

Gangs of fugitives used to come to the Institute. At one time fifteen came in one company. It was a woman and her ten children, a son-in-law and a grandchild, and two others. The woman and children belonged to one man, and they were all he had. She was asked, "Were you not used well?" "Yes." "Why did you run away?" "My children were my master's, and the mistress and the white children wanted us to be sold, and we thought it time to quit."

Fugitives would often stop and attend school for awhile at the Institute. At one time there were ten at school together.

The whole subject of the Underground Railroad is a remarkable episode in the history of this country. Many exciting occurrences, and some amusing ones as well, took place in the progress of events. At Oberlin, Ohio, at one time, some slaves were conveyed out of town toward the lake in open daylight, under a load of hay. One black man was once painted white, and rode off to a place of security in that disguise. On one occasion, a decoy wagon was sent out in advance toward Elyria from Oberlin containing some free negroes, residents of the town, some of them dressed as if they were women, knowing they would be watched and followed, as they were. At Elyria, eight miles away, the whole group was arrested. As much delay as possible was made, but in the course of two or three hours after the arrest, the fact was learned that this party was a "sell." But meanwhile the real fugitives had been taken away by another road entirely unknown to the would-be slave catchers, and got safely off to Canada.

At one time a slave woman at one of the lake ports, who had been closely pursued, was conveyed across the lake in a coffin as a corpse, being accompanied by several friends in deep mourning.

The pursuers went over to Canada on the same boat, but they never learned the ruse that had been practiced upon them. The great mass of events in connection with this movement will, of course, be lost in oblivion. A few have been rescued from the general fate, and we have made a small addition to the number for the perusal of future generations.

In addition to the excitement and separation among the Friends on account of slavery, the Methodist denomination also suffered to some extent by the "True Wesleyan" movement. For a considerable time, that body found many adherents in this region of the State, including a considerable number in Randolph County. Some account of the Wesleyans may be found in the chapter devoted to the churches, as also a statement concerning the Antislavery Friends in the same chapter.

Some other incidents also may be found elsewhere in these pages among the "reminiscences" contained in this volume.

It is an amusing fact that many persons really supposed that the Underground Railroad was underground. A young lady from New Hampshire once asked the writer of these sketches how the thing was ever managed "under the ground." "What do you mean?" rejoined he. "Why, the Underground Railroad—how did they get to it and from it?" said she. "Did you understand that it was really underground?" "Yes, of course; I never heard it called anything else." And then we had to explain to that young lady, who was really an intelligent girl, why the Underground Railroad had received that curious and expressive appellation, at which explanation the lady was greatly surprised in her turn.

WILKERSON GIRLS—SLAVE CASE.

In 1839, a peculiar case was entered in the Randolph Circuit Court, being a charge against several persons, colored and others, by Thomas Stringfellow, of Tennessee, for concealing his two female slaves, Susan and Margaret, and assisting them to escape.

The affair was a famous one, and made great stir at the time.

Two girls by the name of Wilkerson had managed to escape from Tennessee, and had made their way to the house of their grandfather Wilkerson, residing in the colored settlement on Cabin Creek, in Randolph County. They were pursued and overtaken at that place. A gang of some seventeen armed men on horseback, raised in the vicinity of Huntsville, had gathered and gone to the house where the girls were. Meanwhile, the old lady Wilkerson had armed herself with a corn knife, and, with fierce and deadly earnestness, guarded the door, threatening to cut down whoever attempted to enter. She also put her little grandson upon a horse, with a horn, with orders to ride for life, and blow the alarm as he went, which he did with a will, and the neighbors came together as if running to a house on fire. In the confusion the girls were gotten out of the back window into the woods, and so they escaped. It serves to show how blunted were the moral perceptions of men on this subject of human liberty at that time, that the slave claimant was a Methodist clergyman, and the leader of the troop of pursuing horsemen was a Baptist preacher. They doubtless, like Paul of old in his Pharisaic blindness, thought they were doing good service to God as well as to man; but thank heaven, those days of darkness are past.

The indignant declaration of brave old Massachusetts, by the prophetic lips of the gifted Whittier, has become sober fact throughout the entire National jurisdiction:

"No slave hunt in our borders,
No bloodhound on our strand;
No fetters in the Bay State,
No slave upon our land!"

We give the complaint in full as a memento of the condition of our common country forty years ago.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, CIRCUIT COURT, APRIL TERM, 1839.—TRESPASS—DAMAGES LAID, $1,200.

State of Indiana, } ss.
Randolph County. }

Thomas Stringfield, Plaintiff, vs. Alexander Williams, Robert Scott, Milly Wilkerson, Martin Scott, William Wood, Samuel Green, Willborn Wilkerson, Matthew Chavis, Benjamin Outland, Defendants.

Thomas Stringfield, a resident citizen of the State of Tennessee, in the United States of America, complains of the defendants named aforesaid, being in custody, etc., on a plea of trespass, to wit:

That the plaintiff was heretofore, to wit, on the 26th of January, 1839, and for a long time before and still is, the true and lawful owner of two negro women—Susan and Margaret—of great value, to wit, of the value of $1,200, and duly entitled to claim property and service in the said negro women, by and under the laws of the State of Tennessee, And, whereas, the said negro women had, before the day last aforesaid, escaped from the plaintiff to whom they owed service as aforesaid, and had come into the county of Randolph aforesaid, without the consent of the plaintiff. And, whereas, the plaintiff had sent to the county of Randolph a duly qualified agent, with authority to arrest said negro women, and take them back to the State of Tennessee aforesaid, yet the defendants, well knowing the premises, and that the said negro women were the property of the said plaintiff, and owed to him labor and service under the law of Tennessee, afterward, to wit, on the 26th of January, 1839, with force and arms, at the county of Randolph aforesaid, did unlawfully, knowingly, forcibly and wilfully conceal and harbor and entice away said negro women, and did then and there forcibly, unlawfully, knowingly and wilfully, after due notice as aforesaid, that they were the plaintiff's property, conceal, command and assist the said negro women to make their escape, and to elude the lawful pursuit of the plaintiff for the said negro women, By means whereof, the said negro women, the property of the said plaintiff, escaped from him, the said plaintiff, and went to parts unknown, and have become wholly lost to the plaintiff; and other wrongs then and there did to the plaintiff serious harm and damage, contrary to the statute and against the peace of the State, and to the damage of the plaintiff of $1,200, and therefore he asks, etc.

ELKINS & PERRY, Attorneys for Plaintiff.

The case was contested for a time, Moorman Way and Samuel W. Parker being the attorneys for the defendants. The case was never brought to final trial, however. It was abandoned at last by the plaintiff, enraged, no doubt, by the determined opposition he encountered from the Abolitionists, and convinced of the uselessness of further contest, and the hopelessness of any attempt either to recover his slaves or to get redress for loss of their persons and their services. Such occurrences, of course, greatly provoked slaveholders and those who were not Abolitionists, but those who belonged to that despised but determined band felt a necessity laid upon them to fight slavery in every possible manner to the bitter end. They felt in their inmost souls that "man is worth more than laws," and that the liberty of an oppressed but innocent race was an object worthy of the utmost activity and determination.

ANTISLAVERY INCIDENTS—JOHN H. BOND.

"The Underground Railroad through Cabin Creek began about 1831. The first fugitive was brought by Thomas Frazier. Thomas rode on horseback and the slave walked. Great numbers have passed here first and last, probably hundreds of them, on foot, on horseback, and in wagons. Seventeen is the largest number that ever lodged at our house at one time. They would be brought from Newport, and be taken from here to Jonesboro, or elsewhere. I took one company of ten to Jonesboro. The trip consumed three days, and we had to camp out one night. We knew that they were coming. Word was sent from farther south to William Beard, in Union County, and by him to Levi Coffin, and from there to Cabin Creek.

At one time a company that had been sent on to Michigan were pursued, and a man went all the way from Cabin Creek to Michigan on horseback to give warning.

A man was once caught and taken back to Newport, but his friends there managed to rescue him."

Scores and scores of cases might be given if there were room to print the recital, which, however, there is not.

REMINISCENCES—JESSE WAY.

"One day H. H. Way (Uncle Henry), came to me and said, "Jesse, is thy horse in thy stable?" "Yes." "Has thee a saddle and bridle, and are all in good condition? Does thee need them for a few days?" "No, not especially." "Well, feed him properly, and if thee don't find him in the stable in the morning, thee need not be uneasy."

The horse disappeared that night, but several days afterward he was there again. H. H. Way had been up into Michigan, or somewhere, and a troop of negroes on horseback had passed through the town.

One morning, on passing by Levi Coffin's, many people were standing in the street around his door. "What is the matter? Is somebody dead?" Henry Way came out of the house and said. "Only a fresh lot of negroes come to town."

Henry H. Way was a young physician, and brought a lot of medicines along to Daniel Dawson's, whom they moved to Blue River, in the south part of the State. (Jesse Way still survives, a resident of Winchester, and an honored citizen of that place, one of the few, the very few remnants of "pioneerism" still remaining in this county of ours.)

Old Newport (and Levi Coffin in that town) was the head center for Underground Railroad work for this whole region. He removed to Cincinnati, and until the end of slavery was prominent in Antislavery labors, assisting in the escape of thousands of fleeing fugitives from bondage toward the North Star. Levi and his worthy wife died a few years ago.

NEGRO REGISTRY.

In consequence of the adoption of the Thirteenth Article of the Constitution of 1851, a book was prepared for the use of the County Clerk wherein to register persons of African blood, to show that they were residents of the State before the ratification by the sovereign people of Indiana of the Constitution for the Commonwealth containing that remarkable article including, of course, the identical article itself. The book contains, perhaps, 500 blanks, each for a separate negro or mulatto; in fact, twice as many as the heads of colored families residing in the county. It is a noteworthy fact that in Randolph there were at the time two large and strong colored settlements, and another also that Randolph County alone among all the counties of the State, gave a majority against the Thirteenth Article.

But so far at least as Old Randolph is concerned, the registry business was nearly a "plumb failure." Just twelve is the entire number registered. One was recorded by George W. Monks, as Circuit Clerk, in 1853, two years after the adoption of the article requiring it, and near the close of his term of office. The other eleven were registered in a group by the name of Peelle, in 1857, one of them being the noted "Cesar Peelle," near Spartansburg, Ind., who died in the winter of 1880, a very old man.

The last acts of registry were done by H. H. Neff, Clerk at the time, and anyone can see by the looks of the record that he had no heart in the work, but that he did the thing just because he had to.

That Thirteenth Article and the laws under it, though the article itself received the amazing majority of nearly one hundred thousand, was, nevertheless, for the most part a dead letter, and persons of color continued to come and go at their pleasure, and men harbored and hired them and traded with people of color as before, never so much as asking the question, "Where did you come from?" These laws were indeed sometimes employed to vex and scare the friends of humanity. One prominent teacher within the author's knowledge was seriously threatened with indictment by the Grand Jury of a neighboring county for harboring persons of color, contrary to the statute and against the peace of the State and the safety of the Commonwealth, because the Trustees of the institution of which he had charge allowed some bright, active and upright colored youth from the State of Ohio to attend the school and enjoy its privileges. But that old Thirteenth Article is dead, dead, thrice and four, yea, five times dead at last. It was a dead letter at first; the amendments to the Federal Constitution killed it the second time, the resulting decision of the Indiana Supreme Court killed it the third time, and an overwhelming popular majority of the voters of Indiana who voted upon the question killed it the fourth time; and after the Supreme Court of the State, three to two, had galvanized the lifeless corpse with a quasi vitality, a second popular vote by a sweeping majority pushed the dead and rattling skeleton back into its grave to come out thence to vex the eyes of living men no more forever.

CHAPTER XV.

AGRICULTURE.

General—Fruit—Horticulture—Sorghum—Fencing—Ditches—Drains—Weather, Crops, Etc.—Patrons of Husbandry—Fairs—Implements.

GENERAL.

TILLING the ground has always, from the time that Adam was set to dress and to keep the "garden eastward in Eden" till this very hour, been the chief employment of the human race. Without food and raiment, the human kind would soon be extinct, and these must come, directly or remotely, mostly from the soil. And in this Western world nearly the whole means of livelihood was for a long time found in farming or around the farmer's fireside.

In these artificial times, to begin on a farm requires a formidable outlay of money. A modern house and barn built of lumber, etc., purchased at a railroad town and brought by the locomotive from the distant factory, or by river-floats and by steamer from the forests of Michigan or Wisconsin, or elsewhere, is an expensive thing. A stalk of wheat cannot be cut down in these latter days without a $150 reaper, nor a spire of grass brought to the ground without a costly patent mower; no raking can be done except with a patent horse-rake, a hill of corn cannot be put into the soil without a horse-drill, or, at least, a hand-planter; nor can the growing corn be worked unless a man has a walking plow or a riding plow, mayhap, with an umbrella to sit under; hay must be pitched into the mow with a horse and a pulley fork. To sow a kernel of wheat one must have a two-horse drill, and, to thresh it, a $1,000 steam engine and a $500 separator.

The machinery of the present time has come to be so multifarious and so complicated that an old-time pioneer who has been dead fifty years, were he to return to the scenes of his forest life, would be utterly nonplussed and could not imagine what the immense array of "new-fangled inventions" could be intended for.

Our fathers and grandfathers, when first they threaded their weary way among the giant forest trees to the spot of their choice in this new country, needed no such host of outlandish, bewildering implements, nor such a costly array of edifices. A rude camp, made of poles or rails against a huge log, and upheld by stakes driven into the ground, or at best a log cabin, the logs dragged up to the spot by a horse and raised by helping, friendly neighbors, or by settlers gathered from miles around, or by the Indians themselves, was, to the hardy emigrants, a palace, because it was their own. No nails, nor rock, nor brick; no glass nor plank were needed; no boughten tables, nor doors, nor shingles, nor bedsteads, nor chairs had to be purchased; the roof was clapboards, weighted down by poles laid on them, or fastened by pins through the boards. The doors and the floor and the tables were puncheons, and the chairs were pieces of puncheon set upon legs; the hearth was pounded clay, the fireplace was clay, against puncheons; the chimney was dirt and sticks built up together; the bedstead was poles, with ends bored into the walls and held up at the corner by a single post driven into the ground; the hinges, latches, etc., were all made of wood; the latch was raised by a string, and the door was locked by pulling the string inside.

The wheat was cut with a sickle, threshed with a flail and cleaned by shaking in a sheet or by a basket fan; hay was cut with a scythe and raked with a wooden fork, and hauled on a sled or on some poles to the log stable or the stack. Plowing was done with a bar-share plow and tending corn with a single shovel plow; hauling was done upon a sled and gears were made with rawhide tugs and corn-husk collars. Clothes for men were made of deerskin; buckskin jacket, hunting-shirt and vest and pants and buckskin moccasins and deerskin cap were an excellent supply for men, and home-made linsey wolsey for women. Men could dress the deerskins themselves, and make them up into garments with their own hands. Women would pull and thresh, brake and scutch and hackle their flax, and spin and weave the cloth, and make it into garments for themselves and for the children. Even the girls were equal to the occasion. At one time, a mother of a large family with several nearly grown girls was obliged to leave home for ten days. The flax lay spread upon the ground, where it had been placed for rotting. The girls, with the help of a half-grown brother, gathered up the flax, broke, swingled and hackled it, spun and wove it and made it into clothes for the younger children, and when the mother came home, the little "younkers" were wearing their new clothes as proud as young princes. Little wheel, reel, winding blades, warping bars, rattling, pounding loom and hand-needle were better than a $500,000 factory, for they were right at home and could be put to use at any moment without money and without price, and no cost except labor; and stalwart boys and strapping girls had muscle in abundance. Hand-mill and hominy-pounder, or burnt-log mill, or corn-grater, made meal or hominy, saving the trouble of going twenty, thirty or forty miles on horseback, or with two or three yoke of slowly-plodding oxen through almost trackless ways to the distant mill.

Many came from the Old Country with only a solitary pack-horse, and that horse supplied their need for weeks, and sometimes for months. A settler would often lose his only pony and would be obliged to dig along with none, because he would be too poor to get another one.

Often settlers would move into the woods in the winter, so as to take advantage of the sugar-making season before deadening the splendid sugar trees, which were so abundant in many places. One family who moved into Stony Creek Township nearly at its first settlement, consisting of a young man and his active, robust wife and her young brother, a lad of sixteen years, had a very serious misfortune almost at their first coming. Only three or four days after their arrival, while he was splitting clapboards with a "frow," it glanced into his knee and gave such a fearful wound that he was helpless on the puncheons of their camp floor for six weeks or more. They had come in February, and the heroic wife and her helpful brother, no wise dismayed, set to making sugar. They had brought with them four large kettles on purpose for that very service, and, by the coming of warm weather, the woman and the lad had succeeded in making four or five barrels of excellent tree sugar, which answered a splendid purpose during the coming summer months in exchange for corn and other supplies. Their only horse, also, died shortly, but one was obtained of an uncle in Wayne County, with which they contrived to pass the summer. The husband is dead, but the heroic wife is still alive to tell the tale of their early trials.

Another settler some years before that made a great quantity of sugar, and, on taking it to Cincinnati, found the market overstocked and had to bring part of it home again, and, being a mechanic, he set a barrel of sugar open in the shop for anybody to eat when he chose to do so, and in that way he contrived to get rid of his surplus sugar.

Many of the very earliest residents were merely transient, making no "improvement" beyond barely a cabin for temporary occupancy, opening no clearing, but subsisting by hunting and trapping, living on the flesh and bartering the hides for such necessaries as had to be purchased. It took little to do such families. Johnnycake and hominy and venison and other wild game furnished them an ample subsistence. And, when permanent settlers began to plant their stakes and build their cabins, these "squatters" would "pack up their traps" and "shove out" for some newer region. One of the Western pioneers declared that he would not live nearer to any neighbor than fifteen miles, and another, that he wished to be so far from settlers that he had to "camp out" at least one night in going to visit them. A neighbor only three or four miles distant was "close by," and a woman thought it no hardship to start out of a morning on foot, with a babe in her arms, and two or three others trotting and prancing along by her side, to meeting, three or four miles, or to visit a neighbor at the same distance.

For instance, when the Peacocks and the Hills settled in Jericho, in the spring of 1818, Mr. Kennedy was living near Mt. Zion Meeting-house, south of Nathaniel Kemp's. They were the nearest settlers to the Jericho people, and so they would "neighbor" together upon a path marked by blazed trees through the woods. When Rev. Thomas Wiley first settled near New Lisbon, north of what is now Union City, their nearest neighbor, outside of their own group, was Mr. Fowler, one mile south of Union City, and those "neighbors" used to visit back and forth, because they lived so close together, you know.

And it is the uniform declaration of all early settlers that the society of acquaintances was much more highly prized, and welcomes were far more hospitable in those days, than is the case in these later years.

But when men "came to stay," the next thing after building a house, or, oftener, a camp, was to make a "clearing," and plant a field of corn. The man and larger boys would set promptly to girdling the larger trees, "twelve inches and over," and under that size, to cut down and pile and burn. The woman and the girls and younger boys would pile brush and grub, and fire the heaps, and in a few weeks, by the time for corn planting, early or late, a sightly clearing would appear, and the precious seed would be buried in the earth, forerunner of the golden harvest. Sometimes seven acres of ground would be prepared and planted at the first planting, by a single family. With the "buying" propensities implanted in the present artificial generation, these methods would seem almost like starvation, but wants were then few and easily supplied. There were no roads and nearly no markets. The towns were few and small—mere log hamlets in the vast and endless forest. When the first settlers came to Randolph, Cincinnati was a little straggling town; Richmond was a hamlet of perhaps twenty houses; Newport, Winchester, Muncie, Indianapolis and hundreds of other places, now fresh and thriving towns, had never yet been thought of. Nineteen-twentieths of the whole State of Indiana were still virgin forest, and to get into or out of these new settlements was a task indeed. Iron and salt must in some way be gotten, and they were obtained, but it was "by the hardest." One resident, still living, declares that his father once paid $18 for a barrel of salt. Another one, now an old man, says that a barrel of salt which he once got from Dayton stood him in $11.

These prices are, of course, very extreme cases, yet $4 and $5 per barrel were only ordinary prices. And iron, too, and articles made of iron, were very expensive. But the products of the farm were much of the time excessively low. Pork and wheat and corn and cattle, almost the only things available to a farmer, were so low as scarcely to repay the cost or trouble of hauling or driving to market. A pioneer of Central Ohio, who came from Eastern New York as late as 1839, had, in the fall of 1841, two crops of corn and of oats on hand—the oats in the stack, and the corn, one crop in the shock and the other in the crib. When asked by an Eastern visitor why he did not market his grain, "What's the use?" he said; "corn is only 10 cents at Columbus and oats 12 cents, forty-five miles away, and that will not pay for hauling them to market," which was probably the fact.

In a neighboring county, as late as 1842 or 1843, in a diary kept by an observant citizen, facts are noted from time to time, to wit:

"Eggs are very scarce and hard to get—6 cents; butter is scarce and rising rapidly—8 cents; corn high, hardly any to be got—price, 15 cents; pork (net), brisk, good business doing—$2 a hundred."

Early settlers of this county have sold pork at Richmond at $1 a hundred net, and half trade at that. A resident who came in about 1842 was offered pork, good and well-fatted, at 75 cents cash per (net) hundred, and declined to purchase, because, as he said, he could do better. Another who was born in Randolph, and is still a citizen, says that he has hauled hams and shoulders to Cincinnati and sold them for $2 a hundred. An ancient resident of Wayne County assured the writer of this article that he had tried and tried in vain to sell as good wheat as ever grew for 12½ cents per bushel to obtain money to pay his taxes.

An emigrant to Randolph County as late as 1846 bought a cow with a calf ten weeks old, fat and fine (which now alone would almost or quite bring the money), for $10.

He bought a dressed hog, weighing 212 pounds, for $4.25. A year or two before that (fall of 1844), the same man bought an excellent cow (which, if he had now, he would not sell for $50) for $9, and he sold the same cow for $7.

Beef during those times was sold at 1½ to 2 cents per pound. It is a curi us fact, however, that tallow was even then 8 to 10 cents a pound, whereas now, while beef is anywhere from 5 to 15 cents, tallow only is from 5 to 6 cents a pound—lower than beef ribs! The quantity of tallow has vastly increased, but the demand for it has decreased still more. Then tallow was from two to five times as high as ordinary beef in the large, now the tallow is the very cheapest part of the whole animal.

For many years, the farmers of Randolph did, not as they wished, but as they could, and labor-saving inventions and other improvements were but slow in finding their way into what was then the far West. And in the stock, too, the settlers had to be satisfied with the commonest cattle, sheep, swine, etc. "Elm-peelers" for hogs, that, when fattened, would weigh 150 pounds, were good enough, and a 200-pound hog was splendid. There were many wild hogs in the woods, and it was one of the diversions of the time to go out on horseback, with gun and dog, to chase and shoot their winter's pork, with a horse and boy, moreover, to hitch to the gambrels of the dead hogs and haul them to the open road, whence the wagon or the sled would take several at once to the dressing-place at home. And the cattle and the horses were of the commonest kind. Many, indeed, did their best with the "common stock," and not a few fine specimens of the "native breeds" were to be seen, showing what care and feeding will accomplish. But, as time rolled on, men saw what older settlements in Ohio and elsewhere had done, and gradually "improvement" began to be the order of the day in Randolph, as well as in other places. It is, in fact, true that but few of the Randolph farmers have at any time been noted for extensive handling of improved breeds, most preferring to go to Wayne County or to Ohio to get what animals they wished. But the result of the gradual movement has been that the whole matter of domestic stock has, in the course of years, been almost wholly revolutionized, and the elm-peeler hog and the scrub cattle are rarely, if ever, seen. The farmers of Randolph, moreover, have kept pace to the full with the onward march of things, and the fields, and the sheds, and the dwellings, of the thrifty and wide-awake residents are filled with all manner of machinery and implements without number or end, to make labor easier and more productive.

Stock Improvement.—James Moorman is thought to have brought nearly the first bull to Randolph County of blooded stock from Kentucky, in 1853. Benjamin Hunt, west of Lynn, is known to have handled Durham blooded stock on his farm about 1840 or 1842. He had also black Berkshire hogs even earlier than that. William D. Frazee had fine blooded cattle. He exhibited, in 1858, a splendid Durham cow, which, with only poor keeping, gave nine gallons of milk per day, and whose calf at a year old, without ever having eaten an ear of corn, was estimated at 1,000 to 1,100 pounds' weight. Other cattle-owners were Charles Stevenson, below Huntsville; Isom Sedgwick, near Huntsville; John Brooks, west of Winchester; Anthony Way (one of the leading stock men), etc. William Starbuck and Nelson Pegg, near Buena Vista, have dealt in shorthorns. James Branson, of Stony Creek, first had Jersey cattle. In sheep, Joshua Johnson, of Buena Vista, and Isaac Farquhar, of Huntsville, have owned fine stock. As to swine, Benjamin Hunt was one of the very earliest. Nelson Pegg, Buena Vista; Elza McIntyre, Maxville; Messrs. Graves, Morton and Kennon, Bartonia; —— Botkin, Farmland, and others have been noted. Thomas Smith Kennon has dealt in fast horses, and has a private track on which to test and train and show the speed and mettle and bottom of the horses which he may own. In 1882, Samuel Conkling, living west of Union City, had one bull and a cow and some heifers and the finest mare in the county. She took, afterward, the first premium at the Ohio State Fair; the cattle were shorthorns.

The first improved swine were "black Berkshires." Who first introduced them or when is not now known. Peter Stidham, of Greensfork; Esquire Graves, of Bartonia, as also George Parent, near Union City, in Ohio, have been prominent in dealing in blooded swine, as also in sheep. Messrs. Morton and Kunkel, near Bartonia, have also done something in that line.

The first nursery in the region was by Joseph Cole, in Darke County, Ohio. Afterward, George Gephart, south of Union City, established a nursery, and after him, Benjamin Buckingham, west of Union City. Levi Hill, of Greensfork, south of Spartansburg, is carrying on the nursery business to a considerable extent. Mr. Woodbury got his trees in Wayne County.

Among stockmen Jeremiah Middleton, William M. Campbell, Wilson Anderson and James Ruby, of Greensfork, deal largely in swine.

Joseph Hewitt, near Neff; Gallaher, south of Neff; Israel Smith, son of Amos Smith, in Stony Creek, have handled much stock, some of them having been engaged in raising and selling for twenty-five years or more. Armfield Thornburg, in 1839, owned what was judged to be the best horse then in the county. He kept the animal two years, charging $8 per colt, and clearing $450 the first year. The horse was taken into Iowa to Black Hawk's Purchase, and afterward to Illinois, and sold for $265. The horse was of the Bertrand stock, raised in Clinton County, Ohio.

Samuel Amburn and Isaac J. Smith, east of Windsor, are good farmers. Smith especially raises great numbers of swine, owning sometimes twenty-five brood sows in a single year.

Stony Creek, as also Nettle Creek, is a good township, finely watered by streams and springs, and well suited both for stock and grain. At the present time, Calvin Hinshaw, north of Lynn, is very prominent among owners of swine. He has a large herd of very fine animals of the Poland-China variety, selling them at high prices.

Among farmers who have handled fancy stock in years past have been Jonathan Johnson, Nathan Johnson, William Johnson, Anthony Way, Benjamin Hunt, David Clevinger, Frank Cranor, Paul Beard, Lemuel Wiggins, besides others not known.

Nathan Johnson used to deal extensively in improved stock, mostly short-horned cattle. Joel A. Newman was engaged considerably in the cattle business, but he has mostly quit. Daniel Engle owns a large stock of cattle and swine. Jonathan Johnson and Elijah Nichols were stockmen thirty years ago. Isaiah Hockett dealt in Berkshire hogs thirty or forty years ago; he was one of the very earliest to deal in improved breeds. Lemuel Wiggins, at Losantville, has been a large cattle-owner; he owns twelve orchards on his various farms. John C. Clevinger brought twelve head of cattle (males and females) from Warren County, Ohio, about 1855; he sold them for $60 to $100 each before the war. Henry C. Thornburg, Mr. Driscoll and Thomas W. Reece bought one each at $100. Mr. Reece had improved stock later, from Wayne County, Ind. William Adkins brought swine, chiefly Poland-China, from Butler County, Ohio. One male, three years old, was sold by Adkins for $58. A. J. Day, in later years, sold many pigs. Marion Hewitt has fed fifty to sixty head of swine in a year. William Hewitt raises 100 to 120 head; J. C. Clevinger often has 100 head, etc.

These men deal also largely in cattle. Horses and sheep throughout the region are about on an average. The stock of horses is good, and there are many splendid animals owned. Sheep are but few, and of but moderately improved stock.

William Hewitt has raised considerable fruit; he sold 300 bushels of winter fruit in 1880. Marion Hewitt also sells quite a quantity of fruit. William Peacock and William A. Macy, of Wayne Township, have orchards of excellent fruit.

John T. Thornburg has engaged extensively in bee culture, but, during the winter of 1880–81, his bees died extensively, many of his hives being killed by the severity of the cold. Bee culture is low, the swarms have largely perished, and people have become greatly discouraged in the matter. William Johnson, of Washington Township, is employed in bee culture, with much interest and skill and gratifying success; he has obtained Queen bees from Alabama and the "Holy Land" for the improvement of his stock of bees, as also whole swarms from Alabama, obtaining, in 1880, six from that State.

FRUIT INPROVEMENT.

The first orchard is thought to have been planted by Henry H. Way, near Sampletown, west of Winchester, perhaps before 1820. Many orchards were early started, very few of them, however, being "grafted fruit." The first nurseries were established by one Hinshaw, an eccentric genius who traveled through the country, sowing apple-seeds, making pumps and what not, akin to "Johnny Appleseed," of Jay County memory, if, indeed, he were not the same person. (He was not the same, but one of kindred spirit and similar practice.)

One of the first to undertake the improvement of fruit was William Doty, near Buena Vista, who afterward removed to Farmland. Asahel Stone began a nursery, from which several orchards were planted. John Howard, west of Buena Vista, planted several nurseries; he seemed well skilled in his business, but he did more good for the public than for himself, as he was given to drink.

G. D. Huffman commenced a fruit farm in 1873, and has now forty acres planted; 2,500 apple trees, 800 pear trees, two acres of grapes, with 2,000 grape vines, besides other kinds of fruit, are found in his grounds. The products of his orchard and vineyard are just beginning to appear. He had 200 bushels of apples last year, and several tons of grapes. William Snyder has 500 acres of apples, begun in 1873. William Botkin has grown fruit considerably.

Several nurseries have existed from time to time in different places in the county. Levi Hill, of Spartansburg, is spending much time and money in establishing himself in the fruit tree business.

Among "beemen" may be named John Somers, near Winchester; Benjamin Puckett, who had a large stock of bees; Thornburg, of Winchester, extensive business; Rev. Pierce, of Winchester, had a large stock; James McNeal, south of Winchester; William Johnson, of Johnson's Station. Poultry fanciers have been N. H. Ward, of Winchester; Mote Mills, Winchester, formerly with Joshua Johnson, of Buena Vista.

William and Marion Hewitt, of Stony Creek, and Lemuel Wiggins, of Nettle Creek, have done creditably in the fruit line.

HORTICULTURE.

No horticultural society had ever existed in Randolph County, until January 14, 1881. The State association was organized in 1860, holding its nineteenth session in 1879. Several citizens of Randolph County have been connected with the State movement, Gen. Asahel Stone being, perhaps, one of the foremost. Daniel E. Huffman has been connected with it since 1866; he was a member of the Executive Committee for years, and is now one of the Vice Presidents. Hon. W. E. Murray, Gen. A. Stone and William Botkin are members of the association from Randolph at present.

The annual meetings for the State are held at various points —at Dublin, in 1879; at Crawfordsville, in 1880, and the society will meet at Muncie in 1881. Though there had been no public organized movement for improvement in horticulture, floriculture, etc., in Randolph County, yet much was done in a private way. The contrast between the beautiful shrubbery, creeping plants, house flowers and what not of the present day and the "old time" dark and bare house walls and the naked dooryards of primitive days, is indeed wonderful. But still only the bright dawn of the morning of beauty and delight has barely begun to break over the darkness of the past. The sublime declaration of Holy Writ, "He has made everything beautiful in its time," is only faintly realized.

It is a sad thought that money and labor enough to have made this world of ours a very paradise of unspeakable beauty from end to end of the civilized world have been squandered for ages upon ages upon the low and useless, and even base, human passions and propensities. A single farmer, an old settler of Randolph County, declared, not long ago, that he and his family of several boys had spent more money for tobacco alone than would suffice to pay for his farm of eighty acres. Only think of the pictures, the musical instruments, the ornaments of beauty and skill, the shrubbery, the flowers and the articles of adornment of every imaginable sort, that that $4,000 would have procured for that tobacco-devouring group during the past fifty years.

And yet men and women will smoke and chew tobacco and drink spirits and do abundant other similar and even worse things, lavishing money like water upon foolish, useless and hurtful practices and indulgences, dragging the race ever downward toward sensuality and loathsome corruption and crime. God speed the day when, as the wild prairies are clothed with endless and bewildering beauty, so the haunts of men, where the objects of natural beauty have been ruthlessly destroyed, may come to be robed in the splendor of cultivated art spread abroad on every hand.

County Horticultural Society.—January 14, 1882, a meeting was held in the grand jury room at the court house, in Winchester, to organize a horticultural society. Hon. William E. Murray was chosen President of the meeting, and D. E. Huffman, Secretary. On motion, a committee was appointed to present a constitution and by-laws, consisting of J. P. Lesley, Nelson Pegg and Obadiah Fields. After discussions and remarks by William Snyder, D. E. Hoffman, Jesse Willmore, E. Hiatt, etc., the committee reported a constitution and by-laws which were adopted by sections:

Name—Randolph County Horticultural Society.

Object—Horticulture, including fruit growing, shrubbery, gardening, beautifying homes, etc.

Officers—President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer and Executive Committee.

Meetings—(Annual) first Saturday in December, at 10 A. M.

Other Meetings—First Saturday of each month, and at other times by adjournment or appointment.

Membership—$1 annually; women free.

Members—William Snyder, Nelson Pegg, B. F. Willmore, Obadiah Fields, Amos Lesley, Ephraim Hiatt, D. E. Hoffman, W. E. Murray, Strother Brumfield, Jesse W. Willmore, John W. Jarnagan, J. P. Lesley.

Meeting adjourned to meet the first Saturday in Februarv, 1882.

Society met February 4, 1882 and among other business, permanent officers were chosen as follows: President, Hon. William E. Murray; Vice President, Nelson Pegg; Secretary, J. P. Lesley; Treasurer, William Snyder; Executive Committee, Jesse Willmore, Ephraim Hiatt, D. E. Hoffman.

The President delivered a brief address, a communication was read from W. H. Ragan, Secretary of the State Horticultural Society. J. P. Lesley read an instructive paper upon fruit trees; several new members joined the society, and an adjournment was had to Saturday, March 4, at 1:30 P. M.

March 4, 1882, society met upon adjournment. A communication was read from W. H. Ragan, Secretary of the State Horticultural Society, under date of February 20, 1882. The time of meeting was changed to the second Saturday of each month. Specimens of apples, very fine, were exhibited as follows: Roman Beauty, Uriah Davis; Wine Sap, White Pippin, Never Fail, Newtown Pippin, Nelson Pegg; Red Romanite, Jesse Willmore. Methods of grafting were explained and illustrated by David Huston. An essay on apple culture was read by Obadiah Fields. Remarks were made by Jesse Willmore and Nelson Pegg. D. E. Hoffman presented a list of varieties for an orchard of 100 trees—three Early Harvest, two Red Astrachan, two Early Trenton, three Fall Wine, three Rambo, four Maiden's Blush, two Lowell, three Twenty-Ounce, two Belmont, twenty-five Ben Davis, ten Roman Beauty, ten Smith's Cider, ten Wine Sap, five Wagner, five Tallman's Sweet, three Baldwin, three Willow Twig, three Grimes' Golden, two Roman Stem. For a commercial orchard, fewer varieties and more Ben Davis and Roman Beauty.

David Huston presented another list—three Yellow June, two Bailey's Sweet, four Early Harvest, two Tallman's Sweet, four Red Astrachan, eight Roman Stem, two Daniel Apple, eight Wine Sap, two Fall Wine, six Roman Beauty, six Maiden Blush, six Smith Cider, six Rambo, four Wagner, three Fall Pippin, four Yellow Bellflower, three R. I. Greening, four Ben Davis, three Seek-no-further, four Never-Fail, three Spitzenberg, four Baldwin, three Red Romanite, four Tapehocken, two White Pippin. Marion Harter recommended the Esopus Spitzenberg and American Golden Russet.

A deep interest was manifested throughout, and the members were greatly encouraged. Additional members, John Commons, Harvey Hiatt and Marion Harter. Jesse Willmore was appointed essayist; subject, "Forestry and Transplanting Trees." Adjourned till the second Saturday in April.

Society met April 8, 1882. New member, I. J. Farquhar. Essay on Forestry by Jesse Willmore, with remarks by Messrs. Farquhar, Murray, Fields, Huffman. J. P. Lesley read a paper on "Orchard Culture," full of facts and suggestions. D. E. Hoffman essayist for next meeting. Society adjourned to meet at the residence and in the grove of D. E. Hoffman on the second Saturday in May, 1882.

SORGHUM.

Some twenty years ago, a new industry arose in the United States—the raising of cane of various sorts for sirup. The kind first raised was imported from China to France, and from France through our Patent Office to this country. Many kinds, the Chinese, or Sorghum, the African, or Imphee, and still other varieties have been cultivated with large success through most of the Middle and Western States. The product amounts to many million gallons of sirup in the United States. Many attempts have been made to manufacture sugar from the Northern cane, but with only partial success. The molasses product from sorghum, etc., enters little into the general national market for quotation at the great centers; yet the farming population raise and use it largely. At first, each producer undertook to have a mill, and make his own cane into sugar or sirup. Wooden mills were first employed to crush the canes, and, though less rapidity was attained than by the iron mills now in vogue, yet it is the general and probably the correct opinion that the wooden mills produced a better article of sirup than is made with the other sort. The sorghum is raised commonly in small quantities, in patches of a quarter or a half an acre, chiefly for home consumption, though not a little is sold, also, to parties who raise none. Randolph began the raising of sorghum and the kindred canes early, and large amounts have been produced from year to year. Latterly, mills have been established at convenient points, and one mill answers for a large region; 1,000, 2,000 and 3,000 gallons are no uncommon quantities to be made by a single mill. Farmers haul their cane sometimes six or eight miles to be crushed. When made properly, this sorghum sirup is very nice and palatable, and many like it better than they do the New Orleans article. The general custom in making the sirup is to do it "upon shares," taking two gallons to every five, eleven pounds being considered a gallon; or, for cash, an amount varying from 15 to 20 cents per gallon.

The improvements in utensils and methods have been such that the product is now a very superior article, bright, clear, sweet and every way adapted for general, nay, for universal use.

Many mills have been in operation in Randolph County for many years, but general statistics are not available, and guess work would add nothing, and might start some on a false scent, and serve simply to perplex them, with no good result. Among the owners of mills for sorghum have been Mr. Royer and Mr. Bunch, in the southern part of Greensfork Township, as also Mr. Weiss, near Grangerville, Mr. Alexander, north of Spartansburg, etc. Mr. Royer and Mr. Bunch are old hands at the business, and succeed in making a very splendid product. Probaby the rest make as good. A Mr. Fulghum was very noted a few years ago for the wonderful sorghum, bright, heavy, clear, pure, which was produced at his mill, but he has left the township, and only the memory of his splendid production remains. Mr. Fulghum lived in Greensfork, southeast of Spartansburg. Some think the "sorghum culture" has declined within two or three years past. We cannot judge how the fact may be as to the matter.

Our statistics upon this matter are but meager, concerning the manufacture referred to in this article. We have no general information as to the county at large. We only know that sorghum, etc., is grown, and, of course, manufactured throughout its whole extent, but definite details we are unable at present to furnish.

FENCING.

An immense, almost an inconceivable, amount of labor has been expended by the farmers of Randolph County during the sixty-eight years of their settlement therein, in fencing their cultivated land. From the beginning, untold quantities of the finest, grandest trees—oak, ash, hickory, and even walnut and what not—have every year been felled remorselessly to the ground, and, by the hardest and severest toil, been severed into rails to be piled up into huge fences, eight, ten and even twelve rails high, that no beasts, and scarcely man himself, could surmount. And quite well have those old-time fences served their purpose. A son of one of the earliest pioneers, himself an enterprising farmer, states that last spring (1881) he reset a fence laid by his father more than sixty years ago, that had never before been disturbed since first the rails were laid into the "worm," and that he found many of the walnut rails still sound and firm.

But, oh! the mauling and pounding and chopping and lifting and tugging for sixty years past, that the farmers of Randolph have accomplished, in order to make and repair and renew those same rail fences. Few, perhaps none, have any idea of the amount of such materials and such structures in the county and in the country at large, and of their amazing cost in labor or in money, or in both. To fence Randolph County in fields of ten acres each, with roads one mile apart, would take about 7,500 miles of fence, which, at twenty rails to the rod, will require 48,000,000 rails, which, at $30 per 1,000, would cost about $1,500,000; or, to make post and board fence at $1.60 per rod, the cost would be $3,840,000—equal to the value of 96,000 acres at $40 per acre! It is evident, that, with the exhaustion of the timber, sources of fencing material, a necessity is arising for finding some other means of creating or renewing fences. Only two methods have thus far been suggested or practiced, viz., by live hedges and by iron. The first is unsuitable for general use for several reasons, and so is the latter. What will be done in the future is hard to tell. Some hedges have been set and have grown to be suitable for fence, and a small amount of fence has been made of iron wire, while some iron fence has been constructed in cities and villages. Very lately, an idea has arisen that posts, and possibly rails, may be cheaply manufactured of artificial stone by each farmer at home. If so, the matter will be of incalculable advantage to the country. The manufacture of stone has indeed long been an assured fact. The question whether it can be done so easily and so cheaply as to enable each farmer to make his own farm fencing material has not yet been determined. Experiments with this in view are in progress, and the hope is that in the near future, the manufacture of stone posts, rails, etc., by each land-owner upon his own premises will have become an accomplished fact. Barbed wire seems to be coming into extensive use in many regions of the country; yet there are very serious objections to its employment for general fencing purposes, one of which is the great danger of damage to stock from running against its sharp and jagged points, which fact not seldom occurs. The manufacturers are trying to obviate this difficulty by making the points less sharp and also by having it of a whitish color so as to be readily seen; still, it remains true that "barbed wire fence" is a nuisance and ought not to be employed.

Sedgwick Fence.—Within a short time past, a new kind of fence, consisting of woven wire, has been invented by Messrs. Sedgwick, late of West River Township, Randolph County, and the material is manufactured in great quantities at Richmond, Ind., and the sale of it has become very extensive and is constantly increasing. The fence is light, cheap, tasteful, beautiful, safe and durable, and would seem to be admirably adapted to its intended purpose; and it may prove, at least, a most important factor toward accomplishing the solution of the great and perplexing fence problem in this Western world. Let us hope so, indeed, since this vast problem stands well-nigh like the wondrous Sphinx on the Egyptian sands, ready to devour whatever unhappy wight shall fail to answer the question propounded to his vexed and troubled soul.

DITCHES.

For more than fifty years within the bounds of Randolph, such a thing as a ditch for drainage made by public authority had not been heard of, much less been seen or known. However, the necessity of ditches became apparent, and the Legislature provided a way for their construction, and in due time the good work was begun in Randolph. The first ditch that appears on the Commissioners' records, so far as discovered, was petitioned for by Henry Handschy, in the northeast part of Jackson Township, to drain a pond to the Mississinewa by a ditch seventy rods long.

The petition was acted on March 13, 1868, and John B. Clapp, Joseph Kemp and David S. Harker were appointed Assessors, according to the law of the case provided. September, 1868, John W. Griffis petitioned for a ditch 3,960 feet in length, through lands of Griffis, Holland and Shaffer. December, 1868, Jesse and Epaminondas Oakey asked for a ditch 2,957 feet long through lands of Oakey, Moorman, Thompson and Shoemake. Since that time, many ditches have been asked for and granted and made, vastly improving the condition of the lands of the county, making tracts that had been worthless from excess of water to become the finest and most fertile lands in the whole region. There is a ditch running west of Spartansburg, several miles long.

The longest ditch in the county thus far ordered is one draining the swamps of the "Dismal," located June, 1880. The ditches that have been made up to this time are chiefly in White River, Greensfork, Wayne, Jackson, Monroe and Ward. Sixteen ditches were applied for from July, 1866, to March, 1874. Twelve ditches were asked for from March, 1880, to August, 1881.

In connection with public ditches, the subject of tile-draining may be considered, which has grown up from a thing unknown to be a vast industry, employing multitudes of hands and costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, but richly worth all it costs, and destined to become still more vast and wonderful in amount and importance and value.

TILE MAKING.

The growth of this business in this county has been wonderful. In 1856, the first drain-tile ever made in the State of Indiana was made at Elisha Martin's brick-yard, south of Winchester. Mr. Martin's son, John K., a lad of nineteen, getting sight of half a tile, set to work, constructed a mold himself, made 200 rods of tile, by hand, of course, and burnt them in his father's brick-kiln. Now, in Randolph County alone, there are at least seventeen tile factories, turning out, in the aggregate, it may be, 100,000 rods of tile annually of various sizes. One of the factories, perhaps no more extensive than the rest, burns twenty kilns in a year, of 400 rods each, or 8,000 rods annually. At this rate, seventeen kilns would make 136,000 rods a year. Evidently, immense numbers are being used. A little calculation will show that tile-drains across the entire county, thirty rods apart, would require about a million and a half of rods of tile, which, at the rate now furnished, would be put in in about twelve years.

The tile factories are located as follows: Parker, Farmland, Ridgeville, Saratoga, Winchester, Lynn (two), Bartonia, Huntsville (two), Buena Vista, Losantville (two), Spartansburg (near), Salem (near), Harrisville, Pittsburg and perhaps others. There is also one on the State line, in Ohio, two miles south of Union City, and one in Union City, Ohio. This last is a remarkable establishment, an account of which will be found under Union City.

The business of tile-making has been carried to a high degree of perfection, the machine sending forth a continual stream of ready-made pipe, which is cut by a wire into appropriate lengths of one foot each. This branch of industry is both honorable and greatly useful, the value of the soil for production being immensely increased. In old times, ditches were put in simply in swampy places or to drain ponds. Now, tile-drains are laid by many farmers over nearly the whole extent of their lands, and the soil is wonderfully benefited by the operation.

We present an account of three or four of the tile-kilns as an indication of the nature and extent of this new and most useful branch of industry.

Tile Factory near Buena Vista (Thomas Brady).—This establishment was set up at Buena Vista about 1875 by Gray Bros. In 1881, it was bought by Thomas Brady, and moved one and a half miles south and put into operation on a greatly enlarged scale and with facilities much improved. Gray Bros. used to burn twenty kilns in a season, with 450 rods each. Mr. Brady has introduced the "Wicker Kiln," being the first of the kind in the county. It has a permanent brick top, and the tiles are put in and taken out at the side. The burning is effected in a peculiar manner; first, at the top and then below, both at the sides and the ends. Two firing-holes are at each side and five at each end. They save twenty-four hours' time and 25 per cent of the fuel, and make a superior quality of tile. Thirty-six to forty hours' time and four and a half cords of wood will complete the burning of the large kiln of 1,000 rods of tile. Mr. Brady has only just begun with his new style of kiln, but he is greatly pleased with its operation and expects abundant success. There are two tile factories near Huntsville, one owned by Jerry Bly and another besides that.

Tile Factory Near Pittsburg.—Was established in 1877, being owned by Jesse Puterbaugh and operated by Moses M. Ferrell. They have burned twenty-three small kilns in a season, 350 rods each. The present kiln is large, holding 1,400 rods. They burn one kiln per month, and find ready sale for all they can make.

Tile Factory, Lynn, Frist & Frickel.—It was established in 1876. They burn eighteen kilns during the season, of 400 rods each, and find an abundant sale for all they produce. There is also another tile factory near Lynn, owned by Hiatt & Shultz, which has been in operation for several years.

Tile Factory two miles north of Parker, owned by Bullock & Brothers, established in 1877, and doing a large business.

Mr. Snooks, of Union City, Ohio, has tile works of a superior sort, some account of which is given in his biography.

One is about to be established (spring of 1882) by Warren S. Montgomery, near Stone Station, northwest of Winchester.

WEATHER, CROPS, ETC.

In the spring of 1817, the emigrants who came first to White River met a heavy snow at the top of the Alleghanies on their journey, and traveled in the snow all the way therein to their new home, crossing the Ohio on the ice, probably about March 1, at Cincinnati.

Other winters have been severe; 1837, 1843, 1857 were very hard winters, but we have no account of them for this locality at hand.

1841—Jacob Farquhar says (West River Township): "In the spring of 1841, I had abundance of corn, and many came from Jay County and elsewhere to buy of me. Among others, Mr. ———, the Sheriff of Jay County, came after corn April 6, 1841. He stayed all night, and on the morning of April 7, he started for home with a load of corn, the roads being frozen hard enough to bear up his wagon. Corn then sold for 12½ cents a bushel, and coonskins for 75 cents apiece—six bushels of corn for one coonskin." About 1847 or 1848, the wheat crop was very poor, wheat rising from 40 and 50 cents to $1.20 and $1.25 a bushel. In 1851 wheat was 40 cents a bushel at Greenville, Ohio.

In 1874, the corn crop of Randolph was good, while yet in the country at large the yield was poor; and in the spring of 1875 the price of corn rose to 70 and 73 cents, netting the Randolph farmers a fine amount.

Years ago, the weather was much less cold and snowy than it has been of late. During the time from 1846 to 1854, there was but one period of sleighing of more than three or four days' continuance, and cold spells rarely lasted more than three days.

About 1875 was a very wet summer, the rains through July being so frequent and so severe that the gathering of the harvest became nearly an impossibility. Much of the grain grew and rotted in the shock, and much that was housed was badly damaged.

The wheat crop of 1879 was wonderful for abundance and for excellence, many fields yielding thirty bushels and more to the acre, and some rising to the amazing figure of fifty bushels, and one small field in Grant County yielding at the rate of sixty bushels to the acre. Some new kinds, the Fultz, and some others, yielded amazingly.

The wheat crop of 1880 was a good one as well, though not nearly equal to the one of the previous summer.

The summer of 1880 was exceedingly dry in the western portion of the county, so as nearly to ruin the corn crop there.

The winter of 1880–81 was remarkable for cold and snow. The snow began about November 10, and continued mostly until March, with splendid sleighing much of the time, which was improved immensely by such a product of sawlogs, etc., hauled to the mills as Randolph County never saw before, The mills at Union City alone are said to have bought 25,000 logs, containing millions of feet of lumber.

The last week in March (March 1881), the snow began falling in the night of Monday, and by the next day it was some fifteen inches deep, and continued at intervals for several days, until the body of snow lay on the ground from twenty to twenty-four inches deep, a moist, heavy snow, and if it had not melted as it fell, many think it would have been three feet deep. That snow lay on for some two weeks or more, making, probably, about the worst roads that ever were seen.

The winter of 1880–81 is noted as being long, hard, snowy and severe, and the Mississippi Valley was greatly damaged by water, especially the Missouri River. The suffering through Minnesota and Nebraska and Dakota by deep snow and desperate weather was fearful, as also by the awful floods on the Missouri.

The summer of 1881 has shown us the hottest weather ever known in this region. About the 4th of July and onward, the thermometer ranged from 100° to 112° in the shade, and without a drop of rain for some weeks. The heat was awful. Some days have been almost without wind. However, at this writing, (September 25, 1881), the drouth and the heat are both at an end. Refreshing and abundant showers have watered the parched earth, and the severity of the scorching heat has greatly abated. No frost has yet fallen, and the weather is as delightful as can well be imagined. October 27, 1881, still no killing frost, abundant rain has fallen, weather not even chilly, grass and other things growing with great luxuriance. Two nights, October 20 and 21, slight frosts, doing no damage whatever. The winter of 1881–82 was mild, with much rain and little freezing, and a small amount of snow.

The spring of 1882 was forward through March and the fore part of April, causing the grass to spring, the pie-plant to grow luxuriantly, the wheat to come forward with unusual vigor, and the peaches and early cherries to bloom. About the 10th of April, a smart snow fell, and the night afterward a freeze occurred, making ice half an inch thick and freezing the ground still deeper than that. Freezes and frosts kept on nearly every night for more than a week, and even to this time (April 29, 1882), the weather has not regained the warmth that prevailed during the latter half of March.

Prices have risen to pretty high figures—butter, 25 to 30 cents; cattle and swine, from $4 to $6; beef, to from 8 to 15 cents; corn, 70 cents; potatoes, $1.30 to $2.40, etc. Potatoes, sauer kraut, etc., have been imported from Europe during the present winter in large quantities, a thing which, perhaps, never before occurred in this country.

May 29, 1882.—The weather has been cold and very wet for more than a month; not more than half the corn crop is yet planted, and not one-tenth of the plant has yet come up. Much of the ground had to be replowed because the heavy rains had run the land together and made it hard and soggy, and the outlook is altogether very discouraging for the spring crops, especially for corn. Many years ago, the corn crop by the 1st of June used to be knee high and even more; and the 25th of June, 1846, thirty-six years ago, the writer of this article saw corn between Spartansburg and Richmond as tall as the top of the head of a boy riding on horseback.

Several frosts have occurred during the month of May, doing, however, but little damage.

June 25, 1882.—Crops generally look well, except corn, and that is now coming on finely, though exceedingly small for the time of year, the largest being not more than knee high. Corn has been known to furnish green corn by July 4.

WEATHER ACCOUNT.

The author of this work has obtained access to an account of the state of weather in the vicinity of Randolph County, kept at Economy, Wayne Co., Ind., every day since April, 1833.

Three observations have been recorded daily, viz., sunrise, 2 o'clock P. M., and sunset.

Some items of information taken from that record are given herewith:

The hottest day in 1833 was August 21—92 degrees above zero at 2 P. M.; the coldest days in the winter of 1833–34 were January 3 and 23, 10 below; the hottest day in 1834 was August 12, 96 above; the coldest day in 1834–35 was February 7, 22 below; November 29, 1835, the thermometer stood at sunrise at 5 below; March 12, 1836, 18 below; November 4, 1836, 12 above; May 4, 1837, 86 above—pretty hot for the 4th of May; November 1, 1837, 19 above: February 22, 1838, 21 below; May 11, 1838, 25 above; July 29 and August 12, 1838, 93 above: October 31, 1838, 18 above; November 19, 1838, zero; March 4, 1839, 18 below—coldest of the winter; May 4, 1839, 23 above; July 29 and August 25, 1839, 92 above—hottest of the year; September 28, 1839, 22 above; five succeeding days averaged 25; November 25, 1839, 9 below; January 18, 1840, 15 below—coldest of the winter; June 12 and 28, 1840, 86 above; October 26, 1840, 14 above; average for four days, 15¾; January 18, 1841, 16 below—coldest; June 18, 1841, 93—hottest day; March, 1842, warmest March on record; average of month, 50$\frac{1}{10}$; March 24, 1843, 12 below; average of month, 13⅓; October 14, 1843, 20 above; October 31, 1844, 19 above; February 2, 1845, 7 below—coldest of the winter; September 22, 1845, 30 above; October 15, 1845, 20 above; July 9, 1846, 94 above; January 10, 1848, 21 below; June 27, 1848, 97 above—hottest of the season; September, 1848, 29 above; June 20 and 21, 1849, 90 above; November 10, 1849, 24—killing frost; May 18, 1850, 28 above; May 7, 1851, 19 above; September 13, 1851, 92 above—pretty hot for middle of September; January 19, 1851, 19 below; average for the day, 14 below; May 20, 1852, 26 above—pretty cold; June, 1853, 90 above, and above five days; average of the month, 71½.

1854—From June to September inclusive, there were forty-one days in the "nineties," viz., June 26 to 28, three days; July, seventeen days; August, twelve days; September, nine days; August 20 to September 10, eighteen days, above 90 every day but three; four were 95; September 4 was 96; September 5 was 98; July 30, 1854, average for the day 84—highest but one on the record; January, 1856, coldest month on the record; January 9, 27 below; January 10, 29 below—coldest on the record; number of days below zero in January and February, twenty days; February 3, 22 below; February 4, 24 below; February 5, 22 below; June 22, 1856, 95 above—seven days in "ninety" in June, 1856; July 16, 1856, 98 above; July 29, 1856, 95 above; this month has the highest average heat on the record, 75, 95, 88 above—average 86; March 10, 1857, 10 below; May 12, 1857, 25 above; August 6, 1858, 93 above; June 5, 1859, 30 above—killing frost; July 10 to 20, 1859, 90 above; July 13 to 18, 1859, 96 and 98 above; December 8, 1859, 15 below; December 31, 1859, 15 below; January 1, 1860, 16 below; January 2, 1860, 18 below; June 27, 1860, 94 above; September 8, 1863, 90 above; January 1, 1864, 21, 14, 17 below; average 17⅓—coldest whole day on record.

NOTE.—At Liber, Jay Co., Ind., the thermometer stood at 6 A. M. 26 below—cold New Year. At 9 P. M. the night before it stood at 45 above, thus falling in nine hours 71 degrees, or a fraction less than 8 degrees per hour.

July, 1864, has fourteen "nineties;" July 30, 1864, has 98 above; February 16, 1866, 27 below; October, 1869, was exceedingly cold, perhaps the coldest October ever experienced, thus: 13th, 24; 16th, 22; 20th, 18; 24th, 11; 25th, 17; 27th, 11; 31st, 16; average for seven days, 17 above zero; September 5 to 9, 1872, 90, 93, 93, 93, 92 above; December 22, 1872, 23 below; January 29, 1873, 28 below; October, 1873, was another cold October; October 7 was 24; 24, 18; 29, 15; 31, 19; average of four days, 19 above zero; September, 1874, has four "nineties;" January, 1875, has seven days below zero; February, 1875, has nine days below zero; January 9 and 10 and February 18 have each 20° below zero; September 2, 1875, has 90—the hottest of the season. The winter of 1875–76 had only two days below zero; December 17 and 18, 3 and 1 below; January 3, 4 and 5, 1879, 26, 20, 20 below; January 3, 1879, averaged 15 below—the second coldest day in forty-eight years: May 20, 1879, 88 above—hot for the time of year; December 26, 1879, 3, 10, 9, were the lowest points reached during that winter; November 19, 1880, 16 below; November 22, 1880, 21 below—coldest in November in the record; December 9, 1880, 10 below; December 29, 1880, 20, 8, 14 below; average 14 below—the third coldest day upon the record; July 5 to 13, 1881, 90, 96, 93, 95, 96, 96, 98, 98, 91 above; average 94$\frac{7}{9}$. Thus far the record.

NOTES.—August, 1835, there was frost four times; February 28, 1836, at midnight, 10 below; at sunset, 11 below; at sunrise, 5 below; June, 1839, there was frost six times; July, 1839, frost twice; August, 1839, frost three times; June, 1840, frost four times; June, 1843, frost five times.

The above seems strange, since the thermometer indicated not much below 40. How there could be frost with the thermometer at 40 or thereabouts is not easy to understand; but the keeper of the record declares it to have been a fact.

It may be well to say that the highest degree of heat marked may seem lower than has been noted elsewhere.

The place where the thermometer hung in the shade was beneath the boughs of a thick pine tree, where no sunshine could penetrate, and at a distance from any wooden or other surface of any kind.

Mr. Osborn began the record in April, 1833, and kept it personally about forty years, and before his death he left it in charge to continue the work until at least fifty years had passed. Two years only remain of the full half century, and his son is faithfully continuing the record.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

In 1872, the farmers of the county held meetings throughout the region to discuss the merits of that order lately established in the country.

In March, 1873, Round Top Grange, No. 85, was established. Before the middle of 1874, twenty-seven granges were organized in Randolph County, with from 900 to 1,100 members. The Randolph County Council of Patrons of Husbandry was organized November 8, 1873, with Nathan Fidler as President, and B. F. Willmore as Secretary. The object of the council was to impart instruction as to the inner work of the order, and for general supervision over its affairs.

June 24, 1875, Henley James, Master of the State Grange, met a company of Masters, Past Masters and Matrons at Winchester, and organized Randolph Pomona Grange, No. 2, installing I. J. Farquhar, Master; Isham Sedgwick, Secretary; William Ruble, Treasurer; the work of organizing, however, being completed August 31, 1875.

In 1876, the statistics of the order were as follows: First grange instituted, March, 1873; twenty-seven granges established; three disbanded; four consolidated; lodges in operation, twenty—aggregating several hundred members.

Since 1876, the growth has not been apparant. In fact, for some reason, many of the granges have ceased active operations. Some of them are still continuing their work.

The objects of the order are certainly excellent—increase of acquaintance and socialibility among farmers and their families, growth in intelligence as to business and the farming interests of the country, consultation as to the best means of sustaining the prices of farmers' products and lowering the cost of farmers' supplies, and, in general, the promotion of the welfare, prosperity and success of the farming population of the country, home life training, beautifying and ennobling farm life, sweetening, refining and purifying the minds of the community at large. The establishment of the order would seem, therefore, to have accomplished much good in several ways. In truth, the pursuit of farming lies at the very foundation of all business prosperity in the country and throughout the world; and whatever tends to enlighten, to elevate, to encourage, to energize, to strengthen, to purify, to ennoble that class of our people tends directly and powerfully to benefit the community as a whole. And it is to be hoped that the farmers of the land will lay hold with vigor and energy of every sound and wise means of attaining and disseminating knowledge, wisdom, friendship and fraternal love through all the growing masses of our people over the whole wide spread land.

Pleasant Grove Grange, No. 226 (two miles north of Spartansburg).—This grange was organized June 28, 1873, by Thomas W. Reece, with twenty male members and ten females. The officers were as follows: James Rubey, Master; C. F. Alexander, Overseer; James Macy, Lecturer; Levi Snyder, Steward; J. W. Jackson, Assistant Steward; Emsley Jackson, Treasurer; J. F. Middleton, Secretary; Alfred Rubey, Gatekeeper; Jennie Jackson, Ceres; Mrs. Hannah Wise, Pomona; Carrie Rubey, Assistant Lady Steward.

The present officers are: C. F. Alexander, Master; James B. Rubey, Overseer; John F. Middleton, Secretary; Peter Stidham, Treasurer; Levi Snyder, Lecturer; Henry Wise, Chaplain; James Armstrong, Steward.

Members, January 1, 1878—twenty males, sixteen females, and in 1881, about the same. Meetings have been maintained once in two weeks from the first, with interest and profit.

The grange has a neat and convenient hall, which was dedicated by a picnic June 27, 1874, as also with addresses by Henley James, Master of the State Grange, and by Messrs. Willmore and Fidler, of Randolph County. A large and interested crowd was present. Several suppers have been prepared at the hall at various times.

Great harmony has prevailed, a good social influence has been exerted, general information as to prices, the laws of business and trade, etc., has been diffused, a healthful influence has been spread throughout the community, and, by the general movement throughout the country, much advantage has accrued by the lowering of prices, consequently bringing producers and consumers together by improving methods of production and enlarging the amount of products, etc. The farming population are the strength of the Nation; but they labor under peculiar and heavy disadvantages, and every movement which adds to their knowledge and encourages and increases their activity and prosperity nourishes and strengthens every honorable and useful industry of the Nation. When the farmers prosper, all goes well; when they suffer and languish, every interest declines, and every business droops and weakens. "God speed the plow," and Heaven bless and cheer and prosper the farmer.

Well may the poet sing:

"Far back in the ages,
The plow with wreaths was crowned;
The hands of kings and sages
Entwined the chaplet round,
Till men of spoil disdained the toil,
By which the world was nourished;
And blood and pillage were the soil
In which the laurels flourished.

"Now the world her fault repairs—
The guilt that stains her glory,
And weeps her crimes amid the scenes
That formed her earliest glory.
The proud throne shall crumble;
The diadem shall wane;
The tribes of earth shall humble—
The pride of those who reign.

"And war shall lay his pomp away—
The fame that heroes cherish;
The glory earned in deadly fray,
Shall fade, decay and perish.
Honor waits o'er all the earth,
Through coming generations,
The art that calls the harvest forth
To feed the expectant nations."

GRANGES—RANDOLPH COUNTY.

A large number of the societies have been suffered to die out. Some, however, still flourish. Those which now exist (1881) are: Sugar Creek, organized July 31, 1873; New Dayton, organized 1873; Pleasant Grove, organized 1873; Pleasant Mound, South Salem; Jackson, Jackson Township; Parker, Monroe Township; Green Township.

Many persons entered the lodges with extravagant expectations of immediate and striking results. Many had only a dim and shadowy idea of the real nature and design of the institution. Many expected to control the markets of the country and perhaps of the world, and when time and experience taught them a more sober view of things, they blamed the Order of Patrons and forsook the lodges. Those who entered the order with moderate views and a reasonably clear conception of its true nature, have remained steadfast and found therein increasing profit and delight.

Some of the objects may be stated thus: Association of farmers for mutual advantage, home life training, beautifying farm life, cherishing every possible sweet, purifying, refining, ennobling influence in the minds of the people at large, especially in the country homes.

Two special points of advantage may be mentioned as among the results of the Grange movement.

1. The adoption of the no-credit system. This alone has been, so far as put in practice, of immense value. In fact, the debt habit, especially as indulged in the purchase of luxuries and finery, has been evil and only evil, and that continually. Credit will, of course, continue to exist; yet it is filled with danger, and comparatively few know how to handle it largely with safety and success; and he who learns to pay as he goes, has acquired a method of life the value of which can hardly be overestimated. If the Grange should succeed in fastening this habit of economy upon the country, the result would be worth more than all it would cost.

2. The other result which we mention is the direction of the farming mind to the laws of business, the cost of production, and the means of direct communication between producer and consumer, and the consequent decrease of cost of transfer of commodities, especially of machinery and farming and domestic implements.

COUNTY FAIRS.

At a meeting held at the court house in Winchester April 17, 1852, after an address by D. P. Holloway, of Richmond, Ind., an agricultural society was formed, and officers appointed as follows: President, Ashael Stone; Vice President, David Lasley; Treasurer, Uriah Ball; Secretary, John Lasley; Directors, George W. Daly, Washington; James Clayton, White River, Elza Lank, West River; James C. Bowen, Greensfork; Daniel Hill, Wayne; James Simmons, Jackson; Joab Ward, Franklin; Philip Barger, Green; J. B. Somerville, T. W. Reece, R. N. Butler.

The first fair was held October 14 and 15, 1852. The ground was one acre, a beautiful grove northwest of town, near Judge

Colgrove's former residence. It was fenced as follows: The boards were placed lengthwise, edge to edge, the fence being seven feet high, and it was held up by two upright posts at each end, and at the middle also, with the boards between the posts, and the posts fastened together by hickory withes near the top. The cost of preparing the ground was $30. The display was good, with a fine show of horses, cattle, jacks, jennets, swine, etc. The surplus receipts were $150. The number of members was 200.

1853—Fair was held September 29 and 30 and October 1, 1853. The weather was bad, but the show was good. Hon. Samuel W. Parker delivered an address. Nathan Hinshaw presented proof of having raised four acres of corn, producing at the rate of 146⅔ bushels per acre, and Thomas W. Reece four acres at the rate of 115 bushels per acre. Receipts, $615.02; outlays—premiums, $184.25; expenses, $203; total outlay $387.25; surplus, $227.77.

This fair was held near Mr. Pomroy's, northeast of town. The officers of the society were: President, W. A. Peelle; Secretary, John B. Goodrich; Treasurer, George W. Monks; Delegate to State Board, Asahel Stone.

1854—Officers: President, Thomas W. Reece; Secretary, John W. Cottom; Treasurer, George W. Monks. Fair, October 12, 13, 14, 1854.

The Association rented ground (seven acres) south of town for ten years, and inclosed it with an oak fence eight feet high. The weather was bad, the wheat and corn crops had been light and poor; but the display of animals was better than before, and the exhibit of fruit was fine. Daniel Hill showed a harrow and roller combined, which was considered a great improvement, and Carter Bros. exhibited buggies and carriages of very fine construction. One of them, a rockaway, was sold to Asahel Stone, Esq., and he has had it in use to this day, and it is still in good repair.

The Carter Bros. first made buggies in Randolph County. They are still in active business in Winchester.

1855—President, N. Kemp; Vice President, Asahel Stone; Secretary, J. W. Cottom; Treasurer, G. W. Monks. Fair, September 27, 28 and 29, 1855; large crowd; good display.

1856—Attendance small; display only moderate. There were some good horses, cattle and swine. President, T. W. Reece; Treasurer, N. Kemp; Secretary, J. W. Cottom.

Record of weather during the winter and spring of 1856: January 9, thermometer 27 degrees below zero at sunrise; February 5, 23 below at sunrise; March 12, snow eleven inches deep, average; March 22, snow off, except drifts; April 7, some snow drifts still; some sowing oats and flax; April 28, 1856, first cherry bloom; April 29, 1856, first apple bloom; May 19, beech and sugar, full leaf; May 31, killing frost—corn, potatoes, etc., badly frozen: June 30, corn mostly only six inches high; August 16, vegetation drying up, leaves on trees dead in many cases; September 30, snowed smartly, season dry, crops poor; October, smoky throughout.

1857 Receipts, $712.73; expenditures, $578.11; surplus, $134.62; society prospering; land leased; buildings erected and paid for. The grain crop was good. A field of corn of five acres yielded 134½ bushels to the acre. Fruit was fine, and the cattle, etc., good.

AGRICULTURAL FAIR—WINCHESTER, 1858.

The fair was held October 13, 14 and 15, 1858. The weather was rainy, but the crowd was large. As one result, the association got out of debt, with a surplus of several hundred dollars on hand. Among other fine exhibitions were a beautiful Durham cow, by David Heaston; a splendid bull, by H. K. Wright: a superior cow, by William D. Frazee, giving five gallons in the morning and four gallons at night, without extra feed, and upon poor pasture; one yearling by the same, which had never eaten an ear of corn, and was estimated to weigh 1,000 to 1,100 pounds. Exhibitors of sheep were Brotherton & Reed, Picket, Puckett and Hartman. Swine were shown by Thomas Robison, J. L. Shaw and H. D. Huffman. Fruits, dairy, honey, etc., by William Doty. Carriages and buggies by Carter & Craig. Premiums paid that year, amount, $500. President, James Clayton: Treasurer, Nathaniel Kemp; Secretary, N. P. Heaston; Assistant Secretary, W. D. Frazee; one Director from each township. The records have been destroyed mostly up to 1868.

1863—J. A. Moorman and Nathaniel Kemp were Delegates to the meeting of the State Board of Agriculture.

1868—Thomas W. Kizer was Delegate to the same.

A new association was formed February 20, 1867.

ARTICLE I. Object, to encourage agriculture.

ART. II. Name, Randolph County Agricultural, Horticultural and Mechanical Association.

ART. III. Stock, $5,000; shares, $25.

ART. V. Officers: President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, Executive Committee of seven stockholders.

ART. VI. Officers elected for one year.

ART. VII. Stock may be increased to $10,000.

There seems to have been another Association formed in 1871, and by this association a tract of ground was purchased of L. L. Heaston, consisting of twenty-two acres, occupying a part of the old fort of the Mound-Builders, and containing the great mound in the center of the ancient inclosure.

The officers were: President, Pharez Hiatt; Vice President, William Robinson; Treasurer, William Moore; Secretary, Edmund Engle; Executive Committee, Joshua M. Johnson, Davidson Cheeseman, Nathaniel P. Heaston, Moses Lasley, James Barnes, Nathan Fidler, Walter Scott Monks; Superintendent, Asa Teal.

The fair for 1871 was held September 24 to 27; 3,000 were present the second day; tickets sold in all, 5,625; receipts, $2,277.87; expenditures, $2,277.87.

1872—Crops poor; wheat averaged eight bushels, badly damaged; price, $1 to $1.40; corn, forty to forty-five bushels per acre; price, 25 cents; swine, good throughout the county, many weighing 300 to 400 pounds at twelve months; there was much fruit; fair held September 24 to 27; second day 3,000 were present; entries for 1871, 779; for 1872, 888; receipts for 1872, $1,480.35; expenditures, $1,480.35; debt of Association, $1,000.

1873—Officers: President, Asahel Stone; Vice President, Joshua M Johnson; Treasurer, William Moore; Secretary, Edmund Engle; Executive Committee, Asa Teal, Pharez Hiatt, Nelson Pegg, Nathan Fidler, Davidson Cheeseman. James Barnes, Thomas W. Kizer; fair held September 23 to 26, 1873; 5,000 present the first day; receipts, $2,719.82; expenditures, $2,689.90; surplus, $29.92.

1874—Officers: President, Thomas W. Kizer; Vice President, George Addington; Treasurer, James H. Bowen; Secretary, John L. Stakebake; Executive Committee, Jesse Connor, William Snyder, George W. Hamilton, Andrew Adams, William O. King, Moses Lasley, Lewis L. Heaston; fair held September 14 to 18, 1874; tickets sold, 5,176.

1875—Officers: President, Joshua M. Johnson; Vice President, Richard Bosworth; Secretary, D. E. Hoffman; Treasurer, John Brooks; Executive Committee, T. Tharp, Nelson Pegg, John S. McIntyre, Asa Teal, Andrew Adams, William O. King, Marcus D. Starbuck; fair held September 13 to 17, 1875; attendance good; display fair. Crops had been badly damaged by rain. Farmers are attending largely to draining their grounds.

1876—The fair for 1876 was the best ever held here, up to that time. Total entries, 800; horses, 124; cattle, 38; hogs, 40; poultry becoming an important entry; they are largely dealt in throughout the county; twenty tons were shipped by one firm in twenty days; the crops were fair to good.

1877—Fair held September 18 to 21; horse entries, 93—18 for speed; sheep and hogs, a fine display; poultry, a large show and a grand success; receipts, $2,032.20; grains good; potatoes splendid; fruits good, though quantity small, owing to overgrowth the previous year.

1878—Officers: President, John Brooks; Vice President, Nelson Pegg; Secretary, George S. Fisher; Treasurer, Thomas W. Kizer; Executive Committee. Isom Sedgwick, George Hamilton. William Snyder, Aaron Harris, L. L. Heaston, George Addington; fair held September 17 to 20; weather good; entries, 1,500—more than ever before; attendance, third day, 5 000 people. Fruit was nearly a failure, because of a killing frost May

13. The wheat crop was the best ever raised. Corn crop was good, but hogs sold largely for $2.25.

1879—Fair held September 16 to 19; show of fruits excellent —the best ever made at this fair; 1,300 entries; 4,700 tickets sold, a reasonable success, though display and attendance not so great as at some previous fairs; balance of receipts, $400; entries of fruit alone, 343.

1881—Officers: President, Thomas W. Kizer; Vice President, William Ruble; Treasurer, William Moore; Secretary, A. R. Hyatt; Executive Committee, I. J. Farquhar, John Frazier, I. B. Branson, J. K. Martin, Nelson Pegg, E. R. McIntyre, Thomas Tharp.

1873—Entries: horses, general purposes; exhibitors, fifty-six; animals, sixty-eight; premiums, twenty-eight; amount, $115.

Horses, light draft; exhibitors, twenty-five; animals, twenty-nine; premiums, ten; amount, $51.

Horses, heavy draft; exhibitors, eleven; animals, twelve; premiums, eight; amount, $44.

Jacks, mules, etc.; exhibitors, four; animals, thirteen; premiums, six; amount, $29.

Cattle—exhibitors, eight; animals, thirty-five; premiums, eighteen, amount, $93.

Swine—exhibitors, fourteen, animals, sixty-three; premiums, twenty-one; amount, $87.

Sheep—exhibitors, six; animals, fifty-two; premiums, sixteen; amount, $32.

Poultry—exhibitors, six; animals, eighteen; premiums, four; amount $4.

Grain and vegetables—exhibitors, thirty-one; entries, eighty; premiums, twenty-six; amount, $22.

Other entries, 320; total premiums, $644; total entries, 650.

1874—Horses entered, 165; premiums, $933; cattle, 23; premiums, $80; jacks, mules, etc., 21; premiums, $37; swine, 30; premiums, $54; sheep, 63; premiums, $71; poultry, 50; premiums, $15; grain, etc., 87; premiums, $17; fruits, 48; premiums, $27.50; other entries, 143; premiums, $193; total entries, 630; total premiums, $1,190.

1875—Horses, 106; premiums, $927; cattle, 9; premiums, $42; mules, etc., 25; premiums, $65; swine, 78; premiums, $75; sheep, 22; premiums, $58; grain, etc,, 55; fruits, 11; sundries, 260; premiums, $258; total entries, 566; total premiums, $1,-425.

1876—Horses entered, 113; premiums, $447; cattle, 27; premiums, $100; mules, etc., 25; premiums, $59; swine, 38; premiums, $100; sheep, 54; premiums, $71; poultry, 85; premiums, $35; sundries, 591; premiums, $407; total entries, 933; total premiums, $1.219.

RANDOLPH FAIR—WINCHESTER, 1881.

The fair for 1881 was held at the usual time and place, and would probably have been a substantial success but for the week of rain, which threw a wet blanket over its affairs and of course greatly checked attendance upon its exhibition, and, moreover, seriously interfered with the amount of its receipts.

The officers for 1881–82 are: John R. Frazier, President; William O. King, Vice President; A. R. Hiatt, Treasurer; D. E. Hoffman, Secretary; Messrs. Carter, Murray, Heaston, Kizer, Sheeley, Farquhar and Branson, Directors.

It is a fact worthy of remark that Clarkson T. Pickett has (fall of 1881), two watermelon vines having a growth of 330 feet of vine, and the melons weighed 706 pounds 12 ounces. Some of the melons from that kind of seed have weighed eighty-two pounds each.

UNION AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL ASSOCIATION, UNION CITY, IND.

This Association was created about January 10, 1870. The record of the first meeting does not appear, but the officers elected for the second year (chosen in November, 1870), were: J. N. Converse, President; J. M. Janes, Vice President; E. Starbuck, Treasurer; W. C. Johnson, Secretary. The first President is not known; the others were as follows: Vice President, J. M. Janes; Secretary, C. J. Van Andy; Treasurer, Edward Starbuck.

The Directors, chosen November, 1870, were: L. Arnold, J. S. Johnson, J. McFeely, John Griffis, J. D. Smith, H. Debolt, James Woodbury.

L. D. Lambert has been Secretary for ten years; E. Starbuck was Treasurer until his death and Henry Stockdale succeeded him and holds the position still.

The society was accommodated with suitable and commodious grounds for their annual fairs by a generous act of Dr. Joel N. Converse, securing to their use a tract of land containing forty acres by a free lease for the term of twenty years from April 1, 1870.

The original capital stock was $2,000, in $10 shares. The stock was some years afterward enlarged to the limit of $10,000. All the old stock and 213 shares of the new stock has been taken.

The territory embraced by the association is Randolph and Jay Counties, Ind., and Darke County, Ohio, and the Constitution provides that the Directors shall be chosen from the two States in proportion to the stock held in each, with not less than three, however, in either State at any election.

Betting, gambling, traffic in intoxicating drink, and all immoral shows are expressly prohibited. The fairs held at Union City grounds have been mostly free to all the world.

The first fair was held in the fall of 1870, and was a reasonable success; and a fair has been held each year since that time. The interest has varied from season to season, yet the stockholders and managers have felt satisfied that the enterprise that they have in hand is a good and praiseworthy one, and that a healthful effect has been produced upon the community through their means.

The Presidents have been Messrs. Converse, Janes, Branham, Smith, Reeder and Parent, and possibly others. The Vice Presidents have been Messrs. Janes, Elston, Smith, Reeder, Morris and Jaqua, and perhaps others. The Managers have been Messrs. Johnson, Arnold, Woodbury, Griffis, J. D. Smith, McFeely, Debolt, Turner, Parent, Trine, Buckingham, Wiggs, Stockdale, Mills, Trine, Grants, Morton, Hamilton, Shockney, Kunkle, Hall, and perhaps others.

The receipts for tickets and disbursements in various years for premiums have been as follows:

Tickets—1870, $2,195.40; 1871, $2,525.25; 1877, $2,279.02; 1878, $2,185.50; 1879, $2,520; 1880, $1,835.84.

Premiums—1870, $1,269.50; 1871, $2,145.50; 1877, $1,752.-75; 1878, $1.621.72; 1879, $1,629.25 1880, $1,381.50.

The association was in debt January 14, 1881, $2,247.95. Besides the use of the fair ground for the annual gatherings of the association, they furnish an excellent opportunity for large meetings of various kinds—picnics, camp-meetings temperance assemblies, political mass-meetings, and what not, find ample accommodations within its shady retreats.

In 1876, an immense Republican mass-meeting assembled at the fair grounds to listen to O. P. Morton. Camp-meetings have been held there for three successive years—1879, 1880 and 1881. The first was under the auspices of the Holiness Band, the second under that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the last in 1881, was addressed mostly by colored clergymen from Ohio and Indiana.

The ground occupied by the association is well suited to its purpose, being reasonably rolling and largely covered with thrifty shade trees, which every year become more and still more delightful, while several abundant wells yield a grateful supply of healthful water for the use of man and beast.

UNION CITY FAIR, 1881.

The fair association held their annual meeting at their beautiful grounds one mile west of Union City, Ind., September 22 to 25, 1881.

Notwithstanding the regular county fairs held every year at Greenville, Winchester, Portland, etc., Union City still bravely holds her own. Some departments were well represented, while others made not so grand a show. A very fine display of live stock was on hand; much of it, however, was from abroad. The vegetable department made only a middling show, on account of the dry season. Machinery was present in full force. Millinery, organs and furniture gave a creditable appearance, while the fine arts hardly put in an appearance at all. As to entries, there was of swine an unusual display; about eighty head of all kinds were on hand. Some of them were very large, and all were excellent. With such hogs, the value of corn for ordinary feeding is more than doubled; and in beauty and general merit there is no comparison between the old hound chasers, that could outrun a dog in olden times, and these splendid new breeds.

Of cattle the exhibition was superior. One firm from Delaware County, Ind., brought to the fair twelve head, older and younger, all Short Horns, full blooded—two cows, two bulls, two and three years old, five heifers, one and two years old, and three calves. The three-year-old male was very large, while the two-year-old would weigh 1,800 pounds. His owner bought him for $50 when a calf ten days old, and has been offered $500 for him now, but he would not take $1,000. The calves six months old he asks $75 for, and has sold one of them at those figures. The name of the firm owning this herd of cattle is Sharp & Skinner.

An Alderney bull and heifer belonging to J. H. Stine, Esq., of Washington City, were there, the stock of which was imported from Europe by W. W. Corcoran, banker at the National Capital. The number in all was twenty-eight or thirty head.

Nearly seventy sheep, Merinos, Cotswolds and Southdowns were in the pens, and a fine sight they were to see. There were many horses also, though how many we did not learn.

The crowd of people on Thursday was very large, said to be probably 8,000. The weather was all that could be desired until Friday morning, when a heavy storm of wind and rain swept over the country and gave the thirsty earth a delicious and plentiful supply of the life-giving fluid.

A very large Short-Horn bull, six years old, weight 2,200 pounds, was on exhibition by J. W. Starbuck, of Buena Vista, as also a cow and a grade heifer. Some owner had brought to the fair a splendid Devonshire male five years old, as also a yearling heifer which gave a quart of milk though never with calf. Thomas Mellen of White River, one cow with a male calf seven months old, said to be the finest there, except for color, which was spotted. Many of the cattle were beyond all praise for the glossy richness of their color and their excellence and splendor in general.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

The change in this respect is well nigh inconceivable. At first a hoe, a mattock, a plow, an ax, a scythe, a sickle, a rake, a fork, a sled, a shovel plow, a barshare plow, a flail, a fanning sheet. Now, an amount and variety of tools, of implements, of machinery, perfectly amazing and bewildering. Knowledge and time alike fail to describe this branch of farming affairs. An account of the needful apparatus for convenient and successful farming work at the present day would of itself fill a volume.

An Oliver chilled steel plow, a horse drill, a riding corn plow, a combined reaper and mower, a self-binder, a patent hay fork, a threshing separator run by a steam engine—these are only the beginning of things in this new era of inventions for the purpose of saving labor and multiplying power. And what is remarkable, and to some inexplicable, the more the machinery for superseding human labor, the higher the wages of human labor on the whole becomes. To find labor now when the self-binder takes the harvest on the stem and leaves it nicely, snugly bound in the sheaf with no human labor save a driver to the machine, is as difficult as it was when the whole vast work from first to last was done by human hands.

The business of making and handling agricultural implements has grown to be an industry very extensive and very useful. Immense factories have sprung up throughout the country, and dealers put forth their signs of business in every city and village, and the agents who handle these things meet you on every hand, and tease one nearly to death to purchase some one or more of the ten thousand implements fabricated for the farmers' use.

CHAPTER XVI.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

GENERAL I. O. O. F.—F. & A. M.—K. OF P.—I. O. O. R.

SECRET societies of various kinds have been established in the county from time to time, among which have been Masons, Odd Fellows, Sons of Temperance, Good Templars, Patrons of Husbandry, Knights of Pythias, Improved Order of Red Men, and perhaps others concerning which we have no information. And a remark at this point is called for, to wit, that the author has applied, by circular or by letter, or both, to every known lodge in the county, but that from a considerable number no reply whatever has been received.

I. O. O. F.

Winchester Lodge, No. 121.—In November, 1852, a petition to the Grand Lodge of Indiana, I. O. O. F., was signed by Silas Colgrove, John J. Cheney, Heman L. Searl, David Ferguson, Calvin D. Searl, Cyrus A. Reed, Thomas L. Scott and Benjamin Ramsey, asking a charter for a lodge at Winchester of I. O. O. F. A dispensation was granted November 11, 1852, and a charter issued by Joseph L. Silcox, G. M., and Willis W. Wright, G. S. The charter was signed then or afterward by Schuyler Colfax, Solomon Meredith, Robert Dale Owen, Fabius Finch, P. A. Mackelman, Theodore P. Hough, etc., etc.

The lodge was organized December 30, 1852, in the second story over the drug store of H. P. Kizer, by brothers from Muncie, viz.: David S. Haines, John C. Helms, Thomas J. Matthews, Thomas M. Jameson, William Weilling, Edward J. Rasley.

The following were admitted, who had been members of other lodges: Thomas L. Scott, J. J. Cheney, Silas Colgrove, Cyrus A. Reed and Calvin D. Searl.

The Acting Grand Master then appointed the following officers pro tem.:

John C. Helms, N. G.; John M. Jameson, V. G.; Thomas Matthews, Secretary; Job Swain, Treasurer; Eli J. Jameson, Warden; William Brotherton, Conductor; Jacob Colvert, L. H. S. and N. G.; Josiah P. Williams, R. H. S. and N. G.; Andrew Wachtel, L. H. S. and V. G.; William L. Matthews, R. H. S. and V. G.; William J. Ethell, R. S. S.; J. O. B. Tuttle, L. S. S.

The following persons were initiated: Paul W. Jollison, John Richardson, Job Carr, Martin A. Reeder, Thomas W. Kizer, John Armstrong, Harvey Patty, George W. Helms and Philip Barger.

The first officers were then elected and installed, viz.: Silas Colgrove, N. G.; Thomas L. Scott, V. G.; John J. Cheney, Secretary; Harvey Patty, Treasurer; C. D. Searl, Philip Barger, T. W. Kizer, Trustees.

The officers for the term were appointed as follows:

Martin A. Reeder, Warden; Job Carr, Outer Guard; John Richardson, Inner Guard; Paul W. Jollison, Conductor; G. W. Helms, R. H. S. to N. G.; C. A. Reed, L. H. S. to N. G.; C. D. Searl, R. S. S.; Harvey Patty, L. S. S.

The receipts on the first night were $100.

The Winchester Lodge, being the first in the county, became a kind of nucleus for the surrounding region.

Past Grands in order of time:

Silas Colgrove, Thomas L. Scott, John J. Cheney, M. A. Reeder, David Ferguson, B. F. Diggs, James P. Way, J. W. Cottom, Thomas M. Browne, Absalom Quick, Thomas W. Kizer, N. H. Ward, A. Stone, William Burris, G. W. Hill, J. F. Deem, E. J. Putman, J. E. Johnson, F. F. Needham, E. Thomas, R. S. Fisher, John W. Diggs, John K. Martin, D. H. Keyes, A. M. Owens, W. D. Frazee, G. M. Bonebrake, W. E. Murray, J. S. Way, Moses Sattenger, I. P. Watts, F. M. Way, J. L. Stakebake, E. L. Watson, N. Reed, A. J. Stakebake, W. B. Mikesell, Ira Tripp, William D. Kizer, J. S. Hiatt, Stephen Clevenger, L. M. Hill, R. P. Porter.

Twenty-three of the above are still members of the lodge in good standing. Three have died, ten have joined other lodges, six have been dropped for non-payment of dues.

Orphan fund, $1,858.99; expended for widows and education of children, $701.40; in hands of Trustees, $1,157.59; loaned out, $1,131.48; paid for funeral expenses, $589.50; sick benefits, persons, 213; amount of money paid, $3,127.60; other charities, $326.25; Grand Lodge dues, $526.72; loaned out, both funds, $3,591.20.

Effects of the lodge—General fund on hand, $164.72; loaned, $2,559.72; lodge room and fixtures, $1,500; orphan fund, cash, $26.11; loaned, $1,131.48; total, $5,457.03.

Twelve lodges and five encampments new exist in the county, a greater number of lodges and of members, in proportion to population, than are found in any other county in the State.

Of the original charter members, twelve are living; two, Job Carr and Harvey Patty, are dead; four have joined other lodges; four have been dropped for non-payment of dues; and four—J. J. Cheney, Thomas L. Scott, M. A. Reeder and Thomas W. Kizer—are members still.

Statistics of lodge—Initiated, 234; admitted by card, 58; reinstated, 35; total, 327; withdrawn by card, 95; suspended, 97; died, 17; expelled, 3.

The lodge has occupied, since 1856, rooms in the third story of a building on the public square.

It has enjoyed a high degree of harmony and prosperity. Its work has been prompt, active and thorough. The funds for benevolent purposes have been freely yet judiciously expended, and those who have been and who still are members have reason to rejoice in the amount of good accomplished by means of the establishment of the lodges of the I. O. O. F. in Randolph County.

Statistics, 1880—Paid for funeral benefits, $30; paid for sick benefits, $163; receipts, $392; expenses, $27.77; dues to Grand Lodge, $31.37.

Fairview Lodge, No. 134.—Lodge instituted August 17, 1853. Members now belonging, 64; funeral benefits, 1879, $33; orphan fund, $43.17; property (estimated), $2,115; receipts, 1879, $125.50; expenses, $31.48; dues to Grand Lodge, $9.88.

Union City Lodge, I. O. O. F., No. 152, was chartered August 28, 1854. Charter members: W. H. Twiford, J. N. Converse, H. L. Searl, James White, C. D. Searl, Alfred Lenox.

The lodge lost its property by fire soon after its formation (January 29, 1857), the loss being partially covered by insurance.

The amount of expenditures since the fire has been: For expenses of various kinds, $5,737.62; for benefits during sickness, and to widows and orphans, $2,431.12; total, $8,168.74.

Resources of the lodge, about $10,000, chiefly in real estate. Number of contributing members, eighty-five or ninety.

The I. O. O. F. professes to be a society for fraternal fellowship and assistance, composed of men of various creeds and ideas. Its business is to alleviate trouble, to cement the bonds of friendship, love and truth, and to give aid, counsel and protection in times of need.

The charitable resources of the order are being more actively employed each year.

The loss by the fire referred to above was about $800.

The Encampment, I. O. O. F., No. 81, numbered, in 1879, thirty-seven members. Its receipts were $36. Its expenses were $35.65. Paid for relief, $2. H. H. Lefever, Scribe; I. C. Klump, Chief Patriarch.

The officers of the lodge for 1880 are:

J. J. Norris, N. G.; S. H. Dunn, P. G.; C. Corey, V. G.; Thomas Austin, Recording Secretary; H. H. Lefever, Permanent Secretary; George Grahs, Treasurer; R. J. Clark, Warden.

The statistics of 1879 were as follows:

Paid for sick benefits, $23; orphan fund on hand loaned out, $627.30; property worth, $7,051.69, receipts, $311.61; expenses, $260.93.

Parker Lodge, No. 170.—Organized November, 1855. Charter members: Henry Adams, John Lankford, Harvey Harris, John Chandler.

There are about thirty members. The officers now are: R. A. McCamy, P. G.; M. M. Gwynn, N. G.; John Morris, V. G.; H. Hinchman, Secretary; John A. Jones, Treasurer.

Their hall was built in 1875. The lodge is in good working order.

Paid for sick benefits, $9; orphan fund, loaned out, $453.97; property worth, $3,400; receipts, 1879, $67.86; expenses not stated.

Farmland Lodge, No. 208.—Instituted June 13, 1859. Hall burned April 7, 1867. Loss, $1,700.

Members now belonging, sixty-one. The value of its new building is $4,000.

Paid for sick benefits, 1879, $84; paid for funeral benefits, $——; orphan fund, loaned out, $402.46; property worth, $3,580.57; receipts, $169.06; expenses, $88.98; dues to Grand Lodge, $11.14.

Losantville Lodge, No. 232.—This lodge was formed May 18, 1864. Charter members: William Hendricks, James Ralston, Milo Moore, Joseph Crouse, W. A. Snodgrass.

The above were the officers at first.

There are at present about thirty members. Their hall was burned down June 24, 1870, causing an entire loss, except $650 insurance. The society is now building a new hall (1881), at a cost of about $700. They have an orphan fund of about $300.

The present Trustees are Cornelius Metsker, H. P. Franks, M. D., M. L. Canady, Esq.

Officers now are: Daniel Devore, N. G.; Wilkinson Gray, V. G.; M. L. Canady, Secretary; H. P. Franks, Treasurer; James Steward, P. G.

The society is reasonably prosperous. Harmony and brotherly feeling prevail, and the brethren feel encouraged to persevere in the wise and virtuous maxims and practices inculcated in the teachings of the order.

Statistics, 1880—Paid for sick benefits, nothing; paid for funeral benefits, $7.50; orphan fund, loaned out, $241.05; property worth, $941.89; receipts, $36.95; expenses, $62.09; dues to Grand Lodge, $2.09.

Trenton Lodge, No. 248.—Instituted January 6, 1866. Number of members now belonging, twenty-nine.

One hundred and twelve have had membership in this lodge, and five have died.

The lodge has paid $490 for funeral benefits and the education of orphans.

Orphan fund, loaned out, $190.20; resources of lodge besides orphan fund, $2,975.53.

The lodge owns a hall, and is in good order for working in the mysteries of the society.

Spartansburg Lodge, No. 287, was instituted August 27, 1867, by E. H. Berry, Grand Secretary. Odd Fellows from Winchester, Union City and Whitewater were in attendance upon the occasion. The charter members were Adolphus Barnes, John Harlan, S. G. Hill, John Chenoweth, Levi Hill, Harvey Platt, S. S. Humphreys.

The lodge has numbered sixty members. At present, there are forty-one.

A hall was built in 1867, at a cost of $650.

The lodge is in good condition, with property worth $2,500. Its orphan fund is $500.

Some years ago, a grand celebration was held in Anderson's Grove, east of town. Among other speakers, B. H. Herrell, from Southern Indiana, addressed the assembly upon that interesting occasion.

Harmony and peace prevail among the members.

The present officers are: Wilson Anderson, N. G.; Ira Taylor, V. G.; J. W. Locke, Secretary; John W. Hill, Recording Secretary; John Barnes, Treasurer.

Paid for sick benefits, 1879, $20.

Deerfield Lodge, No. 293.—Instituted November 11, 1867, by Thomas W. Kizer, Deputy Grand Master

Charter members: Uriah Pierce, Francis E. Massey, William O. King, John Barnhart, Lewis A. Heath, John W. Hall, W. G Smith, Benjamin Bodorff, W. B. Smiley, E. B. Heath, Thomas N. Pierce.

Initiated: E. Myers, J. Harker, C. N. Taylor, J. W. Bragg, Olney Whipple, T. L. Addington.

Officers: Uriah Pierce, N. G.; Lewis A. Heath, V. G.; William O. King, Secretary; Olney Whipple, Treasurer; John Barnhart, Warden; Enos Myers, Conductor; T. L. Addington, R. S. to N. G.; J. Harker, L. S. to N. G.; W. B. Smiley, R. S. to

V. G.; James W. Bragg, L. S. to V. G.; W. G. Smith, R. S. S.; Thomas N. Pierce, L. S. S.; Benjamin Bodorff, I. G.; Trustees, E. B. Heath, Thomas L. Addington, Thomas N. Pierce.

The lodge meets every Saturday night, and is in good working order. Members, twenty-six.

Officers at present: William O. King, N. G.; F. C. Walker, V. G.; J. M. Collett, Secretary; L. Hawthorne, Treasurer; S. Waltz, R. S. to N. G.; H. Stick, L. S. to N. G.; J. Purcell, J. S. G.; E. McGriff, Warden; D. S. Collins, Conductor; Thomas Kolp, R. S. to V. G.; Jacob Auker, L. S. to V. G.; Joseph Kolp, R. S. S.; R. F. Thompson, L. S. S.; J. Purcell, F. C. Walker, H. Stick, Trustees.

Paid for sick benefits, 1879, $18; orphan fund, loaned out, $130; property worth, $520; receipts, $97.60; expenses, $43.71; dues to Grand Lodge, $7.86.

Lynn Lodge, No. 294.—Organized November 12, 1867. Charter members: Abram Brower, J. L. P. Frist, William Moon, Charles Powell.

There were at one time forty members. The number now is fifteen.

Their hall was built about 1870, and their property is estimated at $900.

The officers are: Joel Norton. N. G.; James Barnes, V. G.; Elkanah Hinshaw, Treasurer; Hueston Thomas, Secretary; J. L. P. Frist, P. G.

Receipts, $34.07; expenses, $8.90; educating orphans, $5.25; burying dead, $15.

Ridgeville Lodge, No. 297.—Ridgeville Lodge was instituted December 10, 1867, by authority of the Grand Lodge of Indiana, by Thomas W. Kizer, Grand Master.

Charter members: W. E. Starbuck, F. M. Way, J. R. Jones, George F. Miller, James Vankey, M. T. Sumption.

Elective officers of the lodge: J. R. Jones, N. G.; W. E. Starbuck, V. G.; M. R. Hiatt, Recording Secretary; J. L. Collier, Permanent Secretary; D. S. Kitselman, Treasurer; M. T. Sumption, D. W. Ward, J. L. Collier, Trustees.

Number of first members, ten.

Present officers: G. D. Williamson, N. G.; D. M. Odel, V. G.; J. T. Long, Recording Secretary; J. R. Willmore, Permanent Secretary; J. M. Haywood, Treasurer; S. R. Allen, D. S. Kitselman, M. T. Sumption, Trustees.

Number of members in all, ninety-four. Present membership, forty-one.

Statistics, 1880—Paid for burial expenses, $30; paid for sick, $7; orphan fund, loaned out, $147.30; property worth, $483.35; receipts, $70.70; expenses, $43.65; dues to Grand Lodge, $4.59; other charities, $1.

Windsor Lodge, No. 517.—Instituted January 7, 1876, by Richard Berger, of Muncie Lodge, No. 74, under a dispensation from J. B. Kimball, M. W. G. M.

Charter members: John Gable, Matthew D. Lynch, Robert Fisher, Nelson T. Chenoweth, Abraham B. Hammer, Elijah J. Pemberton, William K. Wallace.

George W. Dickson and William Baily were admitted on card.

The following were initiated: Michael Friedline, John C. Clevenger, Isaac H. Thornburg, James P. Hawk, Charles C. Clevenger.

Total at organization, fourteen. Number admitted since, forty. Number at present, thirty-seven.

First officers: Nelson T. Chenoweth, N. G.; Elijah J. Pemberton, V. G.; William Bailey, Secretary; Matthew D. Lynch, Permanent Secretary; John Gable, Treasurer.

Officers, March 17, 1881: Joshua Swingley, N. G.; Enos L. Amburn, V. G.; George W. Dixon, Secretary; Nelson T. Chenoweth, Treasurer.

Charter granted by the Right Worthy Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Indiana at its semi-annual communication of 1876.

The lodge built a hall the first summer, which was dedicated by B. F. Foster, Grand Secretary, I. O. O. F., of Indiana, September 8, 1876.

At two years old, the lodge was out of debt, and is so still, being in a healthy and prosperous condition, both as to work and to finances.

The last report showed as follows:

Cash, general fund, $351.71; orphan fund, $96.64.

The benefits due its members have always been promptly and fully paid, and Windsor Lodge, No. 517, is reckoned one of those which are sound and reliable.

Statistics, 1880—Paid for funeral benefits, nothing; paid for sick benefits, $7; orphan fund, loaned out, $78.21; property worth, $438.25; receipts, $137.76; expenses, $27.18; dues to Grand Lodge, $10.71.

White River Encampment, No. 50, is located at Winchester, Ind. It was organized May 22, 1856.

The charter members were A. Stone, David Ferguson, John W. Cottom, Silas Colgrove, H. H. Neff, James P. Way, T. W. Kizer.

The first officers were: D. Ferguson, C. P.; J. W. Cottom, H. P.; H. H. Neff, S. W.; A. Stone, J. W.; J. P. Way, Scribe; T. W. Kizer, Treasurer.

The present membership numbers about fifty.

The officers at this time are: J. H. Gill, C. P.; M. A. Reeder, H. P.; C. E. Ferris, S. W.; Mortimer Miller, J. W.; L. W. Study, Scribe; J. L. Stakebake, Treasurer.

The encampment has always been and still is in a harmonious and prosperous condition.

Statistics for 1880—Members, 119 (in all); receipts, $193.50; expenses, $30.40; paid for relief, nothing; dues to encampment, $18.30.

Fairview Encampment, No. 92.—No information received.

Spartansburg Encampment, No. 101, was instituted May 9, 1870, by Patriarch Ferguson, of Union City, assisted by Patriarchs from Union City and Winchester.

Charter members were: L. A. Custer, J. H. Curtis, J. C. Knox, J. W. Jackson, A. Barnes, J. W. Locke, Samuel Witter.

The first officers were: L. A. Custer, C. P.; J. H. Curtis, H. P.; A. Barnes, S. W.; J. C. Knox, S. W.; J. W. Locke, Secretary; S. Witter, Treasurer.

They have on hand $591. The number of members is seventy-nine.

E. Jackson, Chief Patriarch; J. W. Locke, Scribe.

Mt. Carmel (Farmland) Encampment, No. 110.—No information.

The first lodge of this order in Randolph County was instituted in Winchester November 11, 1852. The lodges in all are fourteen, viz.:

No. 121, Winchester, J. J. Evans, Scribe; instituted December 30, 1852.

No. 134, Fairview, W. E. Starbuck, Scribe; instituted August 17, 1853.

No. 152, Union City, W. W. Nivison, Scribe; instituted December 30, 1852.

No. 170, Parker, A. R. McCamy, Scribe; instituted August 28, 1854.

No. 208, Farmland, J. A. Moorman, Scribe; instituted June 13, 1859.

No. 232, Losantville, J. P. Rawlings, Scribe; instituted May 18, 1864.

No. 248, Trenton, J. B. Mills, Scribe; instituted January 6, 1866.

No. 287, Spartansburg, J. W. Locke, Scribe; instituted August 27, 1867.

No. 293, Deerfield, J. M. Collett, Scribe; intituted about November, 1867.

No. 294. Lynn, J. S. Blair, Scribe; intituted November 12, 1867.

No. 297, Ridgeville, M. T. Sumption, Scribe; instituted December 10, 1867.

No. 376, Randolph, J. H. Battorff, Scribe; no account.

No. 445, Buena Vista, John J. Dunn, Scribe; no account.

No. 517, Windsor, J. J. Clevinger, Scribe; instituted January 7, 1876.

Several of the lodges have given no account for insertion in this volume.

Specific application has been made to every lodge of secret societies known in the county. Many of them have made no response. The author regrets the fact, but he cannot help it.

The number of encampments, I. O. O. F., is five, as follows:

Winchester, No. 50; May 22, 1856.

Union City, No. 81. (See I. O. O. F.)

Fairview No. 92. No information.

Spartansburg, No. 101; May 19, 1870.

Farmland, No. 110. No information.

Members belonging, 249; receipts, $426.84; expenses, $175.93; relief, $59; burials, $35; dues to encampments, $39.56.

F. & A. M.

Winchester, No. 56.—Instituted May 28, 1844. Charter members: Edward Edger, Beattie McClellan, Michael Aker.

Members now belonging, seventy-one.

This lodge has entered, passed and raised some three hundred and fifty Masons, giving to that large number the means by which they may become lights in the Masonic world.

Union City Chapter, No. 94, R. A. M.—Instituted by dispensation of the Grand Chapter of Indiana in December, 1875. It was fully organized, under charter, in the following October, 1876, with Thomas Mitchell, H. P.; John Commons, K.; and N. Cadwallader, S.

Thomas Mitchell was continued High Priest until the present year, when William Commons was elected to that position.

Present members, twenty-six; and the officers for 1881 are as follows:

William Commons, H. P.; B. F. Coddington, K.; Robert J. Clark, S.; Thomas Mitchell, C. H.; Ind R. Belton, P. S.; J. M. Shank, R. A. C.; Christian Wetz, Capt. 3d V.; N. P. Pangborn, Capt. 2d V.; W. A. Wiley, Capt. 1st V.; N. Cadwallader, Treasurer; S. L. Gregory, Secretary; John Schneider, Grand.

Deerfield, No. 117.—Instituted May 30, 1851. Charter members from Winchester Lodge, No. 56.

Members now belonging, twenty-two.

She has entered, passed and raised over a hundred members.

Owns a hall. Prospects are favorable.

Lynn Lodge, No. 223, was formed May 25, 1858. Jophata S. Sellers, Master; R. W. Hamilton, S. W.; Levi C. Harris, J. W.

The members now number twenty-nine.

Their hall was built in 1858, which is worth, with the lot, $1,500.

The officers now are: Sylvester Tillson, Master; W. A. W. Daly, S. W.; John Reynolds, J. W.; Henry D. Nichols, Secretary; Columbus Chenoweth, Treasurer; Henry Stillwell, S. D.; Alfred Price, J. D.; Tarlton Nichols, Tiler.

The charter members were Joseph T. Mills, Matthew Comer, John Harris, Israel Lamb, Obadiah Stilwell.

The lodge has entered, passed and raised over sixty members.

She is in good condition, many seeking to enter and share the advantages of the order.

Farmland Lodge, No. 308.—Instituted June 13, 1859. Charter members probably from Winchester, No. 56.

Members now belonging, fifty-seven.

The lodge owns the hall it occupies, and is in good working condition.

Doric Lodge, Ridgeville, No. 362.—Instituted May 30, 1867.

Members now belonging, thirty-four.

The charter members were from Deerfield Lodge, No. 117.

She has entered, passed and raised about forty members.

Huntsville Lodge, No. 367.—Instituted ———. Charter members, ———.

Members now belonging, thirty-four.

No report from Huntsville Lodge for this work.

Pittsburg Lodge, No. 387.—Lodge discontinued.

Turpen Lodge, No. 401, Union City, Ind.—Organized under charter from Grand Lodge of Indiana, May 25, 1869. Charter members from Union City, Ohio, No. 270.

First Officers: William M. Anderson, W. M.; John Commons, S. W.; William H. Swain, J. W.

Charter members: William H. Anderson, John Commons, William H. Swain, Nathan Cadwallader, A. J. S. Bowers, William B. Hedgepeth, J. W. Campbell, Raiford Wiggs, A. T. Knight, John M. Janes.

William H. Anderson was Master of the lodge during the years 1869–1873, inclusive; William Commons, during the years 1874–76; Edwin M. Tansey, for 1877; and William A. Wiley, for 1878; William Commons, for 1879 and 1880. William H. Swain is Master for 1881.

Present number of members, forty-nine.

Present officers: Christian Wetz, S. W.; William H. Swain, W. M.; Charles S. Hardy, J. W.; B. F. Coddington, Treasurer; Webster Lambert, Secretary; William Commons, S. D.; James M. Shillenberger, J. D.; J. G. Harlan, Tiler.

The lodge has entered, passed and raised over sixty members.

They have a lease on their hall for twenty years.

The fraternity is harmonious and prosperous.

Olive Branch Lodge, No. 426.—Instituted July 27, 1870. Charter members, ———. Members now belonging, twenty-one.

The lodge owns the hall it occupies, and is in good condition.

RECAPITULATION.

The number of Masonic lodges in Randolph County, so far as learned, is nine; the number of degrees conferred, about twelve hundred; the membership at present, about three hundred and thirty.

There may be, perhaps, other lodges, but their statements have not reached us. In fact, many lodges have failed entirely to respond to the request respectfully tendered them to furnish a resumé of their history for insertion in the present volume, which fact must be the reason for so brief a mention of their affairs.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Invincible Lodge, No. 84, Union City.—The Knights of Pythias were established a few years ago at Washington, by one Mr. Dunlap. It was intended for the benefit and protection of Government employes at the capital and elsewhere. The organization has spread, however, and lodges have been formed through the United States, and even in foreign countries. The motto of the order is "Friendship, Charity and Benevolence."

The Invincible Lodge of Knights of Pythias at Union City, No. 84, was formed June 2, 1879. The charter members were fifteen: J. B. Ross, George W. Wiggs, Pierre Gray, Bayard S. Gray, John O. Ewan, E. A. Bradbury, David Kahn, Joseph Lohman, George W. Patchell, L. H. Ball, Adolphus Adams, R. Kirschbaum, John D. Smith, Ezra Thomas, C. Brandebury.

The officers at first were: Pierre Gray, Chancellor Commander; Charles G. Tritt, Vice Chancellor; Bayard S. Gray, Prelate; George W. Patchell, Master of Arms; L. H. Ball, Keeper of Records and Seals; George W. Wiggs, Master of Exchequer; J. D. Smith, Master of Finances.

The present number of members is about fifty.

The lodge is in a flourishing condition. They meet once a week, on Thursday night, and choose their officers every six months.

The association is composed mostly of young men, and has met with general favor, and especially from the ladies, who have proffered to the lodge banquets and toasts. The anniversary is commemorated by special exercises, and the society has been the means of affording satisfaction and innocent enjoyment to its members, and to all who have been connected with its operations, or who have in any way contributed to its comfort.

Through the agency of Lodge No. 84, a lodge was established also at Winchester, which is in successful progress.

The officers at the present time are: George W. Wiggs, C. C.; J. D. Smith, V. C.; M. A. Harlan, P.; H. D. Grahs, K. of R. and S.; James M. Starbuck, M. of E.; Pierre Gray, M. of F.; Bayard S. Gray, P. C.

Winchester Lodge, No. 91.—Through the efforts of Knights Ed Bradbury, Pierre Gray, George Wiggs and others, of Invincible Lodge, No. 84, Winchester Lodge, No. 91, Knights of Pythias of the Grand Jurisdiction of the State of Indiana, was instituted at Winchester, on the night of the 13th of April, 1880, with the following charter members and officers: L. W. Study,

P. C.; C. L. Lewis, C. C.; J. W. Thompson, V. C.; G. E. Leggett, P.; B. F. Boltz, K. of R. and S.; C. E. Ferris, M. of F.; J. A. Thomas, M. of E.; W. A. O'Harra, M. at A.; George Hiatt, I. G.; Ellis Kizer, O. G.; and Knights J. S. Kemp, Gideon F. Shaw, John H. Gill, H. D. Moorman and M. C. Gaffey.

There were present at the institution Knights from Union City, Richmond, Cambridge City, Muncie, Portland and Decatur, numbering, in all, about one hundred and ten. At 6 o'clock, before work was begun, a lunch was served in John Richardson's storeroom, on the southeast corner of the square, prepared by the ladies of the Christian Church. At 7 o'clock, the work of conferring the ranks of Page and Esquire began, and lasted until midnight. The hungry Knights and frightened Esquires then repaired to a banquet which the same ladies had prepared, and which bore evidence of their taste and skill.

A braver set of Knights never left a castle hall and marched over creaking draw-bridge than those who filed out of that banquet hall, with brightness and beauty behind. Fresh zeal was given as the quiet Palmer, who sat in the arched doorway, whispered, "Keep to the left, brave men; no railing on the right."

The work of conferring the Knight rank was completed and the officers installed about 4 o'clock, A. M., whereupon the weary Knights sought their welcome couches.

Since the institution, the lodge has had regular weekly meetings, with two exceptions, and has conferred the ranks upon the following-named persons: William Linkersdorfer, E. P. Smith, James A. Lesley, C. O. Irvin, Gus L. Guthiel, G. W. Longnecker, W. S. Harper, W. P. Needham, J. E. O'Harra, B. F. Marsh, E. S. Jaqua, W. A. Edger, W. W. Canada, L. A. Thomas, C. C. Yunker, Alvin Miller, W. P. Harris and E. H. Addington, and now has a membership of thirty-four.

The I. O. O. F. Lodge very kindly tendered their hall for institution purposes, and, since that time, the same hall has been used by the K. P.

The lodge has three times successfully given the beautiful and touching drama of "Damon and Pythias," assisted and conducted by Prof. D. Hanchett.

After its institution, the lodge had an indebtedness, on account of property and other things, of $150.

It is now free from debt, with a healthy surplus in its exchequer.

No deaths have occurred since the organization of the lodge.

Knight L. W. Study, in 1881, and Knight C. L. Lewis, in 1882, were Representatives to the Grand Lodge.

IMPROVED ORDER OF RED MEN, I. O. O. R.

Mississinewa Tribe, No. 62, Union City.—The name of the order was originally Independent Order of Red Men, and as such has existed for many years.

The lodge in Union City was formed January 22, 1879.

We can give no accurate statement as to the I. O. O. R., as to the time of establishment, principles, objects, number of lodges and what not. An account was promised us for insertion, but none has been furnished, and no data from which we could ourselves prepare such a statement concerning this comparatively new and somewhat unique society.

The members at the first were the following:

J. S. Bowers, O. A. Baker, Stephen Clevinger, F. H. Lewiston, Henry W. Leisure, W. B. Harlan, J. A. Green, S. M. Wentworth, H. C. Vening, D. J. Wise, W. H. Lawrence, J. C. Meier, W. Turpen, C. W. Voorhees, John Lawrence, Samuel Curtner, N. W. Cooper, F. H. Rodman, Elmer Hornbarger, J. W. Sugart, J. A. Hoover, J. W. Williams, G. W. Purdue, C. W. Huffman, Joseph Schronz, William Reeves, W. A. Orr, G. W. Lawrence, J. L. Heck, J. Hirsch, A. C. Throp, W. S. Murray, J. W. Myers, G. W. Burns, J. A. Armstrong, Charles Covey, J. Thomas, B. F. Julian, J. P. Standt. The officers are given below:

I. H. Green, W. S.; W. A. Orr, S. S.; J. L. Heck, J. S.; J. H. Herdman, W. P.; W. B. Harlan, C. of R.; J. S. Bowers, K. of W

The lodge of Red Men in Union City has had but a brief existence, but the progress has been satisfactory, and the members feel encouraged to persevere in the work upon which they have entered.

NOTE.—The G. A. R. has lately been extended to Randolph County. Two posts have been formed—Union City and Winchester—the former established in November, 1881, and the latter in April, 1882. For particulars, see military history of Randolph County. For temperance orders, see article on temperance. For Patrons of Husbandry (Grangers), see Agriculture.

CHAPTER XVII.

POLITICAL.

RANDOLPH County would seem to have been largely Democratic in early times, or else non-partisan.

Charles Conway, Clerk and Recorder for twenty-one years, was a Democrat. Jeremiah Smith, long a prominent official; Beattie McClelland, Daniel B. Miller, George Debolt, James Brown, Andrew Aker, etc., were Democrats, and they all were elected to office.

But, however it may have previously been, 1840 saw a complete change, for the "hero of Tippecanoe" swept the county and the region like a whirlwind. The country never witnessed such another campaign as that of 1840. Not even during the war, nor since, was the nation so lashed into fury as it was by the simple song of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too."

> "And with them we'll beat little Van,
> Van, Van is a used up man,
> With them we'll beat little Van."

The rise of the Liberty party came near giving Randolph County to the Democrats again. The canvass of 1844 found but nine majority for Clay. And for years the Anti-slavery vote, which came very largely from the Whig side, kept the county nearly upon a balance. But when the Whig ranks broke, never to rally again, the Republican party took an immense majority; and that majority has been maintained, for the most part, ever since. The year 1880 gave that side more than twenty-two hundred majority.

Two townships have formerly been, and are to this day, very strongly Democratic—Jackson and Ward. Nettle Creek and Franklin have a large Democratic vote, but the other townships are overwhelmingly the other way. Some of the precincts have scarcely any Democratic voters.

HARRISON CAMPAIGN.

Gen. Stone gives some reminiscences of the Harrison campaign, in which he was a young but wide-awake actor. He says:

"The country was wild with enthusiasm. A company of men went by wagon and via Indianapolis to the Harrison meeting at Tippecanoe battle-ground. We were gone three or four weeks, camping out every night. On the way, as we went, one fellow, a long distance away, showed a petticoat. (Old William Allen, an Ohio Democrat, and not very long ago Governor of Ohio, had charged that Gen. Harrison was so cowardly that the ladies of Chillicothe had presented him a petticoat, and the thing was seized on as a campaign argument, and a signal that maddened the Whigs, moreover, as a red rag is said to infuriate a raging bull.)

"This fellow flaunted a petticoat, and we went for him across lots. He was caught after a long chase, and he begged pitifully, making all sorts of pleas and promises, and was let go.

"Hundreds of people from Randolph attended the rally at Greenville, for the old hero was there himself, and the people gathered almost en masse, from great distances, to see and to hear him.

"Another charge, made against Harrison by way of sneer, that he lived in a log cabin and drank hard cider, was turned by the popular enthusiasm into a token of honor; and 'log cabins' and 'hard cider' became the watchwords and party signals of the time.

"Headquarters were made of log cabins, and hard cider was set forth in every conceivable way. Old men would have miniature cider barrels as heads to their canes, and show them proudly as they came to vote.

"Thousands and thousands of poles were erected, insomuch that the towns and villages seemed like a harbor, filled with masts of every height and size."

The assembly at Greenville, before mentioned, is said to have numbered 100,000 persons, and the enthusiasm and labor expended in gathering such a crowd then would more easily gather a million now.

They came from Kentucky, from Indiana, from Michigan. More than three hundred ladies came from Kentucky.

One delegation from a river county came with a monster canoe on wheels, drawn by ten white horses and containing twenty-seven young ladies.

The chief speeches were made by Tom Corwin, the "Buckeye wagon-boy," then in his prime, and the best stump speaker in America; and Gen. Harrison, who was a good, though not a great speaker.

Mr. Stone says: "Fully one thousand people went from Randolph. A company of 100 men in uniform marched under command of Josiah Montgar. The trip took three days, and we were a jolly crowd. There came near being a tragedy, however, at Jehu Robinson's (on the Kemp place). He was a hot Democrat, and put up the petticoat. The boys 'went for' the rag. The Robinson company undertook to keep it up, and for a brief space, matters looked serious. They got it down, however, and it stayed down while the procession passed.

"To the Richmond meeting we took a log cabin on wheels, drawn by thirteen yoke of oxen, the trip occupying five days.

"The load went afoot till near the town, and then they mounted the wagon and rode into town in all their glory.

"Many were on horseback and rode as cavalry, with whom a laughable incident occurred.

"As we passed a fine mansion, some ladies were gathered, and they marched down to greet us in a large group, singing as they came, and carrying 'Tippecanoe' flags. As they got near us, we were ordered to salute our visitors, which was done by a drawing of sabers. The movement made such a racket that the ladies, not knowing what it meant, were scared nearly to death, running, screaming, hiding behind trees, etc. The men were greatly chagrined to think they had frightened away their gentle visitors, and rode off completely cowed."

One very important factor in the accomplishment of the sweeping political revulsion of that year was a speech in Congress by Mr. Bond, a member from Ohio, purporting to show in detail the immense extravagance of the party then in power. Those speeches were scattered by the million, "thick as leaves in Vallambrosa," and they were read, and the people were wild with indignation, and the old and whilom honored Democratic party was crushed as with a resistless whirlwind under the tempest of popular indignation that tore through the land.

MASS MEETINGS.

In later years, immense political gatherings have been had in Randolph. Among them have been the rally at Union City to hear Gov. Morton in 1876; the rally at Winchester, in the same campaign, to listen to Robert G. Ingersoll, a most famous orator; the monster rally at Winchester to welcome Hon. A. G. Porter, Republican candidate for Governor in 1880, etc.

A most interesting occasion was the meeting to listen to the speech of Gen. Ben Harrison at Union City in 1880, on the eve of the election. Though not intended for a rally, and though held at night, yet the people gathered in a crowd of three to four thousand, coming for miles and miles, and showing immense enthusiasm.

Of course, the Democratic party made rallies also, and did well, but they could not rival the Republicans in such a county as old Randolph. They showed their pluck, however, bravely holding their ground in the face of overwhelming odds and doing their best in the State campaign which came so near being a success that half a dozen votes in each township would have turned the scale and given them the Presidency.

GREENBACKISM.

The Greenback party has made some, though small, headway in the county, amounting to a few hundred out of seven or eight thousand voters of all sorts.

"PRIMARY ELECTIONS."

It is a peculiar feature of Randolph political methods that the nomination of candidates for offices among the Republicans has been, for twenty years or more, effected by direct popular primary elections.

Many voters are greatly dissatisfied with the method, thinking that it aggravates the evils it was intended to cure; and strong efforts were made, at the primary elections in the spring of 1880, to change the method; but without success, since a majority of several hundred was cast in favor of the continuance of the system.

EPISODE.

A somewhat remarkable episode in politics occurred in 1878, in this county. Two of the successful candidates of the nominating election of that year were singled out and charged, though probably without good reason, with having used unfair means to secure their nomination. A concerted movement was set on foot for their defeat, and the disaffected joined with the Democrats in a convention which named one Democrat and one Republican for the two offices referred to above. The movement was so strong that the ordinary Republican majority of seventeen to eighteen hundred was cut down to some three hundred or thereabout, as to these two candidates.

TENURE OF OFFICE.

A remarkable change has come to pass from the customs of "auld lang syne" as to the tenure of offices.

Charles Conway was Clerk twenty-one years. W. C. Willmore was Recorder fourteen years. George W. Monks was Clerk for fourteen years. Many have held their positions for six and eight years.

But the business has grown so immensely, vastly increasing the fees and salaries of the various offices, that a single term, even of two years, is thought to be enough to make a man rich. And so the fashion now is to give each fellow "one pull at the teat," and choke him off to give "the next pig a chance."

The salaries have been, indeed, and still are, far too high, and many think that the fact is injurious to the public service. Certainly the ignoring the value of experience in official station is a reversal of all recognized rules of business in private life, and can scarcely fail to inflict serious and permanent loss upon the public interest.

KNOW-NOTHINGISM.

Know-Nothingism took a brief and evanescent hold in Randolph County. Lodges of "Native Americans" were formed in several places, soon, however, dying out.

It is worthy of remark that a gentleman who, for many years, has been a prominent and influential Democrat in the State of Ohio, who was also of genuine Democratic stock, was an active member of a Know-Nothing lodge in Randolph County during the summer of 1854 or thereabout.

ANTI-SLAVERY -- FREE-SOILISM -- REPUBLICANISM.

The anti-slavery cause took very strong hold upon the public heart of Randolph. The Free-Soil movement made still greater headway, and the Republican party swept away all opposition; and for almost a generation, Randolph County has been overwhelmingly Republican, giving, at the last Presidential election, about twenty-two hundred majority for that party. A few men have stood firm as Democrats, though it must be said that some of the chief partisans of that side in Randolph at the present time, are gentlemen who were, years ago, anti-Democratic.

Col. and ex-Gov. I. P. Gray was for years a Republican, reaching the State Senate as the candidate of that party.

Gideon Shaw and Benjamin R. Shaw, Esqs., now prominent Democrats, were Whigs before the war.

Some have, however, retained their own original standing, or

J. M. HODSON.

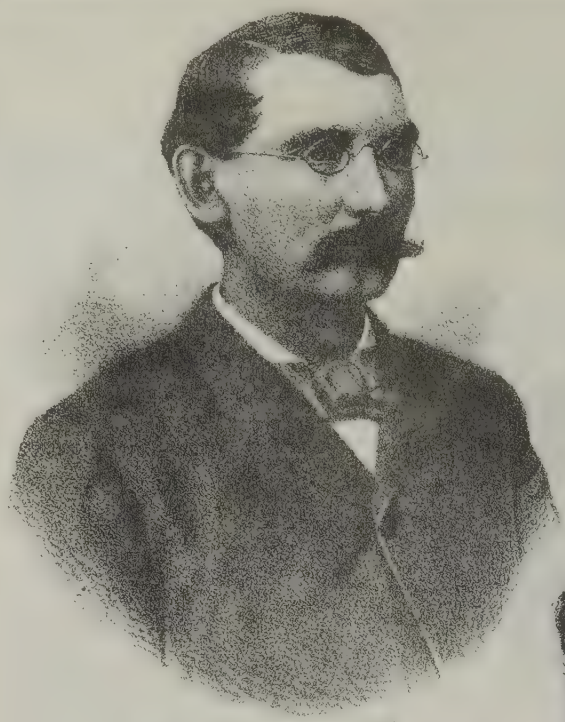
John Milton Hodson was born August 24, 1839, in Clinton County Ohio. His father, Matthew Hodson, was a farmer in that county, and remained there until 1852. In that year, he removed to Hancock County, Ind., and in 1867 to Rush County, Ind., where he died in 1873, at the age of seventy-nine years. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and in the ante-bellum days was a pronounced Abolitionist. He acted in concert with the managers of the famous "Underground Railroad," and often sheltered fugitive slaves, and assisted them on their way to liberty He was a man who always occupied a high place in the estimation of those who knew him, and was always recognized as a good citizen and an honorable man. His son, J. M., was reared on the farm, and gained a good English education in the common schools. Subsequently, he attended an excellent school at Westland, Hancock Co., Ind., conducted by the Friends, and later was a student in the Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, completing the scientific course. By his previous preparation, he was well qualified for the profession of school teaching, which he adopted in 1856. He taught two years in Hancock County, Ind., and was similarly engaged for a year in the adjoining county of Hamilton, and for a period of sixteen years, was engaged in teaching in the counties of Hancock, Hamilton, Rush, Henry, Hendricks and Randolph, respectively. From 1867 to 1869, he held the office of School Examiner of Rush County, Ind.; he was Superintendent of the Schools of Knightstown, Ind., for one year, having under his supervision seven teachers and 500 pupils. He served two years in the same capacity at Plainfield, Ind., where there were six teachers and 450 pupils. As a teacher, he always ranked highly, and gained the good will of the scholars, while under his supervision the schools were marked by progress and improvement.

In 1872, Mr. Hodson came to Winchester, and in July of that year purchased a half interest in the Winchester Journal, of which he was joint proprietor for nine years, or until July, 1881, when he sold his interest to his partner, Mr. Beeson.

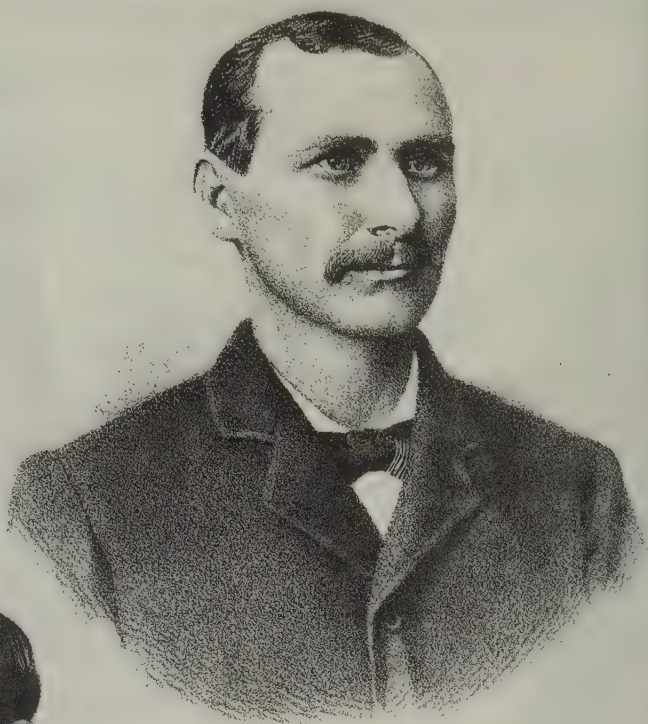
Mr. Hodson is yet comparatively a young man, but his life has been a busy one, and the energy and enthusiasm with which he has entered into his labors have been fairly successful and repaid from a financial standpoint. He is not a member of any religious denomination, is a Unitarian in belief, yet most liberal toward all candid opinions of others.

He is an active member of the Masonic order. He was made a Mason in 1865, and took the Master Mason's degree later in the same year; and in 1869 took the Chapter, Council degrees, and, in 1870, Knights Templar degrees. In politics, he is an enthusiastic Republican, having been identified with that party ever since he was old enough to vote. He is an uncompromising temperance man, and has rendered effective service to the cause by precept and example. He is in all respects a good citizen and a valued member of society.

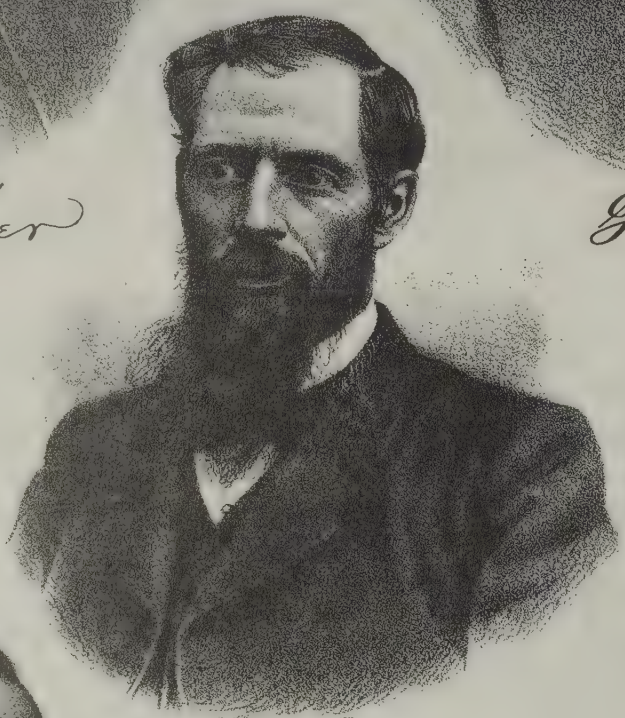
On the 17th of October, 1861, Mr. Hodson was united in marriage with Miss Martha A. Rawles, of Stark County, Ohio. After twenty years of devotion and affection, she was called from earth, in the winter of 1881, while sojourning in Florida with the hope of recruiting her health. She was an excellent Christian lady, an ornament in society, and the favorite of all who knew her and felt her gentle influence. Three of their children preceded the mother to the home beyond the grave, while one, a bright little girl, gives fine promise for the future.



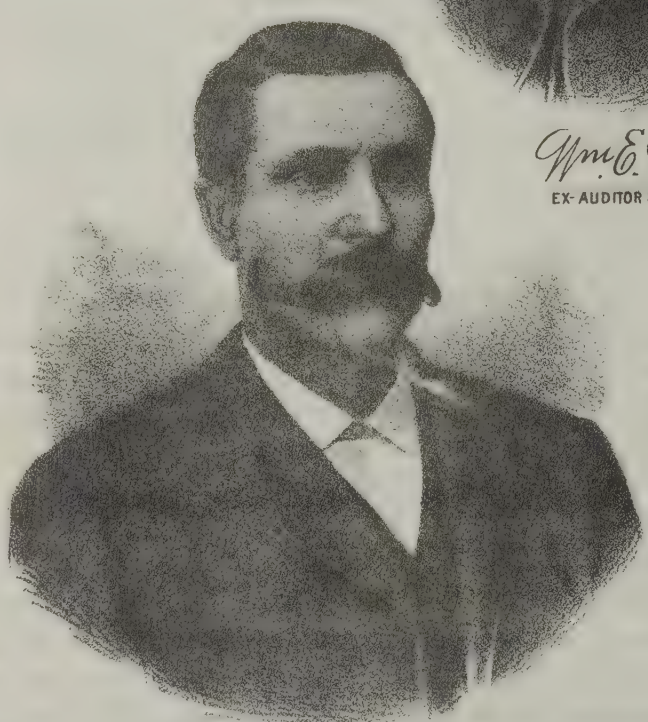
Wm. D. Kizer
EX-AUDITOR.



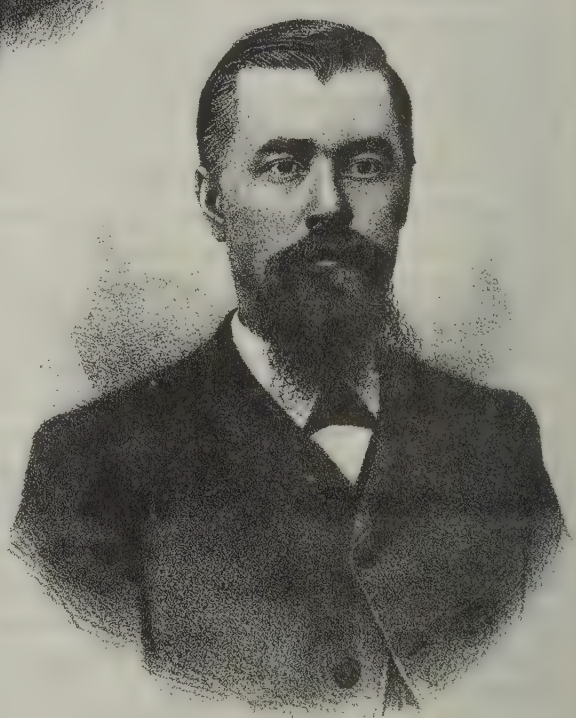
Geo. H. Edger
EX-AUDITOR.



Wm. E. Murray
EX-AUDITOR & REPRESENTATIVE

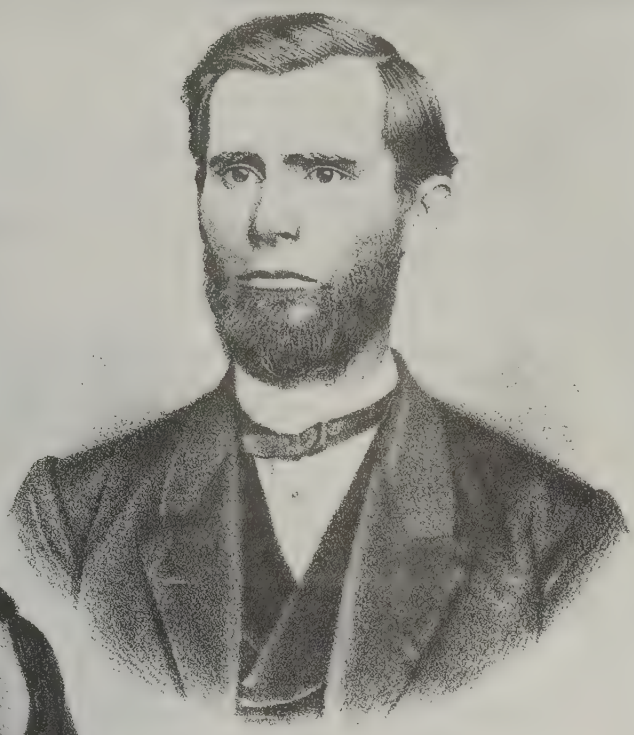


Oliver P. Luellen
RECORDER.

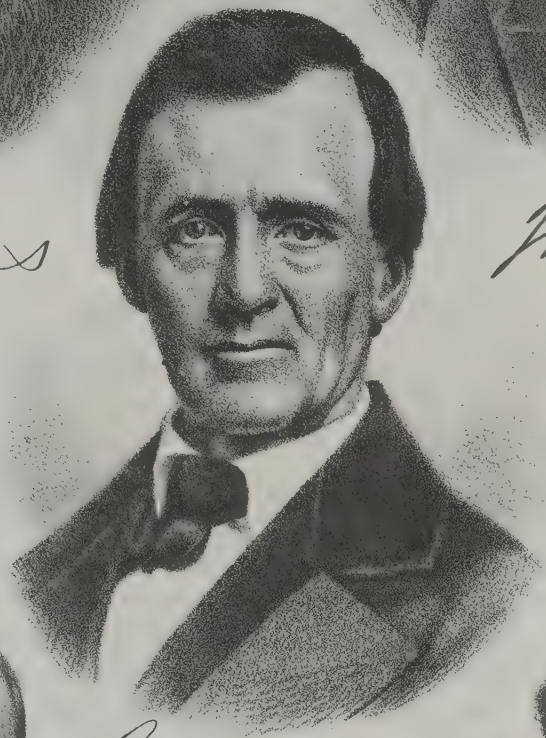


P. F. Poltz
AUDITOR.

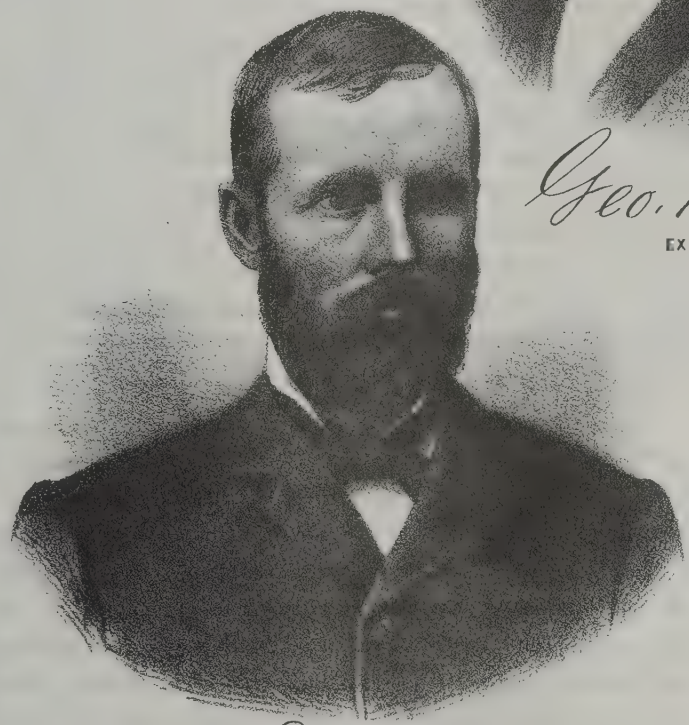
A. G. Summers
EX-CLERK.



Isaac Goodrich
EX-CLERK.



Geo. N. Monty
EX-CLERK.



J. N. Macy
EX-CLERK

Isaiah P. Watts
CLERK.

Respectfully
E. H. Butler

E. H. BUTLER.

Eli H. Butler was born August 12, 1841, in Hancock County, Ind. His parents were natives of Virginia; but emigrated to Indiana at an early day, and were prominent among the early settlers of Hancock County. They had a family of ten children, of whom five sons and three daughters now survive. Of the sons, two are practicing physicians, one an engineer, one a sewing machine agent, another a farmer, and the fifth a successful school teacher and superintendent. The latter is the subject of this sketch. His early life was passed like that of the average farmer boy of early days, excepting that the schools which he attended in the winter were of a higher order than was customary at that period—algebra, geometry and the higher mathematics being among the studies pursued. In early life, he decided to adopt the teacher's profession, and that his choice was well taken, the after years proved. At the first, school teaching was the medium through which he acquired the means for continuing and completing his studies. He was seventeen years old, when he taught his first school, and for three or four years following, he taught in the winter, attending Spiceland Academy during the summer. After leaving the academy, he was engaged as a teacher in the graded school at Milton, Wayne Co., Ind., in which capacity he acted from 1867 to 1869 He then became Superintendent of the public schools at Lawrenceburg Ind., the school having twelve grades. He discharged the duties of this position satisfactorily to all, for a period of five years, and at the end of that time removed to Attica, Ind., where he accepted a similar position in a school of nine grades, and in addition, acted as Deputy County Superintendent for one year. In 1877, he took charge of the public schools of Winchester, and so ably has he discharged his duties as Superintendent, that his continuance in this capacity is by the universal wish of the public, and all who enjoy the benefits of the measures and improvements he has instituted in the schools of this town. He seems to be peculiarly qualified for the profession he has adopted, and his work has been crowned with success, which will continue to blossom and bear fruit as long as his pupils survive. He is zealous and energetic as a teacher, and by his mild, yet firm manner, has won the regard and confidence of all, both teachers and scholars. As a neighbor and citizen, he is highly esteemed by all who know him, for his sociability and amiable bearing toward all. He is an active and earnest Republican, and has done effective service for the party, in his quiet, unostentatious way. He is also actively identified with the Masonic fraternity, and has taken all the degrees, up to that of Knight Templar.

In his domestic relations, Prof. Butler has been called upon to suffer the deepest grief, having twice felt the icy hand of death severing the ties that bind the hearts of husband and wife. He was first married, on the 19th of August, 1861, to Miss Matilda M., daughter of James Sample, a pioneer citizen of Hancock County, Ind. On the 3d of November, 1863, his wife died, leaving one child and many friends to mourn her loss. September 17, 1869, Mr. Butler was united in marriage with Miss Susanna A. Davenport, who died March 8, 1876, leaving three children. On the 1st of June, 1879, he wedded Miss Clara B. Richardson, his present companion. By this union, they are the parents of one child. His wife is an excellent lady, and the favorite of the circle in which she moves, sharing with her husband the regard and affection of numerous friends.

walk in the footsteps of their progenitors. Such are Col. M. B. Miller, Willim K. Smith, John Dye Smith and others whose fathers before them were sterling Democrats, "all of the olden time," and whose children worthily and sturdily sustain the flag and uphold the banner beneath whose gallant folds so many State and national victories were, in years gone by, triumphantly gained in this grand old commonwealth of ours. All honor to men who have the courage of their principles, and who cling to what they believe to be right in the clouds of defeat as cheerfully as in the sunshine of victory.

SONS OF LIBERTY.

The Sons of Liberty are understood to have found adherents in this county in the civil war of 1861, and it is affirmed, with confidence, that lodges were formed and meetings held in secret places within our borders, under night and darkness, and the obligations of a solemn oath to secrecy and obedience. But the result of the war crushed all such movements and attempts, whether real or only imaginary, under the heel of popular indignation. And it is the truth, doubtless, that, in the heat of those troublous and terrible times, the men who leagued together to undertake to "stop the war" verily thought, within themselves, like Saul of Tarsus of old, that they were doing God and their country great service.

It is one of the fearful evils of such convulsive times that sincere and well-meaning citizens become arrayed in fierce hostility, and not seldom in deadly conflict.

The wars of the Roses in England found good men in both armies.

John Wesley and his worthy wife were on opposite sides as to who was the proper heir to the English throne, and that difference at one time threatened serious results.

The Whigs and the Tories, in our Revolution of 1776, were equally good and equally sincere. To the Tories, the Whigs were rebels, and deserved the fate of rebels. The Loyalists were simply fighting for their Government and their King.

The Unionists and the "Copperheads" (to use an opprobrious name without its opprobrious meaning), and even the "Secessionists," were doing, in their several ways, what they really supposed to be right, and demanded by the exigencies of the hour.

And it is indeed a very sad thing when sincere and upright and earnest men are set thus in hostile or even deadly array.

Would to God the time might come when all good and patriotic men should be able to "see eye to eye" upon the great fundamental questions of national weal, and to unite in one solid, world-wide, invincible phalanx of liberty and justice, whose power should be put forth like the strength of one man, everywhere and always, to suppress the wrong, to maintain the right, to protect the poor, the needy and the weak; to create and increase comfort and happiness among men; to discourage vice and to foster virtue; to spread knowledge throughout the world; to perfect the reign of love and good will among men; and to bring to pass that happy, glorious day in which men shall beat their swords into plow-shares and their spears into pruning-hooks, and men shall learn war no more; and none shall hurt nor destroy throughout earth's wide domain!

"13TH ARTICLE."

Another fact worthy of note is that upon the question of the thirteenth article of the constitution of 1851 (against persons of color), while the State as a whole voted therefor, and gave for the article a majority of nearly 100,000, Randolph County alone, in all the State, refused her assent, and cast a majority against the thirteenth article aforesaid.

OFFICE HOLDING.

Randolph County has furnished a moderate number of office-holders for the State at large and for the nation.

Hon. W. A. Peelle, Secretary of State, 1860–1862.

Hon. J. E. Neff, Secretary of State four years; Democrat.

Hon. Isaac P. Gray, Lieutenant Governor and Governor (by the death of Gov. Williams), 1879–1880.

Hon. Thomas M. Browne, United States District Attorney, and member of Congress (the latter for three terms—six years—elected by a good, and, the last time, an immense majority).

Hon. Silas Colgrove, twelve years Circuit Judge.

Hon. Jeremiah Smith, Circuit Judge.

Hon. L. J. Monks, Circuit Judge at the present time.

Hon. Stanton J. Peelle, present member of Congress from the district containing Indianapolis, and nominated for a second term in the summer of 1882.

There may have been others not now recollected.

CHAPTER XVIII.

PERSONAL.

OFFICIAL—ATTORNEYS—PHYSICIANS—PRESS.

IN the following article we furnish an account of various classes of persons—officers, attorneys, physicians, and also a brief history of the press in Randolph County, with sketches of some of the men connected therewith, as also biographies of persons belonging to some of the classes above mentioned.

(For other biographies, look under clergymen, military, townships, towns, business, etc.)

CONGRESSMEN.

William Hendricks, 1817–1823, First District—one district in the State.

John Test, 1823–1827.

Oliver H. Smith, 1827–1829; John Test, 1829–1831; Jonathan McCarty, 1831–1833—Third District—three districts.

Jonathan McCarty, 1833–1837; James H. Rariden, 1837–1841; Andrew Kennedy, 1841–1843—Fifth District—seven districts.

Andrew Kennedy, 1843–1847; William Rockhill, 1847–1849; Andrew J. Harlan, 1849–1851; Samuel Brenton, 1851–1853—Tenth District—ten districts.

Samuel W. Parker, 1853–1855; D. P. Holloway, 1855–1857—Fifth District.

David Kilgore, 1857–1861—eleven districts.

George W. Julian, 1861–1871; Jeremiah M. Wilson, 1871–1873—Fourth District.

Jeremiah M. Wilson, 1873–1875; William S. Holman, 1875–1877; Thomas M. Browne, 1877–1883—Fifth District—thirteen districts.

RECAPITULATION.

William Hendricks, six years; John Test, six years; Oliver H. Smith, two years.

Jonathan McCarty, six years; James Rariden, four years; Andrew Kennedy, six years.

William Rockhill, two years; Andrew J. Harlan, two years; Samuel Brenton, two years.

Samuel W. Parker, two years; D. P. Holloway, two years.

David Kilgore, four years.

George W. Julian, ten years.

Jeremiah M. Willson, four years.

William S. Holman, two years; Thomas M. Browne, six years.

Total, sixteen Congessmen in sixty-six years—1817 to 1883.

SENATE.

1816–24—Patrick Baird, Wayne and Randolph.

1825—James Rariden, Wayne, Randolph, Allen; Centerville.

1826–28—Amaziah Morgan, Rush, Henry, Randolph, Allen.

1829–31—Daniel Worth, Randolph, Allen, Delaware, Cass; Huntsville.

1832–33—Samuel Hanna, as next above—Fort Wayne, St. Joseph, Elkhart.

1834–35—Andrew Aker, Randolph, Delaware, Grant; Winchester.

1836–39—Andrew Kennedy, Delaware, Randolph; Muncie.

1840—Michael Aker, Delaware, Randolph, Winchester.

1841–42—Michael Aker, Randolph, Blackford, Jay; Winchester.
1843–45—Isaac F. Wood, Randolph, Blackford, Jay; Spartansburg.
1846–48—Dixon Milligan, Randolph, Blackford, Jay; Portland.
1849–50—Jacob Brugh, Randolph, Blackford; Jay.
1851–52——— Longshore, Randolph, Jay; Deerfield.
1853–56—Theophilus Wilson, Randolph, Jay; New Corydon.
1857–60—Daniel Hill, Randolph; Jericho.
1860–62—Asahel Stone, Randolph; Winchester.
1862–64—Thomas M. Browne, Randolph; Winchester.
1864–68—Thomas Ward, Randolph; Winchester.
1868–72—Isaac P. Gray, Randolph; Union City.
1872–76—Andrew J. Neff, Randolph; Winchester.
1876–80—Nathan Cadwallader, Randolph; Union City.
1880–84—E. H. Bundy, Randolph, Henry.
1882–86—Marcus C. Smith, Randolph, Henry, Delaware; Muncie.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following list gives name, residence and counties represented:

1816—Joseph Holman, Ephraim Overman (Randolph), John Scott, Wayne and Randolph.
1817—Holman, Scott, Robert Hill, Wayne and Randolph.
1818, 1819, 1820, 1821—Supposed to have been represented with Wayne County.
1822–24—John Wright (Randolph), Wayne and Randolph.
1825—Daniel Worth (Randolph), Randolph and Allen.
1826—Samuel Hanna (Allen), Randolph, Allen, and all the territory north of Madison and Hamilton Counties to the Wabash not attached elsewhere.
1827–28—Daniel Worth (Randolph), as next above.
1829—Lemuel G. Jackson (Delaware), Randolph and Delaware.
1830—David Semans (Randolph), Randolph and Delaware.
1831—Andrew Aker (Randolph), Randolph alone.
1832–33—Eli Edwards (Randolph), Randolph.
1834—Zachariah Puckett (Randolph), Randolph.
1835—Eli Edwards (Randolph), Randolph.
1836–37—Zachariah Puckett (Randolph), Randolph.
1838–39—Miles Hunt (Randolph), Randolph.
1840—Smith Elkins (Randolph), Randolph.
1841–42—Robert W. Butler (Randolph), Randolph.
1843—Edward Edger, (Randolph), Randolph.
1844–45—Roylston Ford (Randolph), Randolph.
1846—James Griffis (Randolph), Randolph.
1848—H. H. Neff, Asahel Stone (Randolph), Randolph.
1848—Isaac F. Wood.
1849—Elza Lank, Jr., James Brown.
1850—Elza Lank, Jr.
1851–52—John Wilson.
1853–54—Josiah Bundy.
1855–56—George W. Monks.
1857–60—Silas Colgrove.
1861–64—John A. Moorman.
1865–66—Thomas W. Reece.
1867–68—Enos L. Watson.
1869–70—J. T. Vardeman.
1870–72—Asahel Stone.
1872–74—Nathan T. Butts.
1874–76—Martin A. Reeder.
1876–78—John A. Moorman.
1878–80—Enos L. Watson.
1880–82—William E. Murray.
1882–84—Theodore Shockney (nominated).

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, 1851.

Randolph County, Beattie McClelland.
Randolph and Jay (Senatorial), Dixon Milligan, Nathan R. Hawkins.

CIRCUIT JUDGES.

John Watts, Miles Eggleston, Charles H. Test, Isaac Blackford, Samuel Bigger, David Kilgore, Jeremiah Smith, Joseph Anthony, Jeremiah Smith, Jehu T. Elliot, Silas Colgrove, J. J. Cheney, Jacob M. Haynes, Silas Colgrove, Leander J. Monks.

ASSOCIATE JUDGES.

William Edwards, 1818; John Wright, 1818–46; John Sample; William Peacock, 1834; Littleberry Diggs, Peter S. Miller, Stephen C. Stephens, John T. McKinney, Daniel B. Miller, John Mock

It is possible that there may have been more than the ones named above.

PROBATE JUDGES.

William Edwards, Associate Judge; John Wright, Associate Judge; John Sample, Associate Judge; James T. Liston, sole Judge, 1831–33; Zachariah Puckett, sole Judge, 1833–34; Smith Elkins, sole Judge, 1834–36; E. B. Goodrich, sole Judge, 1836–42; Beattie McClelland, sole Judge, 1842–49; George Debolt, sole Judge, 1849–51.

Closed August 16, 1852.

Probate business was done at first by the Associate Judges, then by a single Judge, afterward by the Court of Common Pleas until that court was discontinued, and since that time by the Circuit Court.

(See Judges of Court of Common Pleas, and also of the Circuit Court.)

JUDGES COMMON PLEAS COURT.

Nathan B. Hawkins, 1853 (died in office); James Brown, 1853–54; W. A. Peelle, 1854–60; Jacob M. Haynes, 1860–63.

Since that time, probate business has been done in the Circuit Court.

The Court of Common Pleas was abolished (as also the Probate Court had been), and the business of both was transferred to the Circuit Court, by which it is still transacted.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

The first Prosecuting Attorney was James Rariden, appointed by the court. After him at various times were Bethuel Morris, John Gilmore, Lot Bloomfield, Oliver H. Smith, Amos Lane, Charles H. Test, Martin M. Ray, James Perry, William J. Brown, Caleb B. Smith, Samuel W. Parker, Jeremiah Smith, Andrew Kennedy, Jehu T. Elliott, John Brownlee (up to October, 1839).

Elected—William A. Peelle, Thomas M. Browne, Silas Colgrove, J. J. Cheney (Common Pleas), Enos L. Watson (Common Pleas), William Garber, Thomas M. Browne, Daniel M. Bradbury, E. B. Reynolds, Alexander Gullett, A. O. Marsh, J. E. Mellette.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

The Court of Common Pleas was established under the constitution of 1851, and continued till a few years ago.

The Prosecuting Attorneys for that court were William Moorman, elected 1852; J. J. Cheney, 1854; E. L. Watson, 1856, 1858, 1862; Thomas J. Hosford, 1860; Mellette, John J. Hawkins.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Eli Overman, 1818–20; Benjamin Cox, 1818–20; John James, 1818–24; John Wright, 1820–22; Zachariah Puckett, 1820–22; David Bowles, 1822–24; Daniel Blunt, 1822–24; David Stout, 1822–24; Board of Justices, 1825–31; William A. Macy, 1831–34; John James, 1831–34; Elias Kizer, 1831–34; Thomas Baxter, 1833–36; Robison McIntyre, 1834–37; James Smith, 1835–38; John Coates; George B. McNees, 1837–40; Abram Adamson, 1837–40; John L. Anderson, 1838–41; William Kennedy, 1839–42; Samuel Pike, 1840–43; Nathaniel Kemp, 1845; Philip Barger, 1846; John M. Lucas, 1848; George W. Vandeburg, 1850; Emsen Wright, 1850; Andrew Devoss, 1851; Nathaniel Kemp, 1856; Thomas Aker, 1856; Endsley Jones, 1856; Elihu Cammack, 1857; Hicks K. Wright, 1859; Arthur McKew, 1860; Clement F. Alexander, 1861; Andrew Devoss, 1863; Hicks K. Wright, 1865–73; Nathan Reed, 1865–68; Elihu Cammack, 1867–73; Thomas Clevinger, 1868–77; Francis G. Morgan, 1873–76; Philip Barger, 1873–76; William M. Botkin, 1877–80; Wilson

L. J. Monks,

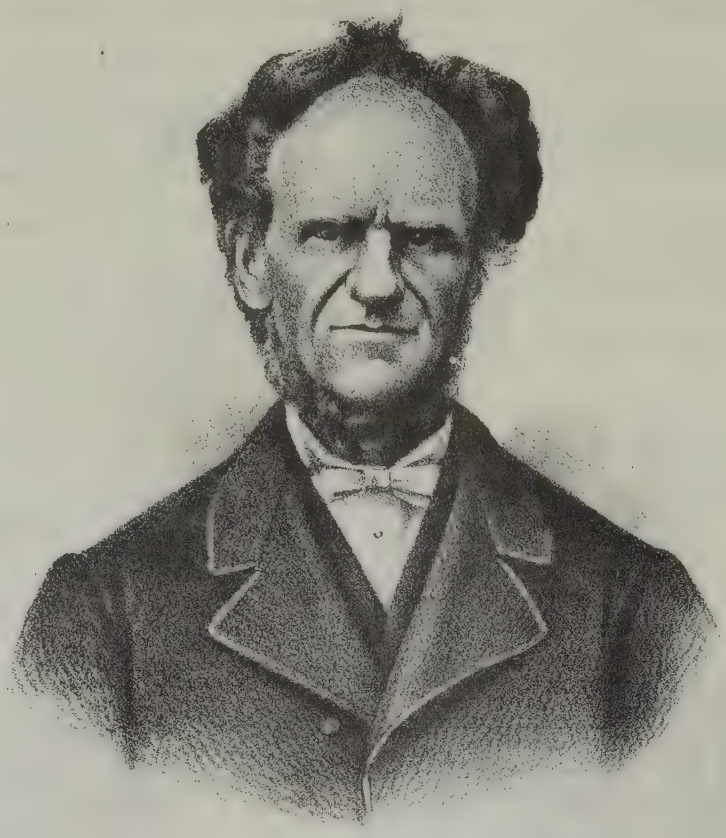
JUDGE OF THE 25TH. JUDICIAL CIRCUIT OF INDIANA.

HON. LEANDER J. MONKS.

Leander J., eldest son of George W. and Mary A. Monks, was born July 10, 1843, at Winchester, Randolph Co., Ind. He attended the public schools of this county, where he acquired a good primary education, and in 1861 entered the State University, at Bloomington, Ind., where he remained during the school years of 1861, 1862 and 1863. He left the University in the Junior year, and in 1865 entered upon the practice of the law. He rose steadily in his profession from the first, and in a few years was called upon to fill honorable and important positions. In 1870, he was chosen Chairman of the Republican Central Committee, of Randolph County, and in 1872 was again called to the same position. In 1874, he was elected a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and again, in 1876, to the same position. In 1878, he was the Republican candidate for Judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit, composed of the counties of Randolph and Delaware, and in view of his candidacy for this office, declined the position as a member of the State Central Committee. His nomination to the office of Judge of this circuit was the spontaneous expression of the good will and confidence of the people of this district, and he was elected without an opponent. In the administration of this office he has proved himself a man of pronounced ability. He is prompt and energetic in the discharge of his duties, securing in the public business the utmost dispatch consistent with accuracy and justice. By his prompt and wise conduct of the affairs of the court, he has won golden opinions from all classes, and men of all parties, and in his profession he occupies a high rank as a lawyer and Judge. In the practice of his profession, he has been associated with several gentlemen who are still identified with the bar of Randolph County. First, in 1865, he was associated with Col. M. B. Miller. This relation was discontinued some time during the year 1866, but re-established in the following year, and continued until 1871. In November of that year, he entered into partnership with Hon. E. L. Watson, with whom he practiced until July, 1875. He then formed partnership relations with W. A. Thompson, which continued until he retired from the practice to enter upon the duties of the judicial office.

In his habits, Judge Monks is simple and regular, cordial and sincere in manner, gentlemanly and unassuming, and courteous to all alike. And while he has established an enviable professional reputation, he has, by his noble and manly qualities, won his way to the hearts of all good citizens, and is highly esteemed as a gentlemen of integrity and honor. He is yet young, and may reasonably hope, should life be spared, for still higher advancement, in reward for duties faithfully performed. He is a member of the Indiana State Bar Association, and was elected by that body as a member of the Committee on Judicial Procedure, to serve during the current year (1882).

On the 2d day of August, 1865, he was united in marriage with Lizzie W., daughter of Alexander and Margaret B. White. His wife is an excellent lady, and shares with him the regard of a large circle of friends. They have a neat, cozy home on Franklin street, made happy by the presence of their two daughters—Maggie and Mary D.



Moorman Way
ATTY. AT LAW.

MOORMAN WAY.

Among the attorneys at the Randolph County bar, none, perhaps, was ever more widely known than Moorman Way, and none has attained greater eminence in the profession. He was born February 9, 1808, at Marlboro, S. C., and in his very infancy was thrown, to some extent, upon his own resources, as his parents died when he was very young. At the age of eight years (1816), he was brought by relatives to Randolph County, Ind., where he continued to reside until his death, which took place on the 17th of August, 1881. The only educational he enjoyed were those afforded by the early schools of this locality, which were extremely meager. Yet to these meager opportunities he owed only the beginning of his education. He was a self-taught man; his leisure hours, long before he had entered an office or had thought of adopting a profession, were devoted to study and self-improvement. Before reaching manhood, he learned the art of cabinet making, and was engaged in that occupation and that of a carpenter until 1838. In the spring of that year, he became a law student in the office of Judge Perry, at Liberty, Union Co., Ind. He entered upon the study of this profession with a mind well trained, and in the following year (1839) he was admitted to the bar at Winchester. The conditions necessary to the admission of a law student in those days were much more stringent than now, the applicant being subjected to a rigorous examination. His license bears the signatures of David Kilgore and Samuel Bigger, Judges of the Eleventh and Sixth Judicial Circuits. That he obtained a place at the bar at the end of so short a term of study proves that he had improved well his opportunity, for at that period a thorough knowledge of the elementary principles of legal science was a condition precedent to admission. Of him it was said by one who knew him well, and had practiced for years in the same courts: "As a lawyer he was self-possessed and methodical rather than aggressive. At the first, he was inclined to skirmish, rather than to come into close quarters and grapple his antagonist, but when the trial became inevitable he contested every inch of the ground and exhausted every legal expedient. His favorite method of defense was to object to everything, from the filing of the complaint to the motion for a new trial. In his great caution, he often vexed the court with objections more technical than substantial. It was seldom that the mistakes of his adversary escaped his notice, and he rarely yielded an advantage when he had once obtained it. His fidelity to his client was never doubted. He sometimes continued the struggle too long, for he never surrendered until he was overpowered. In his nature—intellectual nature—he was essentially combative, so stubbornly so that he scarcely ever acknowledged himself fairly beaten. While he yielded to the adverse opinion of the court or verdict of the jury, he did so with the air of one who felt that he was the victim of a wrong. If he ever surrendered an opinion, he did so reluctantly. He was not an orator, but he spoke well and to the point. At times, he indulged in invective and tried to beat down the opposing cause with a sneer. There was a vein of sarcasm in most all of his forensic efforts. In his jury speeches he seldom touched the fountain of tears, but his pungent thrusts frequently excited irrepressible laughter, and in making a mean action look meaner he was an artist of rare skill. He was strong in common sense logic, but his chief strength as an advocate, after his unrivaled powers of ridicule, was his intimate knowledge of the currents of human thought and his power to play upon the prejudices and passions of the jury. He was eccentric rather than a genius. With mental endowments of the highest order, and capable of great achievements, there were united eccentricities of character which impaired his usefulness. The action of his mind was both vigorous and analytic. He loved books and study; he was a thoughtful reader; his discussions of abstruse philosophical questions were highly instructive. In his later years, he was deeply interested in the subjects discussed by our modern scientists, particularly the origin of human life, its mission and man's destiny. He was familiar with the writings of Spencer, Tyndall, Huxley and Darwin, but he repudiated utterly the whole doctrine of materialism, and never wavered for a moment in his belief in the immortality of the soul. He believed creation the result of an intelligent cause. He was a member of no church, although his sympathies were strongly with the Society of Friends. In his personal life, he was pure and singularly free from the vices that have debauched so many of our public men, and we never heard a moral obliquity breathed against his name. He had weaknesses that greatly paralyzed the usefulness of his life, but they are now forgotten; he had faults (and who has not?), but these are laid with him in the grave." In early life, Mr. Way was identified with the Whig element in politics, and took an active part in the Harrison and Clay campaigns of 1840 and 1844. But he was always intensely anti-slavery in his convictions, and in 1848 gave in his adhesion to Mr. Van Buren and the Buffalo platform. He supported Fremont as his choice for President in 1856 and Lincoln in 1860, but never took an active part in a political campaign after the war. He was fitted by nature and education to occupy legislative or judicial positions, but, although frequently importuned to do so, he never permitted his name to be used in connection with the candidacy for any elective office. He chose to devote his life to the practice of his profession, and by faithful and industrious adherence to his calling amassed a comfortable fortune; yet he was never avaricious nor disposed to acquire wealth by exactions. He has been known to permit a tenant to occupy a farm for years, without paying any rent, provided he would pay the annual taxes, and many an impecunious client has had reason to bless his generosity. He was married, in 1833, to Miss Eleanor Powell, an estimable young lady and a noble wife. One child came to bless their union, but death claimed it in its infancy, and in 1865 the dread presence again invaded his home, claiming for his victim the devoted wife whose love had been his stay and whose death left a void in his heart that was never filled and a shadow that followed all his after life. On the 20th of August, 1881, the members of the bar met to give expression to their respect for their distinguished associate, who, three days previously, had passed beyond the confines of time to the boundless shores of eternity. From the memorial address presented on that occasion we make the following abstract: "By the death of Moorman Way the profession of this county has lost not only its oldest, but its most notable character. For more than forty years he was closely identified with the history of our courts and judicial proceedings, and during all this time there was scarcely an important legal controversy in which he did not take a leading part. He won a commanding position at the bar soon after entering upon professional life, and maintained it to the end. In learning, in ability, in fidelity to the interests of the client and all the elements that make the true lawyer, he was the acknowledged peer of his foremost associate. He was the contemporary of Rariden, Kilgore, Elliott, the Smiths, of Parker and of Morton; and now that he has followed them is worthy to have his memorial put beside theirs on the records of the court of which he was a member and an ornament."

Anderson, 1876–82; E. F. Holliday, 1876–82; W. R. Coggeshall, 1880–83.

NOTE.—To get an exact list of Commissioners from the first has been found nearly or quite out of the question.

PRESIDENTS, BOARD JUSTICES.

John Coates, 1825–26; Samuel D. Woodworth, 1826–29; John Odle, 1829–31.

Justices attending more or less, 1825–31—George Ritenour, Ward; David Frazier, Washington; Noah Johnson; Isaac Barnes, West River; John Odle, White River; William Rowe, George T. Willson; Curtis Voris, Ward; David B. Semans, Greensfork; William Hunt, West River; William Massey, Ward; Jesse B. Wright; Samuel D. Woodworth, White River; John Nelson; Daniel B. Miller, Ward; John Jones; John Coates, White River.

AUDITORS.

Charles Conway, 1818–39, did the business now belonging to the Auditor's office; A. K. Eaton, 1841–45; Nathan Garrett, 1845–59; Elisha Garrett, George O. Jobes, 1859–61; Thomas L. Scott, 1861–65; W. E. Murray, 1865–74; W. D. Kizer, 1874–78; George N. Edger, 1878–82.

CLERKS.

Charles Conway, 1818–39; George W. Monks, 1839–53; Henry H. Neff, 1853–61; J. B. Goodrich, 1861–69; Henry T. Semans, 1869–73; Richard A. Leavell, 1873–77; John W. Macy, 1877–81; I. P. Watts, 1881–85.

TREASURERS.

Jesse Johnson, 1818–24; John B. Wright, 1825–29; James B. Liston, 1829–30; John Odle, 1831; Jeremiah Smith; Zachariah Puckett, 1838; Andrew Aker, 1839–40; John Neff, 1844; Thomas W. Reece, 1847; Simeon H. Lucas, 1850; Ira Swain, 1855–57; John W. Jarnagin, 1857–61; E. F. Halliday, 1861–65; A. M. Owens, 1865–69; James H. Bowen, 1869–73; Simon Ramsey, 1873–75; Harrison P. Hunt, 1875–77; O. C. Gordon, 1877–81; Calvin Puckett, 1881–83.

It is nearly impossible to trace these things back to those old times. This list is partially incomplete.

RECORDERS.

Charles Conway, 1818–39; W. C. Willmore, 1839–53; William Burres, 1853–61; J. S. Cottom, 1861–65; F. A. Engle, 1865–69; John W. Williamson, 1869–73; W. C. Brown, 1873–77; D. C. Braden, 1877–81; O. F. Lewellen, 1881–85.

SHERIFFS.

David Wright, 1818–19; Solomon Wright, 1820–24; Thomas Wright, 1825–27; Eli Edwards, 1829–31; Jeremiah Smith, 1833; Nathan Garrett, 1837; Robert Irvin, 1840–44; Nathan Reed, 1844–48; William Kizer, 1848–52; Amer Forkner, 1852–56; William M. Campbell, 1856–60; A. H. Jenkins, 1860–64; Joel A. Newman, 1864–68; William M. Campbell, 1868–70; D. F. Ford, 1870–73; W. W. Macy, 1873–74; W. A. W. Daly, 1874–78; W. W. Macy, 1878–80; R. V. Murray, 1880–82.

CORONERS (SOME OF THEM.)

Solomon Wright, David Heaston, Benjamin Ramsey, William R. Finn, Martin A. Reeder, John H. Peake, R. H. Grooms, Jonathan Edwards, Isaac R. Ford, John D. Carter.

SURVEYORS (PARTIAL LIST.)

Moorman Way, Samuel D. Woodworth, Jeremiah Smith, C. S. Goodrich, Edmund B. Goodrich, Anderson D. Way, Thomas C. Puckett, Enos L. Watson, Pleasant Hiatt, Charles Jaqua, Phinehas Pomeroy, Ephraim C. Hiatt, Michael C. Gaffey, A. M. Russell (elected 1882).

SCHOOL EXAMINERS (SOME OF THEM.)

Jeremiah Smith, George W. Monks, Samuel D. Woodworth, Moorman Way, Carey S. Goodrich, Isaac F. Wood, William A. Peelle, J. J. Cheney, Pleasant Hiatt, J. G. Brice, A. J. Stakebake, Charles W. Parris, Daniel Lesley.

DRAINAGE COMMISSIONERS.

James D. Bowen, 1881; R. C. Shaw, 1881; M. C. Gaffey (ex-officio), 1881.

JUSTICES.

In the annexed article, we give such of the Justices as we have been able to discover. To find out the earlier ones has been a difficult task, and some, doubtless, have been omitted. They are given as much as possible in the order of service. No name, however, is given more than once, though many persons have served several terms.

Jonathan Green, in Green Township, served sixteen years. Thomas Hough, lately resigned, was Magistrate some twenty-five years. James Wickersham, John Johnson, William Hendricks, Jacob Elzroth and others, held their offices for many years. The last named was Justice of the Peace about forty years.

O. O. Thompson, Philip K. Dick, Henry Debolt, Royal H. Davis, Nathan G. Lamb, Joseph Edger, William Drew, Benjamin Pursail, William S. Hunt, Nathan Reynard, Nathan Reed, Henry W. Hill, A. B. Webb, William Hebb, Winston E. Harris, served at least two terms each.

It will be no wonder if some of the names are credited to the wrong township, since, in many cases, no clew as to residence was to be found, except names of bondsmen, which indication might mislead.

Franklin—George E. Thomson, Seymour Allen, Joseph Edger, Jerry F. Pence, Samuel M. Betts, William F. Studabaker, David W. Porter.

Doubtless several of the names classed as unknown belong to Franklin, but which ones we cannot tell.

Green—G. V. Shaylor, Jonathan Green, Samuel Shaylor, Alexander Budd, Jesse Z. Parshall, Thomas E. Harbour, Philip Bushaw, Silas T. Gordon, Philip Barger, Robert J. Budd, A. B. Webb, William Hebb, Robert Miranda, James B. Somerville, Marshall Dearmond, Harmon Hubbard, Charles S. Jones, Silas S. Clark, William H. Harrison, Luther L. Moorman.

Greensfork—Ephraim Bowen, David Semans, James C. Bowen, Willis C. Willmore, William N. Jackson, Christian Snidow, Isaac Overman, Mahlon Thomas, S. G. Hart, Thomas Hough, Nathan Harris, James D. Bowen, John W. James, David H. Caffey, John Harlan, Wright M. Turner, James W. Locke.

Jackson—James Wickersham, James C. Constable, Benjamin Devor, George Debolt, Henry Debolt, Thomas Devor, J. A. Jones, Benjamin F. Kemp, Royal H. Davis, Joseph McFarland, Edward Simmons, Robert B. Wilkerson, Elihu Lanter, Abraham Lambert.

Monroe—Winston E. Harris, Goorge W. McGriff, Samuel S. French, James B. Somerville.

There have doubtless been many more, but we are not able to designate them.

Nettle Creek—William Shellabarger, William C. Hendricks, Jacob Crouse, Henry Leeka, Hamilton Snodgrass, N. G. Lamb, W. Crouse, J. E. Maulsby, Miles Halliday, Stephen B. Cunningham, John H. Williams, Hugh Woods, James R. Routh, Henry Vantress, F. H. L. Davisson, Aaron Sanders, Floyd M. Brewer, C. B. Murray, John C. Clevinger, Fremont Garrett, Cornelius Curry, Clement R. Strahan, Martin L. Canada.

Stony Creek—David Vestal, George W. Smithson, Malachi Davis, Andrew J. Dye, Gideon B. Wallace, Thomas Aker, Aaron Shaw, O. O. Thomson, Peter S. Miller, Solomon Semans, John McIntyre, Philip K. Dick, Joseph B. Branson, George W. Clevenger, Charles Emerson, Aaron Sanders, David Ford, Sherrod W. Reece, Thomas W, Thornburg, David Stanton, John Jessup, Abram Symons, Jacob Dick.

Ward—William Massey, Curtis Voris, George Ritenour, Daniel B. Miller, William Odle, John Wilson, Moses A. Morris, J. W. Jellison, John Stick, Joseph Edger, James Addington, Isom Boswell, John Mock, William S. Campbell, William Drew, Henry V. Sipe, George R. Miller, Benjamin Pursail, Joseph S. Baker, Wellington Stewart, John L. Addington, Benjamin F. Bundy, Thomas L. Addington, John M. Collett, John Allbright, David F. Hawley, Henry T. Warren, Jacob R. Lucas.

Washington—David Frazier, Noah Johnson, William Jay,

Uriah Ball, John Johnson, William Engle, Henderson Murray, William Farlow, Charles F. Powell, Thomas J. Colvin, Zimri E. Hinshaw, I. V. D. R. Johnson, Jesse Cook, George M. Bascom, William H. Thornburg, Thomas N. Rash.

Wayne—Samuel Downing, David Polly, Andrew J. Dixon, Thomas J. Mason, John Commons, Levi Graves, James Whitesell, Thomas Evans, Henry P. Mote, James Nichols, John Downing, Finley Maloy, Thomas J. Mason, Nathan Woodbury, James B. Ross, B. F. Graves, Uriah Ball, Seth M. Whitten, Samuel R. Bell, Andrew McConnell, Miles Scott, Joshua Harlan, Ebenezer Tucker.

White River—John Wright, John Way, John Coates, John Odle, John Sample, S. D. Woodworth, Joel Ward, Jesse B. Wright, Horace L. Rawson, Benjamin Wheeler, Alvin C. Graves, Oliver Walker, Jacob Elzroth, Paul W. Way, Silas Colgrove, Asahel Stone, S. B. Cunningham, Josiah Montgar, Robert Way, David Lyle, Stephen Coffin, Fielding P. Merryfield, Solomon Yonker, Thomas North, Aaron Shaw, Seth Moffitt, Samuel Helm, James S. Cottom, William D. Frazee, Nathan Rynard, Henry W. Hill, John K. Martin, J. J. Cheney, Joseph Merryfield, George Cox, John Gray, Ira Tripp, Nathan Reed, James S. Engle, Silas A. Cropper, Charles L. Lewis, A. H. Patty, Stephen J. Hickman, Benjamin F. Marsh.

West River—Joshua Wright, Elijah Arnold, William Hunt, Ira Swain, Sylvester Hollister, Jonah Peacock, Elza Lank, Jr., Daniel Worth, Bela W. Cropper, Nathan G. Lamb, Jesse Z. Paschal, William S. Hunt, Richard Jobes, Robert B. Cowgill, Samuel French, John Charles, Silas A. Cropper, W. C. Jobes, Samuel Ruble, Albert J. Hawley, Thomas Kimbrough, Isaac Jenkinson, Thomas Mills, William R. Parsons, William P. Harris, Joseph T. Thomas, Winfield S. Robertson, David B. Lamb.

Unknown—John Nelson, 1827; George F. Willson, 1827; Joseph Hall, 1829; William Rowe; James Smith, 1831; Samuel Peacock, 1837; Robert Millman, 1840; Willam S. Campbell, 1840; Bekjamin Inman, 1840; Jason Overman, 1840; John H. Wiiliams, 1846; Wellborn Stuart, 1847; David R. Gray, 1848; George H. Miller; Isaac P. Woodard, 1864; Almiran Titus, 1857; Wilson Nichols, 1857; William N. Maxwell, 1866; John W. Butler, 1866; James M. Clevenger, 1867; J. J. Fulghum, 1865; James A. Sullivan, 1866.

It may seem strange, yet it is true, that to find who have been the Justices from the beginning is a thing hardly possible, at least without more time and pains than we have been able to devote to the subject. For Township Trustees, see Education and Schools.

ATTORNEYS.

Persons admitted to practice in Randolph Circuit Court in early times were:

October, 1818, James Rariden.
May, 1819, John A. Daly.
June, 1820, James Gillmore, Isaac M. Johnson.
August, 1822, Charles W. Ewing.
April, 1823, Charles H. Test, Lot Bloomfield.
August, 1823, Martin M. Ray, William Steele.
August, 1826, Amos Lane.
February, 1828, Septimus Smith.
August, 1828, Foster P. Wright.
February, 1829, John D. Vaughn, John S. Newman, Caleb B. Smith.

At some time, George W. Daly, Oliver H. Smith, William A. Peelle.

August, 1830, Hiram Bell, Gustavus A. Everts, Samuel Bigger.
February, 1832, William J. Brown, Henry Cooper.
August, 1832, Samuel W. Parker, David Kilgore, David Colerick.
February, 1833, Thomas C. Anthony.
February, 1834, Zachariah Puckett.
November, 1835, William J. Renner.
May, 1836, Joseph Anthony.
May, 1837, Joseph S. Sullivan, Jeremiah Smith.
March, 1841, Andrew J. Harlan, James Hanna.
May, 1838, James W. Borden.
April, 1839, Moorman Way, James Perry, Hugh T. Reed, John Brownlee, Morrison Rulon, Silas Colgrove.
October, 1839, Richard Winchell, Moses Jenkinson, Jacob B. Julian, E. A. McMahon.

Nearly the entire number of persons named were non-residents of Randolph County. Only about six of them were residents of the county, and of those six, barely two are living, viz., Hon. Silas Colgrove and Hon. William A. Peelle.

Residents of the county: George W. Daly, Zachariah Puckett (1834), Jeremiah Smith (1837), Moorman Way (1839), Silas Colgrove (1839), William A. Peelle.

We give below the biographies of some of the persons who have been members of the bar of Randolph County, as also a list of those who are at present, or have lately been, resident attorneys, either at Winchester or at other towns in the county. The list is as follows:

S. R. Allen; O. A. Baker, Union City, Ohio; S. R. Bell, Union City, Ind.; A. C. Black, Farmland; Thomas M. Browne, Winchester; John J. Cheney, Winchester; Silas Colgrove, Winchester; T. F. Colgrove, Winchester; W. W. Canada, Winchester; S. A. Canada, Winchester; C. C. Clevengor, L. A. Cranor; W. P. Debolt, L. C. Devoss, Union City, Ind.; J. S. Engle, Winchester; I. P. Gray, Union City; Alexander Gullett, gone to Colorado; Pierre Gray, Union City; B. F. Graves, Harrisville; Fremont Garrett; Winchester; B. S. Gray, gone to Portland; Miles Hunt, Losantville; F. A. Hay; E. M. Ives, Winchester; Allen Jaqua, Union City; L. D. Lambert, Union City; C. L. Lewis, Winchester; Martin B. Miller, Winchester; L. J. Monks (Judge), Winchester; A. O. Marsh, Winchester; W. E. Monks, Winchester; B. F. Marsh, Winchester; J. W. Macy, Winchester; J. A. Moorman, Farmland; F. S. McFarland, Union City; J. E. Neff, Winchester; J. W. Newton, Winchester; A. H. Patty, Winchester; J. T. Spence, Winchester; C. T. Pickett, Union City, Ohio; J. B. Ross, Union City; A. J. Stakebake, Winchester; L. W. Study, Winchester; Theodore Shockney, Union City; W. E. Studabaker, Ridgeville; W. A. Thomson, Winchester; J. W. Thomson, Winchester; Moorman Way, Winchester (deceased); Enos L. Watson, Winchester; Alexander Wood, Ridgeville; I. P. Watts, Winchester; John H. Williamson, Ridgeville; E. B. Wood, Ridgeville; S. M. Whitten, Union City; David Wasson, Union City; Cyrus Woodbury, Union City.

Among the lawyers prominent at the Winchester bar in former times may be named Zachariah Puckett, James Brown, Beattie McClelland, Jeremiah Smith, William D. Frazee, Carey S. Goodrich, William A. Peelle, Edmund B. Goodrich, John C. Goodrich—six of whom became Judges in this county of some degree. Six of the number are certainly dead, and perhaps some or all of the rest.

Before 1830, the resident attorneys of Winchester were very few, if any. Zachariah Puckett was admitted in 1834; Jeremiah Smith, 1837; Moorman Way, 1839; Silas Colgrove, 1839.

EDMUND B. GOODRICH, WINCHESTER.

Edmund B. Goodrich was born in Virginia, being the second son of Judge John B. Goodrich.

He married, in 1829, Ellen Bell, in Virginia, and, in 1836, Mary M. Robinson.

He had six children, and three of them are now living.

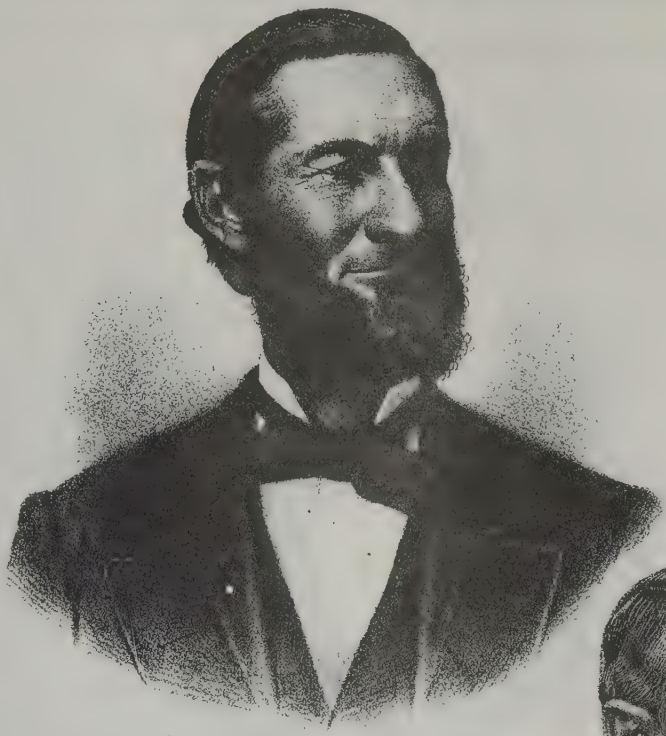
He moved to Randolph County in 1831, and became a lawyer and a merchant, and also Associate Judge of Randolph County.

He was in business with his brother Carey, and they built the brick store on the north side of Washington street, between the livery stable and Main street.

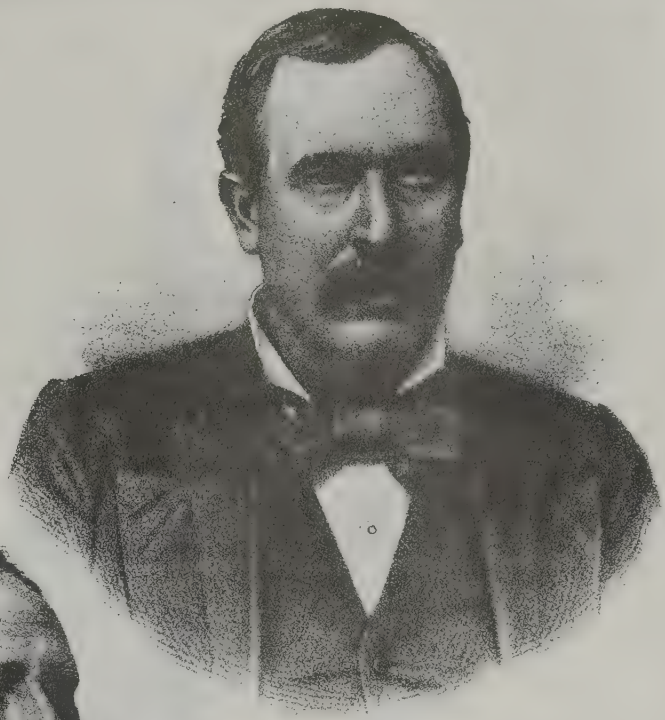
Judge G. was a Whig in politics, and a Methodist in religious conviction.

He was already prominent, and might have become more so, but misfortune overtook him.

He was a kind and estimable man, and was respected and beloved. He had a growing property and an active business; but about 1843, he suffered heavy reverses in pork transactions, and thought he was financially ruined. He had also a severe attack of typhoid fever, and his troubles and reverses caused him to commit suicide.



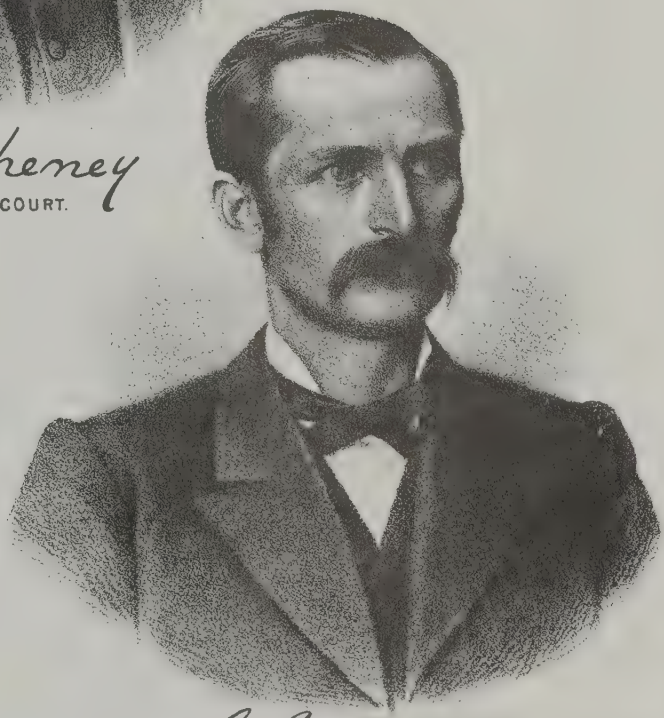
E. L. Watson
ATTY. AT LAW.



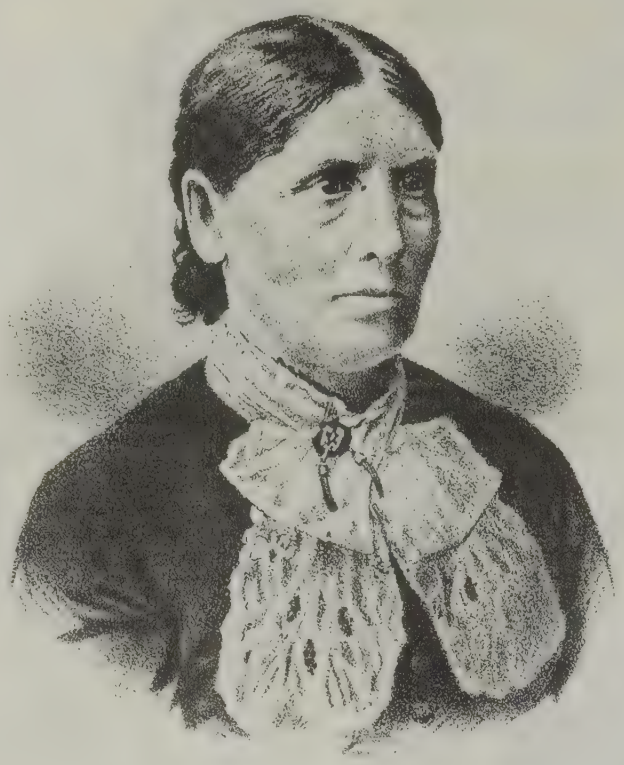
Martin B. Miller
ATTY. AT LAW.

Jno. J. Cheney
EX-JUDGE. CIRCUIT COURT.

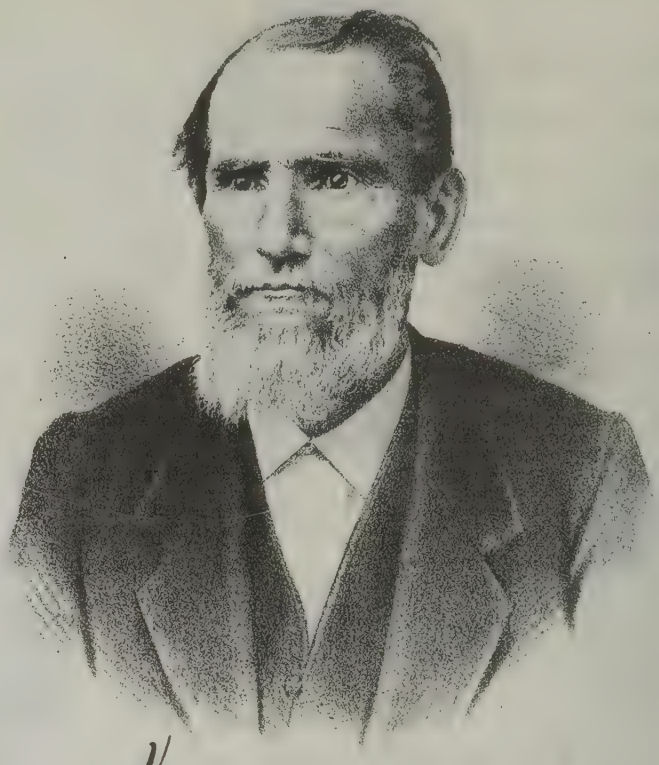
L. W. Study
ATTY. AT LAW.



J. S. Engle
ATTY. AT LAW.



Clara B. Commons.



John Commons

JOHN COMMONS.

John Commons was born in the year 1818, in Wayne County, Ind. His father, Isaac Commons, was one of the pioneers of that county, a plain, honest man, and a good citizen. He had a family of ten children, of whom seven grew to maturity, and four still survive. John, the subject of this sketch, grew up like the average boy of pioneer days, getting a little education, by attending a country school in the winter, and working on the home farm during the remainder of the year. By diligent application to his leisure hours, he acquired a more practical and comprehensive store of knowledge than the schools of that period afforded, and shortly after attaining his majority, started out to earn his living. For awhile, he taught school; later, he removed to Hillsboro, in the northern part of Wayne County, and was there engaged in mercantile pursuits, in connection with the harness business, for four years. From that place, he removed to Hollandsburg, Ohio, and was a merchant in that town for four years. Subsequently, he moved to Union City, Ind., and was engaged in the boot and shoe trade there from 1860 to 1865. While a resident of that place, he he was elected Justice of the Peace, serving two terms, or eight years, in that capacity. He established the Union City Times in 1873, and was its publisher and proprietor until 1877. He sold the paper in that year, and purchased the Herald of Winchester, removing at once to this place. Under his management, the Herald enjoys an extended circulation, and wields a very perceptible influence in the public and political affairs of the county. Mr. Commons has always affiliated with the Republican party, and his principles and convictions are faithfully reflected in the Herald. During his short residence in this community, he has become widely known, and is universally respected and esteemed. He became a Mason many years ago, in the lodge at Hillsboro, Ind., and has taken all the degrees of the subordinate lodge and chapter, and was the first High Priest of the Chapter at Union City. He entertains liberal views in the matter of religion, and is not identified with any church, though his parents were members of the Society of Friends.

He has been twice married; first, in 1846, to Miss Elizabeth Carlisle, who died leaving one daughter, now the wife of G. B. Best, of Cleveland, Ohio. In 1860, he wedded Miss Clara Rogers, his present companion. Five children have blessed this union, viz., John R., Franky, Ally, Clara E. and Mary A., all of whom now survive save Franky and Mary A. His estimable wife is a lady of rare accomplishments, and has long been a pillar in the social world. A more extended notice will appear in a sketch of her life, which is here annexed.

MRS. CLARISSA (ROGERS) COMMONS.

But few ladies in this county have been more prominently identified with the temperance cause and other moral and religious interests of this community than Mrs. Commons, and none ever engaged in the work with a more unselfish zeal, or persevered with more untiring enthusiasm. She was born in the year 1826, in Franklin County, N. Y., and is the daughter of Samuel and Ruth Rogers. Her father, himself a native of Lincoln, N. H., was a lineal descendent of John Rogers, of Litchfield, England, who perished at the stake during the persecution of the Protestants in the reign of Queen Mary. From New Hampshire he removed to New York, locating in Franklin County, where he married Ruth Saunders, in 1814. In 1832, he removed with his family to Ashtabula, Ohio, where he remained during life. He died in 1861, at the age of seventy-six years, his wife surviving him until 1876, when she died, aged eighty two years. The father was a man of prominence in his day, and was chosen to fill various responsible offices, both during his residence in New York, and after his removal to Ohio. Ruth Saunders, her mother, was of English descent, but her father was a lover of liberty, and espoused the cause of the Colonists in the struggle for Independence, and together with his four brothers, took an active part in the Revolutionary war.

Clarissa, the daughter, passed her early life amid the scenes of the Western Reserve, enjoying a liberal education. She attended Ashtabula Academy, at Ashtabula, Ohio, and subsequently attended Grand River Institute, at Austinburg, Ohio. In 1850, she entered Oberlin College, at Oberlin, Ohio, graduating from that institution in 1853. During her course at Oberlin, she had taught school, and spent one year at Mackinaw, Mich., recruiting her health. In 18—, she left Oberlin to teach school at Richmond, Ind., and was thus engaged until 1860. In that year, she was united in marriage with John Commons. For the next three years they resided at Hollandsburg, Ohio, and in 1863, removed to Union City, Ind. Here, during a residence of nearly sixteen years, she was identified with the Sunday school and other benevolent work of the city, and in 1878, came to Winchester with her husband and family. At the age of sixteen years, Mrs. Commons united with the Presbyterian Church at Ashtabula, Ohio, and in the intervening years has been a consistent Christian and an active worker in the upbuilding of the church and the spread of the Gospel. Her connection with the temperance work first began with the organization of the Temperance Alliance. She identified herself with this organization, and was subsequently prominent in the effort known as the "Crusade"—taking an active part in this movement, and adding the weight of her influence to the peaceful endeavors of the wives and mothers who constituted that organization, to remove the evil that menaced their homes. Since the close of the "Crusade," she has been actively engaged in the work of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and has done much, by verbal and written appeals to strengthen the temperance cause. For several years she has edited the temperance department of the Herald, and although naturally modest and retiring, she has delivered public addresses in this county and vicinity, in response to her sense of duty, in the interest of the temperance cause. And who can say that her labor has been in vain? Gradually, but surely her cause seems to gain ground, while it is impossible to estimate one woman's work in this result.

In private life, and among those who know her best, Mrs. Commons is universally beloved for her amiable disposition and her uniform kindness to all. With the attainments secured by a thorough education, she combines the qualifications of a naturally superior mind, and is well qualified by nature for the position she occupies in society. Her family is somewhat noted for longevity—some of its members attaining advanced age—and we join in the hope expressed by her friends, that she may be spared yet many years to continue the work in her chosen field of usefulness.

His financial condition proved, however, to be sound, and his fears were thus shown to have been groundless.

His widow is still living, at the age of eighty years (1881).

The death of her husband and her other afflictions unhinged her mind, and she became insane, which sad condition has continued much of the time ever since.

It is remarkable that, when bodily sickness prostrates her, she regains her mental sanity.

She has been deeply afflicted, and her share of worldly sorrow has been very great, though she is a most excellent and exemplary woman. Her afflicted condition has gained for her the deepest sympathy of her friends and acquaintances. But her clouded sky will soon be made clear, and upon her night of anguish the bright morn of eternity erelong will rise.

(Mrs. Goodrich died in September, 1881, aged over eighty years, having had, in truth, a life of sorrow and affliction. But her sorrow is over; her affliction is gone; she rests in peace in the arms of her Savior.)

CAREY S. GOODRICH, WINCHESTER.

Carey S. Goodrich was born in Virginia, and grew to manhood in that State.

He came with his mother and her family to Randolph County in 1831.

He was a prominent merchant and attorney in early times. His mercantile business he closed in 1843, but he continued to practice as a lawyer through his life.

He had a wife and a family of four children. His widow still survives.

He died in 1866, being nearly sixty years old.

He was respected and influential, a valuable and worthy citizen, deeply interested in the substantial welfare of the community, and earnestly active in every enterprise for its promotion.

Like the rest of the family, he was a Whig in politics, and then a Republican, and an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

COL. ISAAC P. GRAY, ATTORNEY, UNION CITY.

Col. Gray was born in 1828, in Chester County, Penn.; moved to Urbana, Ohio, in 1836; to Montgomery County in 1839; to Darke County in 1842; to Union City, Ind., in 1855.

He was married to Eliza Jaqua, daughter of Judson Jaqua, Esq., and has had four children, two living—Pierre and Bayard S.

He was engaged, till the breaking-out of the war, in mercantile business.

He was appointed Colonel of the Fourth Indiana Cavalry, which position he held from September 4, 1862, to February 11, 1864.

He also raised and organized the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, mustered in March 13, 1865, Col. Peden; mustered out August 4, 1865.

He was also Colonel of the One Hundred and Fifth Indiana (minute men). Served five days - July 12–17, 1863.

At the close of the war, he became a banker, organizing, with Hon. N. Cadwallader, the Citizens' Bank, of which he is a prominent stockholder and Vice President.

In 1866, he was candidate of the anti-Julian wing of the Republican party for Congress. Entered the law in 1868, and was State Senator of Randolph County in 1868–72, on the Republican ticket, of which body he took position as a leading member.

In 1870, he was appointed by President Grant Consul to St. Thomas, West Indies, and confirmed by the Senate, but declined.

In 1872, he was appointed a delegate at large for the State of Indiana to the National Liberal Republican Convention at Cincinnati, and, by that convention, was made the member, for the State of Indiana, of the Liberal Republican National Executive Committee.

In 1876, the Democratic State Convention nominated him by acclamation for Lieutenant Governor, and he was elected to that office in October, 1876.

In 1880, he was a candidate before the Democratic State Convention, and lost the nomination by four votes, but was named by acclamation a second time for Lieutenant Governor.

Col. Gray has been a prominent business man of Union City for twenty-five years, and is highly respected by his fellow-citizens.

In the general Democratic defeat incurred in October, 1880, Col. Gray shared the catastrophe. But, by the death of Gov. J. B. Williams, in November, 1880, Lieut. Gov. Gray was promoted to the position of Governor of Indiana, which honor he sustained with appropriate dignity, addressing the Legislature in perhaps the most voluminous message ever presented by any occupant of the gubernatorial chair to any legislative body.

Gov. Gray has two sons—Pierre and Bayard, who show tokens of decided talent, and will doubtless, at no distant day, succeed in achieving a distinguished reputation. Both have become members of the bar. Pierre is also a business man in general, and, in the summer of 1881, engaged in a carriage-making company, under the firm designation of Starbuck, Tritt & Gray, the capital stock being $10,000, and the number of hands to be employed, thirty-five.

Bayard S., in the fall of 1881, bought the office of the Portland Sun, the Democratic paper of Jay County, Ind., and seems likely to sustain the reputation and dignity of the establishment.

L. D. LAMBERT, ATTORNEY, UNION CITY.

L. D. Lambert was born in 1827, in Wayne County, Ind.; went to Darke County, Ohio, in 1829; Allensville, Ind., in 1847, selling goods for seven years; Hollandsburg, Ohio, five years; Allensville again; Union City, Ohio, in 1839, and Union City, Ind., some time afterward.

He sold goods till 1868, then taking up the law.

He has been a member of the Board of Trustees, and was Corporation Clerk several years.

He had the honor of being the first Mayor of Union City under the city charter, being re-elected to a second term, holding the position from 1875 to 1878.

Mr. Lambert is a substantial citizen of the town, an outspoken and efficient Republican, and altogether an estimable and reliable man.

He is married, and has a worthy companion and two children, both sons. One of them, Webster, is in the practice of law.

THEODORE SHOCKNEY, UNION CITY.

Theodore Shockney is a native of Randolph County, born in Wayne Township September 16, 1852.

Losing his mother at nine years old, and his father a year later, he was thus early thrown upon his own resources.

He was employed in hard farm labor during the summer, and during the winter attended the common country schools, and at sixteen years of age began teaching in the public schools, gaining, in due time, the reputation of a leading instructor in the county.

In the spring of 1872, he commenced reading law in the office of Hon. I. P. Gray, afterward Governor of Indiana, finishing his legal studies in the office with Hon. S. J. Peelle, elected member of Congress from the Seventh District in October, 1880.

In the autumn of 1877, he married Emma A. Keever, of Union City; and, in the spring of 1878, he commenced the practice of the law in that place, and in May, 1880, he was elected Mayor of Union City.

Being a young man of good talents, he is rising in the estimation of the public, and making for himself a solid reputation as an attorney.

At the nominating election held in April, 1882, Mr. Shockney received the Republican nomination for Representative to the State Legislature, by a good majority, over William E. Murray, the present incumbent.

The Plain-Dealer, the only Democratic newspaper in Randolph County, having been purchased by a company of Republicans in June, 1882, the name of the journal was changed to that of the News, and Mr. Shockney was assigned the post of editor of the paper under the new ownership.

JEREMIAH SMITH, WINCHESTER.

Jeremiah Smith was born in South Carolina in 1805, and came with his father, William Smith, to Randolph County, Ind., in 1817 (West River).

He moved to Winchester in early manhood, having taught school one term at Richmond, Ind. How he got his education is nowhere stated—whether by the light of pine knots, or in the forest log-cabin schoolhouses of that rude period, or in the woods, or in all these three ways combined. The truth (and the main fact) seems to be that he got it, and the modus operandi is little matter. And it is a somewhat remarkable fact that, in those rugged times, men made more of themselves, with the scanty means of improvement then at their command, than boys now do, with advantages and appliances for study and mental development fit for the heir apparent to a throne.

It is an old saying—"Necessity is the mother of invention;" and still another is, "Hunger will break through a stone wall;" and yet another, quaint and blunt and homely, but strikingly true, "Where there is a will, there is a way."

Doubtless he was "hungry" for knowledge more than the starving man for bread. He had the "will," and nature before his resolute soul opened a rugged but a practicable way.

He appears to have acquired a good knowledge of both law and surveying, since he practiced both on an extensive scale.

He studied law in Winchester with Zachariah Puckett, Esq., being admitted to practice there in 1837. He was also employed in surveying the Kankakee country in about 1820–22, and perhaps elsewhere.

He was for many years Deputy Clerk, etc., in the office of Charles Conway, who was twenty-one years Clerk and Recorder of Randolph County, Ind. He has been, at different times, Deputy Sheriff, Sheriff, Prosecuting Attorney, Surveyor, Deputy Clerk, Judge of the Circuit Court, and for thirty years a practicing lawyer. He is said to have been one of the best Judges of English law in the courts of Indiana.

He was a Democrat in politics, sincere in his opinions, and fearless and uncompromising in their advocacy and maintenance, and it is no wonder that, in the extreme heat and partisanship of his latter times, when great questions stirred the public feelings to their utmost depth, in the strong Anti-slavery and Republican county of Randolph, he should be subject to public obloquy and reprobation for his extreme political views and utterances.

In a debate with Ovid Butler on the question, "Is slavery sinful?" he took the negative, and maintained his side with marked ability.

He was honest and incorruptible, both in public and in private life. No man ever so much as breathed a suspicion to cloud or darken his fair fame in this respect.

He was a stern advocate of public economy, and an uncompromising foe to extravagance of every kind.

He built the Franklin House, Winchester, about 1839; also a residence for himself, afterward—both of which are still good, substantial buildings, the first occupied as a hotel for years by Peter Reinheimer, and the latter now owned by Judge Silas Colgrove.

Judge Smith, by frugality and prudent foresight, amassed a handsome fortune, much of it in landed estate.

In conjunction with Hon. O. H. Smith, he located the town of Union City, Ind.

The "Bee Line" was the pioneer road for this whole region. In fact, its track was the second of the kind in the State, and the second to enter Indianapolis, then an unimportant interior town, now one of the grandest railroad centers in the world. The Bee Line was completed for use about July, 1853, and Union City forthwith began a brilliant career of activity and prosperity.

The creation of this city was mainly due to the exertions of the Messrs. Smith, and they were amply rewarded by the fact that they were large (and almost sole) owners of the soil on which the new town must be built; and hence the increase in value of the land became very great.

Judge Smith maintained his residence in Winchester till his death, in 1874, being about sixty-nine years old.

He married Cynthia Dye, and raised a large family. There were ten children, eight of whom are now living.

He wrote several works, a list of which is not at hand. Concerning Randolph County, he wrote "Reminiscences of Randolph County," and also "Civil History of Randolph County," neither of which was ever published in book form. From these manuscripts of his, however, much of the information contained in this work has been taken.

He left six sons and two daughters, all grown and all now heads of families. The surviving children are as follows:

William H. Smith, merchant, boots and shoes. His establishment was begun in 1859, and it is managed with ability and success. He has a wife and one surviving child. (She has since died.) His residence, on Columbia, corner of Oak and Hickory, is a splendid brick mansion, one of the finest in Union City.

John Dye Smith, jeweler, Union City. His business, too, is of long standing, having been commenced in 1855. His establishment is the leading one in that branch in Randolph County. He has a wife and two children, and has a fine residence on South Columbia street, east side.

Charles C. Smith, farmer, Winchester, Ind.

Mary E., married Frank B. Carter, Bradford, Ohio.

Henry B. Smith, jeweler, Hartford, Ind.

Charlotte, wife of George W. White, Bradford, Ohio.

J. Giles Smith, plumber and gas-fitter, Indianapolis.

Oliver H. Smith, resides at Union City, Ind.; is married.

Mr. Smith's parents were consistent members of the Regular Baptist Church. He was himself identified with the Disciples, and was active in supporting that branch of the Christian body, being also an accredited teacher among them.

His sons, like their honored sire, are all active Democrats. They bid fair to take good care of the handsome property left them by their father, and to make it simply a basis on which each may build for himself a fair and sightly edifice of elegance and prosperity.

They are said to be, without exception, active, frugal and thriving, and to be making for themselves an honorable place among the business men in the land.

Mr. Smith was first appointed Circuit Judge by the Governor of the State to fill a vacancy, and afterward held the office during a term of seven years by popular election.

He died in December, 1874. His age was not so great but that he might have lived many years longer, but his worthy and beloved companion came to a sad and sudden end by a fatal injury received at the depot of the Richmond & Grand Rapids Railroad in Winchester. By a terrible accident, she was thrown beneath an approaching train, and both her lower limbs were severed from her body. She survived but one day, departing this life July 7, 1872.

Her husband was, as it were, prostrated by this fearful catastrophe to the life partner of his joys and cares, and never seemed able to rally his powers to overcome this sad calamity, and, in two and a half years, he lay down beside his beloved in the sleep that, upon earth, "knows no waking." They repose beneath the same monument, in the Union City Cemetery.

He had, during the maturity of his power, prepared a carefully constructed will, lovingly providing for a perpetual care of the tombs of his parents, as also disposing of his fortune in the interest of harmony, economy and thrift, strictly enjoining upon his large family, kindness, good will, fraternal affection, and moral and Christian virtue, and harmony and friendly feeling in the settling of his affairs and the distribution among them of his estate; and providing, moreover, that an iron fence, to be constructed around the tombs of his parents near the place of their pioneer settlement in this county sixty-five years ago, should be completed and preserved in perpetual memorial of their virtues, and as a lasting token of filial affection.

SETH M. WHITTEN, UNION CITY.

Seth M. Whitten, though very young, enlisted in a Michigan regiment for military service during the war of the rebellion. He saw much hardship, suffering severely, and having several narrow escapes from death in battle.

He was in the Eastern Army, and, at the battle of North Anna May 23, 1864, stood firmly with a few after most of the line had fallen back.

June 3, 1864, near Cold Harbor, he forsook guard duty to go into battle line.

At Petersburg, he was conspicuous for bravery.

March 25, 1865, though unwell, he borrowed a gun and went into action. On the march, he picked up a large hatchet, which he stuck in his belt. This hatchet saved his life, for a broken shell struck the hatchet, knocked him sprawling and the gun from his hands.

The same day, he was wounded in the leg. But he kept steadily on with the line, returning to camp when the rest did.

In April, 1865, he captured a rebel flag.

Shortly afterward, he was captured, but was returned at Appomattox, short of rations, but brave and plucky still.

During and after the war, his eyes were greatly diseased, and at one time he was pronounced hopelessly blind. He has partially recovered his sight, however, though it is not strong and reliable.

Mr. Whitten was a bound boy in youth, and had but little opportunity. In the army (a strange place, no doubt), he accomplished much faithful studying, and, after the war, became a teacher.

He was for some time at Washington, in United States service.

He has succeeded, against almost unconquerable obstacles, in mastering the profession of the law, and, amid discouragements that would have crushed most men, he has pressed straight forward, in a ceaseless and by no means a hopeless struggle for success.

He is shrewd, active, fearless and untiring, faithful to principles and to his clients as well.

His record on temperance is clear and strong, pressing the fight where most fail, viz., in the field of legal prevention, giving, in that line, bold, energetic and valuable assistance in breaking the power of the cohorts of alcohol.

Mr. Whitten has an amiable Christian wife and two promising children.

He took up his abode in Union City in 1875, and resides here still. He is steadily gaining in reputation and esteem among his fellow-citizens.

His wife was prostrated with severe sickness while he was absent on business at Washington, and, after lingering for some weeks, Mr. Whitten was summoned by telegram to her bedside to behold his beloved companion at the point of death, and in a few days he suffered the unspeakable affliction to close her sightless eyes and convey her mortal remains to the home of her youth, where, amid the grief of sympathizing friends, her lifeless form was consigned to the friendly tomb.

PRESTON N. WOODBURY, UNION CITY, IND.

Preston N. Woodbury, son of James Woodbury, a thriving farmer of Wayne Township, Randolph County, was born in 1856.

He remained with his father till of age, working on the farm and attending school from year to year.

Residing near Union City, he became a member of the high school of that place, being one of the first graduating class, who completed their course in 1876.

His first employment after graduation was as book-keeper for Worthington & Fisher's wholesale notion store one and a half years; next as book-keeper for J. T. Hartzell, in his hardware store, three and a half years.

In June, 1881, he accepted the position of Secretary in the Pioneer Mutual Association of Union City, Ind.

In 1877, he married Florence A. Anderson, daughter of Samuel Anderson, late of Union City, and they have one child, a son.

Mr. Woodbury seems a young man of promise, and may command a sterling reputation and an enviable name.

(It seems that we have made a mistake in placing Mr. Woodbury's name among the attorneys, for which we hope to be pardoned.)

PHYSICIANS AND DENTISTS.

Winchester—Physicians, J. E. Beverly, regular; G. W. Bruce, regular; Richard Bosworth, regular; John W. Botkin, botanic; J. T. Chenoweth, regular; T. Cox, regular; J. J. Evans, regular; John Hiatt, old, out of practice, A. T. Huddleston, homœopathic; J. E. Markle, regular; W. G. Smith, regular.

Dentists, Messrs. Huddleston, Ballard, Stanley.

In former times, Drs. Benjamin Puckett and Woody.

Union City (not here now)—Physicians, Messrs. Diehl, Twiford, Humphreyville, Adam Simmons, Noah Simmons, Converse, Janes, Solsberry, Otwell, Stanton, Seward, Rubey, Hastings, Strong, Cooper.

Physicians at present, Messrs. Ferguson, Yergin, Harrison, Evans, Commons, Green, Williamson, Weimar, Grabill, Parsons, White, Thomson, Rubey, McFarland, Fahnestock.

Dentists, Messrs. Stahl, Cowdery, Lefevre.

COUNTY AT LARGE.

Spartansburg—Messrs. Ruby, Mitchell, Francisco, Purviance, Lawrence, Hector, Janes, Hindman, George Humphrey, Samuel Humphrey, Morgan, Berry, Baldwin.

Arba—Messrs. Young, Kelly, Hunt, Heiner & Son, Mock.

Harrisville—Messrs. Dreer, Adams, Hullinger, Owens.

Bartonia—Messrs. Wallace, Mitchell, Owen, Conner, Marquis.

Bloomingsport—Frazier, Gore, Strattan, Kemper, Good, Coggeshall.

Lynn—Messrs. Beard, Banks, Adams, Hamilton, Alfred Hamilton, Blair, Meeks, Swain.

Buena Vista—Messrs. Keen, Blumenback.

Huntsville—Messrs. Hunt, Jobes, Chenoweth, Eikenberry, Miller, Hunt, Jordan.

Unionsport—Messrs. Botkin, Chenoweth.

Ridgeville—Messrs. Bailey, Shoemaker, Farquhar, Hiatt.

Windsor—Messrs. Chenoweth, Davison, Farrow.

Georgetown—Messrs. Keener, Marine.

Deerfield—Messrs. Longshore, McAfee, Banks, Washburn, Snow, Hearn, Smith, Hall, Bosworth, Lambert, Purcell, Ballard, Clevenger.

Saratoga—Messrs. Evans, Ward.

Losantville—Messrs. Berry, Franks, Lowe.

Pleasant View—Dr. Frank.

Emmetville—Messrs. Ore, Bailey, Capron.

Fairview—Harris, Goodwin, Fawson, Moore, Vickers, Johnson, Davis, Fager.

New Pittsburg—Messrs. Reeves, McFarland.

Macksville—Dr. Seamans.

Farmland—Messrs. Keener, Hunt, Davis, Smith, Rogers.

Morristown—Messrs. Comer, Marine, Leech, Orr, Rogers.

The above lists are perhaps only partial. They were obtained by inquiry of individuals, who depended upon memory for the replies given.

ELISHA T. BAILEY, RIDGEVILLE.

Elisha T. Bailey was born in Clinton County, Ohio, in 1821; moved to Warren County, Ohio, in 1824; to Wayne County, Ind., in 1829; to Green Township, Randolph County, in 1847; and to Ridgeville in 1850.

He married Julia A. Morgan in 1845, and Paulina Mock in 1855, and he has had eight children, six of whom are living.

He read medicine with Stanton Judkins, of Newport (Fountain City), Ind., from 1843 to 1847, and has practiced from 1847 to 1881, having attended lectures at Miami Medical College in 1853–54.

He was also a merchant at Emmetsville in 1847, and at Ridgeville from 1857 to 1863.

From 1860 to 1864, he held the office of Township Trustee, four years.

Dr. Bailey used to be a Whig in politics, and, in later times has been a Republican.

He is one of the pioneers of Ridgeville, having settled there before there was any town, and resided in the place ever since.

PAUL BEARD, SR. (DECEASED).

Paul Beard, Sr., was born in North Carolina in 1779; came to Randolph County, Ind., below Lynn, near Lynn Meeting-House, in the spring of 1817, having married Hannah Pearson in 1813 (born 1778). They had nine children---Obed, Eunice, William, Enoch, Enoch (second), Paul, Hannah, George, John.

Paul Beard was a physician; belonged to the Friends, and died in 1857, aged seventy-seven years four months and twenty-three days.

His wife, Hannah Beard, died in 1851, aged seventy-two years five months and twenty-four days.

He was a noted man in pioneer days, both as a physician and as a citizen, being upright, respected and trustworthy, and skillful in his profession.

JOHN E. BEVERLY, WINCHESTER.

John E. Beverly was born in Marlboro District, S. C., September 17, 1816.

The same fall, his parents set out for the Northwest, and, tarrying for awhile on the way, came forward in the spring with the company conducted by Paul W. Way, crossing the Ohio at Cincinnati on the ice.

Mr. Beverly's parents stopped in Wayne County for several years, removing to Randolph in 1828.

His teachers in boyhood were Henry Way, William and H. L. Macy, Elijah Brock and Samuel Johnson.

They settled seven miles west of Winchester, and somewhat south of Macksville.

As a child and a youth, Mr. Beverly was greatly eager for knowledge, attending such schools as came in his way, but using also every practicable means of self-improvement.

The opportunities of knowledge in those days were but slight.

He was nearly grown before he ever saw a weekly newspaper. But the Randolph County Library was to his inquiring mind a priceless treasure. In that collection were Hume's England, Josephus, Encyclopedia Britannica, Cavallo's Natural Philosophy, a small treatise on chemistry, Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, etc.

He says: "Often have I walked to town (seven miles) on Saturday afternoon, reading as I went, to exchange books."

He says further: "I had from boyhood worked much in brick yards, and had, little by little, taken to brick-laying, and become so expert as to be called for far and near."

He thinks he has done more "jobs," large and small, than any other man in the county.

But still he found time, amid the labors of the farm and the trowel, to read and to think, and to take an active interest in temperance and anti-slavery, etc.

In the fall of 1843, Dr. Woody proposed to him to read medicine in his office. He did so, reading physic, and also continuing to lay brick.

During the winter of 1846–47, he attended lectures at the Ohio Medical College, taking clear and copious notes throughout the course, which notes he has preserved to the present time.

His father died in 1833, and, being the oldest son, he was obliged to care for the orphaned family, which he did for years, standing as a father to the fatherless brood.

He began to practice medicine with Dr. Woody, at Winchester, shortly afterward undertaking the profession alone.

In 1857, he removed to Fair Haven, and in 1859 returned to Winchester.

He served, during a part of the war of 1861, as medical member of the Enrolling Board for the Fifth Congressional District.

For a time, he was proprietor of Randolph County Journal.

In 1866, he removed to Richmond, Ind., returning to Winchester in 1874, and that place has been his residence to the present time.

Dr. Beverly has mostly retired from practice.

He has been twice married—first, to Caroline Louisa Goodrich, in 1843, who died in 1853.

In 1855, he married Ann Eliza Goodrich, a sister of his former wife, who is still living.

They have had several children, three of whom survive—one son, in Chicago; and two daughters, at home.

Dr. Beverly, as we have said, was an advocate of temperance, having been for years, when a young man, Secretary of the first temperance society in the region, about 1835 or sooner. He was also one of the small and despised, yet energetic band of early Abolitionists, who succeeded at length, by the most wonderful activity, in turning the world, not upside down, but right side up, upon that most important subject.

By his thorough and consistent course through life, Dr. Beverly has gained, and still retains, the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

Dr. Beverly mentions, as a reminiscence of anti-slavery work, that a band of Abolitionists, among whom were Fred Douglass, Charles L. Remond, Bradburn, James Monroe, etc., held a series throughout the country of 100 conventions, making the movement a grand success. In fact, the present generation have no idea of the stern and terrible earnestness of effort put forth by that devoted class of Christian men and women, the Abolitionists of the olden time. The sterling song, indited by William Lloyd Garrison, beginning, "I am an Abolitionist, I glory in the name," fitly describes the whole brotherhood, and sisterhood as well, throughout the land.

But, though mostly forgotten by the nation at large, they have their abundant reward, the consciousness that the work on which they had set their hearts, is accomplished. The proud boast of the British poet,

> "We have no slaves in England, the moment that
> A bondman breathes our air, that moment he is free;
> They touch our country and their shackles fall."

Even so now is it, thank heaven, with our own loved native land.

So may all the evils that beset our nation be rooted up and banished forever from our midst!

So may the strong and faithful, the firm and steadfast, the tried and true, throughout our wide-spread country, band together once more and continually to oppose the wrong and the false, and advocate, maintain and practice, amid obloquy, opposition and scorn, if need be, and God so will, the right, the just and the true, until, as in the struggle of the olden time, now happily crowned with abundant success, the heroic combatants for that which is good and holy shall see, from time to time, with joy unspeakable, victory perched upon their banner! Or, if, in God's good pleasure, any be called away while yet the battle is fierce and the conflict strong, may they close their mortal eyes sustained by an invincible faith that from the seed which, going forth weeping, they have sown, shall yet be reaped a glorious harvest!

NELSON T. CHENOWETH, WINDSOR.

Nelson T. Chenoweth was born in Darke County, Ohio, in 1837, being the son of Jacob Chenoweth, Esq., an old pioneer of Darke County, and residing still on the old homestead west of Nashville. He is one of a large family of grown-up boys and girls, who have all (or nearly so) risen to distinction.

He was in the Union army four years, being a member of the Sixty-ninth Ohio, Company E.

He was brought up on his father's farm; became a teacher; studied medicine with his brother, John T. Chenoweth, then of Williamsburg, but now of Winchester; graduated from Eclectic Medical Institute in Cincinnati in 1867.

He formed a partnership with Dr. Botkin, at Unionsport, Ind., which lasted one year; married his wife there—Laura E. Haines, daughter of Stephen Haines; came to Windsor in 1868, and resides there still.

He is a thorough Republican, a wide-awake and enterprising citizen, and an intelligent and faithful physician, commanding an extensive and successful practice.

They have three children.

JOEL N. CONVERSE, UNION CITY, IND.

Joel N. Converse was born December 13, 1820, in Madison County, Ohio; married Ann Eliza Phillips November 5, 1840; has two children—Laura A., wife of D. H. Reeder, miller, Union City, Ind.; Lois R., wife of Dr. Flowers, Columbus, Ohio.

He read medicine, and practiced from 1841 to 1852, graduating, in 1846, from Starling Medical College, Columbus, Ohio.

He settled at Union City, Ind., in 1852, at the commencement of the town, and has resided there ever since.

Since 1852, he has been engaged mostly in railroad construction and management. He was Director, Vice President and Superintendent of the Union & Logansport, and is still Director in the C., C. & I. C. R. R., into which the U. & L. R. R. was merged.

In the West, he was Vice President and Superintendent of the Nebraska Railroad for ten years.

For years he was School Trustee of Union City, Ind.

In business, he is a man of great activity, energy and enthusiasm; in social life, a warm-hearted, genial companion and friend; in politics, a stalwart Republican; in religion, he considers himself largely liberal; in family life, he is greatly devoted to the comfort and pleasure of those dependent on him.

He is a strong friend of general and compulsory education, and an enthusiastic worker in the temperance ranks, and, in general, a sincere and active co-worker in whatever seems to him to be adapted to build up society and increase the well-being of the human race.

Mr. Converse has been largely favored and blessed with success in his efforts to gain property, and is understood to possess a comfortable fortune.

For twenty-five years, much of his time has been spent away from home, yet his home feelings and sympathies return all the more active for the deprivation he has been subjected to in this respect; and he looks forward to the time when the relaxation of business activity shall enable him more thoroughly to enjoy the pleasures of an intelligent, cultivated home.

In the fall of 1880, Dr. Converse sold his residence in Union City—one of the most tasteful and elegant mansions in that place—and removed to Chicago. It was purchased by William Harris, of the firm of Turpen & Harris, grocers, for $10,000.

JOHN HEINER, ARBA.

John Heiner was born in 1827, in Maryland; studied medicine in the University of Maryland, Baltimore, graduating in 1846, practicing in Carroll County, Md., from 1846 to 1864; married Matilda Jane Kelly in 1850; has had five children, all living, two married—one son a physician.

He has resided at Arba, Ind., from 1864 to the present time.

Dr. Heiner is an intelligent and reliable physician, and has an extensive practice.

He belongs to the German Reformed Church, and in politics is a Democrat.

C. S. EVANS, UNION CITY.

C. S. Evans was born in Chester County, Penn., in 1832; came to Richmond, Ind., in 1837, and to Spartansburg, Ind., in 1852; to Hollandsburg, Ohio, in 1857; and to Union City in 1868.

He married Almira Boyd in 1859, and Hannah M. Robertson in 1867. They have had two children.

He read medicine with Dr. Lawrence, at Spartansburg, in 1852–55; practiced at Hollandsburg, Ohio, in 1857–68, graduating from the Medical College of Ohio at Cincinnati in 1863.

He joined the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Ohio as Assistant Surgeon in the summer of 1863; had charge of the Cincinnati Barracks, and then of a post hospital at Paris, Ky.; rejoined the regiment in Maryland, and left the service, his time having expired and something over. His chief business has been practicing medicine, though at times selling goods, etc.

Dr. Evans has a high reputation as a practitioner, as a gentleman and a citizen, and is reckoned to be an ornament to his profession and an honor to the community of which he is a member.

DAVID FERGUSON, UNION CITY.

David Ferguson was born in Philadelphia, Penn., in 1813, of Scotch parents; graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1837; came to Butler County, Ohio, in the same year, and to Clark County, Ohio, in 1838.

He removed to Winchester, Ind., in 1849, and settled in Union City in 1865.

His wife was Jane Van Sickel, and they were married in 1849. They have had three children. Two are living, and both at home with their parents, and both daughters, one unmarried the the other a widow.

Dr. Ferguson joined the United Presbyterian Church in 1829, and the Presbyterian Church in 1838. He was Deacon for twelve or fourteen years, and has been Ruling Elder fourteen years.

He has been President and Treasurer of Randolph Mutual Association at various times; joined the I. O O. F. in 1842; Grand Lodge of Indiana in 1856; Grand Encampment of Indiana in 1857; Grand Lodge of the World in 1879.

Thus it will be seen that he has grown gray in the service of his fellow-men, having been an active practitioner of medicine for forty-four years.

He is still hale and active, and seems to bid fair for years of activity and usefulness.

JEHU HIATT, WINCHESTER.

Jehu Hiatt was born in Grayson County, Va., near the Goodspur Crossing of Blue Ridge on the New River, one of the sources of the Kanawha, in 1802.

His father died when Jehu was about three months old.

He was brought to Clinton County, Ohio, in 1814, and to where Richmond now stands in 1815, before Richmond was laid out. That was done in 1816, and he attended the first sale of lots there. Richmond in 1815 was a corn-field, and Robert Morrison had a little store in the neighborhood.

He went to Knightstown in 1830, and moved to Winchester in 1833 or 1834, and his residence has been chiefly in the vicinity of that place ever since.

He bought forty acres east of Winchester, occupying it as his home for many years. Having sold it, he removed his residence to Winchester, where it still remains.

He married Sarah A. Thomas in 1828. They had no children, and his wife died in Wayne County in 1865, and was buried at Goshen Meeting-House, near Middleboro.

He was raised on a farm; worked at tanning and at shoemaking, and finally read medicine with his brother-in-law, John Thomas, near Middleboro, Wayne Co., Ind.

He practiced first at Knightstown, and then at Winchester, but retired from the profession twenty years ago.

He was raised a Friend, became a Hicksite, and now considers himself a "seeker after truth."

He was one of the early Abolitionists when that "hated sect" was "everywhere spoken against," and when courage was required to face the storm of obloquy and of persecution and of addled eggs and of brickbats, coupled, moreover, with the danger, and the fact of fines inflicted and penalties enforced against the "accursed few" who had the audacity to hold to the faith and to practice the belief that "all men are created equal," and that liberty, except for crime, is the inalienable birthright of all men.

Dr. Hiatt, though for many years a widower, seems cheerful and contented, and appears to enjoy the time of old age that has slowly but surely crept upon him. His health is good, and he is vigorous and sprightly, though almost eighty years old, and it would be no wonder if he were to be spared to behold fourscore years and ten; and yet he may be called suddenly away from the scene of his earthly cares to try what may be in store for earth-born spirits in the unseen future.

ROBERT H. MORGAN, SPARTANSBURG.

Robert H. Morgan is the son of Micajah Morgan, a pioneer settler of Wayne County, Ind.

He was born in Wayne County in 1827; attended school at the Union Literary Institute, and at Friends' Boarding School, and at Farmers' Academy, College Hill, Ohio, and at Wittenburg College, Springfield, Ohio. Studied medicine at Marion, with Dr. Lomax, 1850–51.

He married Mrs. Rebecca (Small) Davis, daughter of Joshua Small, in 1853. She was born in 1829, on the Silas Horn place, northeast of Arba, Ind., and died at Spartansburg in 1879.

Mrs. Morgan had three children by her first marriage, and eight by her second.

R. H. Morgan lived one year at Marion, eight years at Nora, Ill., and at Spartansburg since 1859.

He volunteered, April 17, 1861, in Eighth Indiana (three months), Company D, Capt. Silas Colgrove, Col. Benton. (Lincoln's proclamation was April 16.)

The regiment went to Indianapolis, then to West Virginia. It was in the battle at Rich Mountain, July 1861, etc.

When their time was out, he volunteered in the Fifty-seventh Indiana; was commissioned as First Lieutenant of Company D. (For account of regiment, see elsewhere.)

R. H. Morgan was discharged for disability in May, 1864.

Dr. Morgan has been a practicing phyician for about thirty years, and has had a good reputation as a practitioner.

His wife died in the fall of 1879, after a very lingering afflictive illness with the dropsy. She was an excellent Christian wife and mother, bore her painful sickness with exemplary patience, and passed to her heavenly rest leaving a fragrant memory to her family and surviving friends.

His aged mother, a widow for many years, and now more than eighty years of age, has resided with her son Robert for several years.

ROBERT J. PARSONS, UNION CITY.

Robert J. Parsons, only surviving son of Robert Parsons, formerly of Deerfield, Randolph County, was born in Wayne County, Ind., in 1820.

He came with his father to Deerfield in 1828 or 1829, and resided there till he became of age. He then left home and went to near Dayton, Ohio, studying medicine while there.

In 1850, he located as a physician at Union, Montgomery Co., Ohio; removed to Milton, Miami County, in 1853, remaining there till 1881. In the latter year, he returned to Randolph County and established a drug store at Union City, continuing also his practice.

He belongs to the eclectic school.

He has been an active practitioner for nearly forty years.

In 1875, he was elected Professor of Obstetrics in the Eclectic Medical College of Philadelphia, which, however, he was obliged to decline on account of the health of his family. The college, however, continued his connection therewith as Emeritus Professor in the institution, which position he now holds.

He has been three times married—Asenath Thomas, in 1846; Susan Dalton, in 1854; and Rhoda Jones, in 1880. He has had six children, only two of whom are living.

Although by early training a Democrat, he has been a Republican, and is so still.

JOHN L. REEVES, UNION CITY.

John L. Reeves is the son of James and Rachel Reeves, having been born in Darke County, Ohio, in 1827. He came with his parents, in 1832, into the woods of Randolph, settling in Jackson Township, near what came afterward to be New Lisbon.

His father built a cabin, not at first entering land. In two years or so, he entered land, moved to it, "built a camp," and became an independent land-owner, lord of the manor and master of his own castle.

John went to school three months when a lad, and his second term of three months was spent with his grandfather, in Delaware County, young John walking through the woods, in his thirteenth year, to reach the desired spot, and returning in like manner to his home and to the farm work in the spring.

He stayed with his father till he was of age. However, he began to read medicine before that important event, lying in the hay mow for the purpose when his mates were at their sports, and obtaining books from New York, under the advice of Drs. Downing and Miller.

In the fall of 1851, he began work at plastering, and followed it three years with all his might, reading medicine at night.

He farmed for awhile, but bled at the lungs, and gave it up.

He began practice in 1854, at Pittsburg, Randolph County.

He had been married, in 1849, to Angeline Milligan, who died in 1854. He had sold out and was all ready for moving to Iowa when his wife was stricken down, and was soon laid in the cold and silent tomb, and his plans of life were frustrated.

However, he continued his practice, and, in 1856, located at Lancaster, Jay Co., Ind., building up there a fine business.

In 1861, he enlist d in the army, joining the Fortieth Ohio as Lieutenant of Company F. He was promoted to Captain and still again to Major. His time of service was three years and four months.

At Chickamauga, he was wounded in the left ankle, which is still lame at times. He was also stunned by a shell, and supposed by his comrades to be dead. But, recovering from the shock, he was nevertheless disabled for three months. He came near being captured the same day; but was spared the horrors of Andersonville, and the perils, and perhaps the fact, of an awful death in that fearful prison pen.

He attended the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati in 1866, and resumed the profession, locating at Union City, Ind.

His practice has been continued till the present time, except for about a year past, on account of severe sickness, from which he has not yet fully recovered.

He is at present engaged as Vice President and Medical Director of the Pioneer Mutual Life Insurance Association of Union City, Ind.

Dr. Reeves married his first wife in 1849. She died in 1854, and he married again. His second wife was Esther McFarland, who is still living. He has had six children, four of whom now survive. Two of them were by his first wife, and four by his second.

Dr. Reeves, in his youth and early manhood, possessed a remarkable amount of energy, and he has preserved his habits of activity to the present time, gaining for himself, unaided and alone, an honorable and useful position among his fellow-men.

JAMES RUBY, DECEASED.

James Ruby was born in 1807, in Kentucky; came to Wayne County, Ind., when a small boy.

He married Martha Myers, and afterward Hannah J. Hamilton—the latter in 1847.

He studied medicine with his brother-in-law, and began practice at twenty; removed to Hollandsburg, Ohio, in 1850, and to Union City, Ind., in 1867.

He died in 1876, at the age of sixty-nine years.

He had eleven children—eight living, three married.

Children—James Finley, 1850, married, Commercial Bank, Council. [See biography].

Martha, 1852, unmarried, at home.

Samuel B., 1855, married, physician, Union City.

Mary Lewella, 1857, unmarried, at home.

Joseph B., 1859, married, Louisville, Ky., railroad mail service.

Jessie F., 1861, unmarried, post office clerk, Union City.

Ambrose B., 1864, book-keeper, Bowers Bros.

Lizzie B., 1866, girl, at home.

Dr. Ruby was an Episcopal Methodist, a Republican, an excellent physician and a worthy man.

His son Samuel is following the footsteps of his honored father, and, by industry, intelligence and integrity, he is rising to a high standing in his profession.

WILLIAM J. SHOEMAKER, RIDGEVILLE.

William J. Shoemaker was born at Richmond, Va., November 18, 1820. His grandfather, Jeremiah Shoemaker, sold a large estate in Hanover County, Va., taking his pay in Continental money. It proved a total loss, and he afterward made cigar-lighters of the bills.

His father served in the war of 1812, at Camp Holly, on the James River, below Richmond, marrying in 1815, and moving, in 1824 to Columbiana County, Ohio, and, in 1837, to Randolph County, Ind., not far from Ridgeville.

He had eight children, all grown, seven married and four now living. He moved to Kansas in 1858, and was killed by a runaway team a few days after his arrival in that region.

W. J. Shoemaker worked for his father in the woods till twenty-two years of age, attending school in private houses and in "greased-paper-window cabins."

In 1841, he entered Winchester Seminary, under Prof. Farris. He sold a little black colt to James Butterworth, which paid for board and tuition four months.

The summer of 1842, he cleared six acres for his father, took a colt for his pay, traded the colt for a yoke of cattle, taught school at Fairview at $1.50 per day, sold his oxen, and, with his money, paid his way a year at Winchester, breaking down his health by excessive study, and teaching-school near Huntsville eight months to "recruit on."

Prof. Ferris, needing an assistant, he employed Mr. Shoemaker, dividing the school and giving him half the work and half the pay during five months.

His next step was to Bloomington, attending the State University for eighteen months. He reached the Junior class, but quit for lack of means. Leaving the university without a cent, and walking thirty miles, he stopped and earned money enough to pay for a deck passage to Wellsville, on the Ohio River, walking thence to Hanover, Columbiana Co., Ohio.

Here he boarded with his brother and set in to study medicine with Messrs. Robinson & Coons.

Finishing his course and practicing several years in Northeastern Ohio, he came back to Ridgeville in 1853, $1,000 in debt.

Here he practiced his profession, erecting, meanwhile, the third house in Ridgeville (with Robert Starbuck), on credit.

He battled with life for four years, and, in 1858, "put out" for Kansas, having been married in Northeastern Ohio in 1851. In that far-off land, he buried, during the first eight months, a father and a sister.

He undertook farming, and had fine prospects till the drought ruined his crops. The middle of July showed a beautiful growth of corn; the month of August, nothing.

During the winter of 1859–60, he was a Clerk in the Legislature that framed the free constitution for Kansas, and voted itself down to Lawrence.

In 1860, Mr. Shoemaker returned once more to Ridgeville, which he has never left since that time.

In 1865, he was reckoned to command at least the second best practice in Randolph County.

His wife is still living, fresh and sprightly, though the mother of eleven children, five of whom are living, and only one is married.

One of his sons was sick and helpless for many months, requiring ceaseless care and aid day and night. Mr. Shoemaker attended upon his son through all that wearisome time, taking, on an average, for sixty days and nights, only three hours' sleep in the twenty-four.

Their care was repaid by the recovery of that afflicted and suffering son. He now is connected with his father in business.

His life has been full of adventure and suffering, but hope and courage have never failed him, and his motto is still, as ever, "Never give up; it is wiser and better always to hope than once to despair."

He has been a life-long Republican, and, in former years, was connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

H. H. YERGIN, UNION CITY, IND.

H. H. Yergin was born in Wayne County, Ohio, in 1839, and came to Union City, Ind., in 1867.

He married Elizabeth Crawford, daughter of Col. Crawford, and they have one child. In youth, he was clerk in a drug store.

He graduated in the scientific course at Delaware College, Ohio, and at the Cleveland Medical College, Ohio, in 1864, pursuing the post-graduating course in the same school in 1866.

He is a member of the Medical Society of Wayne County, Ohio; of the Ohio and the Indiana Medical Societies; of the Randolph County Medical Society, etc.

He is employed by the Bee Line and the Pan Handle Railroads as surgeon for accidents among their employes.

Dr. Yergin is a physician of high standing in the profession, and commands an extensive practice.

In political faith, he is a Democrat.

MEDICAL SOCIETIES.

The Delaware District Medical Society (including Randolph County) was organized at Muncie, Ind., Tuesday, June 19, 1877, as the result of consultation upon the subject.

There was a fair representation of the various county societies, and by 12 o'clock thirty-eight physicians and three medical students were present.

The meeting was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

An organization was completed by 2 P. M., and dinner was had at the Kirby House. Several toasts were offered, among them the following:

1. Medical Diplomas. Response by Dr. William Lomax.
2. Medical Education and Medical Colleges. Response by Dr. Parvin, of Indianapolis.
3. The Preacher and the Doctor. Response by Rev. Whitmer.

The committees were as follows:

1. On Organization—John E. Markle, J. J. Ransom, S. F. Brunt, H. D. Reasoner, R. P. Davis, G. D. Leech.

2. On Officers (one from each county)—Randolph County, W. G. Smith; Jay County, R. P. Davis; Blackford County, William Ransom; Madison County, Dr. Young; Delaware County, W. J. Boyden; Grant County, none present.

Permanent officers President, John Horne; Vice President, J. E. Markle; Treasurer, G. W. H. Kemper; Secretary, G. D. Leech; Censors, William C Ransom, Henry C. Winans, H. D. Reasoner.

The second meeting was held at Winchester, Randolph County, December 18, 1877.

Members received—Peter Drayer, N T. Chenoweth, G. W. Sheperd, D. Ferguson, William Commons, A. H. Farquhar, L N. Davis, A. H. Good.

Honorary members—Drs. Hibbard, McIntyre and Weist, of Richmond, Ind.

The third session took place at Hartford City, Blackford County, June 17, 1878.

Officers chosen: President, J. E. Markle, Randolph County; Vice President, W. C. Ransom, Blackford County; Secretary, G. D. Leech, Delaware County; Treasurer, G. W. H. Kemper, Delaware County; Censors, R. P. Davis, Jay County; T. J. Bowles, Delaware County; H. D. Reasoner, Grant County.

The fourth session convened at Marion, Grant County, December 17, 1878.

The fifth meeting occurred at Anderson, June 24, 1879, at the Presbyterian Church.

Officers elected: President, W. A. Hunt, Madison County; Vice President, J. S. Shively, Grant County; Secretary, G. D. Leech, Delaware County; Treasurer, G. W. H. Kemper, Delaware County; Censors, Peter Drayer, Blackford County; William Commons, Randolph County; R. P. Davis, Jay County.

Resolution adopted in favor of a State Board of Health, and of local boards in the several townships.

The sixth session was held in Muncie, Ind., at the Mayor's office, December 23, 1879.

Members—O. F. Anderson, Wheeling; D. R. Armitage, Muncie; S. F. Brunt, Summitville; T. J. Bowles, Muncie; Oliver Broadbent, Anderson; A. B. Bradbury, Muncie; J. T. Chenoweth, Winchester; N. T. Chenoweth, Windsor; William Commons, Union City; George F. Chittenden, Anderson; F. M. Davis, Wheeling; H. C. Davisson, Hartford City; R. P. Davis, Red Key; J. Dillon, Daleville; Peter Drayer, Hartford; L. N. Davis, Farmland; G. W. Daniels, Sweetzer; J. J. Evans, Winchester; George Egbert, Sweetzer; S. W. Edwins, Frankton; D. Ferguson, Union City; A. H. Farquhar, Ridgeville; William Flynn, Marion; C. Free, Funk's P. O.; A. H. Good, Selma; F. N. Harrison, Winchester; John Horne, Yorktown; W. N. Horne, Yorktown; L. P. Hess, Marion; John W. Hall, Sweetzer; Samuel S. Horne, Jonesboro; J. W. Hunt, Alexandria; H. E. Jones, Anderson; G. W. H. Kemper, Muncie; J. M. Littler, Albany; G. D. Leech, Muncie; William Lomax, Marion; C. Lomax, Marion; Walter H. Lewis, Pendleton; John E. Markle, Winchester; C. R. Mason, Hartford City; William J. Morgan, Perdieu; John F. McKinstry, Jonesboro; John A. Meek, Jonesboro; N. H. Manering, Rigdon; W. V. McMahon, Ovid; S. W. McKinney, Jonesboro; A. L. Murray, Granville; W. C. Ransom, Hartford City; H. D. Reasoner, New Cumberland; J. A. Ransom, Montpelier; O. J. Reasoner, Shideler; G. W. Smith, Winchester; J. K. Shideler, Royerton; J. B. Summers, Muncie; G. W. Sheperd, Red Key; C. Q. Shull, Montpelier; D. T. Showalter, Montpelier; James S. Shively, Marion; Isaac N. Seal, Hackleman; M. T. Shively, Marion; J. Stewart, Anderson; F. B. Spann, Anderson; D. L. Trowbridge, McCowan; Robert Winton, Muncie; H. C. Winans, Muncie; S. C. Weddington, Jonesboro; Lewis Williams, Marion.

Randolph County Medical Society was formed at Winchester January 12, 1876, and it holds meetings quarterly, the officers elected annually.

First members—J. C. Beverly, Winchester; J. E. Markle, Winchester; David Ferguson, Union City; J. Heiner, Arba; J. T. Chenoweth, Winchester; L. N. Davis, Farmland; W. G. Smith, Winchester; J. J. Evans, Winchester; A. H. Good, Winchester; L. M. Jones, Winchester; A. H. Farquhar, Ridgeville.

Officers first year—J. C. Beverly, President; J. Heiner, Vice President; L. M. Jones, Secretary; David Ferguson, Treasurer.

Officers, 1877—Markle, Commons, Evans, Ferguson.

Officers, 1878—Ferguson, Davis, Chenoweth, Evans.

Officers, 1879—Commons, Good, Evans, Chenoweth.

Officers, 1880—Heiner, Chenoweth, Farquhar, Evans.

Officers, 1881—Davis, Good, Smith, Evans.

Number of members in all, 36; 1877, 15; 1878, 15; 1879, 27; 1880, 25; 1881, 26.

Members, 1881—C. S. Arthur, Portland; J. S. Berry, Spartansburg; J. S. Blair, Lynn; J. E. Bennett, William Commons, Union City; J. T. Chenoweth, Winchester; N. T. Chenoweth, Windsor; R. P. Davis, Red Key; L. N. Davis, Farmland; C. S. Evans, J. J. Evans; A. H. Farquhar, Ridgeville; David Ferguson, Union City; R. Ford, A. H. Good, Bloomingport; John Heiner, Arba; H. Harrison, Union City; R. N. Harrison, R. Hamilton, Lynn; J. N. Hollinger, J. M. Keener, Farmland; J. E. Markle, Winchester; W. G. Smith, C. Smith; H. H. Yergin, Union City; A. G. Rogers, Parker.

Randolph Medical Society is auxiliary to the State Medical Society, and is governed by the code of ethics of the American Medical Association.

The members of the medical society comprise only a part of the physicians of the county, since they embrace what are sometimes called "regular physicians," and not all of them. Any regular physician in good standing is eligible to membership.

THE PRESS.

Newspapers in Union City:

1. Union Train, by Putnam, 1853.
2. Crystal Fountain, by Jones.
3. ——, by Osborn, 1854.
4. ——, by Bromagem.
5. Chip-Basket, by W. D. Stone
6. Times, by Simmons Bros., 1861; B. Masslich, foreman; press taken to Portland, Jay County, 1862.
7. Union Eagle, Dynes, 1863; L. G. Dynes, W. S. Dynes, B. F. Diggs, B. H. Bonebrake, B. Masslich, proprietors, 1863–66; B. Masslich, sole proprietor, 1866, and ever since (1882). The Eagle has about one thousand subscribers.
8. Gazette; various publishers, 1870–71.
9. Independent (Greeley), 1872, Hedgepeth & Co.
10. Times, Republican; John Commons, 1873–78; George Patchell, 1878–82.
11. Plaindealer, Democrat, Wentworth, 1877–82.
12. News, Shockney, 1882.

The papers named above have all been merely temporary except the Eagle, the Times and the Plaindealer. The latter is the only Democratic paper in Randolph County, while there are five flourishing Republican sheets—three at Union City and two at Winchester.

The Times and the Eagle and the Plaindealer would all seem to have gained a permanent foothold and life enough to "paddle" each one "its own canoe." The Times having attained its ninth, the Eagle its nineteenth and the Plaindealer its seventh year. The News has just begun.

The Eagle proprietor, B. Masslich, has conquered a financial success, and the young and ambitious chief of the Times seems bent on pushing boldly forward in the path to public favor, and, by energetic activity, to command the general approval.

The Plaindealer, too, is plodding onward in its own chosen way to cheer the hearts of its Democratic patrons and to establish the faith that it has espoused.

All three of these papers have job offices, in which more or less general printing is done.

The Eagle has about one thousand regular subscribers.

The Times has one thousand steady subscribers, and has lately established a steam press.

The Plaindealer has eight hundred subscribers.

The general growth of the community is shown very strikingly, among other things, by the increase of the printing business. Thirty years ago, one press managed to get a meager support from the whole county and the adjoining region. Now, five permanent printing establishments find remunerative employment in Randolph County alone.

And it is, on the whole, an encouraging reflection that, though given somewhat at times, possibly, to partisan extravagance, and now and then to something like ungenerous flings at each other, yet the general tendency of their publications is for the better, and that their influence tends to discourage vice, and to encourage intelligence, and to strengthen morality and virtue.

Long may this become more and more the pleasing truth, and speedily may the defects and errors apparent in the methods of conducting them be fully and permanently rectified, and their power and efficiency become entirely and strongly promotive and productive of good throughout the whole community.

Winchester.—The first paper in the county was begun in 1843, by H. H. Neff, at Winchester, under the name of the Winchester Patriot, which is published to-day as the Winchester Journal.

The Herald was begun in 1873, as the Winchester Gazette.

Statements are made elsewhere as to both these sheets.

Several other journals have maintained a brief existence at the county seat. Among others, one or more Democratic presses have been established. But we have not in possession any reliable data of others besides the Journal, the Herald and the Phantasmagorian, and hence further mention of them is omitted.

The Winchester Patriot, begun by H. H. Neff, Esq., 1843, had various publishers. Hodson & Beeson began in 1872 (July).

It has a circulation of twelve hundred to fifteen hundred; present number, fifteen hundred.

They employ a steam power press, a Campbell newspaper press, and a Peerless job press, and the machinery is propelled by a Brookwalter engine.

The establishment is supplied with abundance of type and material.

They have an extensive job custom, employing three hands besides the proprietors.

The Patriot was established as a Whig paper, and the sheet has been Republican ever since the existence of that party.

Mr. Hudson sold his interest in the Journal to his partner, Mr. Beeson, July 1, 1881, who continues its sole proprietor.

The Winchester Herald was established in 1876 by the Rev. J. G. Brice, professing to be independent, though thought by many to do what is often the fact, viz., to possess Democratic proclivities; sold out after a time to E. L. Watson, and by him changed in politics to Republican; by him sold again to John Commons, former proprietor of the Union City Times, in 1878, and still owned by him.

The Herald has a good circulation, and maintains faithfully the fundamental principles of morality and good order.

A feature of the Herald is its Sunday-school and temperance columns, under the care and control of Mrs. Clara R. Commons, the active and gifted wife of the editor.

The Phantasmagorian, established at Winchester in February, 1881. W. P. Needham, editor. Price, $1 in advance.

It aims to be a live, wide-awake journal, and to keep abreast of the times in activity and enterprise. It is a peculiar feature of the 'Phantaz' that its printing, etc., is all done at Fort Wayne, some sixty miles from its office of publication. But that, in these days of railroads and telegraphs, is no drawback.

It contains the news of the county and region, and a good portion of that of the world at large, and whether the mechanical work is executed one block or 100 miles away is no matter.

Ridgeville, Farmland, etc.—Some efforts have been made to carry on a printing press and a weekly journal at Ridgeville, Randolph County, but, thus far, without permanent success. What the future may have in store for Ridgeville, Farmland, etc., in this matter, cannot now be stated; but the past and the present must be mostly silent in this respect in their behalf.

In the month of November, 1881, a newspaper was set on foot at Ridgeville. Name, Ridgeville Leader. Proprietor, J. R. Polks. Date of first issue, Friday, November 11, 1881.

It is to be hoped that this new aspirant for public favor may achieve a permanent success.

The author has an impression that, at some time not very long past, a newspaper was attempted at Farmland, but no special or exact information is in our possession; and, even if the impression be correct, the attempt seems to have been a failure, since no paper is issued from that village at the present time.

PRINTING ACTIVITY.

For some years past, and especially at the present time, the activity of the press in Randolph is very great. All five of the offices are abundantly supplied with work, and some of them are greatly pressed with the demand for jobs of various kinds.

The growth of the county in this matter is truly amazing—from a single press in 1843, to five offices and six newspapers, with a great number and variety of machines for supplying the vastly increased amount of printing demanded by the civilization of to-day.

In Randolph County the Journal at Winchester, and the Times, at Union City, are especially remarkable for their enterprise and success. The Times, in the spring of 1882, bought a building for an office, and also purchased and set up a steam press. But the others, too, do a good stroke of business, and have the confidence of their respective patrons and the public.

BENTLEY MASSLICH, PRINTER, UNION CITY.

Bentley Masslich was born in 1837, at Littiz, Penn.; moved to Bethlehem, Penn., in 1854; near Dayton, Ohio, in 1857; to Union City, in 1859; married Louisa Bachman in 1859; Peninnah Watkins in 1867; Lucia E. Farson, 1870.

He has had seven children.

He learned printing at Bethlehem in 1854–57; was a teacher, surveyor and book-keeper; sold books, jewelry, etc.; bought an interest in the Eagle in 1864; bought the whole in 1866; has ever since been sole proprietor.

The Eagle was established in 1863, by L. D. & W. S. Dynes.

Under the present management, the Eagle is the outspoken, fearless advocate of right, and the earnest opponent of wrong; is mild and courteous in tone, and singularly free from offensive personalities.

The Eagle has a peculiar, rather unique, make-up, a little as though casualties and crimes were "all there is in the world."

Mr. Masslich is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; for six years, has been Trustee, and for ten years, organist. He is Secretary of the Board of Trustees of three building and loan associations, of the Randolph County Bible Society, of Y. M. C. A., and of S. S. V. & E. L. [See Temperance.]

The Eagle has been active against lotteries as gambling, and forbidden by law, and has lost some patronage by its course. The editor feels the comfort of an approving conscience, and good citizens fervently hope that he may follow the advice of Sumner to Secretary Stanton—"stick"—and that he may keep on shying a club at the head of Satan wherever he can see it.

Mr. Masslich was in early times closely pinched, but he has become able to build for himself a good house and office combined, and is reckoned one of the substantial citizens of the town.

During the summer of 1881, the new institution of Marriage Dowry arose, the first association of the kind being formed at Union City, and for a time, these companies had an immense run, the community being apparently "wild" after them. The Eagle, convinced of the unsoundness of their foundations, took a firm stand, almost alone, against them from the beginning—a position which a few months' time showed to be true.

GEORGE W. PATCHELL, UNION CITY, IND.

George W. Patchell was born in 1858, at Pittsburgh, Penn.

His parents moved to Union City, Ohio, in 1867, when young George was at the age of nine years.

He spent his boyhood and youth at school on the Ohio side, and learned the printing business in the Times office, with John Commons.

In his twentieth year, he bought that establishment as sole proprietor, though a mere boy without capital, making the purchase December 1, 1877. Since that time, he has paid for the office in full, adding to its fixtures and implements about $700, purchased and paid for a fine lot on North Howard street, and erected an elegant residence thereon, the whole of the property—office, lot and dwelling—being entirely paid for; and all this within less than four years.

Our young friend of the Times is thought by some to be rather "high-headed." George may not, possibly, be wholly guiltless of the charge, yet his splendid success in so early youth speaks well for his ability; and increased age and more extended intercourse will doubtless smooth down the rough places, prove him to be a man of sterling business ability, and bring to him still more abundant success.

Mr. Patchell has infused into the Times establishment a remarkable degree of enterprise, by which, in return, he is reaping a large reward in a splendid run of business and an overwhelming press of work flowing into his office in a constant and rapidly increasing stream.

He married Lillie Ann Butcher, daughter of John Butcher, Esq., of Union City, Ind., in December, 1880, and, in June, 1881, took their wedding trip to the Kansas prairies to commemorate the fact that the last payment had been made upon their fine lot and beautiful new dwelling in the thriving city of their residence.

Mr. Patchell is a thorough Republican. He was a candidate for the nomination to the office of Clerk of Union City, Ind., in the spring of 1881. He lost the nomination by a few votes. The result, though naturally mortifying to his ambition, is nevertheless a decided advantage, since his natural forte is business, and to have such talents perverted to the channel of office-seeking would be an injury to himself and a harm to the public. However, there is time enough yet, if desire should run in that direction; and the old saying is, "A bad beginning makes a good ending," which, like other ancient "saws," has the merit of being at least sometimes true.

But why should we enlarge? Mr. Patchell has life before him, and the world at his command—at least, so much of it as he pleases to subject to his wishes; and his friends hope and predict for him a career of distinguished prosperity and abundant financial success.

It is another old saying that "It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good," and it is a fact that the whirlwind of "marriage dowry," with eight or ten separate kindred associations in Union City alone, while it whisked so much cash out of the pockets of so many over-confident men and women, created such a demand for the printing of leaflets, etc., that the Times office, being ready and anxious for the work, was so crowded with the jobs of these and other insurance companies as to clear about $1,000 by the operation, which sum was, a large proportion of it, laid out in a steam press and engine, which is now in successful operation in an office on the ground floor, lately purchased, also, for the accommodation of his enlarged business.

STEPHEN M. WENTWORTH, UNION CITY.

Stephen M. Wentworth has led a life of varied adventures, having been born at Chillicothe, Ross Co., Ohio, in 1836. His grandfather was a soldier of the Revolution through the whole war, and received a pension till the day of his death. He was born in about 1760, and was ninety-two years of age when he died. He entered the army as a drummer boy, in a company of which his father was Captain, and, the father dying at length, the son rose to be Captain in his father's stead.

The grandfather came from Maine to Chillicothe in 1815, having a large family of ten children or more.

Stephen's father, Benjamin S. Wentworth, was born in the year in which Washington died—1799—and died in 1849, with the cholera, being the father of twelve children, ten of whom grew up, and seven are living still.

Stephen M. remained at Chillicothe till about sixteen years of age; in 1852, entered the Enquirer office, Cincinnati, continuing therein till 1857.

He attended the Cincinnati Law School one session in that year.

Two years were spent in the office of the Philadelphia Enquirer, at the metropolis of Pennsylvania.

In the summer of 1863, he went with a company of printers to New Orleans, doing printing of various sorts for the soldiers in the Union army. After five or six months thus spent, he became connected with the office of the New Era in New Orleans, being also reporter for the True Delta.

In July, 1867, he left the Crescent City and came to Memphis, remaining for a year.

He was three months in Louisville, six months in the Gazette office at Cincinnati, and, till 1875, in the office of the Enquirer, in the same city.

In 1877, he came to Union City, buying out the Plaindealer, and sending out the first issue under the new management September 18, 1877.

He volunteered as a member of a "gunner squad" during the summer of 1862, serving as cannonier in Fort Mitchell, among the Kentucky Hills, near Cincinnati, for six or eight weeks.

S. M. Wentworth married Minnie Bartley, of Dayton, Ohio, in 1876. They have no children.

Mr. Wentworth is Democratic in politics, though not a violent partisan. He is a man of active habits and genial temperament, being only in middle life, and may hope for many years of honorable usefulness in the service of his country, in the practice of his noble profession, which he has followed during so many years, amid such varied and stirring adventures.

The paper of which he is publisher has a good opportunity for success, it being the only Democratic sheet in the county, where four Republican weeklies find a competent support.

Democrats are not very abundant in Randolph County, indeed; yet still there are enough to furnish an ample support for one journal devoted to the advocacy of their principles and measures, and, if they do their duty as partisans, Mr. Wentworth will succeed in attaining financial success in its publication.

CHAPTER XIX.

MISCELLANY.

BANKS—INSURANCE—LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—STATISTICS—ANECDOTES—BIOGRAPHY.

UNDER this title we give an account of various matters—banks, insurance, loan associations, anecdotes, statistics, finances, population, biography of persons outside the county, etc., etc.

BANKS.

CITIZENS' BANK, UNION CITY.

STATEMENT, 1879

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$104,570 47	Capital & stock paid in	$32,000 00
Bonds	15,475 00	Surplus fund	3,400 00
Due from banks and bankers	33,231 16	Discount	1,843 33
Real estate and fixtures	17,337 92	Undivided profits	200 44
Expense	642 54	Deposits	162,464 62
Cash	28,651 30
Total	$199,908 39	Total	$199,908 39

STATEMENT OCTOBER 31, 1881.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$124,050 42	Capital stock	$ 32,000 00
Real Estate and fixtures	18,919 87	Surplus fund	5,000 00
Due from banks, etc	20,041 10	Discount	1,073 18
Expense	187 78	Exchange	198 73
U. S. bonds	20,865 00	Deposits	186,852 53
Cash	48,221 00	Undivided profits	1,663 62
		Indiana Banking Co.	497 71
Total	$227,285 77	Total	$227,285 77

Officers, etc.—Nathan Cadwallader, President; Isaac P. Gray, Vice President; Edward M. Tansey, Cashier; Charles Cadwallader, Assistant Cashier; Directors, Nathan Cadwallader, Isaac P. Gray, William K. Smith, Ephraim H. Bowen, William H. Anderson.

Stockholders—Nathan Cadwallader, Isaac P. Gray, William K. Smith, Ephraim H. Bowen, William H. Anderson, B. F. Coddington, Henry D. Smith, Edward M. Tansey, John D. Smith, Charles C. Smith, Oliver H. Smith, Mary E. Carter, Charlotte A. White.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF UNION CITY.

STATEMENT, 1879.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$109,787 47	Capital stock	60,000 00
Bonds	18,700 00	Surplus fund	1,000 00
Due from banks	21,121 01	Discount and exchange	4,576 23
Real estate, furniture, etc	3,513 39	Deposits	141,645 92
Expense	1,810 45
Taxes	408 61
Cash	51,873 22
Total	$207,222 15	Total	$207,222 15

Officers, etc., 1879—Charles S. Hardy, President; James F. Ruby, Cashier; Henry B. Grahs, Assistant Cashier; Directors, John S. Johnson, Charles S. Hardy, Robert S. Fisher (dead), Henry S. Stockdale, John S. Starbuck, James Moorman, James F. Ruby.

Stockholders—James Moorman, Robert S. Fisher, John Koontz, John S. Johnson, George B. Johnson, Charles S. Hardy, William Anderson, Anna J. Pierce, Raphael Kirschbaum, Joseph R. Jackson, James S. Cottom, John Fisher, Elihu Cammack, Charles Negley, William Kew, James F. Ruby, William T. Worthington, Henry S. Stockdale, John S. Hartzell, L. A. Goble, John S. Starbuck, Samuel Kahn.

STATEMENT, NOVEMBER, 1881.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$145,415 67	Capital stock paid in	$60,000 00
United States Bonds, etc.	1,000 00	Surplus fund	3,500 00
Due from banks and bankers	12,089 38	Discount	7,441 54
Real estate	882 41	Exchange	418 69
Furniture and fixtures	1,690 00	Individual deposits	155,034 60
Current expenses	1,175 47
Taxes	494 85
Cash items	51,427 05
Specie—gold	12,220 00
Total	$226,394 83	Total	$226,394 83

Officers—Charles S. Hardy, President; John S. Johnson, Vice President; James Finley Ruby, Cashier; Henry D. Grahs, Assistant Cashier.

FARMERS' AND MERCHANTS' BANK, WINCHESTER.

STATEMENT, 1879.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$123,772 10	Capital	$80,000 00
Due from banks	23,190 30	Surplus fund	5,500 00
Real estate, etc	3,576 90	Discount	2,355 92
Expense	662 90	Deposits	80,376 51
Cash	17,190 23
Total	$168,332 43	Total	$168,332 43

STATEMENT, NOVEMBER 7, 1881.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$175,451 91	Capital	$80,000 00
Due from banks	25,954 97	Deposits	156,790 63
Cash on hand	41,968 43	Discount and interest	183 60
Expense	58 87	Surplus	6,450 00
		Exchange	4 95
Total	$243,429 18	Total	$243,429 18

Officers, etc.—Nathan Reed, President; James Moorman, Vice President; Thomas F. Moorman, Cashier; Thomas Moorman, Assistant Cashier; Directors, Nathan Reed, James Moorman, Simon Ramsey, Thomas Moorman, Joseph R. Jackson.

Stockholders—Jehu Hiatt, Henry Moorman, A. O. Marsh, A. C. Beeson, N. Reed, James Moorman, Simon Ramsey, T. Moorman, T. F. Moorman, Phebe B. Reed, R. S. Fisher, R. Kirschbaum, Samuel Kahn, Joseph R. Jackson.

RANDOLPH COUNTY BANK, WINCHESTER.

STATEMENT, 1879.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Loans and discounts	$130,240 11	Capital	$100,000 00
Due from banks	42,202 59	Surplus fund	1,000 00
Furniture, etc.	1,925 00	Interest	6,054 51
Expense	1,312 01	Deposits	97,393 51
Cash	28,768 31
Total	$204,448 02	Total	$204,448 02

STATEMENT, NOVEMBER 5, 1881.

RESOURCES.		LIABILITIES.
Notes	$155,955 46	Capital	$100,000 00
Furniture	1,625 00	Surplus	3,000 00
Real estate	2,550 00	Deposits	98,899 29
Other banks	26,055 01	Collection	67 60
Expenses	433 28	Interest	4,160 01
Cash	19,458 15
Total	$206,076 90	Total	$206,076 90

Officers—Asahel Stone, President; Dennis Kelly, Cashier; S. D. Coats, Assistant Cashier: Directors, Asahel Stone, Thomas Ward, Adam Hirsch, Dennis Kelly, Simon Ramsey.

Stockholders—Asahel Stone, Thomas Ward, L. O. Ward, Thomas Ward, Jr., Adam Hirsch, John Hiatt, Dennis Kelly, S. D. Coats, Simon Ramsey, Amos C. Beeson, John E. Neff, Rachel Steele, L. W. Study, Anna Lykens, John E. Campbell, Sarah A. Campbell, Rhoda Brooks, John Charles.

INSURANCE.

INDIANA BENEVOLENT AND ENDOWMENT ASSOCIATION, UNION CITY, IND.

Home office, Union City, Ind.

Association formed 1880.

Trustees—C. S. Hardy, President Commercial Bank, Union City, Ind.; William Harris, firm of Turpen & Harris, Union City, Ind.; William K. Smith, boots and shoes, Union City, Ind.; Isaac S. Stahl, dentist, Union City, Ind.; A. A. Hutchinson, grocer, Union City, Ind.; H. H. Yergin, physician, Union City, Ind.; S. R. Bell, attorney at law, Union City, Ind.; Allen Jaqua, hardware, Union City, Ind.; J. L. Heck, insurance, Union City, Ind.

Officers—C. S. Hardy, President; William K. Smith, Vice President; Isaac G. Stahl, Secretary; Allen Jaqua, Treasurer; William Harris, General Manager; A. A. Hutchinson, Actuary; H. H. Yergin, Medical Director; S. R. Bell, Attorney; J. L. Heck, Superintendent of Agencies.

Membership—Initiation fee, $10; semi-annual fees, $2,50 (for five years); semi-annual fees, $1.50 (after five years); death assessment, $1.

Return Assessments—All death assessments paid for the first five years will be returned at the expiration of five years.

Beneficiaries receive, at the death of the policy-holder, or at the expiration of a term of years numbering from twelve to fifteen, a sum amounting to from $1,500 to $4,000 (or less, being from 50 to 80 per cent of the certificates in force at the time).

One hundred dollars for funeral expenses upon application.

NATIONAL MARRIAGE DOWRY ASSOCIATION.

Home office, Union City, Ind.

Formed at Union City, March 21, 1881.

Officers—James B. Ross, President; Joseph R. Jackson, Vice President; Samuel R. Bell, Secretary; C. W. Pierce, Sr., Treasurer; G. E. Reynolds, General Agent; C. W. Pierce, Jr., General Manager.

Trustees—Joseph R. Jackson, loan agent; James B. Ross, attorney; C. W. Pierce, grain merchant; S. R. Bell, attorney; G. E. Reynolds, stock-dealer and farmer.

Membership fee, $5, $7, $10, in Classes A, B and C.

Eighty per cent of assessment set apart for a dowry fund.

Twenty per cent devoted to expense fund.

Benefits—Not more than $16⅔ per month of membership for Class A, $33⅓ for Class B, and $50 for Class C.

Semi-annual dues, $1 per $1,000.

Assessment, upon marriage occurring, $1 per $1,000.

If any certificate-holder die before marriage, the heirs, etc., shall receive 80 per cent of all assessments paid by such party.

Membership ceases at marriage.

PIONEER MUTUAL ASSOCIATION, UNION CITY.

The Pioneer Mutual Association was formed in the spring of 1881.

Its declared object is to furnish insurance upon lives of persons between the ages of twenty and eighty years inclusive, at the cheapest possible rates.

Terms—Certificates given, $6 for $1,000, $10 for $2,000, $15 for $3,000, $25 for $5,000.

Yearly assessments, $1 per $1,000, during life.

Death assessments, $1.25 on $1,000 certificate; $2.30 on $2,000; $3.35 on $3,000; $5.50 on $5,000.

Each policy calls for a sum equal to the aggregate net avails of the assessment made in the case in question, but not greater than the full sum named in the certificate, the odd cents in each death assessment, as also the yearly rate, being reserved for expenses.

The association seems at the present time to be flourishing, a large number, considering time elapsed, having obtained certificates therein.

Many object to the feature in the association insuring persons at so great an age, and a large number think the principle unsound of allowing persons to insure parties in whom they have no proper insurable interest; yet the association continues to carry on its operations, and time, that tests all things, must determine what is truth as to these disputed points.

The opinion is common, moreover, that the insurance of parties of great age cannot prove, in the long run, a business success, since death must occur so frequently that such an avalanche of assessments must ensue as to swamp the association and the policy-holders in one common ruin. And still again, that the policy of collection in small sums, and in having no permanent fund on which interest may accrue, so greatly increases the expense of management as eventually to make them be rejected as undesirable.

But this work is not a treatise on insurance, but simply a history, and the author must content himself with a bare statement of facts, and to leave the argument in the matter to other persons, and to other times and places.

FARMERS' MUTUAL AID AND LIFE ASSOCIATION, WINCHESTER, IND.

Formed in 1880.

Officers—Andrew McConnell, President; C. O. Mikesell, Vice President; R. G. Mote, Treasurer; John Kunkel, Secretary; J. J. Mikesell, General Manager. The above officers are also the Directors of the association. G. W. Bruce, Medical Examiner; L. W. Study, Attorney; J. N. Shockney. General Agent.

The following is the plan of the association:

Four classes, A, B, C and D, each having four divisions.

Initiation fee, $8, $10, $12, $15.

Death assessment, $1.10, $2.20, $3.30, $5.50.

Annual dues, $1, $2, $3, $5.

Sums payable (when classes are full), $1,000, $2,000, $3,000, $5,000.

Ages, twenty to eighty-five years.

Expense fund: The initiation fees, the annual dues and 10 per cent of the death assessments.

No medical examinations required between sixty-five and eighty years.

This is another association like the "Pioneer" of Union City which insures ages as high as eighty years—an age which, upon principles heretofore supposed to be sound, would be a transaction unwarranted by the laws regulating safe and substantial business transactions.

HOME BENEVOLENT LIFE ASSOCIATION, WINCHESTER.

Formed in 1881.

Officers—J. M. Hodson, President; R. A. Leavell, Vice President; W. P. Harris, Secretary; T. F. Moorman, Treasurer; J. T. Chenoweth, Medical Director; H. Ritenour, General Manager; W. W. Canada, Attorney.

Directors—J. M. Hodson, R. A. Leavell, W. P. Harris, T. F. Moorman, J. T. Chenoweth.

The association is without stockholders.

Insurable age, eighteen to eighty-two years.

Amount receivable, $2,000 to $5,000.

Beneficiaries classed in four divisions, according to age.

Dues semi annual.

Assessments made at the death of members.

Initiation in proportion to amount insured.

Amount receivable conditioned upon the number of paying members at the time.

The highest age on this association is eighty-two years.

MARRIAGE DOWRY ASSOCIATIONS.

The year 1881 witnessed the beginning, at Union City, Ind., of an association called by the above title.

There seems to be something bewitching in the matter, for, in a brief space, similar organizations have sprung up in great numbers. Eight or ten exist already in Union City, and they are organized at the rate of fifty in a week throughout the State of Indiana.

It is difficult to describe them, or to tell on what they are founded, or how they hope to live, as everybody who buys into them expects to make large profits on the money expended, which, of course, cannot be, since very large amounts go into the pockets of agents and to the officials who manage the affairs of the companies, besides, also, the legitimate expense for printing, rent, etc., etc.

To cover a risk in a convenient, non-burdensome manner, or to pay money to a few at the expense of the many, the method may be appropriate; but as a matter of speculation, to realize largely and on the whole, it cannot be otherwise than a delusion and a failure.

No provision is made for any growth by increased production in any way whatever, and much of the money paid in is absorbed, and, as many of the first certificate-holders get more than they pay out, it necessarily follows that the later ones must lose enough to pay all the expenses, and all the overplus received by any in the early stages of the operation.

The movement now bids fair to have a run over extensive regions, perhaps over the whole land, and seems likely to rival the financial crazes of former times, and to take its place in history side by side with 'John Law's Mississippi Company,' and the 'Morus Multicaulis.'

Saturday, November 26, 1881, the National Marriage Dowry Association, the earliest of the batch, "broke," because the assessments had become so heavy that the certificate-holders would not pay them, preferring to lose their stock rather than to carry the enormous and constantly increasing load any longer.

The last assessment was for twenty-six marriages in a bunch, occurring in one week, aggregating about $156, in the whole, for each certificate-holder.

This "break" is the beginning of the end. So must they all do in a brief space.

March, 1882, the failure of the National, just mentioned, was the signal, the alarm-bell, for the death of them all; and, in a very short time, after a little struggling and maneuvering, the whole mass of them, old and new, "gave up the ghost," leaving their disappointed and deluded certificate-holders to weep and wail over the sudden demise, and over the total loss of the funds invested so far as not received before the time of failure.

Marriage dowry is dead—dead—three times dead! And over its defunct remains may be chanted the quaint ditty, said to have been the epitaph inscribed upon the tombstone of an infant which died at a few days old,

"If so soon my life is done for,
What could it have been begun for?"

It is due, perhaps, to the projectors of this unique mode of insurance to say that they were honest, upright gentlemen, who intended no fraud upon the public, but who were not aware to what their scheme would run, and who supposed a safe and legitimate business might be done.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Laws have been enacted in Indiana, and perhaps elsewhere, authorizing and regulating such associations. Four such companies have existed in Union City. Three of them have expired by limitation of time. One is still in operation, and a fifth is expected to be organized before many weeks.

The first and the second were formed in the spring of 1871.

Of the first, the record is not at hand.

The second was organized May 17, 1871, with fifty-two stockholders and a capital of $100,000, the time being limited to eight years.

Each stockholder has one vote, and no one person can hold more than ten shares.

The Directors at the beginning were Messrs. Tansey, Bowen, Gullett, Lambert, J. D. Smith, Commons, Bowers, Watson and Frey.

The payment was required of 25 cents per week per share, and each stockholder might borrow the funds of the association by bidding the highest therefor, and by giving proper security, and on condition of forfeiture and foreclosure of mortgage in case of delinquency.

The third association was formed March 15, 1873, with a time of seven years, a capital of $100,000, and a membership of perhaps fifty.

The Directors were Hardy, Commons, Worthington, Williams, Downing, White, Hedrick, Hedgepeth and Woodbury.

This company ceased in 1880.

The fourth organization was created in November, 1879. Limit, eight years. Stockholders, ninety-nine. Stock, $100,000. Number of shares, 500. Amount of each share, $200.

Directors—Downing, Masslich, J. D. Smith, Fey, Frey, P. Gray, Norris, Lewis and G. W. Ross.

This last company is now in the second year of its existence.

These companies seem to answer reasonably well the objects for which they were organized, and to satisfy, on the whole, the wishes and expectations of their founders and their members.

Some think there is too much risk in them, yet it may be said, with truth, that there is risk in every business, and those who do not fancy the risk need not enter them.

It would seem that men are tempted to "bid" too high for the privileges of "borrowing the funds," not understanding fully how much larger a per cent they really pay in the operation than they seem to pay.

The Fifth B. & L. Association is now in progress. It contains an important improvement over its predecessors in the fact that stockh lders may withdraw their funds with 6 per cent interest by giving ninety days' notice. The principle of "forfeiture" incorporated in so many associations of various kinds is an injurious, unjust and mischievous feature and should be avoided. The only case where it is admissible would seem to be where a "risk is covered."

In a "savings' bank" or a "bank of deposit," the principle of "forfeiture," upon ceasing to make payments, would be outrageous and unendurable.

STATISTICS.

Below may be found some statistics relating to finance, population, ages, distances, etc., in connection with the county of Randolph.

TAXES.

It has already been seen that up to 1830, or for twelve years of its corporate existence, the "county taxes" fell short of $1,000.

Of course, there were some state taxes, but probably the whole public impost at that time would not double that small amount. To show the immense increase of wealth and taxation as well, we give some statistics referring to various years, as follows:

Taxes for the separate townships—
White River—1845, $2,326; 1865, $31,000.
Washington—1845, $1,182; 1865, $15,000.
Greensfork—1845, $1,092; 1865, $13,000.
Stony Creek—1845, $754; 1865, $9,000.
Nettle Creek—1845, $645; 1865, $11,000.
West River—1845, $768; 1865, $13,000.
Green—1845, $848; 1865, $8,000.
Ward—1845, $1,088; 1865, $10,000.
Jackson—1845, $598; 1865, $7,000.
Wayne—1845, $721; 1865, $67,000.
Total—1845, $10,022; 1865, $153,000.
1876—Taxes, $183,383; assessments, $12,341,221.
1880—Taxes, $163,906; assessments, $11,370,528.

RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

1868—Receipts, $113,253; disbursements, $84,392; balance, $28,862.

1877—Receipts, $282,512; disbursements, $211,333; balance, $71,179; receipts (county), $86,260; disbursements (county), $73,026.

1881—Receipts, $243,340; disbursements, $176,394; balance, $66,946; receipts (county), $44,177; disbursements (county), $29,833.

SOME ITEMS OF EXPENSE.

1868—Jurors, $2,509; salaries, etc., $8,442; poor, $1,370; bridges, $6,936.

1877—Jurors, $2,407; salaries, etc., $5,539; poor, $4,416; bridges, $200; township, etc. (on hand during year), $148,747; Township Trustees received, $80,334.

1881—Jurors, $1,839; salaries, etc., $6,192; poor, $5,598; bridges, $7,339; township, etc. (on hand during year), $137,680; Township Trustees received, $99,826.

[The amount for bridges in 1877 is probably a mistake].

TOWNSHIP STATISTICS.

The following table shows the immense amounts handled by the Township Trustees for 1877:

White River (including Winchester), $16,886; Washington, $6,979; Greensfork, $7,177; Stony Creek, $3,662; Nettle Creek, $3,685; West River, $4,609; Green, $3,135; Ward, $5,760; Jackson, $4,909; Wayne (with Union), $13,293; Monroe (with Farmland), $6,227; Franklin, $4,012. Total, $80,334.

Of this immense sum handled by them, about $35,000, or a little less than half, is levied by the Trustees themselves.

A large portion of this sum is in their hands continuously, and on their power there is practically no check. Theoretically, they are limited to a certain rate, but as a matter of fact, by borrowing from one fund to another, as also by actual borrowing from private parties on the credit of the township, almost any amount desired can be commanded by these well-nigh omnipotent officials, which whole matter of "borrowing" is believed to be without warrant of law, if not in direct violation thereof.

It may be clearly seen from these figures that no officer in the land has so much power in levying taxes and spending public money as these same Township Trustees, and yet it is a fact that no official has so little check upon his actions and so little attention paid to his official course as does he. Verily, such a thing ought not so to be.

FINANCES, 1880.

Treasurer's report—On hand June 1, 1880, $74,621,71; received since, $169,652.39. Total, $244,274.10. Disbursed, $177,343.80; on hand June, 1881, $66,930.30.

County revenue—Handled, $45,047.87; paid out, $30,837.16; on hand, $14,210.91.

Statement of funds in hands of Trustees, year ending March, 1881, as per reports to Auditor's office and on file therein:

Townships.	Handled.	Expended.	On Hand.
White River	$13,989 80	$8,938 37	$5,051 43
Washington	6,558 32	5,102 47	1,855 85
Greensfork	6,460 25	5,584 43	875 82
Stony Creek	4,353 92	3,108 46	1,245 46
Nettle Creek	4,987 88	3,261 19	1,726 69
West River	4,781 74	3,201 03	1,586 71
Green	4,682 40	2,945 13	1,737 27
Ward	6,612 24	4,955 25	1,656 99
Monroe	6,054 35	4,475 62	1,578 73
Jackson	5,754 83	3,255 91	2,498 92
Wayne	10,971 19	3,761 30	7,209 89
Franklin	3,986 71	2,027 27	1,959 44
Totals	$79,593 63	$50,616 43	$28,977 20

Statement from Trustees' report October, 1881, for transactions during six months from April, 1881:

Townships.	Handled.	Expended.	On Hand.
*Franklin	$1,983 85	$557 60	$1,458 25
Stony Creek	4,089 72	2,097 93	1,991 79
Wayne	11,772 11	4,294 87	7,477 24
Nettle Creek	4,449 92	2,392 18	2,057 74
Green	4,221 54	2,682 17	1,539 37
White River	10,218 14	5,344 54	4,873 60
Washington	6,626 34	3,394 24	3,232 10
Greensfork	5,001 85	2,265 24	2,736 61
Jackson	4,779 53	1,977 70	2,801 83
Ward	4,763 31	1,319 60	3,444 01
†Monroe	9,251 93	6,588 66	2,663 27

West River (report not obtained.)

REPORTS OF TOWN SCHOOL TREASURERS, OCTOBER, 1881.

WINCHESTER.

	Handled.	Expended.	Balance.
Special	$9,865 31	$1,577 62	$8,287 69
Tuition	8,803 77	4,621 00	4,182 77
Totals	$18,669 08	$6,198 62	$12,470 46

UNION CITY.

Special	$4,052 71	$2,642 10	$1,410 61
Tuition	7,920 70	4,365 00	3,555 70
Totals	$11,973 41	$7,007 10	$4,966 31

RIDGEVILLE.

Special	$757 76	$612 99	$144 77
Tuition	2,083 17	1,017 50	1,065 67
Totals	$2,840 93	$1,630 49	$1,210 44

FARMLAND

Special	$543 90	$416 83	$127 07
Tuition	1,298 36	960 00	338 36
Totals	$1,842 26	$1,376 83	$465 43

HUNTSVILLE.

Special	$86 63	$48 13	$38 50
Tuition	470 84	265 00	295 84
Totals	$557 47	$313 13	$234 34

HEAVY TAX-PAYERS.

The following list of assessments as published in 1881 for that year, possesses interest as showing who are large property holders of the county.

Of course the sums stated show the amount owned by each, only comparatively, for reasons that need not be enumerated. The list shows the persons and the firms whose assessments exceed $10,000, the names being given in alphabetical order:

Willson Anderson, Greensfork	$10,150
William Anderson, Union City	16,190
Edmund L. Anderson, Union City	10,445
Benjamin F. Bundy	11,650
Thomas M. Browne, Winchester	18,135
John Brooks	11,610
Ephraim L. Bowen, Greensfork	13,035
Simeon Branham, Union City	18,915
Bowers & Brother, Union City	14,075
Andrew Cortner	12,515
James J. Clayton	13,900
John W. Clayton	17,950
James S. Cottom, Winchester	17,760

*$27.00 overdawn.
†$3,082.62 overdrawn.

John J. Cheney, Winchester	14,650
Samuel Caylor, Green Township	31,695
Nathan Cadwallader, Union City	22,655
Frederick Davis	12,360
Mark Diggs (heirs), Nettle Creek	14,455
Susannah Diggs, Nettle Creek	12,615
Perry Fields, Ward Township	10,520
Robert S. Fisher (heirs), Union City	26,520
John Fisher, Sr. (heirs), Union City	12,700
John B. Goodrich (heirs), Winchester	16,320
William S. Green, Sr., Union City	13,815
Jehu Hiatt, Winchester	16,955
Adam Hirsch, Winchester	18,605
William M. Hunt	11,620
Peter Hoover, Wayne Township	14,445
Elias F. Halliday, Farmland	10,730
John Jenkins, West River Township	10,170
Joseph R. Jackson, Union City	22,700
Joseph Keys	12,185
Thomas W. Kizer, Winchester	20,660
Henry P. Kizer, Winchester	13,045
Philip Kable, Sr.	16,850
Dennis Kelley, Winchester	10,960
John Koontz, Union City	30,185
Raphael Kirschbaum, Union City	16,820
Kirschbaum & Co., Union City	13,150
Moses Lasley, White River	17,110
C. C. Monks, Winchester	12,945
James Moorman, Winchester	262,170
Elisha Martin, Sr., White River	12,690
Zimri Moffitt, White River	17,765
Jesse B. McKinney, Fairview	48,035
Joseph Mecks, Green Township	14,200
Arthur McKew, Ridgeville	32,620
David Mosier	10,270
Nathan Reed, Winchester	18,620
John Richardson, Winchester	11,855
Amos Rockhill (heirs)	15,710
Clark Reed	10,960
Robert S. Starbuck	17,860
Asahel Stone	51,810
Benjamin R. Shaw, Spartansburg	11,450
Gideon Shaw, Winchester	15,495
Isaac Smith	14,270
Philip Shiveling, Sr. (heirs)	11,620
Samuel H. Shockney, Wayne Township	12,200
William K. Smith, Union City	13,990
Turpen & Harris, Union City	17,135
Thomas Ward, Winchester	72,695
Moorman Way, Winchester	39,525
Harvey Wysong, White River	10,885
Edward Wright (heirs)	20,095
Willis C. Wilmore, White River	14,760
Lemuel Wiggins, Losantville	17,970
Israel F. Wirt (heirs), Green Township	15,585
James M. Warren, Ward Township	12,550
John R. Warren, Ward Township	16,990
Dolph Warren, Jackson Township	20,920
James Woodbury, Wayne Township	11,125
Witham & Anderson & Company, Union City	23,780
William H. Wood	14,635
Total	$1,618,105

The assessments belonging to Union City in the above list amount to a total of $282,975.

The assessments belonging to residents of Winchester amount to $632,305.

It is a remarkable and suggestive fact that the comparatively small capital located at Union City sustains many times the volume of business that the moneyed men of Winchester carry on. Indeed, nearly the entire business activity of the county seat is under the control of men whose names are not found in the above list.

Many of the active men of Union City fall below the grade of assessment stated above; still, most of the capital in Union City is actively employed.

It is probably the case in the small towns and cities of the country that active business talent is to a great extent united to a limited capital, which fact, although, like poverty, it increases the energy and sharpens the business shrewdness, yet is found to be sometimes greatly inconvenient and vexatious.

It may be remarked of Union City that the fortunes there have been acquired within a comparatively short time, and almost wholly as the result of enlightened business activity.

However, one town should not set itself against another, but the citizens of each and of all ought to realize that the true advantage of wealth lies in the fact that it confers power upon the possessor to add more largely to the activity and the comfort of the community as a whole, and of each one as individual citizens; and that he is the greatest benefactor who draws from his capital, be it small or large, the greatest amount of productive labor, coupled with the largest and surest wages.

DISTANCES.

	Arba	Bloomingport	Bartonia	Deerfield	Fairview	Farmland	Harrisville	Huntsville	Lynn	Losantville	Morristown	Macksville	New Middletown	New Pittsburg	Ridgeville	Randolph	Spartansburg	Union City	Windsor	Winchester	Emmettsville	New Lisbon	Saratoga	Stone Station	Rural
Arba	....
Bloomingport	8.0	....
Bartonia	7.8	13.5	....
Deerfield	23.4	17.9	15.4	....
Fairview	37.0	29.1	27.2	12.2	....
Farmland	26.0	18.1	17.1	14.0	10.8	....
Harrisville	13.4	16.6	6.0	10.0	22.2	15.6	....
Huntsville	15.0	7.1	14.0	16.4	22.0	11.0	15.5	....
Lynn	6.5	4.3	9.2	16.6	28.4	19.5	12.3	8.5	....
Losantville	18.5	10.5	22.4	24.8	20.0	13.6	23.9	8.4	14.0	....
Morristown	30.2	25.5	21.2	18.0	8.0	4.5	19 6	15.2	23.7	12.0	....
Macksville	23.8	15.9	14.7	14.1	13.3	2.4	13.2	8.8	17.2	13.5	6.4	....
New Middletown	17.8	21.0	10.4	5.6	17.8	16.5	4.4	18.5	16.7	26.9	20.5	16.2	....
New Pittsburg	23.4	26.6	16.0	6.0	16.6	22.1	10.0	24.1	22.3	32.5	24.2	20.0	5.6	....
Ridgeville	24.6	19.4	16.9	3.2	9.0	12.0	13.2	17.3	18.1	25.7	16.0	11.8	8.8	8.2	....
Randolph	22.2	17.0	14.5	0.9	13.1	13.1	10.3	15.5	15.7	23.9	17.1	13.2	6.0	5.1	4.1	....
Spartansburg	3.9	10.2	3.9	19.3	31.1	21.0	9.9	12.4	5.9	19.9	27.6	18.6	14.3	19.9	20.8	18.4	....
Union City	15.1	20.8	7.3	10.6	22.8	19.9	4.6	19.8	16.5	28.2	22.6	17.5	5.0	10.6	13.8	11.0	11.2	....
Windsor	28.3	20.0	20.7	20.1	10.5	5.8	19.2	13.3	21.8	9.5	2.5	6.0	23.0	26.1	18.5	18.2	24.6	23.5	...
Winchester	15.7	10.5	8.0	7.4	19.2	9.1	6.5	9.0	9.2	17.4	13.2	6.7	9.5	15.1	8.9	6.5	11.9	10.8	12.7	....
Emmettsville	29.6	24.4	21.4	8.2	4.5	8.0	18.2	18.0	23.1	22.5	12.1	8.5	13.5	12.7	4.7	8.6	25.3	18.3	14.5	13.4	....
New Lisbon	18.6	24.3	10.3	9.6	13.0	17.0	6.8	22 3	19.1	30.7	21.0	19.5	3.5	8.5	12.3	9.5	14.7	3.5	26.5	13.0	12.3	....
Saratoga	18.8	17.5	4.7	4.5	16.0	12.0	5.5	16.0	14.0	24.4	16.0	15.5	2.3	6.0	9.1	4.5	15.0	5.5	23.0	7.0	13.6	5.5	....
Stone Station	20.7	14.5	9.5	4.5	14.0	9.5	10.0	13.5	13.7	21.4	13.5	9.5	7.0	10.5	4.0	3.5	15.9	10.0	16.0	4.0	9.5	10.0	6.5	....
Rural	10.5	9.0	10.0	12.4	24.2	14.1	9.5	6.0	4.2	14.4	18.2	11.9	14.2	19 7	14.1	11.5	9.0	14.1	17.7	5.0	18.6	16.3	12.0	9.0	....

POPULATION OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.

1840, 10,684; 1850, 14,725; 1860, 18,997; 1870, 22,862; 1880, 26,768.

POPULATION OF INDIANA.

1800—4,740. 1810—23,582; increase, 18,342. 1820—146,988; increase, 125,406. 1830—343,028; increase, 196,040. 1840—685,866; increase, 342,838. 1850—988,416; increase, 302,550. 1860—1,350,428; increase, 362,012. 1870—1,680,637; increase, 330,209. 1880—1,978,329; increase, 297,692.

POPULATION OF RANDOLPH COUNTY.

Franklin—1870, 1,537; 1880, 1,649; increase, 112.
Green—1870, 1,034; 1880, 1,140; increase, 106.
Greensfork—1870, 2,043; 1880, 2,127; increase, 84.
Jackson—1870. 1,349; 1880, 1,379; increase, 30.
Monroe—1870, 1,662; 1880, 1,900; increase, 238.
Nettle Creek—1870, 1,459; 1880, 1,469; increase, 10.
Stony Creek—1870, 1,212; 1880, 1,338; increase, 126.
Ward—1870, 1,614; 1880, 1,862; increase, 248.
Washington—1870, 2,051; 1880, 2,339; increase, 288.
Wayne—1870, 1,781; 1880, 1,716; decrease, 65.
Union City—1870, 1,437; 1880, 2,478; increase, 1,041.
West River—1870, 1,612; 1880, 1,747; increase, 185.
White River—1870, 2,613; 1880, 3,288; increase, 675.
Winchester—1870, 1,456; 1880, 1,965; increase, 509.
Total—1870, 22,860; 1880, 26,758; increase, 3,898.
Union City (Ohio side)—792.

POPULATION OF THE TOWNS IN RANDOLPH COUNTY IN 1880.

Union City	2,478	Buena Vista	36
Winchester	1,965	Bartonia	33
Ridgeville	775	South Salem (estimated)	21
Farmland	669
Lynn	239	Emmetsville	40
Spartansburg	209	Pleasant View	35
Morristown	209	New Dayton	25
Huntsville	163	Stone Station	20
Bloomingport	141	Olive Branch	20
Saratoga	136	New Lisbon	20
Windsor	134	Allensville	15
Harrisville	112	Snow Hill	15
Arba	109	Shedville	10
Deerfield	102	Middletown	10
Fairview	100	Castle (P. O.)	..
New Pittsburg	80	Neff (P. O.)	..
Maxville	62	Fallen Timber (P. O.)	..
Randolph	54
Rural	37	Total	8,103
Unionsport	37

POPULATION—1880.

Townships.	Towns.	Total.
Green	100	1,140
Franklin	775	1,649
Greensfork	318	2,127
Jackson	80	1,379
Monroe	878	1,900
Nettle Creek	52	1,469
Stoney Creek	134	1,338
Ward	292	1,862
Washington	417	2,339
Wayne	2,654	4,370
White River	2,100	5,388
West River	163	1,797
Total		26,758
Total—1870		22,868
Increase		3,890

AREA, ETC.

TOWNS.	Square Miles.	Acres.	Population Square Mile.	One Person to an Acre.
Franklin	24	15,360	47.5	13.5
Green	33¼	21,600	33.8	19
Greensfork	48¼	30,040	43.85	14
Jackson	30	19,200	46	14
Monroe	25½	16,200	75	8.5
Nettle Creek	32⅜	20,720	45.3	14
Stony Creek	28½	18,000	47.6	13.4
Ward	36	23,040	51.7	12.3
Washington	44	28,260	53.16	12
Wayne	45	28,800	97.1	6.6
West River	40	25,600	44.9	14.25
White River	74	47,360	72.8	8.79

AGES.

TOWNS.	Over 70.	Total Ages.	Average Age.	One to so many.
Green	18	1,354	75.6	63.3
Franklin	11	857	77.9	150
Greensfork	44	3,308	75.2	48.3
Jackson	20	1,531	76.5	69
Monroe	21	1,587	75.5	95
Nettle Creek	24	1,798	75.0	69
Stony Creek	28	2,138	76.4	47.8
Union City	22	1,595	72.5	112.6
Ward	38	2,835	74.6	49
Washington	45	3,463	77	52
Wayne	21	1,546	73.6	90
White River	46	3,434	74.7	77
Winchester	18	1,375	74.16	109
West River	24	1,785	74.4	79
Total	380	28,606	75.27	70.5

Below average of population, seven.
Above average of population, seven.
Highest average to population, Stony Creek.
Lowest average to population, Union City.
Below average age, seven.
Above average age, seven.
Highest average age, Franklin.
Lowest average age, Union City.

ANECDOTES.

O. P. MORTON—WAR.

In August, 1862, when the regiments must be sent forward, and yet there was no money to pay their bounty, Gov. Morton first thought of appealing to the soldiers to go. He tried it with one regiment. "Yes," said they, "because you ask it, but for no other reason."

He quit that, and went to the banks. The first said, sharply, "None to spare."

Next was Stoughton Fletcher:

"What do you want?"

"Money."

"Get out; got none," growled Fletcher.

"But I must have it."

"How much?"

"Fifty thousand dollars."

"What security?"

"None but my individual name."

"Bah!" roared he; "what have you to put it in?"

"Nothing."

Fletcher picked up an old basket and piled into it $50,000 in bank notes.

"There; give me a memorandum. Let me hear that the rebels are well licked."

Morton got $50,000 at Fletcher & Sharpe's, and $50,000 at Harrison's.

Next day was Sunday. Monday, he tried again, and with good success.

Alfred Harrison went to Cincinnati and got $250,000 of Mark E. Reeves, going on Monday and returning on Tuesday.

Thus he obtained $550,000 in three days—enough to pay seventeen regiments.

But now the money had all to be raised again to pay it back. It was in vain to appeal to the Legislature; they were lukewarm or hostile; something else must be done. He determined to appeal to the people.

The response was prompt. Marion County gave $20,000; Wabash, $10,000; Hendricks, $10,000; Decatur, $6,000; Henry, $6,000; Tippecanoe, $5,000; Delaware, $5,000; Fayette, $5,000. Twenty citizens of Richmond loaned $20,000; President McK., Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, $10,000; the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad itself, $10,000. And so on till there lacked but $250,000. But whence was that to come?

He went to Washington. Lincoln said, "I would, but I can't; go and see Chase."

Chase said, "No, we can't. Do what you can, and let the rest go."

Then to Stanton. Stanton was the man for a pinch. Morton told him all, and what Lincoln said and Chase said. Stanton raised himself to his full height: "You must have the money, and you shall; and I will read them the law for it;" and, pulling down a law book from the shelf, cried, "There's the law; fits you to a T; for your State is threatened with rebellion." (Law of 1861, to arm and equip men in a State threatened with rebellion.)

He drew his warrant for $250,000, appointed Gov. Morton his disbursing agent. The "War Governor" went to the treasury, got his pile, and went home triumphant.

It was six weeks after the loan before the money was returned to the banks, but they charged no interest.

These sums were afterward repaid by State authority, and Gov. Morton's heroic rashness was grandly vindicated!

INDIANA—A SKETCH—O. H. SMITH.

Indiana was born in 1816, with 65,000 people within her borders not very many years ago. A few counties only were organized. The whole middle, northern and northwestern portions were an unbroken wilderness and held by the Indians. Well do I remember when there were but two families settled west of the Whitewater—one at Flat Rock, above Rushville; and one on Brandywine, near Greenfield.

When I first saw the spot where Indianapolis stands, the whole region east to the Whitewater and west to Wabash was woods—woods—nothing but woods. No roads, no bridges, no farms, no houses, no fields, no crops, no orchards, no barns, no harvests.

Years afterward, the courts were held in log cabins, and the jury sat under trees. I was Prosecutor at the Indian murder trials at Pendleton. The court was held in a double log cabin. The Grand Jury sat on a log in the woods, and the foreman signed the bills on his knee. Not a juror had shoes on; all wore moccasins; all were belted round the waist, and carried side knives. Travel was by horse, or foot, or canoe, and the pack-horse was the grand medium of commerce.

Many a time have I crossed the swollen stream, swimming my horse and paddling the canoe by his side. I stood, but as yesterday, on the site of Indianapolis, when scarcely a stick was amiss. I passed through the wilds of Marion on my pony when the bear, the wolf, the deer, were frightened before my steps, and wildly bounded to their secret lairs.

I remember when the semi-monthly ox-wagon of John Hager carried all that came to Indianapolis, and was the only link that bound that infant metropolis to outside civilization.

Behold! how all things stand changed as by a magic wand, as they lie bright and beautiful before our astonished gaze of to-day!

[Written by O. H. S. many years ago, and much more wonderful to-day (1882) as to amazing extent of substantial progress of the commonwealth, the West, and the whole country!]

"A TIGHT FIT"—O. H. SMITH.

In early times there lived in Indiana George Boone, a descendant of Daniel Boone, nearly seven feet high, large-boned and heavy-muscled, and such feet—thick, long, broad, beyond anything ever seen or known before. George was a State Senator, and while Senator he used to tell this tale with great gusto, as follows:

"At eighteen years old I took a fancy to go sparking. It was late in the fall, but not cold enough to wear shoes. Sunday evening came. I dressed in my butternut best, six months old, pantaloons not far below my knees, coat tight as an eel-skin on a hoop-pole. I went barefooted, wading the creeks and bottoms till I got to where my dulcinea lived. They were at supper, with mush and milk and plenty of it. The old lady handed me a large bowl. I reached, but struck the big milk pitcher, and over went the milk upon the table. Sally went roaring into the other room. It was all over with me and I saw no more of Sally. The clock struck 10. The old lady said: 'Won't you wash your feet and go to bed?' 'Yes, ma'am.' 'Well, here is an iron pot.' I took it, but could get my feet in only by crowding them in sideways. I got them in, but they began to swell tighter and tighter till they hurt me so that the sweat rolled off my chin. The clock struck 11. 'Mr. Boone, are you not done washing your feet?' 'What did this pot cost?' 'A dollar.' 'Here is your dollar, bring me the ax.' I took the ax, broke the pot, opened the door, and 'put' for home, and have never seen the old lady since. I met Sally at a corn-husking some years later, and she roared out laughing."

As Senator and in business life this "big-footed Hoosier" was a man among men.

"Boldly doing, bravely hewing
Through the world his way."

ADVICE—O. H. SMITH.

Touch not the bowl, it is only evil and leads to ruin; it is not needful, but harmful and deadly. I am now sixty-two years old, and have trod the soil of Indiana for near forty years. I have borne the rough exposure of a new country and a harsh and changeful climate. I have swam rivers, I have slept in the woods, I have fasted long. I have borne all, and for forty years have not tasted liquor. I have stood firm in high life and before the chiefs in State and Nation, and I am hale and hearty. I scarcely know what sickness is. Take my advice, for I think it safe to follow.

REMINISCENCES—O. H. SMITH.

When I came to the State, March, 1817, not a railroad was in the United States, nor a canal west of the Alleghany Mountains (east of them, neither). The telegraph was not; fire was struck by a flint and steel; not a foot of turnpikes in the State; plank roads had not been heard of; girdled trees covered the fields; the shovel-plow the only cultivator; no roads west of the Whitewater (nor north of it); not a bridge in the State; traveling all on horseback or on foot, the husband in front with a child or two in his lap, the wife behind with others in hers; not a carriage nor a buggy in the State. Mr. Lovejoy brought an open buggy from New England to Connersville; I borrowed it to ride to Wayne County, but gave it up, fearing the people would think me too proud and "stuck up," and that they would not vote for me for Congress. The finest farms near Connersville, with all improvements, were worth $5 to $10 per acre. The finest stall-fed beef was $1.25 per hundred; corn, 10 cents; wheat, 12½ cents; wood, $1 a cord delivered. The first year my fees fell short of $200. When they reached $300, I felt as rich as Crœsus. My debts were paid. I had money in my pocket and I was "happy."

TRAVELING THE CIRCUIT—O. H. SMITH.

We were bound for Fort Wayne. We reached Winchester, put up at Paul W. Way's, and, in the morning, set out on our wilderness journey. There were two ways—the "Godfroy Farm" and the "Quaker Trace." Mr. Rariden chose the latter. By noon we had reached the Wabash—a big one-half day's ride, thirty miles or more. "Shall we tie or turn loose," said I. "You could not drive Old Gray from me," said Mr. Rariden, and Judge Eggleston: "My Indian pony will never leave me." I made no promise for my Gray Fox. We turned them loose. Old Gray stuck up his ears and off he galloped, and off went the pacing pony. My Fox lingered, but soon he went also. A week afterward they were brought to us at Winchester on our return. They had been taken up at Fort Defiance, Ohio. Thompson lived on Townsend's Prairie ten miles away. We hung our saddles and bridles on the trees, shouldered saddle-bags and footed it through, completely fagged. Just as we got there a fearful storm broke. All night long down poured the rain, but what cared we? Corn-dodgers, boiled squirrels and sassafras tea, and then bear-skins on the floor, and sleep as sweet as mortal ever knew!

Our saddles were brought next morning. We got ponies from the landlord and hurried on in time for court.

Fort Wayne had then about 200 people and Allen County fifty votes. Court was held and adjourned, and we went to an Indian horse-race at Chief Richardsville's, up the St. Mary's River. We returned to Winchester on our borrowed ponies, took our own horses, and were in time for court at Centerville.

JOHN CONNER, CONNERSVILLE—O. H. SMITH.

John Conner was one of nature's noblemen. He had been taken by the Shawnees when a lad, and raised among them. When dressed and painted, it was hard to tell him from a savage. Once he came to Andersontown, then a lodge of the Chief Anderson. Conner pretended to be a Shawnee and a representative of Tecumseh. He took his seat on a log just in sight and waited, smoking his pipe. I will let him tell the rest: "Soon Chief Anderson came to me. I rose; we exchanged pipes, without a word. He pointed to a bear-skin. I sat down with my back to the chief. Soon I saw an Indian, Zileoway, who knew me well, eyeing me. I tried to evade him, but he bawled out, 'You great Shawnee—you John Conner.' The whole camp burst into a roar. Chief Anderson ran up to me, 'You great representative of Tecumseh,' with a loud laugh."

William Conner, brother to John Conner, also taken by the Indians, knew many Indian languages, and often acted as interpreter at Indian treaties. He was with Gen. Harrison at Fort Meigs, marched up the Maumee and was at the battle of the Thames, and first recognized the dead Tecumseh on the field after the fight. When asked, "Who killed Tecumseh?" he always said: "Gen. Harrison or Col. Johnson, the commanders—one or the other—no one can tell which."

ACCIDENTS—"BY FLOOD AND FIELD"—O. H. SMITH.

I was going to Pendleton to attend the "Indian murder" trials. On Thursday, I mounted "Gray Fox." The only way was through Indianapolis, a small village in the woods. I stayed at Indianapolis over night, and passed up Falls Creek, east side. The west side was the main track, but the water was high and muddy, and I thought the east side the safest without crossing. There were no bridges in those days. The day was dark and drizzling. My path ended ten miles from Indianapolis. Turning the head of "Gray Fox" west, the creek, muddy, sullen and deep, was soon in sight. Fox plunged in and swam the main channel beautifully, but the moment he struck the overflowed bottom, he began to sink and plunge. The water was about four feet deep; the girth broke; I seized the stirrup leather with one hand and Fox's long mane with the other. He dragged me through water and mud to the shore. My hat was gone, but what mattered that, so I got to court. Fox bounded on like a reindeer, and before night I was seated with the other lawyers round a huge log-fire at Long's Hotel.

ANECDOTE—BY JONAS VOTAW.

In the early days of Jay County, Ind., a Dutchman who lived north of Portland had got some new shoes, and his wife put them on to go some three miles through the woods to a neighbor's. She did not return, and her husband thought her lost. They started with torches to hunt her up after dark. They found her track by the print of the new shoes—"Yaw, dat is my Phrona; I know te new shoes." By and by the track showed a bare foot.

"Oh, Phrona!" cried he, "you haf lost my new shoes!" and as they tracked the bare feet through the mud, he kept wailing, "Oh, Phrona, Phrona! My new shoes are lost! my new shoes are lost!"

After awhile, they got to the house, and there she was, safe and sound.

The poor man rushed up to her, exclaiming, "Oh, Phrona! what haf you tone with my new shoes?"

They were too large and heavy, and she had taken them off and carried them in her hand; and she showed him his new shoes, and he was happy.

ANECDOTES—OLIVER H. SMITH.

(NOTE.—The travel was to Fort Wayne, and that whole region had once been Randolph.)

I had not yet visited Allen County, some scores of miles north of Randolph. There was nothing but Indian paths through the woods.

Early in May, I turned my pony's head north for Fort Wayne. The streams were high, and the land under water for miles. I had a small Indian pony, a good swimmer, a fine pacer and a splendid traveler.

I left the Mississinewa, and, the same day, reached Godfroy's Farm. The chief was at Fort Wayne. A squaw came out. She could not speak English, but pointed to Fort Wayne. I pointed to the stable, to my horse, to my mouth, and then laid my head on my hands, shut my eyes and began to snore. She seized the bridle. I dismounted. She fed the pony. Night came. Supper was had—corn bread, venison and sassafras tea. A bear-skin was spread on the floor for a bed, and some tall sleeping occurred.

In the morning, an Indian came along who could talk a little English, and I hired him for $2 a day to guide me over the Salamonie and the Wabash. We mounted, and off we started. He galloped away, and was soon out of sight. I found him, however, at the Salamonie.

The ponies swam the flood finely, and away for the Wabash. I had no food and no weapon.

The moment we reached the river, the Indian peeled some hickory bark, and spanceled (tied) the legs of the horses. I sat on the bank. He plunged into the woods, and, in an hour, came back, bringing the bark of a hickory tree twelve feet long and three feet wide. He made a canoe. I got in at one end, put my saddle, etc., in the other, seized the paddle and was soon across the Wabash. It was a "close fit," for the water came within an inch of the top of the canoe.

The Indian and the ponies swam the river.

And now the Indian had kept his promise. He held up two fingers. I paid him $2, and he went to the south and I to the north.

I came to a lake, and, fearing to try it, I turned to the top of an old beech, tied my pony to a limber tree and lay down, hungry and tired.

The wolves soon began to howl, and I went to sleep by the sound of their music. I slept soundly, and the next day, at the Fort Wayne Hotel, I did justice to the dinner, for I had fasted since early breakfast at Godfroy's farm the day before.

I made a speech and went home, and in the whole county of Allen I got just ten votes to pay me for my fearful trip!

HOOSIER POETRY.

(BY J. H. FINLEY, ESQ.—FROM O. H. SMITH'S REMINISCENCES.)

"I'm told, in riding somewhere West,
A stranger found a Hoosier's nest;
In other words, a small pole cabin,
Just large enough to put 'Queen Mab' in.

"Its situation, low but airy,
Was on the border of a prairie;
And, fearing he might get benighted,
'He hailed the house,' and then alighted!

"The Hoosier met him at the door—
Their salutations soon were o'er—
He took the stranger's horse aside,
And to a sturdy sapling tied!
Then, having stripped the saddle off,
He fed him in a sugar-trough.

"The stranger stooped to enter in,
The entrance closing with a pin;
And showed forthwith a strong desire
To seat him by the log-heap fire,
Where half a dozen Hoosieroons
Were busy with their pewter spoons!

"With mush and milk, and dirty faces,
They seemed inclined to keep their places;
But Madam, eager to display
Her rough, but undisputed sway—
Her offspring to the ladder led,
And cuffed her young ones off to bed!
Invited shortly to partake
Of venison, milk and Johnny cake,

"The stranger made a sumptuous meal,
And glances round the room did steal!
One side was lined with divers garments;
The other spread with 'skins of varmints.'
Dried pumpkins overhead were strung,
And venison hams in plenty hung;
Two rifles placed above the door—
Three dogs lay stretched along the floor.

"In short, the domicile was rife,
With specimens of Hoosier life;
The host, who centered his affections
On game, and range, and quarter sections,
Discoursed his weary guest for hours,
Till somnus' all-composing powers
Of sublunary care bereft 'em,
As fast asleep he slily left 'em.

"And then—but how the story ended
It matters not. What I intended
Is to apply the Scottish poet,
That all who read may surely know it:
'That burly chiels and clever hizzies,
Are bred in sic a land as this is.'"

(We insert some biographies of non-residents for obvious reasons.)

EDWARD EDGER, SR.

Edward Edger, Sr., father of the present Edward Edger, was born in Scotland about 1750, and died in 1833.

He brought eight children to America, and one was born in America.

He never used spectacles, either to read or to write. He never lost a tooth, never was sick a day, and never paid a dollar's doctor bill.

The Sabbath before he died, he read in the Bible all day.

Some thirteen years after his death, his remains were removed, and his heart was found to have become ossified.

He was a farmer by vocation. He came to America in 1807; removed to Virginia and lived one year; went to Kentucky and resided several years, and finally settled at Castine, Darke Co., Ohio, where he died and was buried.

Of his children, one son and one daughter are still living. The surviving son is Edward Edger, who resides at Winchester, Randolph Co., Ind., an old man, and a long time resident of the county.

REMINISCENCE—REBECCA JULIAN, WAYNE COUNTY.

Read Old Settlers' meeting, June, 1863.

(Date of commencement, before 1811. She lived in Wayne County. Wayne County was settled in 1805; Randolph, in 1814; battle of Tippecanoe, 1811.)

The country was an entire wilderness, except here and there a cabin, with (perhaps not) a small family. We were in fine spirits till the battle of Tippecanoe (1811). After that, we lived in constant fear, and passed many sleepless nights. At length, some soldiers were sent to our fort (——) for our protection. My husband served as a volunteer three months, but was not called from the fort.

The Indians harmed none who were known to be peaceable. They killed a young man, Shortridge, but he had on the dress of another who had threatened the Indians, and it is thought they mistook him for that other.

In the spring following, Charles Morgan and his two half-brothers were killed at their sugar camp and scalped, and one of them thrown into the fire. This took place about six miles from us. These dangers gave us trouble for two or three years, and drove us from home; but peace came, and we returned with glad hearts.

To make homes in the heavy timber was hard work, but the settlers were hearty and strong, and in good spirits, and took to their work with a will. The men cleared the ground and rolled the logs, and built the dwellings and the barns and the fences, and the women often went to help cook, and we had first-rate times. Many modern diseases we had never heard of—dyspepsia, neuralgia, etc., etc. It was not fashionable then to be weakly and puny and helpless. We would take our spinning-wheels and walk two or three miles to a spinning-frolic, and, after supper, we would take the wheels and walk home again, and feel good over it. We took no special pride in having soft, lily-white hands. Our hands were made for use, and we needed them, and we used them. We did not keep them simply to be looked at.

MICAJAH MORGAN, WAYNE COUNTY, IND.

Micajah Morgan was born in 1795, in North Carolina; his wife, in 1800. He died in 1860. His wife is living yet, with her son, Dr. R. H. Morgan, Spartansburg, Randolph Co., Ind.

Mr. Morgan came to Richmond in 1808, and to the old Morgan place, south of Arba, in 1818. He was an upright, honest Christian man, of the Quaker faith.

It is said of him that he would sell corn only to his poor neighbors, and at a moderate price—say 25 cents. Though corn went up to $1, he still sold for his price, and only a grist at a time, that his poor neighbors might have the advantage of his generosity.

He had eleven children, seven now living. Six of the seven are boys, all of whom were in the Union army. None were killed nor died in service; only one was wounded, and all the six are living now.

His sons in the army were:

Thomas, Twelfth Indiana, scout in Kentucky; Sergeant Fifth Indiana Cavalry; was in Eastern Army, and in many battles; discharged at close of war; served about four years; enlisted at Richmond in 1861; mustered out 1865; now a merchant in Columbus, Ind.; one son, a lawyer, in Columbus, Ind.; three daughters, married, one in Grant County, two at Columbus, Ind.

Charles, Forty-fifth Indiana, captured near Jackson, Miss.; lay in a dungeon sixty days at Jackson, nearly dying of starvation; an old acquaintance, who had gone South, and was Quartermaster in the rebel army, recognized him, and got him released from the dungeon; he was kept a prisoner six months, and set free; he was with Banks up Red River, with Butler at New Orleans, and elsewhere; he served to the end, mustering in and out at Indianapolis; he resides in Wells County, Ind.; is a farmer, and has five children.

Robert H. (account under the head of "Physicians").

George (account under Greensfork Township).

William, Seventy-fifth Indiana, sapper and miner; wounded and disabled; detailed into the Invalid Corps; discharged at the close of the war; lives in Randolph County; is a farmer, and has six children.

Clarkson, Fifty-seventh Indiana; captured near Perryville; prisoner at Danville, Va.; discharged; is a blacksmith at Arba, and has two children.

W. A. PEELLE, RICHMOND, WAYNE COUNTY.

W. A. Peelle was born in North Carolina in 1820; studied law at Winchester, and admitted to the bar in 1840; resided at Marion 1845; settled at Winchester in 1846; became Prosecuting Attorney in 1848; was elected Judge in 1854, and Secretary of State for Indiana in 1860, having been defeated in 1858, and again in 1862.

He resumed the practice of law at Centerville in 1864, and that city has been his residence ever since that time until lately, residing now at Richmond.

He was made Judge of the Criminal Court in 1867; was a member of the Legislature for Wayne County, in 1867.

Judge Peelle was hotly engaged in the fierce contest that was waged in Wayne County over the removal of their county seat from Centerville to Richmond. He carried on the fight with an energy and desperation worthy of success, but fate was against him and he had to yield.

His life has been an active one in politics and in the business of his profession. He was a Whig, and is a Republican.

His early life was characteristic. He studied by the log fire of his log-cabin home, or by a blaze made of hickory bark; taught school at sixteen, and onward till 1842, some seven years; began to study law in 1839, and was admitted to practice in 1845.

His father came to Indiana in 1820, when William A. was one year old.

After his admission to the bar, he spent some time at Marion, Ind., but he soon returned and settled at Winchester.

At Centerville, he purchased the residence of Hon. O. P. Morton, but, when the county seat was removed, there was nothing left but to get away.

He is a good lawyer and an energetic worker, not polished in speech nor manner, but clear, plain and forcible, and sometimes fiery in his surpassing enthusiasm.

Judge Peelle has worthily won the reputation he so gallantly bears.

NANCY (RICHARDS) STOCKDALE, DARKE COUNTY, OHIO.

Nancy (Richards) Stockdale was born in Maryland in 1790; married, in 1808, to Eli Stockdale, born in 1788, died 1845.

They came to Greensfork, Randolph County, in 1835, forty-seven years ago. Her husband died in Greensfork.

In 1855, she moved to Darke County, Ohio, where she still resides.

Her husband was a soldier in the war of 1812 for fifteen months, and she now draws a pension of $8 per month on his account.

The old lady is quite strong and healthy. She has been hard of hearing for twenty-five years, but her mind is clear and bright. She rode to town in a spring wagon, into which she climbed herself, with but slight help.

She has had thirteen children, eight living.

David, farmer, north of Spartansburg, Ind.

Henry, money-lender, Union City, Ohio.

Larkin, farmer, Hillgrove, Ohio (lives with him).

Edward, farmer, near Spartansburg, Ind.

Richard, farmer, near Spartansburg, Ind.

Jane (Morrow), California; husband a Presbyterian clergyman.

Susanna (Arnigosch), farmer, Darke County, Ohio.

Mary (Caskey), Union City, Ohio.

It is truly wonderful to the present generation what hardships and privations these heroic souls, remnants of a by-gone age, have endured in their time. The life of this aged grandmother dates to the year after the Presidential inauguration of Gen. Washington, and her life measures almost the whole space of our constitutional existence as a nation. When she first opened her eyes upon the light, we were an infant republic, despised by the old nations, hardly daring to believe in its own future, striving feebly to carve out an unknown destiny, now a strong and mighty people of fifty millions of souls. Then, a narrow string of settlements scattered along the Atlantic coast; but now, lo! the whole boundless stretch of continent from ocean to ocean is ours!

She is old enough to have seen all the Presidents, since she was a lass in her tenth year when Washington died. Her life has witnesed the entire growth of the gigantic West. Only a few thousand persons were in the great valley of the Mississippi at the date of her birth. Cincinnati, St. Louis, New Orleans, Detroit, were but insignificant villages. Chicago, Cleveland, Milwaukee, had not been even imagined. Chicago was not begun till she had passed her third of a century.

What will the next ninety years show to the dwellers in this land, in the year of grace 1982?

G. CLARKSON TUCKER, SWEETSER, IND.

G. Clarkson Tucker, son of Rev. E. Tucker, was born in Knox County, Ohio, in 1846; moved to Randolph County, Ind., in 1846; Nora, Ill., 1854; Liber, Ind., 1859; volunteered in the One Hundredth Indiana, Company H, September, 1862; first with Grant, then with Sherman. The regiment marched with Grant, in the fall of 1862, to Central Mississippi, and back to Holly Springs after the capture of the supplies there by Van Dorn; went down near Vicksburg in the spring of 1863; to Jackson in pursuit of Jonhston; across Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia to Chattanooga; into East Tennessee after Longstreet, and back, fall and winter of 1863; through Georgia with Sherman's conquering columns to Atlanta and the sea; from Savannah to Raleigh, Richmond and Washington; thus accomplishing a march of I know not how many thousands of miles, east, south, north, through Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, District of Columbia. They were in all the battles fought by the army of which they were a part, bearing, with cheerful ardor and unflinching courage, all the hardships and sufferings which fell to their lot, leaving their dead behind at every step, but pressing onward, ever onward, to the goal of victory. The regiment was never captured, and never driven back in battle. Always forward, right forward, was its unvarying motto. It had to retrace its steps, indeed, from Central Mississippi, but that was the fault of the troops who were sent (but who failed) to defend the supplies gathered for their use.

He was but sixteen years of age, a mere lad, when he enlisted, but, without a murmur and without a fear, with steadfast heart and determined will, with his gallant comrades, he traversed the length and breadth of the land, resolved never to seek his childhood home again until the work of crushing the rebellion was an accomplished fact. And he achieved his purpose. The One Hundredth Indiana was a part of the mighty host, veteran and stalwart, bronzed with toil and worn with hardships, but resolute and determined as ever, that marched in solid phalanx through the streets of Washington on that wondrous gala day, in grand review, under the kindly, kindling eye of the commanding Generals, especially of that one who, for long years, had been their especial leader, trusted, tried, wellnigh idolized.

The work of war was done. The reign of peace had come, and the citizen-soldiers came home to be soldier-citizens.

And grandly did that mighty host undergo that transformation. A single month after the last regiment was discharged, a stranger traversing our country would never have dreamed that, within a brief period, the land had been alive with soldiers and filled with marching armies.

The subject of this sketch went forth a mere boy in years, but firm in purpose, steady of habit and faithful to principle. He returned to his home as he went out, only more so—more firm, more resolute, more settled in the great principles of truth and liberty, for the defense of which he offered himself to the service of his country.

And thousands upon thousands of others did the same. The baptism of war through which they passed was to them a holy, sacred, purifying flood, which brought them into a new and glorious life for God and their fellow-men.

He now resides at McGrawsville, Miami Co., Ind., between Marion and Logansport, on the Pan Handle Railroad.

He has resided, since arriving at manhood, at Kingston, Mo., Nora and Lena, Ill., Raymond and Midway, Miss., and Union City, Sweetzer and McGrawsville, Ind.

He has been a teacher, a farmer and a carpenter, and he now owns and runs a steam saw-mill at McGrawsville.

He is a Congregationalist and a Republican.

He has been twice married. His first wife was Mary Pomroy, of Nora, Ill., and the second was Emma Teagle, of Grant County, Ind. He has had three children, all of whom are living.

He has the reputation of unusual strength. Stories pass from lip to lip among his acquaintances of the remarkable feats he has performed in this respect.

G. C. Tucker, on the 5th day of June, 1865, was hurt in the saw-mill, in which he had been working for several years, by accidentally having his foot thrown against the saw in motion. The limb had to be amputated. Blood-poisoning (pyemia) set in, and in about ten days, June 15, 1865, at about 2 P. M., he departed this life, with a well-grounded hope of a part in the first resurrection; and his mortal remains were on the next day deposited, in the presence of weeping family and sympathizing friends, in the cemetery at Marion, Ind.

REUNIONS, SURPRISES, WEDDINGS, ETC.

In the olden pioneer times, weddings were often a very simple thing. Frequently they were celebrated with no display or ado. At one occasion of the sort within the knowledge of the writer, the wedding feast consisted of a bountiful supply of roasted potatoes, scraped from the ashes and eaten, as the custom was, with salt.

But in these later times, occasions of festivities have become very elaborate and expansive affairs. And, as each age produces something new, so, in these days, we have re-unions, surprises, golden, silver, diamond, etc., weddings. And especially the last few years have been fruitful in surpises. The times selected are chiefly some anniversary of birth, marriage, etc. Many have been held in the county, some very large, with several hundred in attendance. It would not be easy to state the method employed, since no two are alike. Often one of the heads of the family is taken into the secret. Sometimes, however, both are kept entirely in the dark until the whole thing bursts suddenly upon their astonished vision. The party (one or more) to be surprised is sometimes enticed from home to give a clear field for the denouement of the plot.

Particulars cannot well be given. Suffice it to say, the occasions are sources of much labor, considerable expense and more or less astonishment. But the pleasure afforded to all concerned is reckoned to be an abundant recompense for all the outlay incurred, of whatever kind.

WEDDINGS.

Within a few years past, the various sorts of wedding anniversaries, golden, silver, etc., have been celebrated by a supper and the bestowal of more or less costly presents.

The anniversary of the wedding of John and Jane Fisher, who had been married sixty years, was celebrated two or three years ago with a large assemblage of relatives and much rejoicing. The old patriarch has lately been called from earthly labor and suffering to heavenly peace and rest And so, at the present writing, has the bereaved widow, Jane Fisher, dying nearly a year after her husband.

Weddings themselves have, for a short time past, been made the occasion, among well-to-do people, of costly, not to say valuable gifts. Sometimes a mere list of the presents bestowed fills half a column in the newspaper publishing a notice of the nuptial festivities.

It would seem a pity that such costly practices could not be discouraged and checked. Were none but the wealthy to adopt the custom, it might not (though useless, even with them) be so harmful. But in this country, no one likes to be behind, and the general adoption of so needless, not to say foolish, a custom, will lead many into costly outlays who can ill bear the expense.

CHAPTER XX.

MILITARY.

REVOLUTION—INDIAN WARS—WIDOWS, PENSIONS, ETC.—MILITIA, 1832—MEXICAN WAR—WAR OF 1861—GENERAL RELIEF, BOUNTIES, ETC.—ACCOUNT OF REGIMENTS, BATTLES, PRISONS, OFFICERS, SOLDIERS, DEATHS, BURIALS, RELIGION, DECORATION DAY, RE-UNIONS, ETC.—REMINISCENCES, BIOGRAPHY—SANITARY OPERATIONS.

REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

RANDOLPH had small connection with the war of Independence. A few old soldiers came to these wilds to spend the tranquil evening of their days amid the Western forests. One Revolutionary veteran lies buried in Fairview Cemetery, dying at the age of ninety years, long, long ago, though the date of his death is not stated.

Another was laid to rest in Mt. Zion Graveyard, in White River Township, not far from the former residence of William Kennedy, himself a pioneer of that region, perhaps the earliest to settle east of Winchester. He is stated to have been one hundred and five years one month and fifteen days old, dying February 15, 1851, not, indeed, of weakness and old age, but, as will be presently seen, by a fatal accident, bringing his life to a premature close.

The ancient veteran must have been more than twenty-nine years old at the first rattling of musketry at Lexington, and nearly forty years of age during the closing hours of the great struggle for independence. And he lived on through toil and trouble till he reached his one hundred and sixth year. How much longer the ancient soldier might have dwelt among men cannot now be told. His life was brought to an untimely end by an unlooked-for casualty. His bodily health and strength had been good, and he had not ceased to perform active labor on the farm. While upon a load of oats which was being driven to the barn, after he had loaded the sheaves as they were pitched by a boy from the shock, in the month of August, 1850, as the wagon drew up alongside the stable where the grain was to be deposited, he was somehow jostled from the load, and, being blind, he could not see to shield himself. Falling upon the end of a log projecting from the corner of the stable, his ribs were broken, and internal injuries were received. Yet even this did not suffice to kill the old veteran, but he clung to life still, lingering on from August, 1850, till February, 1851, and only dying at the latter date.

We know not much of his history. It would have been a thing of interest to trace, had the thing been possible, his pathway backward into the mists of departed years, and discover the momentous events during a life of so unusual duration, and his own connection therewith.

He was a child when Gen. Washington, himself a mere youth, accomplished his perilous journey, at a risk of life several times repeated, through the Virginia mountains to the valley of the Ohio, to give warning to the French that the English intended not to allow them an undisturbed occupation of that wondrous stretch of country in the Mississippi Valley, and bearing back the answer which hurled French defiance against English threats of warning. And when that war closed, when the Gallic power yielded the contest and gave the English free scope through that whole vast continental territory, that aged soldier, who died a violent accidental death in the latter half of the nineteenth century, was, though young, yet a man in stature and in strength, able to hew through the busy world his stubborn way, either in the conflicts of rugged war, or in the hardy labors of the workshop or the farm. He was a lad of nine years when the world was startled by the earthquake which tumbled the city of Lisbon to ruins, and whelmed thousands of her terrified people fathoms deep beneath the wrathful billows of the Atlantic.

When the young republic of the West shouted rejoicing acclamations for the elevation of the venerated Washington to the chief magistracy of the nation he had saved, our soldier had advanced into the forty-fourth year of his earthly existence. He witnessed the accession of thirteen Presidents, five of whom performed a double service.

There were doubtless others, perhaps many of them, who dropped in one by one, accompanying, in their old age, or following their sons or their daughters from the worn-out lands east of the Alleghanies, into the Western Paradise, the grander Canaan of the "New Era."

This aged patriarch was almost threescore years and ten when the very earliest emigrant planted his stake in the soil of Randolph, and he hoped, doubtless, when he changed his domicile from the land of the rising to that of the setting sun, simply to behold with his failing eyesight the paradise of the poor and the landless, and to thank God, as he closed his aged eyes, for the prospect that his posterity would enjoy so goodly a land through the ages to come.

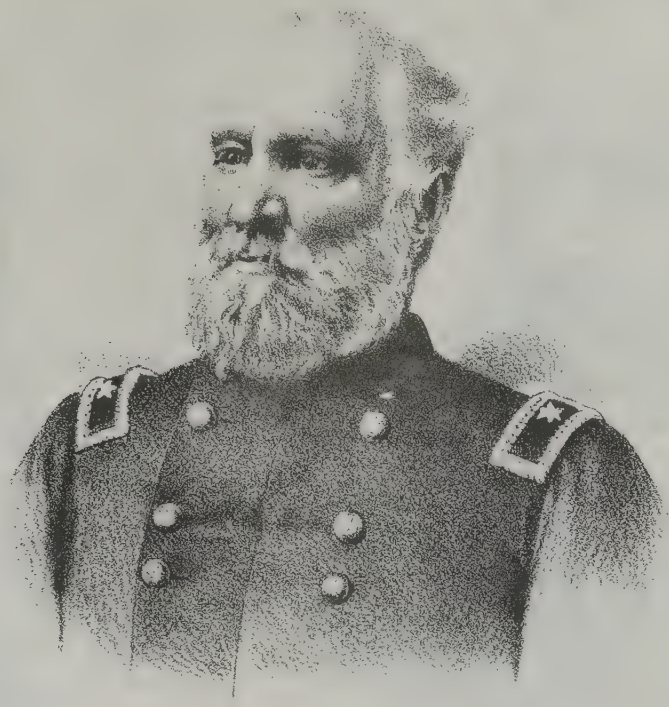
But lo! through more than a generation he was spared to witness with his own vision the transformation which began in 1814 and progressed in a rapidly increasing ratio to his latest day.

But he died at last, and was buried; and all of him that was mortal rests in peace in the sacred soil of Randolph.

The one who was buried in the cemetery at Fairview was the father of Antony McKinney, who was himself a pioneer of Green Township, and a soldier in the war of 1812.

Meshach Lewallyn, the earliest emigrant to settle in Franklin, was an old man when first he plunged into the dark forests on the banks of the Mississinewa.

James Massey, too, who was among the very first on the same river above what long afterward came to be the bustling town of Deerfield, was an old man.



Silas Colgrove

GEN. SILAS COLGROVE.

Among the many prominent citizens of this county, few, if any, are entitled to more recognition and popular gratitude than he of whom we write. As a pioneer, as an attorney and as a soldier, he occupies a place that is inseparably a part of the history of Randolph County, and in each of these positions has rendered distinguished services. He is a native of Steuben County, N. Y., where he was born on the 24th of May, 1816. His educational advantages in youth were limited, being only such as the common schools of early days afforded. But the meager instructions there received were the groundwork for a rich and varied store of useful knowledge, acquired by patient study at leisure times, and by his energy and diligence, he has risen to the first rank in his profession. He is one of a family of eighteen children, of whom all but one grew to maturity and were married, and fifteen are still living. Five reside in New York, three in Ohio, and others in Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota and California, respectively. In 1837, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca P. Stone, in New York, and in the fall of the same year left home with his bride for the West. He was accompanied as far as Winchester, Ind., by some relatives, who were en route to Illinois, but at this point he took leave of them, having decided to locate here. He began the study of law at his home in New York, completing his course of preparation in the office of Zachariah Puckett, one of the early attorneys of Winchester. He was admitted to the bar of Randolph County in 1839, and has been one of its foremost members in the years that have followed. In April, 1839, he was elected Justice of the Peace, serving five years in this capacity. In 1852, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney for the district composed of the counties of Randolph, Henry, Wayne, Jay, Blackford, Grant and Delaware, in which capacity he served two years. In 1856, he was elected Representative to the State Legislature, from the district composed of the counties of Henry, Wayne, Randolph, Jay and Blackford, serving four years. His term of office had scarcely expired when the slumbering fires of rebellion broke out, and a call was made upon the patriotism of every American citizen. He was the first in this county to raise a company for the service, and his own name was the first on the roll of enlisted men. It was enrolled as that of a private soldier, and he expected to serve in that capacity. But in three days he had a company of 140 men, and before they left for Indianapolis, he was elected Captain by a unanimous vote. Of this number, 100 were accepted for the three months' service, the remainder returning to their homes. This company was assigned to the Eighth Regiment, and Captain Colgrove was commissioned Lieutenant Colonel. The regiment was in Maj. Gen. McClellan's army, in the West Virginia campaign, with Gen. Rosecrans as their brigade commander. They took part in the battle of Rich Mountain, and assisted in the capture of Garnett's forces. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, Col. Colgrove returned to Winchester, and assisted in organizing the Eighth Regiment for the three years' service. Shortly afterward, however, he was appointed Colonel of the Twenty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, which was sent forward and placed under the command of Brig. Gen. Banks. They took part in the terrible battle at Ball's Bluff, and helped to convey the dead across the Potomac after the fight. The regiment was a part of the Army of the Potomac, serving first with the Fifth and afterward with the Eleventh Corps, and participating in all the important battles in which these corps were engaged. Finally, the Eleventh and Twelfth were consolidated, under the name of the Twentieth Army Corps, with Gen. Hooker in command, and sent to Chattanooga, where they joined Gen. Sherman, remaining with his army until the fall of Atlanta. During his period of service, Col. Colgrove was wounded several times, but remained bravely at his post, although his injuries were sufficiently serious to justify him in leaving the service, had he chosen to do so. He was a brave officer, and his distinguished services to the Union were recognized by President Lincoln, who conferred upon him the rank of Brigadier General, by brevet, on the 7th of August, 1864. He resigned, later in that year, and returned to his home at Winchester, having, in the meantime, been appointed by Gov. Morton to fill the unexpired term of Judge Elliott, who had been chosen one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Indiana. In the same year, he was elected President of the Cincinnati, Fort Wayne & Grand Rapids Railroad, and on the 19th of December, 1864, was appointed President of the Military Commission for the trial of Horsey, Milligan and Bowles, the traitors. The trial was in progress for a period of 100 days, and the defendants were found guilty and sentenced to death. This sentence, however, was commuted to imprisonment for life, and the trio were finally set free by the Supreme Court of the United States, on the ground that a military tribunal had no jurisdiction over the offense. In 1865, Gen. Colgrove was elected Judge of the circuit composed of Randolph and Delaware Counties, serving six years. In 1873, he was again elected to this office, continuing to occupy the bench until 1879. Retiring from this position, he resumed the practice of his profession, in which he is still actively engaged. As an attorney, he has attained marked success; as a judge, his opinions were always profound and his decisions just. He was always respected for his kindness and courtesy in this capacity, and his entire course on the bench was marked by a conscientious fidelity to the trust reposed in him. As a citizen, he has always been enterprising and public-spirited, and during his residence in this county has been identified with many of its public improvements. In politics, he affiliated with the Whig party during its existence, but afterward became a Republican, and has ever since continued to act with that party. He united with the Odd Fellows of Winchester at an early day. He has lived nearly half a century in this community, and by an upright, honorable life has gained the confidence and esteem of all who know him. His wife still survives, and shares with him the regard of a large circle of friends. To bless their wedded life, there were eleven children, four of whom are now living. One son became celebrated as an æronaut, but lost his life in the pursuit of this perilous profession, near San Francisco, Cal.

W. W. Macy
{EX-SHERIFF}
CAPT. CO. A. 20TH IND. V. VOL. INF.

Alice A. Macy.

CAPTAIN W. W. MACY.

William W. Macy was born October 17, 1841, in Randolph County, Ind. He is a lineal descendant of Thomas Macy, who came from England, probably as early as the year 1635, and certainly not later than 1639. He was one of the first settlers of Salisbury, Mass.; was a man of prominence, and the progenitor, perhaps, of all who bear the name of Macy in the United States.

William W. Macy represents the ninth generation. His father, Dr. William Macy, owned and operated a steam saw mill at Farmland, and the son was engaged in assisting him about the mill when not attending school, by hauling logs through the woods; he became an expert in the management of oxen, this being his favorite branch of labor. At this vocation, too, and at that youthful age he manifested a zeal and an unyielding purpose, which have since so prominently characterized his career, both in military and civil life. His winters were spent in attending the public school of his district, and before his studies were interrupted by the war, he had acquired a fair common school education.

On the 15th of July, 1861, he enlisted as a private soldier in Company "C," Nineteenth Regiment, Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and was mustered into the service at Indianapolis, on the 29th of the same month. Shortly afterward, and before entering the field, he was promoted to the rank of Fifth Duty Sergeant. His regiment arrived at Washington City on the 9th of August, 1861, and was assigned to duty with the Army of the Potomac, forming a part of the First Brigade, First Division, First Army Corps. The battle of Cedar Mountain, on the 9th of August, 1862, was the first engagement in which the regiment participated, the preceding year having been passed in the routine of camp life. After this, they had their full share of the "grim labor of war," participating under command of Gen. Pope in the skirmishes against Stonewall Jackson along the Rappahannock, and in the battles of Gainesville, the second Bull Run, South Mountain and Antietam. In the last named engagement, Mr. Macy received a slight wound in the scalp, a minie-ball leaving its track across his head. Though painful, it was not serious, and did not unfit him for duty. He took part in the battles of Fredericksburg, December 12 to 15, 1862, his regiment going into winter quarters at Belle Plain Landing, on the 18th of the same month.

On the 26th of April, 1863, he received his commission as First Lieutenant, having been promoted to that rank during the winter, for meritorious services. He took an active part with his regiment in the campaign of the following spring, participating in the battles of Fitz Hugh Crossing, April 28; of Chancellorsville, May 3, and of Gettysburg, July 1 to 4, 1863. On the morning of the 3d of July, just about daybreak, as he was lying asleep on the ground, he received the second minie-ball wound in the head, this one proving more serious than the first, though leaving less of a scar. On the 1st of November, 1863, he was detailed to return to Indiana on recruiting service, and after accomplishing his mission successfully, re-joined his regiment on the 24th of February, 1864. On the 3d of March following, he fell ill with smallpox, and for a month and a half was confined to the hospital, receiving a leave of absence of thirty days, after his partial recovery. On the 1st of June, 1864, he again joined his regiment, which was then at the Pamunky River, Va. From that time until the close of the war, he was constantly with the regiment, taking an active part in all the battles in which it was engaged, viz.: Petersburg and Richmond; the attack on the Weldon Railroad, August 18-21; the battles of Hatcher's Run; Gravelly Run, and in the running fight after Lee's army, from his evacuation of Richmond to his surrender at Appomattox, on the 9th of April, 1865.

In the meantime, he had been made the recipient of higher honors in the way of promotion. The Nineteenth and Twentieth Indiana Regiments were consolidated, under the name of the Twentieth Regiment Indiana Veteran Volunteers, and Lieut. Macy was commissioned Captain of Company A. His conduct as a soldier was brave and honorable, and his advancement from the ranks to the command of a company was but a just recognition of his valiant services. At Petersburg, on the 29th of July, 1864, he was in line, a little to the left, at the springing of the mine in front of that city. He was in the service just three days less than four years, being mustered out at Indianapolis, on the 12th of July, 1865. During the review of the troops at Washington, just after the close of the war, his company formed a part of the Grand Army that filed through the Nation's Capital, under the inspection of the Generals who had led them to victory on the field.

Capt. Macy gladly resumed the arts of peace, and, after his return from the army, spent some time in attendance at Liber College, Jay County, Ind., preparing himself more fully for active business life. Retiring from college, he for a time engaged in commercial pursuits at Union City, Ind. In 1870, Sheriff Ford selected him to serve as Deputy, and at the death of said Sheriff, in 1873, he was appointed to fill the vacancy, which duties he discharged for about nine months with fidelity. In 1874, and again in 1876, he was made Deputy Sheriff, under W. A. W. Daly, and in 1878, the Republicans of Randolph County elected him Sheriff, the duties of which office he discharged with marked ability for two years.

Capt. Macy now occupies a responsible position in the Pension Department at Washington, D. C., to which place he was appointed in May, 1882.

On December 20, 1867, Capt. Macy was united in marriage with Miss Alice Addington, a native of Randolph County, Ind., and a young lady of rare culture and accomplishments. For about six years, she was associated with the schools of this county, being a popular and successful teacher. She was the daughter of John L. and Sally Addington.

Capt. and Mrs. Macy are the parents of one child, Orla A. Macy, now a boy of about fourteen years.

A young man, also, by the name of Albert H. Addington, now in his sixteenth year, and a nephew of Mrs. Macy, has been living with them since the fall of 1878, being considered as one of the family.

In all the relations of life, Capt. Macy has proved himself a gentleman of irreproachable integrity, and has won the esteem of all who know him.

As a public officer, he was reliable and efficient. As a soldier, was a favorite among his army comrades. While as a citizen, he is a valued member of the community.

But as to who or how many of the aged men who came to the new West had been soldiers under Washington, or Gates, or Schuyler, or Morgan, or Greene—had witnessed the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga, or of Cornwallis at Yorktown, or had felt the blood trickling from their chapped and frozen members as they tracked, with unshod feet, the winter snows of Valley Forge, is now unknown to mortal man.

How soon and how easily are the heroes of one age lost from the sight and from the memory of the ages that come after them!

But, though the remembrance of the men as individual citizens may perish, the memorial of their inestimable services remains more enduring than imperishable marble; the freedom bequeathed by a nation of heroes to succeeding generations of men dwelling in this fair land—"The land of the free and the home of the brave."

The name of the ancient hero of whom the especial sketch is given above was W. E. Fitzgerald. Another veteran pioneer, still older, but who died two years later, and who was born one year later (1747), lies buried in Pleasant Hill Cemetery, east of New Salem, in Jackson Township. He was one hundred and six years and seven months old, having been born in 1747, eight years before the old French and Indian war, and the same length of time before the earthquake at Lisbon.

We do not know whether William Cline was a soldier of the Revolution or not, nor, in fact, anything of his parentage, or birth-place, or history. He was twenty-eight years old when the first crash of hostile arms wakened the morning echoes on Lexington Green in 1775; was in the ripeness of manhood, at the age of forty-two, when Gen. Washington took the oath of office as the first President of the new Western republic at New York, on the famous 30th of April, 1789; was verging to old age, at fifty-five, when Ohio joined the sisterhood of States, in 1802; was nine years past his full threescore when Indiana boldly stepped into line to the "music of the Union," in 1816; was ninety years old and nine when old "Rough and Ready marched his army to the Rio Grande against the self-confident Mexicans; and for almost seven more annual suns, he yet lingered on these mundane shores after his days had rounded out their full century of years for this aged veteran as a dweller in this world of labor and of sorrow.

WARS OF 1789–1795.

As a link to bind the history of Randolph to that rough and stormy time when the whole region of Western Ohio was a theater of war; when the forests were filled with cordons of fortresses stretching far and grim along the border; when army after army cut their "traces" through the pathless woods, of which at least the names "St. Clair's Trace," "Wayne's Trace," "Hull's Trace." still remain to greet the ears of the present generation—for the purpose of marching against the bloody Indians; when the women and children of Western Ohio crowded into block-houses built in the dense forests, while the husbands and grown-up sons were, almost to a man, with Harmar, or St. Clair, or Wayne, and many of whom never returned from those fatal and bloody defeats; when the hunters of Kentucky, those hardy and gallant foresters of the olden time, flocked across the Ohio to defend the northern frontier and secure a peaceful home in the coming years for their own posterity—we repeat, we give, as a solitary link to connect these days with those times of cruel warfare with savage nature and more savage men, a narrative concerning a single veteran of the Army of the Northwest, who did faithful and heroic service during those times, through three long, eventful years—from January, 1792, to January, 1795—which period comprises the time in or near which occurred the bloody defeats of Gens. Harmar and St. Clair, and the decisive victory of Gen. Wayne—"Mad Anthony" Wayne—which last fully convinced the Indians that further resistance to the rising power of the whites was but a vain and fruitless struggle against destiny and fate.

This veteran, herein referred to, was David Thompson, grandfather of Mrs. J. F. Hedgepeth, of Union City, Ind. As will be seen, he was a Corporal in the United States service, and his grand-daughter possesses valuable relics in the shape of copies of papers once belonging to her venerable progenitor, transcripts of which are given a little below.

David Thompson seems to have been a Virginian, as he emigrated from that State to Wayne County, Ind., in 1820.

He died of cancer, in Delaware County, Ind., October 22, 1847.

He must have been an old man. He entered the United States Army in 1792. If he was then twenty years old, he must have been born in 1772, and in that case his age at his death would be seventy-five years. He was probably somewhat younger than that.

His obituary in a Delaware County paper was as follows:

"Died, October 22, 1847, David Thompson, of cancer, who was a remarkable man. He served three years in the old Indian wars, being under Gen. Wayne in his celebrated campaigns against the Indians, and of the General's private scouts. And for reckless and daring bravery, he had no equal."

We give below a certificate from his Captain, as also one from Maj. Gen. Anthony Wayne, each of which will explain itself:

TESTIMONIAL.

The bearer, David Thompson, has served as a Corporal in the Army of the United States, from which he has obtained an honorable discharge. But in justice to the said Corporal, for the many services he has rendered the public, I consider it my duty, and am fully warranted to say that his conduct has uniformly met with my approbation, as well as that of all other officers who have had the opportunity to know him. Corporal Thompson was generally employed in reconnoitering the Indian country, in paths leading to and from the Indian villages, as well as being constantly in advance of the army during the campaign. While thus engaged, he assisted in the capture of seven Indian prisoners, all warriors, except one, while in the vicinity of their towns gaining information for the army. In the accomplishment of his object, several skirmishes ensued, in which he behaved in a brave and soldier-like manner. And when the garrison of Fort Recovery, which I had the honor to command, was surrounded and attacked by nearly two hundredsavages, this Corporal Thompson made his escape through them, with intelligence to the Commander-in-Chief, who was twenty-four miles from the place, for which I now beg leave to return him my sincere thanks, and hope that all good people who are friends to their country may receive and treat with respect the said David Thompson, a reward he has merited.

Certified under my hand and seal, at Staunton, in the State of Virginia, this 29th day of October, 1795.

ALEXANDER GIBSON,
Captain Fourth Sub-Legion.

The following is a copy of his discharge, under the hand of Maj. Gen. Anthony Wayne, Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the Northwest:

COPY.

By His Excellency, Anthony Wayne, Esq., Major General and Commander-in-Chief of the Legion of the United States.

These are to certify that the bearer hereof, David Thompson, a Corporal of the Fourth Sub-Legion, has served in the above said Legion and in Capt. Gibson's company for the space of three years, and is, for the reason below mentioned, discharged from the service of the United States, he having received his pay up to the 1st day of January, 1795, clothing of all kinds, and all other just demands for the time of his enlistment in the Legion to the day of his discharge, as appears by the following receipt. He is discharged, having faithfully served the whole term of time for which he engaged.

And, to prevent any ill use that may be made of his discharge, by its falling into the hands of any other person whatsoever, here follows a description of the said David Thompson:

He is twenty years of age, five feet, eleven inches high, dark complexion, black hair and black eyes, born in the county of Amherst, State of Virginia, a farmer.

Given under my hand and seal, at headquarters, this 19th day of August, 1795.

WILLIAM CLARK.
Lieutenant Acting Sub-Legion, Major and Inspector to the Fourth Sub-Legion.

ANTHONY WAYNE.

To whom it may concern, civil or military.

It is certain that a large number of the early pioneers were soldiers in the Indian wars during the closing years of the eighteenth century, either as residents of Ohio, Virginia or Kentucky. We should delight to record their names, and their service as a part of the work of patriotism performed by the men of that generation, but time and space fail us, and the requisite information is not at hand.

INDIAN WAR OF 1811–13.

No settlers had at that time come into Randolph. The Indians were here, and emigrants had planted themselves in Preble County, Ohio, and perhaps in Darke, and in Wayne County, Ind.;

and the savages roamed through all that country. A few outrages, yet only a few, were committed in the region; none, however, on the soil of Randolph. Morgan was killed in Wayne. The man burned at the stake met his fate near Muncie, in Delaware County.

War is cruel, and savage warfare is always attended with features of peculiar atrocity; yet it is remarkable how uniform is the testimony of those who had then moved into these wilds that the Indians molested none who were peaceable. Mrs. Diggs, the wife of William Diggs, who is still alive, and now known as "Old Billy Diggs," and who resides with his children in Iowa, used to relate to her oldest daughter (and the rest) that the Indians would come to her cabin on White River after her settlement had been made in Randolph County, and tell how easily they might have killed and scalped her and her sister as the Indians lay in hiding among the bushes, while the girls were milking the cows, at their forest home in Wayne County. But they did the maidens no harm.

An account, perhaps sufficiently long, is given of the troublous years of the Indian war of Tecumseh and his fierce and savage brother, the Prophet, in the chapter on Indian history, and in the reminiscences given by several of the pioneers; and no further space will be occupied here with details concerning it.

The history of the general war of 1812–15 of course belongs not to Randolph, except that participants therein may have afterward pitched their tents within its borders, and spent the remnant of their days upon its fruitful domain. But to trace such facts in detail would swell too greatly the bulk of our present treatise, and we forbear.

SOLDIERS IN THE INDIAN WARS.

(Some of the men never belonged to Randolph County.)

Thomas Irvin, Butler County, Ohio.

Samuel McDowell, died near Fort Recovery.

McCormick was shot through the mouth and his teeth knocked out.

Capt. Cissna, Butler County Ohio.

William Denoon, St. Clair's army, Franklin County, Ohio.

David Thomson came to Greenville with Connor, Wayne's army. His daughter, widow of Judge Beers, north of Greenville, died in the summer of 1881.

Daniel Lucas, south part of Darke County, Ohio.

William Dugan drew a pension as a soldier, having been a boy in Wayne's army.

John Martin, father of Mrs. Mary Reeder, born in 1773, came to Warren County, Ohio, before 1794; was with St. Clair and Wayne, and with Harrison at Tippecanoe and the Thames in 1811–13, and with Col. Crogan at Fort Stephenson. He came to Randolph County in 1822, and died in Missouri in 1839, sixty years old.

SOLDIERS AND WIVES WHO HAVE HAD PENSIONS.

Benjamin Cummins, 1812, lived near Salem, dead.

John Ruby (1812), lived at Union City, dead.

Mrs. Eleanor Ruby, widow of John Ruby, Union City, Ind., living.

Rebecca Harris, widow of William Harris.

Mr. Harris obtained a pension while residing in Mercer County, Ohio. It was transferred to his widow.

Polly Marquess, widow of Kid Marquess, living.

Mrs. Lacey, mother-in-law of Frank Morgan, widow of Mr. Lacey. He died in 1870, and she is living.

Jacob Johnson (1812), Jackson Township, died in spring of 1881.

Nunnamaker (1812), Jackson Township, died in 1880.

Charles W. Thomas (1812), near Hollansburg, dead.

Mrs. Mary A. Paschall, widow of Jesse Z. Paschall, Pennsylvania militia, 1812.

Mrs. Sarah Bussear, widow of Martin Bussear, 1812.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Poyner, widow of Peter Poyner, Ohio militia, 1812.

Mrs. Sarah Baxter, widow of Joseph Baxter, Pennsylvania militia, 1812.

Mrs. John Baxter, Pennsylvania militia, 1812, received a land warrant.

Jane Leeka, widow of Henry Leeka, Tennessee militia, 1812.

Mrs. Mary Ann Mosher, widow of Solomon Mosher, Tennessee militia, 1812.

Mrs. Margaret Wine, widow of George Wine, Virginia militia, 1812.

William D. Stone, pension for Mexican war, entered service in war of 1861; pension ceased.

Walter Ruble, Ohio militia, 1812, dead.

William Rash, 1812, dead.

John Irvin, 1812, dead.

David Riddlebarger, Virginia militia, 1812, dead.

John Grubbs, Ohio militia, 1812, dead.

Samuel Barker, Vermont militia, 1812, dead.

Mrs. Sarah E. Brown, widow of William Brown, Ohio militia, 1812.

Mrs. Susanna Brooks, widow of Thomas Brooks, Ohio militia, 1812.

Mrs. Mary Whitenack, widow of Cornelius Whitenack, New Jersey militia, 1812.

Mrs. Nancy Stockdale, widow of —— Stockdale. Her husband had a pension till he died, and it was transferred to his widow.

SOLDIERS, 1812, ETC.

Jesse Gray, died in Jay County.

Jonathan Lambert, buried at New Lisbon.

Philip Lambert, buried at New Lisbon.

David Heaston, buried at Winchester. war of 1812.

James Lambert, war of Black Hawk, 1837, buried at Pleasant Hill.

John Dye, buried at Windsor, war of 1812.

Jacob Cline, buried at Windsor, war of 1812.

Samuel Wilson, buried at Windsor, war of 1812.

James Hays, buried at Windsor, war of 1812.

John Bolender, buried at Winchester, grenadier, wars with Bonaparte.

Curtis Cleny, buried at Lynn, war of 1812.

Mr. McKinney, buried at Fairview, Revolutionary war.

William Fitzgerald, Mt. Zion, southeast of Winchester, Revolutionary war.

Mr. Dudley, Stony Creek, Revolutionary war.

Thus the tombstones and the pension rolls bear witness to the presence in former days within the limits of Randolph of a large number of the soldiers of those old wars. And doubtless many more than the ones whom we have mentioned made their domicile in early times in this county of ours, but we cannot trace them, and must be content.

MILITIA OF RANDOLPH—1832.

A very curious reminiscence of the military doings of "auld lang syne" has been discovered among the old papers of Judge Edmund B. Goodrich, now in possession of Mrs. John C. Goodrich, widow of the ex-Clerk of Randolph County.

It seems there was a "militia system" in the "Hoosier State" many years ago, though how long it lasted we are unable to tell. That it was in active or attempted operation in 1832, at least, is shown by the relic referred to. It is an old paper, purporting to contain a list of persons fined for refusing to bear arms on account of "conscientious scruples" against the practice; also a list of persons not scrupulous in that respect who were fined for absence or other dereliction of militia law. In the first list, the fine is $1.50 in each case; in the other, the amount varies from 25 cents to $10. The regiment concerned was the Seventieth, and there seem to have been six companies, with Jeremiah Smith as Colonel of that same regiment. The redoubtable Captains were Messrs. Comer, Butler, Denton, Hunt, Fleming, Heaston. Butler resided at Deerfield; Heaston, at Winchester; Hunt, probably near Huntsville; Denton's men were residents of Nettle Creek region; Fleming's men were from Stony Creek; and Comer's from Greensfork, Jericho, White River, etc.

The "conscientious" men were returned from three companies—Comer's, Denton's and Fleming's. There seem to have been none of that sort in either Butler's, Heaston's or Hunt's. How many Capt. Comer had of non-delinquents it would be interesting to know, as he returns sixty-one of the "scrupulous" sort. Capt. Denton gives but four, and Capt. Fleming, twenty-one, or eighty-six in all. Of the other persons fined "for cause," there were in Butler's company, fifteen; Denton's, forty-three; Hunt's, forty-four; Fleming's, twenty-two; Comer's, none; total, 154; grand total, 240; perfect ones, unknown.

One Captain was fined; one Lieutenant, three Sergeants and two Corporals.

It may not be amiss to append the names of those who refused to bear arms, as it will be a very fair index of the Quaker element at that time among those of military age:

Comer's Company—Moorman Way, Isaiah Cox, Simon Cox, Joshua Cox, Simon Pickett, Nathan Puckett, Zachariah Puckett, David Haworth, Henry Yeakley, Littleberry Diggs, Armsbee Diggs, William Diggs, Benjamin Diggs, Lewis Osborn, Jesse Way, Robert Way, Joshua Robertson, John Cox, Benjamin Davis, Nathan Barker, William Harris, Benjamin Harris, Silas Hiatt, Robert Woody, Joseph Picket, John Puckett, Thomas Buckingham, Moses Mendenhall, Joshua Trueman, Benoni Hill, Henry Hill, John Peacock, Elijah Case, William Case, John Pike, Thomas Hinshaw, Nathan Freeman, Stanton Bailey, Samuel Cox, John Rhoads, Nicholas Robison, Amos Peacock, James Foust, Welcome Puckett, Thomas Green, Nathan Green, Jacob Yeakley, William Mann, Tyre Puckett, James Clayton, Jonathan Hiatt, Sr., George Hiatt, Martin Hiatt, Moses Hiatt, Joseph Hiatt, Jonathan C. Hiatt, Thomas Conner, Nathan Hiatt, Jacob Knight, George Knight, Jesse Wright—sixty-one.

Denton's Company—Jonathan Macy, Nathan Macy, William Lee, Alva Macy—four.

Fleming's Company—Joseph Thornburg, Isaac Thornburg, Amos Smith, Isaac Beals, Nathan Thornburg, John Diggs, Mark Diggs, William Holloway, Robert Fisher, John Holloway, Joseph Fisher, Thomas Fisher, Joab Thornburg, Job Thornburg, John Thornburg, Jacob Beals, Solomon Wright, Jonathan Thornburg, Mordecai Bond, Ornan Bond, Benjamin Car—twenty-one.

The Captain was fined $5; one Lieutenant, $6, and one $10; two Sergeants, $3, and two $2 each; two Corporals, $1 each.

Among those fined "for cause," perhaps for want of a "primer" to their guns, or some other heinous military offense, occur such names as Elias Kizer, Daniel Worth, William Macy, Burkett Pierce, Temple Smith, David Bunker, Philip Brown, Isaac Amburn, James Porter, William Chamness, William Smith, Smith Masterson, Samuel Hawkins (then of Jay County), Samuel Simmons, Daniel B. Miller, Davis Pegg, Stephen Dye, Hamilton Snodgrass, Joseph Jay, John Borroughs, Lemuel Vestal, Andrew Aker, Henry D. Huffman, Jacob Harshman, William Lumpkin, Thomas Maulsby—and so on, to the tune of 154 in all.

The surviving veteran pioneers who find their names in the above list will doubtless chuckle with glee at reading this "reminder" of what must have been regarded, even at the time, as a huge joke.

The papers are made out in all due form, signed by Jeremiah Smith, Colonel, and Judge of the Court of Appeals, delivered to Edmund B. Goodrich, Paymaster of Seventieth Regiment; and the list is receipted by Robert Irvin, Constable, with order to him to collect the fines aforesaid. Whether any at all were paid is not now known. Jesse Way says that Robert Irvin used to relate, years afterward, that, as he was on his collecting tour, he lodged with a good-natured Quaker, one of the number who were fined for "scruples," and that, on asking his host what was his charge—"I charge thee," was the reply, "that thee go home and find some better business, and never be caught in such a scrape again as long as thee lives."

Robert replied, "I believe I will do it," and he did it, and kept the advice, too. He used to laugh over the joke, and say that it was the best advice he ever got in his life.

MEXICAN WAR.

War had, to Randolph County dwellers, been a thing well-nigh unknown. Until the struggle of the rebellion, only one other had called our nation to arms, and that was small and of short duration, viz., the Mexican conflict. And in that contest, barely three (as we have been told) were Randolph County boys—Allen O. Neff, Augustus Kane and William D. Stone. Capt. John Neff did, indeed, join the army at that time, and rendered service for several years, but he did not go to Mexico. Kane was much on the sick list, and Neff was shortly transferred to the band, so that the reputation of Randolph for warlike valor in this struggle would seem to have been left in the exclusive keeping of William D. Stone. He was in the war fourteen months, seeing, in that time, some severe service, and taking part in several hard battles, especially those fought by our gallant little army around the city of Puebla, as well as in some others.

When the regiment containing our "especial three" arrived at Vera Cruz, Gen. Scott had stormed San Juan de Ulloa and had captured Vera Cruz; had set his eager legions on their march into the interior; had climbed the frowning heights of Sierra Gorda and hurled backward in inglorious defeat the armed Mexican legions; had crossed the smiling Table Lands, occupied the unresisting city of Puebla, and captured the strong fortress of Perote; and had pressed still onward, till his gallant troops had invested the capital. They had fought and won the memorable contests at Churubusco and Chapultepec, and Molino del Rey, and had at length marched in triumph into the imperial city of the Montezumas, and were taking a brief respite from their warlike labors in that renowned metropolis.

The regiment to which that before-named "three" belonged had, after undergoing a somewhat romantic experience on their outward passage, landed at Vera Cruz. In company with other regiments, they took up their course of march for Puebla, drove off the Mexican army, who had for a considerable time been beleaguering that town in possession of the American forces, relieved the besieged garrison, and entered the city amid the plaudits of the rescued ones.

Peace at length was declared, and the army returned to their homes, since the causeless and cruel Mexican war at last was over.

REMINISCENCES—MEXICAN WAR—W. D. STONE.

In May, 1847, he enlisted in the Fourth Indiana Volunteers as a private. In the Gulf of Mexico, bound for Galveston, on board the Ann Chase, one of the boilers exploded. Several men were killed, and sixty-five went on boats and upon rafts to the Louisiana Shore, nine miles away, landing near the mouth of Calcasieu River. Stone was one of that company. For some unknown reason, the steamer managed to repair somewhat the damage done, and went on her course, leaving that company of men in the swamps, helpless and desolate, to their fate. They would not give up, however, and footed it sixty-five miles, having no food nor any suitable drink, through swamps and jungles, during two days and nights, to Sabine City, La., at the mouth of Sabine River. Here they stayed a week. At this point, thousands of Texas cattle used to cross. The cattle had to swim, and the alligators would often catch them. Every little while, a bullock would give a spring and a plunge, and that was the last of him. An alligator had him.

The boys, to pass away the time, tried hunting alligators. Four of them took a skiff, with only one gun for them all, and rowed out into the river.

Presently a huge monster came swimming along, and Stone said, "Let's lasso him." "Agreed," said the rest.

So they fixed a rope to the skiff and threw it around the head and neck of the creature. The moment he felt the rope, he started for the gulf at full speed. He dragged the boat and its frightened crew half a mile or more in "double quick." The boys tried to get him to shore. After bringing him into about four feet of water, one of the men, Brewer by name, a big, burly fellow, tall and stout, jumped from the boat into the river to pull on the rope and help land him. Instanter the alligator "took for" Brewer, and the chap made some rather lively splashing through that water about that time.

However, they got him ashore and shot him. They thought him a "whaler," he being seven or eight feet long, or perhaps longer than that, and larger by far than they cared to encounter again, and so they gave up the business.

Three hundred men were still on board the steamer, and, managing to "rig up" in some way, as has been stated, the ship made for Galveston, paying no heed to the men on shore. They reported at Galveston that sixty-five men had made the shore, and that they were on the coast starving. A schooner was sent for them outright, and they were found at Sabine City. By that schooner the squad were conveyed to Galveston; thence to Brazos de Santiago. Most went by steamer, but fifteen of them went in another way, to wit, by an old yawl. What possessed them to go out on the gulf in such a crazy conveyance is "one of those things that no fellow can ever find out." But go they did, and a sorry time they made of it. When out on the gulf, the yawl would dip and veer, first one side and then the other, and they came near drowning many times; but, through God's mercy, they were spared to tread once more the solid land.

The men in the yawl had no gun, and could not shoot any of the sharks.

Mr. Stone says: "But we did one thing that was not planned. Col. Gorman, of the Fourth Indiana, had put a lot of hams into the bottom of the yawl to be conveyed to Brazos. We got at these, pitching them out, one after one, to the sharks."

From Brazos, the regiment was sent up the Rio Grande some two hundred miles by steamer to Gen. Taylor, but they were ordered to report to Gen. Scott, at Vera Cruz; and, marching back by land to Matamoras, they took passage over the gulf again to the Mexican fortress and seaport, San Juan de Ulloa (Sahn Hwahn da Ool-yo-ah), and Vera Cruz (Va-rah Crooz), which, however, had been reduced and captured before their arrival.

Most went by steamer, but a part were taken (by their own choice) in an old sailing vessel across the Mexican Gulf to Vera Cruz.

The Mexican forces, meanwhile, had retaken a part of the route from Vera Cruz to the metropolis, and had surrounded Puebla with an army of 7,000 men, under Gen. Ria, the place being held against them by the gallant Gen. Childs, with only a small garrison.

The little army fought every day, more or less, for twenty-nine days, all the way to Puebla. At Huamantla, 1,500 American soldiers routed 5,000 Mexicans, secured the pass in triumph, and raised the siege of Puebla.

Gen. Scott, before this time, had taken San Juan de Ulloa (at Vera Cruz), and had fought Sierra Gorda at the pass up to the heights of the Central Table Land; had taken Puebla and Perote, and had also, about this time, fought and won the terrible battles of Contreras, Churubusco, Chapultepec and Molino del Rey; and had either just made or was then ready to make his triumphal entry into the imperial city of the Montezumas.

After Puebla, they fought at Tlascala to protect the "tobacco train," a bevy of wagons laden with a supply of that fragrant weed for the use of the American soldiers.

The bombardment of Atlixco on the march, though a cruel thing, was nevertheless a magnificent spectacle. The artillery was posted on the heights, and the town lay far down, hundreds of feet below in the valley. It was in the night, and the track of the shells through the starlit sky could be distinctly seen as they went speeding on their path of destruction. The shells would burst in the midst of the town, scattering death and ruin far and wide. The city could not long endure so unequal a contest, but surrendered at discretion.

These troops did not go to the City of Mexico, as Gen. Scott was in possession, and the actual war was over. The army remained in the conquered country during some months, till the treaty of peace had been made. The evacuation then took place, and the soldiers came home during the summer of 1848.

(Capt. Stone has in his possession a Mexican sword, captured by him in a hand-to-hand fight at Puebla. He was one of a patrol, and, suspecting a certain house, they entered, and found it filled with Mexican soldiers. The Mexicans fought, but they were beaten, and Capt. Stone captured the sword, turning it over to the Quartermaster, and Gen. Joseph Lane gave it to the captor as a memento of his valor, and he has it yet.)

CAPT. JOHN NEFF, WINCHESTER.

He was commissioned Captain in the United States army in 1846, during the time of the Mexican war. He did no service in Mexico, but was stationed at St. Louis, under Col. Enos McKay, as Assistant Quartermaster. His labors were great, and his responsibilities extensive. At one time, his Colonel wished transportation for $120,000 in gold and silver, chiefly the latter, to Fort Leavenworth. The steamboats refused to carry it for less than 2 per cent upon the whole amount. The Colonel would not submit to such extortion, and directed Capt. Neff to convey the funds to their destination overland, and asked him, "What escort do you wish?" "The less the better," was his reply. He took four men, and, with a wagon laden with the precious treasure, they drove through in fourteen days. When four days out, the discovery was made that their guns were utterly useless; but they accomplished the journey without mishap, at a cost of about $130, thus effecting a saving to the Government of $2,270.

It would seem that Capt. Neff's duties did not embrace any direct connection with the Mexican war, but the time of his service was during its progress, and he was a resident of Randolph County, and a faithful and efficient officer; and this brief account of his labors would appear to be not out of place at this point in our history.

WAR OF SECESSION.

Before 1861, war's grim and terrible front was a sight which, by the mass of the dwellers of Randolph, had never yet been seen. They had read of wars, but most had never taken any part therein. Even military musters and training days had been out of vogue so long that only the elders in the land had ever witnessed even those mock presentments of martial display.

It was, therefore, a marvelous scene to behold, when rebellion lifted on high her Gorgon head and raised aloft her traitorous arm, and our country sounded the sudden alarm of fierce and furious war, how, from city and hamlet and farm throughout our wide-spread land, and from this county of ours as well, there sprang forthwith hundreds and thousands of brave men, unskilled, indeed, in the practice of war, yet nobly loyal, eager to press into the ranks as defenders of their native land.

None knew till then how much he loved his country. A sublime sight, indeed, it was to see, when the Union flag had been lowered in defeat and surrender from the walls of Fort Sumter, how rose, in bitter indignation and lofty defiance, the heart of a mighty nation, torn and rent indeed by sedition and treason, but stalwart and powerful still.

Randolph County had been for years before the outburst of the civil war strongly Republican in politics, and its loyal people naturally responded with enthusiasm to the agonized call of the commonwealth in distress. Though it is indeed true that party lines were nearly ignored and men of widely varying political opinions enlisted like brothers in a common cause, into the armies that were mustering East and West, like a mighty host, to avenge the wrongs of the country and to maintain the integrity of the nation. Great numbers, first and last, from Randolph County, joined the Union armies, and helped to bear aloft, through hostile regions, the glorious stars and stripes; and came back, at length, victorious, from fields bravely fought and nobly won, or lay down, one by one, from time to time, on Southern soil, to rise upon earth no more; and a simple tombstone in a national burying-ground, consecrated by a nation's tears, in the far-off South, remains the sole memorial of their existence and their deeds. Nay, to many of our dear ones lost, even this poor boon was denied, and of the spot in which their lifeless frame found its last earthly rest, like the place of the sepulcher of Moses of old, "no man knoweth to this day."

And yet, though grand the uprising and numerous the bands that enlisted from our county, still it is a fact, strange though it may seem, that to obtain detailed, accurate accounts of the companies (whole or partial) that were enrolled from within its bounds during the progress of the war of the rebellion, has been found to be well-nigh impossible. Soldiers of the conquering armies remain in abundance, but each man can tell only his own tale, and none can furnish the history of his company or his regiment.

It would surely seem a strange thing, now we look back upon the events of the time, that no accurate list even of the names of Randolph soldiers is to be found anywhere within any record kept by the authority of the county or by her direction. She sent her sons by hundreds and by thousands into the tented field, but who went, or what they did, or how they came back, or whether they ever returned or not, seemed to be no concern of hers. And she would not appear to care, even to this day, now twenty years gone by since the power of that witchcraft of rebellion burst upon our people, enough for the memory of her soldier heroes to take a reckoning of them; but it has been left to a precarious private enterprise to hunt them out haphazard, and that under the disheartening certainty that large numbers of those who joined the armies of the country and marched away full of heart and hope to risk all that to them was dear, have died unnoted and unknown, and their very memorial has been lost from among men.

It has, indeed, been one of the purposes actuating the labors of the author and the publishers of these sketches to rescue from oblivion every name that can possibly be found belonging to a heroic soul who nobly volunteered in his country's cause.

Yet the work is sufficiently difficult of accomplishment. Almost the only documentary evidence available is found in the report of Adjt. Gen. Terrell to the Governor of Indiana shortly after the close of the war. Gen. Terrell doubtless did his best, with the materials at his command or within his reach: yet those who are familiar with the matter know and deply regret the fact that the report referred to is greatly deficient, not to say largely erroneous.

The truth is that the military reports furnished to the Adjutant General's office must have been wonderfully lacking, both in accuracy and completeness. It is a veritable fact, for instance, that out of the 208,367 names of soldiers enlisted from Indiana in the war of the rebellion, no clew is given concerning about forty-five thousand of those soldiers, as to where they came from, and about fourteen thousand are wholly unaccounted for. This is a sad showing, though, indeed, not very wonderful. Still, when searching is done, as now and in future time will be attempted by relatives and friends, to find the record of acquaintances and kindred dear in the memorial volume referred to, with what a sigh of unavailing regret will the bootless search be ended, to think that no mark nor token remains of services rendered, of sacrifices made—nay, perhaps it may even be of life shed forth as a free-will offering on the altar of country and of right. And so many are without record of residence and of final result that it will be in no wise remarkable if the names of many Randolph men are not to be found in the record which in this work is attempted to be made, to tell to coming generations what Randolph County did to secure the preservation of the Union, and to maintain the integrity of the nation.

So that, while we would desire exceedingly to furnish a detailed history of Randolph County in this respect, sheer necessity compels us simply to generalize the matter, and to be content with a meager recital of such scanty, and, for the most part, isolated facts as the materials within reach will allow.

It is estimated by those who may be presumed to be best qualified to judge that more than two thousand men, at one time and another, joined the Union army in the war of 1861 from the fields and workshops and dwellings of brave and loyal Randolph.

The regiments to which these men belonged were found, during the progress of the conflict, everywhere in the front, marshaled against the serried ranks of armed rebellion. At the opening conflicts at Rich Mountain, etc., in West Virginia; at Bull Run and Ball's Bluff; with Lyon at Wilson's Creek, and Mulligan at Lexington; at South Mountain and Antietam; at Shiloh and Vicksburg and New Orleans; at Chickamauga and Chattanooga and Atlanta; at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville and Gettysburg; at Spottsylvania and Cold Harbor and the Wilderness; at Charleston Harbor and Wilmington and Mobile; at Savannah and Columbia and Raleigh; at Resaca and Kenesaw; at Franklin and Nashville; at all points where hard and bloody work was to be done; and, moreover, in the wretched and murderous prison pens of the Southern land—at Libby and Danville and Florence; at Millen and Savannah and Andersonville—the worst the world has ever seen—in all these places, and in others still, were found Randolph men to perform their part, and to endure the toil and the danger, and the suffering and wounds, the sickness and death, that lay in the path of duty.

Tender boys, who had never slept off a feather bed in their lives, and who had lived abundantly and daintily always, went cheerfully to the field, wrapped their frames, weary with long marching, contentedly, and even merrily, in their blankets, and lay down without a murmur on the cold, damp ground, or upon the rails laid in the mud to keep their bodies from actually sinking in the mire, after a supper made of corn shelled from the cob and hastily parched in a scanty fire kindled upon the ground. Hardships and privations, forced marches and camping without food or water in the woods and in the trenches; fierce and sanguinary battles, wounds, imprisonment and death—all these were borne cheerfully, as though it were a summer pastime, or accepted meekly as a sacrifice needful to be made for the defense of a country, the richest, the noblest and the best beneath the circuit of the sun.

Through all coming time, the war of 1861 in the United States will be reckoned to have been a conflict waged by the people, and carried on to the very end by their indomitable will and their unconquerable spirit; by their relentless determination that traitors should be made odious and that treason should be crushed.

And thus it came to pass, that, in spite of political Generals, and commanders ignorant or dissipated, or even secretly tainted with covert sympathy for treason and hostile to liberty, the spirit of the common soldiery triumphed over every obstacle, and bore the country straight forward to assured and abundant victory and triumphant success.

Gen. Ousterhaut said to Gen. Hooker, as they stood side by side viewing the magnificent charge up Lookout Mountain to fight the "Battle in the Clouds," when Gen. Hooker said, "See your men; they are in disorder," as they went rushing at the top of their speed over rocks and logs, every man bent on being foremost at the summit.

"Cheneral Hooker! Cheneral Hooker! You sees my mennsh? Dey bees all Prigadeer Chenerals! Dey git to te top of dat mountain all right—you see!"

The rank and file felt each man of them as if on them each one lay the burden of conquering the rebellion. Like the ancient Swiss heroes, Arnold Van Winkelried and his compeers in the little Swiss army, boldly facing the serried Austrian phalanx, each man for himself felt

> " * * * As though himself were he
> On whose sole arm hung victory!"

And so it did. Gallant deeds and noble daring and heroic endurance have had their reward. And, while many remained to lay their bones in that hostile land, many more survived to return with the laurels of the victor on their honored brows, and the land is filled with the survivors of that memorable conflict, still energetic for good, and active in every manly enterprise for gain, and for public and private advantage, and foremost to achieve success in every worthy and profitable undertaking.

God grant to put far away the evil day that shall call these heroes and others like them to form once more the marshaled line to go forth in battle for their country's cause.

Many of the Randolph County soldiers suffered the horrors of imprisonment worse than death in those prison hells in the rebel land, the like of which the world never saw before; and many gave up their lives in those dens of horror and filth and starvation. Tongue cannot describe, imagination cannot conceive, the human mind instinctively even refuses to believe as possible (so utterly fiendish were they) the terrible facts of those awful months; the unutterable woes inflicted upon our luckless countrymen condemned to drag out weary weeks and months in those fearful prison pens on those waste and scorching Southern plains!

But those scenes are past, thank heaven! let them live only in the memory of a nation shuddering even yet at their unspeak-able enormity, and grateful for security, liberty and justice, even thus dearly purchased.

GRAND UPRISING.

When the news flashed over the wires that Fort Sumter had lowered her flag at the behest of armed treason, it thrilled the nation like an electric shock.

On the 13th of April, 1861, Fort Sumter was evacuated. The news reached Indianapolis Sunday morning, April 14. On the morning of April 15, Gov. Morton telegraphed to President Lincoln as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Indianapolis, April 15, 1861.

TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

On behalf of the State of Indiana, I tender to you, for the defense of the Nation, and to uphold the authority of the Government, ten thousand men.

OLIVER P. MORTON,
Governor of Indiana.

The same day, President Lincoln called for 75,000 troops, and the quota of Indiana was set at 4,683 officers and men, to serve for three months.

The next day, April 16, Gov. Morton called for six regiments.

The day after the call, 500 men were in camp. By the 19th of April, 2,400 men were on hand, and they were pouring in by every train, and in less than seven days, more than twelve thousand men had been tendered—nearly three times the number called for. One company was there from Randolph of 140 men, April 18, Capt. Colgrove.

Orders were received from the President, April 20, to organize six regiments, and the work began the same day.

One Company from Marion County was partly mustered on that day, and the rest of the sixty companies were organized as follows:

April 21—Five companies.

April 22—Nineteen companies and a half.

April 23—Ten companies, and eleven companies besides, not mustered into the six first regiments.

April 24—Fourteen companies.

April 25—Eleven companies.

And also, on that last day, April 25, the whole six regiments were completed and mustered into service.

When this work had been accomplished, there remained in camp at Indianapolis twenty-nine companies besides, and sixty-eight companies had been raised and tendered that had not come forward. Out of these, Gov. Morton determined to organize several State one-year regiments, and instructed to form five such regiments.

On the 6th of May, the Legislature passed an act requiring six regiments of State troops.

On the 11th of May, 1861, five regimests were reported as complete—the Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and, shortly afterward, the Seventeenth was mustered into service.

These 120 companies forming the twelve regiments were recruited from different counties, to wit:

Allen, four companies; Bartholomew, three companies; Boone, one company; Benton, one company; Clay, one company; Clinton, one company; Cass, two companies; Carroll, one company; Delaware, one company; Dearborn, five companies; Daviess, one company; Decatur, two companies; Elkhart, one company; Floyd, two companies; Franklin, one company; Fountain, one company; Fayette, one company; Grant, one company; Howard, two companies; Henry, two companies; Hamilton, two companies; Hendricks, one company; Hancock, three companies; Huntington, one company; Jefferson, five companies; Jennings, two companies; Jackson, one company; Johnson, one company; Jasper, two companies; Kosciusko, two companies; Knox, two companies; La Porte, three companies; Morgan, one company; Marion, eight companies; Madison, one company; Montgomery, four companies; Miami, one company; Martin, one company; Monroe, one company; Ohio, one company; Owen, two companies; Porter, one company; Putnam, four companies; Parke, one company; Rush, one company; Randolph, one company (146 men); Ripley, two companies; Shelby, three companies; St. Joseph, two companies; Tippecanoe, four companies; Tipton, one company; Union, one company; Vigo, three companies; Vanderburg, one company; Vermillion, one company; Wayne, one company; Wabash, one company; Warren, one company; Washington, one company.

Seventeen companies were formed by taking the men for each from more than one county. Doubtless many, probably all the counties in the State not named above, sent volunteers in connection with other counties. Many of them were represented in the mixed companies above specified. The forty extra men from Randolph were sent home.

Regiments containing Randolph soldiers are the following, so far as known:

Eighth, three months; Sixth, three years; Seventh, three years; Eighth, three years; Ninth, three years; Eleventh, three years; Twelfth, three years; Thirteenth, three years; Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first (First Heavy Artillery), Twenty-seventh, Twenty-eighth (First Cavalry), Thirty-first, Thirty-third, Thirty-fourth, Thirty-sixth, Forty-second, Forty-seventh, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-seventh, Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first, Seventy-fifth, Eighty-fourth, Eighty-ninth, Ninetieth, Ninety-seventh, Ninety-ninth, One Hundred and Fifth, One Hundred and Sixth, One Hundred and Ninth, One Hundred and Seventeenth, One Hundred and Nineteenth (Seventh Cavalry), One Hundred and Twenty-first (Ninth Cavalry), One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, One Hundred and Thirtieth, One Hundred and Thirty-first (Thirteenth Cavalry), One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, One Hundred and Fortieth, One Hundred and Forty-seventh, Fortieth Ohio, etc.

This list may be even now incomplete, since it is true that many are put down to the wrong county, as Randolph men to Wayne, Jay County men to Randolph, etc., and for great numbers their places of residence were left entirely blank—a defect much to be regretted, indeed, but which, at this late day, it is impossible to supply.

Many Randolph soldiers also enlisted in regiments from other States, or in the regular United States service. For instance, a large number joined the Fortieth Ohio Regiment, of which Col. Jonathan Cranor was the commanding officer.

Besides, most of the colored volunteers from Randolph (of whom there were many) joined in such a way that their names do not appear on the record made by the Adjutant General's office as enlisting from Randolph, or, indeed, from the State of Indiana at all.

Very many, also, of the soldiers now residing in Randolph, enlisted from other counties, and many, too, even from other States, which fact causes the preparation of a full and accurate account of the soldiers of and in Randolph to be a task doubly and trebly difficult.

The Adjutant General's office is not to be blamed for its lack of information, since doubtless the reports of the regiments and companies have been given as they were furnished. Yet it is a matter of deep regret that the chief available source of statistical authority in this matter should be so incomplete and defective, not to say erroneous, as it even is, however, in some cases. Every possible effort was made by the Adjutant General's office to correct errors and to supply omissions, and, in great numbers of cases, with gratifying success; yet, in very many instances also, no additional or rectifying information has been obtained.

STATE RELIEF, ETC.

This branch of the subject is very extensive, and might well receive a far more elaborate discussion than can be attempted in this work. And it may be questioned by some whether, in a local history of a single county, any special mention of this department of military action should be made. But, to the writer of these articles at least, it seems clear that such action will be a thing especially appropriate, even in a history of Randolph County.

Since the work performed by the State of Indiana through the pre-eminent activity of Gov. Oliver P. Morton, assisted by his numerous subordinates, was greatly prominent throughout the entire war, and since, as will be related, one of our own citizens was closely connected with that work, almost from the very beginning of the conflict, it will be eminently in place to insert a brief account thereof in this history of Randolph County, and hence we proceed to the pleasing task. The war broke out so suddenly and rose so rapidly to gigantic proportions that the Government found itself without adequate means of equipment or of support.

The soldiers were hurried to the conflict, but the Nation, unused to war, knew not how to handle so vast a movement. The supplies, particularly of clothing, were scanty and tardily furnished. Gov. Morton was among the first to foresee and to attempt to provide for the destitution. August 20, 1861, he telegraphed from Washington to Indianapolis: "Urge Maj. Montgomery (United States Quartermaster at Indianapolis) to get overcoats of any good material, and not wait for a public letting. Do have them made at once. The men are suffering and I am distressed for them. Perhaps a few thousand can be forwarded by Capt. Dickerson at once from Cincinnati."

This urgency came none too soon. The men were already shivering under the damp and chilly nights of the mountains of West Virginia. This direction was given before any complaints from the troops had come to hand.

But in two days those complaints began to arrive. Maj. Montgomery failed to furnish a supply, but Capt. Dickerson, at Cincinnati, sent forward 4,000 overcoats in care of Gen. Rosecrans, then in command in Western Virginia. They did not arrive, however. September 14, 1861, Gen. Asahel Stone, Commissary General, was sent forward to assist in hunting them up; 1,200 were found and pushed through, but it was some weeks before the "tape" was broken and supplies in quantity were received. October 7, Brig. Gen. J. J. Reynolds, then commanding an Indiana brigade, telegraphed thus: "Clothing is coming forward. In a few days we shall have a supply for the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Seventeenth Regiments, except shoes and socks and caps—the last not so important—shoes and socks much needed. These regiments have suffered greatly, but not a man among them has any fault to find with the Governor of the State."

Gov. Morton saw that the men would suffer, especially for overcoats, and he resolved that they should be supplied, if "Uncle Sam" would pay, well; if not, the boys must have coats, anyhow. He went to New York and bought, through Hon. Robert Dale Owen, purchasing State agent, 29,000 overcoats. For a part he paid "regulation price"—$7.75, but for the rest he had to pay $9.25. Quartermaster Gen. Meigs refused to pay more than $7.75, and Gov. Morton said: "If the United States will not pay for them, Indiana will. The troops must not suffer." When complained of, Gov. Morton replied: "Well, the overcoats have been bought, no matter now by whom, so the men get them."

But other things must be had and in abundance. October 16, 1861, Gov. Morton appealed "to the patriotic women of Indiana for additional blankets, socks, gloves, mittens, woolen shirts and drawers," to be furnished at once and forwarded to the camps. This appeal was earnest, eloquent and patriotic, and not in vain.

The State Quartermaster General, J. H. Vajen, in May, 1862, reports in substance: "This proclamation met with a most cordial response, and many thousands of dollars worth of blankets, socks, gloves, mittens, shirts and drawers were forwarded, as also sheets, pillows, pads, bandages, lint and dressing-gowns, for hospital use, in so much that a circular was issued announcing that the supply was enough."

Indiana was the first to organize for temporary relief, under the energetic supervision of the State Commissary General, Asahel Stone, Esq. The duty of this agency was "to render all possible relief to our soldiers, especially to the sick and wounded, whether in transit, in hospitals or on the battle-field." By this agency, sanitary supplies, hospital stores, donated or purchased, surgeons, nurses, etc., were sent forward wherever needed, and Indiana was generally "first on the ground" to proffer a helping hand.

In 1862, it was realized that the war was going to last, and the "General Military Agency of Indiana" was established by the appointment of Dr. William Hannaman, of Indianapolis, a gentleman of large experience, integrity and humanity, as General Military Agent," December 16, 1862; and local agents were appointed in the army and elsewhere, who were directed to do "everything possible to be done for the comfort of the soldiers." Steamers were chartered to carry stores, surgeons and nurses and to bring home the sick and wounded. Boats were dispatched, heavily laden with vegetables, hospital stores, clothing, delicacies for sick and convalescent soldiers, etc., bringing home hundreds on hundreds of sick and wounded to hospitals and homes. Supplies were sent to the prisons. Claims for bounty, back pay, etc., were collected. The pay of the soldiers was conveyed to friends at home by hundreds of thousands of dollars. The good done by this and other agencies is beyond the power of language to express.

The State Sanitary Commission was established still earlier, February, 1862. Contributions were large and frequent. The order of Freemasons contributed at one time $10,000. The State Sanitary Fair, in the fall of 1863, netted $40,000. The results are reported by Dr. Hannaman thus:

On hand at organization—cash, $13,490.92.

Contributions in 1862—cash, $9,038.20; goods, $86,088.

Contributions in 1863—cash, $36,232.11; goods, $101,430.74.

Contributions to December, 1864—cash, $97,035.22; goods, $126,086.91.

Contributions to close of commission — cash, $91,774.30; goods, $45,394.38.

Total—Cash, $247,570.72: goods, $359,000.03.

Total to State Sanitary Commission, $606,570.78; contributions to United States Commission from Indiana, $16,049.50; contributions to soldiers' relief by counties, etc., $4,566,898.06, making in all above $5,000,000, besides vast amounts of which no record was ever kept.

During the year 1863 alone, seven steamers were sent down the Mississippi by the State Sanitary, as follows:

Capitola, George Merritt, to Vicksburg, February 19; contents, 454 packages stores, twenty-five female nurses, twenty-five surgeons; twenty-five Indiana regiments visited and supplied.

Lady Franklin, Dr. C. J. Woods, 1,000 packages, several nurses and surgeons.

Courier, Dr. Talbot Bullard and Gen. A. Stone, 500 packages, several nurses and surgeons. The steamer brought back a large number of sick and wounded soldiers. Four surgeons (among them Dr. Bullard) died on the trip or soon afterward.

Atlanta, Col. W. E. French, 200 packages, several surgeons and nurses. Brought back from Memphis 175 sick and wounded.

City Belle, Gen. A. Stone, 400 packages and a large company of surgeons and nurses, reaching Vicksburg July 4th, the day of the surrender.

Sunny Side, E. J. Putman, 1,100 packages and Dr. W. H. Wishard as surgeon; 200 sick soldiers were brought back.

City Belle, Dr. C. J. Woods, 2,000 packages; 100 sick came north on the return trip.

As a specimen of the work accomplished, we give the following concerning the City Belle:

December 19, 1863, left Cairo, Ill., for a trip down the Mississippi River. At Port Pillow, Fifty-second Regiment, left fourteen barrels potatoes, two barrels of onions, six barrels of apples, three barrels of turnips, four dozen cans of fruit. At Memphis, Twenty-fifth and Eighty-ninth Regiments, fifty barrels of potatoes, five of onions, five of turnips, two of crackers, thirty of apples, twenty dozen cans of fruit, four boxes of clothing. At Helena Hospital, 400 sick men, twenty barrels of potatoes, nine of onions, fifteen of apples, five of turnips, twenty dozen cans of fruit. At Vicksburg, Twenty-third and Fifty-third Regiments, forty barrels of potatoes, twenty-six of apples, ten of onions, ten of turnips, two of cabbage and twenty dozen canned fruit. Vicksburg General Hospital, forty barrels potatoes, thirty of apples, ten of turnips, twenty dozen canned fruit, one box bottled whisky. At Natchez Marine Hospital, three barrels of potatoes, two of onions, four of apples, one of crackers, two dozen canned fruit. At Baton Rouge, Twenty-first Regiment, forty barrels potatoes, ten of onions, twenty-five apples, five corn meal, ten turnips. Baton Rouge Hospital, one barrel of cabbages, one of pickled cabbage, one of crackers, four of apples, two onions, four potatoes, one turnip, one box bottled whisky, two dozen canned fruit, four boxes clothing, two boxes reading matter. At New Orleans, 441 barrels of potatoes, 438 barrels of apples, 121 onions, 148 turnips, 13 of crackers, 112 boxes canned fruit, 23 boxes bottled whisky, 160 boxes reading matter and clothing—2,012 packages in all, mostly barrels. October 24, 1863, eleven boxes of clothing and one bale of blankets were shipped to Richmond for Union prisoners; 200 caps, 200 shirts, 200 pair of drawers, 200 pair of socks, 200 blouses, 700 blankets, 200 pair of trousers, 200 great coats, 200 pair of shoes. Why so large an amount of supplies was left by the City Belle as above at New Orleans is not explained. Doubtless there was a sufficient reason; perhaps many regiments were stationed there at the time.

James H. Turner, Agent Indiana Sanitary Commission, at Chattanooga, during Sherman's advance to Atlanta, summer of 1864, during the period between February 15 and September 1, distributed as follows: 2,640 barrels of potatoes, 15,985 pounds of dried apples, 1,295 gallons of kraut, 1,168 cans of fruit, 1,278 pounds of dried peaches, 442 bottles of wine, 137 bottles of whisky, 988 bushels of onions, 461 dozen eggs, 493 pounds of butter, 211 gallons apple-butter, 157 pounds small fruit, 132 dozen lemons, 220 bottles ale, 558 pounds crackers, 35 pounds rice, 1,800 pounds corn meal, 100 pounds tobacco, 19 bed sacks, 230 gallons pickles, 35 bottles cordials; 995 shirts, 410 drawers, 124 sheets, 77 pillows, 182 pillow slips, 9 comforts, 3,149 pounds rags, 4,055 bandages, 355 fans, 82 pants, 35 combs, 445 handkerchiefs, 543 pairs socks, 228 towels, 308 pads, 450 comfort-bags, 25 boxes reading matter.

TRANSMISSION OF MONEY.

Thomas A. Goodwin, agent, came North, June 2, 1862, from the Army of the Tennessee with $125,000. July 9, 1862, he brought $31,000.

October 5, 1862, B. F. Tuttle reports $59,050 from Camp Nevin, Nashville and Woodstock.

Gen. A. Stone, in January, 1862, brought home for the Eighth, Twenty-fourth and Twenty-sixth, $15,484.60.

In March, 1862, Gen. Stone brought from Pea Ridge, Ark., for the Eighth, Eighteenth and Twenty-second, $58,049.55.

During the course of the war, 40,060 packages, containing about $2,000,000, were sent home through the State agents without expense to the senders (except the expressage from the agent's residence) and without the loss of a single package.

SOLDIERS' HOME—INDIANAPOLIS.

June, 1862, a building was erected, 150x24 feet, with a kitchen twenty-four feet square; 100 feet were fitted with bunks. In the fall, another building, 250x24 feet, for a dining-hall, seating about 1,000 men, was added. In 1863, a third building was made, 150x24 feet, for a hospital. In April and May, 1864, two more were built, 175x28 feet each, accommodating 1,000 men with bunks. The "Home" could then lodge 1,800 and feed 8,000, yet Gen. Stone says there were times when not half could be accommodated that needed to be cared for. The saving in rations alone amounted, from August, 1862, to January, 1865, to $71,310.22. Total meals furnished in three years and ten months, 3,777,791, showing an average per day in 1862 of 1,400; 1863, 2,240; 1864, 4,498; 1865, 2,842; 1866, 463.

The above brief and imperfect statement gives but a slight idea of the importance and magnitude of the operations of Indiana as a State in aid of the Federal Government in suppressing the rebellion.

Indiana began the movement of separate State co-operation; was chiefly first at every place of need and continued to be a model of promptness, efficiency and economy, and, in the execution of this vast work, under the hand of our noble war Governor, Gen. Asahel Stone, our respected fellow-citizen, was proved a valuable, efficient and successful assistant.

BOUNTIES, RELIEF, ETC.

Very soon after the war commenced, the fact became apparent that great and speedy efforts would be needed for the relief of the families of the soldiers. Their wages were not enough for the purpose, those wages were often greatly in arrears, and to send the money home when obtained was nearly or quite impossible. The Legislature of Indiana passed an act, authorizing counties, cities and towns to afford relief when needed and to levy a tax for that special object. Great sums were raised under this act and expended for bounties and relief. Often bonds were issued and funds obtained by the sale of the bonds. Townships also acted and raised and expended large amounts for the support of soldiers' families.

This issue being of doubtful legality, the Legislature passed another act, March 3, 1865, legalizing the action of cities, towns and villages, as also townships when approved by the County Commissioners, and directing the levy of a tax for payment. The next day, still another act became a law, levying 3 mills on the dollar for the years 1865 and 1866, to aid sick soldiers, soldiers' families, etc. The Legislature passed several laws evincing a similar generous and patriotic spirit and a sincere and earnest purpose to discharge the whole duty of the State to her suffering children.

COUNTY RELIEF, ETC.

The loyal citizens throughout the whole North were active and enthusiastic from first to last in rendering assistance in every possible way to the soldiers in the field and to their families at home. Much of their aid went through the State Commissioners, but no small amount was sent forward privately as individual benefactions to special friends or the companies or regiments to which they belonged. The author of Delaware County History, lately published, has collected much information of this sort as to that county. Perhaps a similar account might be obtained concerning Randolph County, if the requisite pains were to be taken. The author regrets that time has failed him to make the needed researches in this particular.

The statistics found in the Adjutant General's report as to relief are as follows:

Randolph County, $49,397.53; townships, $45,050; total, $94,447.53; Henry County (all), $82,178.09; Grant County (all), $31,546.25; Adams County, $18,359.44; Allen County, $73,853.22; Cass County, $82,624.93.

Only eleven counties in the State have exceeded Randolph in the amount raised by taxation for soldiers' relief, to wit: Decatur, Delaware, Hamilton, Jackson, La Porte, Marion, St. Joseph, Tippecanoe, Vigo, Wabash, Wayne.

Thus it will appear that this county has come fully up to the State at large in rendering relief to soldiers' families.

Doubtless like other railroad towns, Union City and Winchester fed the soldier as they passed to and fro on the trains along the railroad, and collections of money and goods were made throughout the townships and the county at large for sanitary and relief purposes, and the loyal people gave freely of their means to cheer their heroes at the front and their dependant ones at home. Possibly at some future day it may be practicable to collect details of information as to this most interesting topic, but for the present we must forbear.

NATIONAL ACTION, ETC.

No nation probably has dealt so liberally as has our own with her soldiers of the war of 1861.

1. The wages were uncommonly large for the most part—$13 and $16 besides full support.

2. The supplies were abundant and excellent.

3. Large bounties were given by the Nation, by counties and otherwise.

4. Great sums were expended for relief.

5. Immense amounts were applied in their behalf, through sanitary commissions, national, State and voluntary.

6. Large quantities of bounty land have been offered and generous pensions have been secured to the crippled and disabled soldiers.

Homes have been established for the helpless, which are supported in a style of excellence and even magnificence unparalleled among the nations of the earth.

In many other ways, by hospitals, nurses, etc., labor and money have been expended for their benefit both during and since the war. Thus the Nation has shown her generous, motherly kindness, and declared that the soldiers were her constant care. Suffering and distress have, of course, existed nevertheless; yet wonderful efforts have been exerted without ceasing to help and comfort, to relieve and bless. The National bounties are stated below.

It is understood to be a fact that the soldiers at the Dayton Soldiers' Home, and presumably at the other institutions of the kind throughout the country, are allowed to have and enjoy full possession and full control of their pensions, in addition to the support furnished them at the "Home" at which they may be residing.

NATIONAL BOUNTIES.

AMOUNT.	AUTHORITY.	TO WHOM.	TIME.
$100	Act July 22, 1861	All Volunteers	To July, 1864.
400	General order July 25, 1863	Re-enlisted Volunteers	June 25, 1863, to April 1, 1864
300	Circular Oct. 24, 1863.	Recruits in old Regiments	Oct. 21, 1863, to April 1, 1864
300	Telegram Dec. 24, 1863	Recruits in any 3-year organization	Dec. 21, 1863, to April 1, 1864
100	Act July, 1864, Cir. 27.	Volunteers one year	July 19, 1864, to July 1, 1865
200	Act July, 1864, Cir. 27.	Volunteers two years	July 19, 1864, to July 1, 1865
300	Act July, 1864, Cir. 27.	Volunteers three years	July 19, 1864, to July 1, 1865
300	Order 287, Nov. 28, 1864	First Army Veteran Corps	Nov. 28, 1864, to July 1, 1865
10	Letters Nov. 29, Dec. 22, 1863	Colored Recruits	April, 1861, to Oct. 24, 1863.
100	Act of Congress	All Colored Volunteers	April, 1861, to Oct. 24, 1863.
10	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers new Regiments	Oct. 24, 1863, to Dec. 24, 1863
100	Act of Congress	All Colored Volunteers	April 1, 1864, to June 1, 1864
300	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers old Regts.	Oct. 25, 1863, to March 31, 1864
100	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers liable to draft	Oct. 17 to Oct. 24, 1863.
300	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers new Regts	Dec. 25, 1863, to Mar. 31, 1864
300	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers old Regts liable to Draft	Oct. 25, 1863, to Mar. 31, 1864
300	Act of Congress	Colored Regiment (new Regiment), liable to Draft	Dec. 25, 1863, to Mar. 31, 1864
100	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers one year	July 19, 1864, to July 1, 1865
200	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers two years	July 19, 1864, to July 1, 1865
300	Act of Congress	Colored Volunteers three years	July 19, 1864, to July 1, 1865

Besides this bounty land is given to each soldier, and also the length of service in the army is deducted from the time otherwise requisite to fix a homestead claim.

COUNTY BOUNTY.

According to the Adjutant General's report, Randolph had given up to that time $115,705. In this respect other counties have far exceeded her. But the fact that large bounty had to be offered by the county is not a proof of superior loyalty, but rather otherwise. Fifty-four counties exceed Randolph in the amount of bounty reported as paid by public taxation. One exceeds a million dollars ($1,224,000); two average $500,000; seven more above $300,000; seventeen more exceed $200,000; twenty-seven more above $115,000. These statistics, though accurate, may, perhaps, not be full, since in some cases, at least, the counties have expended money in this matter in later years. For instance, Delaware County, in the Adjutant General's report, is rated at $230,905.75, whereas she actually did expend at least $360,000, her full amount for bounty having been $181,900.

The whole sum throughout the State for bounty and relief, up to 1869, is estimated at fully $20,000,000—a wondrous sum, willingly paid for the safety of the Federal Union, besides, of course, twenty times that amount in public National expenditure as the share of Indiana in the general burdens endured on account of the war.

The National pensions are given briefly as follows:

NATIONAL PENSIONS.

All civilized nations pension their injured or disabled soldiers or provide for those dependent upon such. The survivors (as also their unmarried widows) of the war of 1812 receive $8 per month. Those injured or disabled in other military service receive sums differing in monthly amount, rising in some extreme cases, as for the loss of both hands, eyes or feet, to $72 per month; and those dependent upon such soldiers obtain, in case of death, the amount which he would have received if living, with, in some cases, an additional $2 monthly for each child under sixteen years of age. The Nation has, in addition to giving pensions established several "Soldiers' Homes," at which disabled soldiers may receive a complete support. The "Home" nearest Randolph County is at Dayton, Ohio, at which, as in like manner elsewhere, no pains or expense is spared to furnish maintenance and comfort to these "heroes of the Nation," and in these "Homes" several thousand enfeebled or disabled men are enjoying the bountiful supply furnished by the National Government to such crippled and helpless ones.

Such struggles, such burdens borne, such sacrifices made, men, money, means, so freely, so lavishly, so persistently given—such hardships, perils, sufferings, wounds, imprisonment and death so heroically endured—such fearful things undergone through four long and bloody years over the face of a vast continent, show the determination of a mighty people that the integrity of the Nation shall be forever inviolate. Loyalty to the Union lies deep and steadfast in the hearts of the people, and in that grand, that sublime conviction, Randolph County, like the rest of our noble commonwealth, is settled and grounded in a purpose firm, steadfast, unalterable! Sic sit semper (so be it always).

ACCOUNT OF REGIMENTS.

Eighth Regiment Infantry, three months.—The Eighth Regiment of Infantry of Indiana Volunteers was mustered in the service April 25, 1861, William P. Benton, Colonel. The muster-in took place at Indianapolis, and the muster-out at the same place, August 6, 1861. The statistics of the regiment are as follows:

Companies, 10, A to K inclusive; officers, 37; men, 747; total, 784; died, 7; deserters, 15; accounted for, 784.

Each company consisted of seventy-four men. They were enlisted as follows:

Company A, April 21, Wayne County.
Company B, April 23, Grant County.
Company C, April 24, Randolph County.
Company D, April 21, Delaware County.
Company E, April 22, Madison County.
Company F, April 25, Henry County.
Company G, April 22, Wayne County.
Company H, April 25, Wayne County.
Company I, April 21, Hancock County.
Company K, April 23, Wabash County.

The regiment was made up of three from Wayne, one from Grant, one from Randolph, one from Delaware, one from Wabash, one from Madison, one from Hancock and one from Henry.

They remained in camp at Indianapolis until June 19, 1861, when they were ordered to Western Virginia, which was reached by rail via Cincinnati, Marietta and Parkersburg. Remaining at Clarksburg two days, the regiment marched thirty miles, to Buckhannon, to find the rebels, who had, however, moved to Rich Mountain. Thither the troops marched July 9, and lay in camp July 10 in front of the foe, ascending the mountain the next day; fought the battle of Rich Mountain July 11, 1861, driving the rebels from their position on the mountain, and sustaining a loss of three killed and seventeen wounded.

Going into camp at Beverly for two weeks, on the 24th of July, they returned to Indianapolis, and were soon afterward mustered out of service, August 6, 1861.

The troops in the campaign in Western Virginia performed good service. At the expiration of the term, Maj. Gen. McClellan addressed Gov. Morton as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF OCCUPATION,
WEST VIRGINIA, CAMP NEAR BEVERLY,
July 21, 1861.

Gov. O. P. MORTON, Indianapolis, Ind.:

GOVERNOR—I have directed the three months' regiments from Indiana to move to Indianapolis; there to be mustered out and re-organized for three years' service.

I cannot permit them to return to you without again expressing my high appreciation of the distinguished valor and endurance of the Indiana troops, and my hope that a short time only will elapse before I shall have the pleasure of knowing that they are again ready for the field.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major General United States Army.

Brig. Gen. Morris also issued an address to his brigade, an extract from which is here given:

"The General tenders to all his thanks for the soldierly bearing, the cheerful performance of every duty and the patient endurance of the privations and fatigues of campaign life which all have so constantly exhibited. * * * They have cheerfully endured the fatigues of long and dreary marches by day and night, through rain and storm; they have borne the exhaustion of hunger for the sake of the country. Their labor and sufferings were not in vain. The foe they met and vanquished. Your friends welcome you with pride and exultation. Your State and country acknowledge the value of your labors."

After the dissolution of the regiment, the great body of its members re-entered service in the Eighth Indiana Infantry, enlisted for three years. The officers and men from Randolph County belonging to the Eighth Indiana Three Months' Regiment are as follows: Lieutenant Colonel, Silas Colgrove, mustered out; re-entered service as Colonel Twenty-seventh Regiment. (Where no time is given the person was mustered out at the close of service.

Company C, Eighth, three months—Captain, Silas Colgrove, promoted Lieutenant Colonel April 26, 1861, Thomas J. Lee, resigned; First Lieutenant, E M. Ives, mustered out, term expired; Second Lieutenant, Allen O. Neff, mustered out, time expired; re-entered service as Sergeant in the Eighth Regiment, three years; promoted Second Lieutenant.

Non-commissioned officers—Jonathan B. Harrison, First Sergeant; Samuel Humphrey, Michael P. Voris, Thomas S. Kennon, Sergeants; John McConnell, Benjamin Shoemaker. James Addington, Sylvanus White, Corporals; Jackson Keller, John W. Thomas, Musicians.

Privates—Joseph A. Anderson, John R. Anderson, Ezra Bond, James N. Bright, William Burris, Harrison Burris, Jefferson Bush, Hiram Bromagem, Nelson Barnes, Joseph W. Cox, Edgar Craig, Justice G. Crowell, Eli Edwards, John Edwards, John Frackler, George W. Fisher, Noah Freck, Prentice Garrett, Laban E. Garner, Thomas W. George, Harrison Hill, Kennedy Hollingsworth, John C. Hollowell, T. P. Hollingsworth, James E. Huston, Joseph R. Jackson, John Jones, James Jones, James E. H. Jones, Samuel G. Kearney, Thomas Kent, Isaiah W. Kemp, John Kizer, William F. Locke, John D. Lytle, Jethro Macy, Charles McGuire, George W. McKinney, Thomas B. McIntyre, Nathan B. Maxwell, Anthony Mincer, James M. Moore, Robert H. Morgan, Uriah Mock, George W. McCormick, George W. Price, Francis M. Puckett, Lafayette Pursley, John C. Rush, Reuben S. Scott, Charles Souke, Edward Stanton, Charles M. Stine, Jefferson Stoner, Samuel Strahan, David B. Strahan, James M. Thomas, Henry T. Way, Jesse Way, Samuel H. Webb, William H. Weaver, Samuel Williams, William H. Williams, John Yost.

Company G—Second Lieutenant, George W. H. Riley, promoted Captain Company C; Captain in Eighth Three Years' Infantry; also Lieutenant Colonel, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Indiana Regiment. No losses or casualties occurred in Company C. Every man came back safe and sound as he went out, leaving his country better for the peril he had undergone in her behalf, and happy in the experience he had gained in the brief campaign spent among the bluffs and mountains of Western Virginia.

SIXTH INDIANA INFANTRY (THREE YEARS).

Was mustered in at Indianapolis September 20, 1861; Colonel, T. T. Crittenden. Mustered out at Chattanooga September 22, 1864. Officers, 46; men, 950; recruits, 126; died, 242; deserters, 48; unaccounted for, 10; total, 1,118.

The Sixth Regiment was re-organized from the Sixth Three Months' Regiment September 20, 1861. Its first service was to cross to Louisville, Ky., then threatened by Buckner, which it performed the very day of its organization, being the first body of troops to enter Kentucky from a Northern State. They marched to Muldraugh's Hill, forty miles distant, camping near Elizabethtown. The Sixth was assigned to Rousseau's Brigade, of McCook's Division, and marched with the division to Munfordsville and Bowling Green, and, in March, 1862, to Nashville; March 29, 1862, they left for the Tennessee River, reaching Shiloh April 7, and fighting bravely in the battle of Shiloh April 8, saving a battery from capture, and with a determined charge aiding to turn the tide of victory. The regiment was in the siege and battle of Corinth.

They then marched with Buell's army through Tuscumbia, Huntsville, Florence and Stevenson to Nashville and to Louisville, arriving October 2, 1862. Thence they returned to Tennessee, marching with Rosecrans upon Murfreesboro, and fighting in the battle of Stone River December 31, 1862, January 1 and 2, 1863.

The regiment campaigned between Murfreesboro and Chattanooga during the summer of 1863. It was at Chickamauga September 19 and 20, Col. Baldwin being killed on the first day. It skirmished at Brown's Fer y October 27, and fought at Mission Ridge November 25. They marched into East Tennessee and remained till the spring of 1864.

The gallant Sixth returned to Northern Georgia for the Atlanta campaign, taking part at Tunnel Hill, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Buzzard Roost, Dallas, New Hope, Allatoona Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain, Marietta and before Atlanta.

They returned to Chattanooga in August and the body of the regiment was mustered out September 22, 1864. The veterans (few in number) and the recruits were transferred to the Sixty-eighth Indiana. When that regiment was mustered out, nineteen of the old Sixth were found still in service, and they were again transferred to the Forty-fourth, and were mustered out with that regiment September 14, 1865.

The engagements of the Sixth were as follows: Philippi, Va., June 3, 1861 (three months' service); Carrick's Ford, Va., July 12, 1861 (three months' service); Shiloh, Tenn., April 6, 7, 1862; Corinth, Miss., siege, April 11, to May 30, 1862; Stone River, Tenn., December 31, 1862, to January 1, 2, 1863; Chickamauga, Tenn., September 19, 20, 1863; Brown's Ferry, Tenn., October 27, 1863; Mission Ridge, Ga., November 25, 1863; Tunnel Hill, Ga., May 7, 1864; Rocky Face Ridge, Ga., May 6, 1864; Buzzard's Roost, Ga., May 8, 1864; Resacca, Ga., May 15, 1864; New Hope Church, Ga., May 25, 1864; Dallas, Ga., May 27, 1864; Allatoona Ridge, Ga., 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, Ga., June 27, 1864; Marietta, Ga., July 3, 1864; Atlanta, Ga., July 21, to September 2, 1864.

The service rendered by the Sixth was honorable and faithful, and it was nobly and cheerfully performed.

MEMBERS FROM RANDOLPH COUNTY.

Company H, Sixth Indiana, three years—William H. Johnson, wounded at Chickamauga, Tenn., September 20, 1853.

Hiram Phillips, appointed Corporal, mustered out September 22, 1864.

James Chandler, died October 1, 1863, wounded at Chickamauga.

SEVENTH INDIANA INFANTRY (THREE YEARS).

Mustered in at Indianapolis September 13, 1861; Colonel, Ebenezer Dumont. Mustered out in the field September 20, 1864. Officers, 45; men, 1,001; recruits, 207; veterans, 46; died, 212; deserters, 26; unaccounted for, 27; total, 1,299.

The Seventh Regiment was re-organized for three years September 13, 1861, under Col. Dumont, and moved immediately to Western Virginia, joining Gen. Reynolds at Cheat Mountain October 3, 1861; it was in the battle at Greenbrier, Va., and shortly afterward marched into Shenandoah Valley, camping there through the winter.

The regiment fought at Winchester Heights March 30, 1862, and at Port Republic, Va., June 9, 1862, and at Front Royal, Va., June 12, 1862. Marching under Gen. Shields to Fredericksburg and back to the Shenandoah, it was assigned to Gen. McDowell's Division. They were with Pope in the Army of Virginia, being engaged at Slaughter Mountain August 9, 1862, and at Second Bull Run August 30, 1862. They pursued Lee into Maryland, and fought at Antietam, Md., September 17, 1862, with a loss of two killed and eight wounded. At Ashby's Gap, Va., their loss was four killed and six wounded. It took part in the great battle of Fredericksburg, Va., under Burnside, December 13, 1862. They were at Chancellorsville, Va., May 2 to 5, 1863, and at Gettysburg, Penn., July 1 to 4, 1863, losing heavily in both battles. The regiment was engaged at Mine Run, Va., November 30, 1863. After camping at Culpeper, Va., till the spring of 1864, they moved with Grant in the fearful campaign of that awful year through the "great and terrible Wilderness" and most of the sanguinary battles during that fearful summer. They fought in the campaign of 1864 in front of Richmond, as given below:

Wilderness, May 5, 6; 1864; Laurel Hill, May 7, 1864; Spottsylvania, May 10, 1864; Po River, May 10 to 12, 1864; North Anna, May 25, 1864; Bethesda Church, May 30, 31, 1864; Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864. The assault on Petersburg was made June 16, 1864, and the Seventh was in that fierce but unsuccessful attack. It remained in the siege of Petersburg till August 18, and then moved to cut the Weldon Railroad, and took part in the fight at Yellow House, Va., August 19, 1864. On the 23d of September, 1864, the Seventh was consolidated with the Nineteenth, under the name of the Nineteenth, and this new regiment again with the new Twentieth (made up of the Fourteenth and Twentieth united) October 18, 1864.

Its members were mustered out with the Twentieth Indiana July 12, 1865, returning to Indianapolis for payment and final discharge. Its battles were these:

Greenbrier, Va., October 3, 1861; Winchester Heights, Va., March 23, 1862; Port Republic, Va., June 9, 1862; Front Royal, Va., June 12, 1862; Slaughter Mountain, Va., August 9, 1862; Second Bull Run, Va., August 30, 1862; Antietam, Va., September 17, 1862; Ashby's Gap, Va., November 2, 1862; Fredericksburg, Va., December 13, 1862; Chancellorsville, Va., May 2 to 5, 1863; Gettysburg, Penn., July 1 to 4, 1863; Mine Run, Va., November 30, 1863; Wilderness, Va., May 5, 6, 1864; Laurel Hill, Va., May 8, 1864; Spottsylvania, Va., May 10, 12, 1864; Po River, Va., May 8 to 10, 1864; North Anna, Va., May 25, 1864; Bethesda Church, Va., May 30, 31, June 1, 1864; Cold Harbor, Va., June 3, 1862; assault on Petersburg, Va., June 16, 1864; siege of Petersburg, Va., June 17, August 18, 1864; Weldon Railroad, Va., August 18, 1864; Yellow House, Va., August 19, 1864.

A formidable list of battles indeed for a single regiment! Twenty-three engagements, and among them Second Bull Run, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor and Petersburg. The blood curdles at the heart only to think of so fearful an experience of three such long years of hardship, peril and bloodshed as was undergone by the heroic and unconquerable Seventh Indiana.

The men in the Seventh Indiana (three years) from Randolph County are as follows:

Company B, Seventh Indiana Infantry—John M. Bray, discharged February 9, 1862; disability.

Wesley Bray, transferred to Twentieth Regiment; died.

Eli Gregory, transferred to Twentieth Regiment; captured; died in Salisbury Prison November 22, 1864.

EIGHTH INDIANA INFANTRY (THREE YEARS).

Mustered in at Indianapolis September 5, 1861; Colonel, William P. Benton. Mustered out at Savannah, Ga., August 28, 1865. Officers, 46; men, 1,000; recruits, 177; re-enlisted, 480; unassigned recruits, 17; died, 245; deserted, 75; unaccounted for, 47; total, 1,672.

The Eighth Indiana Regiment of infantry left Indianapolis September 10, 1861, arriving at St. Louis the next day. Joining Gen. Fremont's army shortly, they marched to Jefferson City, reaching that town September 14, staying there a week, and while there being united with the brigade commanded by Col. Jeff. C. Davis, of the Twenty-second Indiana Volunteers. September 22, the regiment set out for Springfield. Reaching that place in fourteen days, they returned to Otterville in seven days. At Warrensburg, Mo , they aided in capturing 1,300 rebels, December 17, 1861. Returning to Otterville, the regiment encamped till January 24, 1862, and then joined Gen. Curtis at Springfield, continuing the march to Cross Timbers, Ark., soon after which the Eighth participated in the great battle of Pea Ridge, Ark., March 6, 7 and 8, 1862. Remaining at Cross Timbers nearly a month, the regiment crossed the Ozark Mountains, marched down White River Valley, and so to Batesville, Ark. They made a halt for two months at Sulphur Rock. Helena on the Mississippi was reached July 13, 1862. This march was a severe journey, provisions being very scarce and hard to get. Four ears of corn and a little meat were often a day's rations. On this march the battle of Cotton Plant was fought.

In August, the battle of Austin took place; October 6, 1862, they were put under command of Gen. Steele, went to Sulphur Hill, near St. Louis, thence to Ironton, where they arrived October 11. The regiment was kept on the march to and fro in Southeast Missouri till March 5, 1863 They were then sent to Milliken's Bend, where they were assigned to Benton's Brigade, in Carr's Division of the Thirteenth Corps, McClernand commanding. April 29, 1863, the regiment crossed the Mississippi, and helped to fight the battles near Port Gibson, losing thirty-two; they were at Jackson May 14; at Champion Hills May 16; at Black River Bridge May 17, and in the siege of Vicksburg from May 19 till July 4.

July 5, the regiment went again to Jackson. The place was captured and the troops returned to Vicksburg July 24, remaining there till August 20. They were then ordered to Carrollton, near New Orleans, by steamer, as also across the country through the Teche region, under Gen. Banks, and thence via Berwick City over the waters of the Gulf to Texas. November 17, the fort on Mustang Island, near Aransas Pass, was taken by the Union troops, and, November 27, Fort Esperanza was captured.

They went thence to Indianola, and there re-enlisted as veterans, January 1, 1864, 417 out of 517 being mustered into the new organization. Before this time, the losses by death in the regiment were as follows: Killed in action, 48; died of wounds, 32; died of disease, 137; total, 217. Of course, a larger number still had been discharged for disability, while yet many recruits had joined their ranks.

The regiment in the spring received a furlough and reached Indianapolis April 22. In May, they returned to the South, went to Morganza Bend, July 27, and defeated the confederates at Atchafalaya July 28. Soon afterward, this veteran regiment was transferred from the extreme South to the army on the Atlantic seaboard. They reached Washington City August 12, 1864, being sent immediately to Berryville, Va, and joining the Nineteenth Corps. They were with Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley campaign, being present in the battles of Opequan, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek, September 19 and 22 and October 19. January 16, 1865, the regiment left for Savannah, Ga., by way of Baltimore, reaching the former place January 26, 1865, after a rail and steamer trip of ten days. It was retained on duty in Georgia till August, 1865.

They were mustered out (probably at Savannah) August 28, 1865. They arrived at Indianapolis September 17, 1865, under Col. John R. Polk, with fourteen officers and 245 men.

Gov. Morton addressed the returned veterans in words of blended welcome and farewell, as they were assembled in his presence in the capitol, and that heroic band of faithful comrades, many of whom had gone through fire and flood together and traversed a continent in company, gave each to each the parting hand and sought each for himself his home and family and friends.

The travels of the Eighth were a marvel. To St. Louis, Jefferson, Springfield; to Cross Timbers, Pea Ridge; across through the Arkansas swamps to Helena; back to St. Louis again; down the river to Vicksburg, thence to New Orleans; through Louisiana to Texas, home on a furlough, and to New Orleans; thence by a single movement to the eastern slope of the Alleghanies and the sea; to the Shenandoah and to Georgia, and at last, "When that cruel war was over," they made just one more movement, from the waters of the Gulf to the lovely valley of the Ohio, and to the homes of their childhood and the abodes of their youth and manhood.

The engagements in which the Eighth took part are given below in a connected view:

Warrensburg, Mo., December 17, 1861; Pea Ridge, Ark., March 6, 7, 8, 1862; Cotton Plant, Ark., July 7, 1862; Austin,

Miss., August, 1862; Port Gibson, Miss., May 1, 1863; Jackson, Miss., May 14, 1863; Champion Hills, May 16, 1863; Black River Bridge, May 17, 1863; siege of Vicksburg, May 19 to July 4, 1863; siege of Jackson, July 9 to 16, 1863; Mustang Island, Texas, November 17, 1863; Fort Esperanza, Texas, November 17, 1863; Atchafalaya, La., July 28, 1864; Opequan, Va., September 19, 1864; Fisher's Hill, Va., September 22, 1864; Cedar Creek, Va., October 19, 1864.

The officers and soldiers from Randolph County in the Eighth Indiana Infantry (three years), are as follows:

Regimental officers—Assistant Surgeon, George W. Bruce, resigned January 26, 1863.

Company G, Eighth Indiana—Captain, George W. H. Riley, resigned March 4, 1863; Second Lieutenant, Jesse W. Way, promoted First Lieutenant; resigned November 13, 1863; Benaiah C. Hoyt, First Sergeant, reduced to Fifth Sergeant; wounded at Pea Ridge, discharged March 4, 1863, disability; William H. Keller, Sergeant, veteran, promoted Second Lieutenant, promoted First Lieutenant, promoted Captain, mustered out August 28, 1865 (W. H. K. is from Cambridge City); Michael P. Voris, Sergeant, discharged September 25, 1862; Allen O. Neff, Sergeant, promoted Second Lieutenant: wounded at Pea Ridge, promoted First Lieutenant, resigned June 18, 1863.

Corporals—Charles C. Smith, appointed Hospital Steward April 1, 1862; Samuel H. Webb, wounded at Pea Ridge, veteran; died October 22, 1864, of wounds; William Pogue, veteran; mustered out August 28, 1865; Jefferson Bush, discharged March 12, 1863, disability; James M. Thomas, discharged October 27, 1862; disability; Stanton J. Peelle, discharged for promotion as Second Lieutenant in the Fifty-seventh Regiment.

Musicians—William Farra, veteran, mustered out August 28, 1865; Henry C. Voris, wounded at Pea Ridge, veteran, mustered out August 28, 1865.

Privates (mustered out with regiment August 28, 1865)—Michael Doyle, veteran; John Farra, veteran; Isaac Gillum, veteran; Elijah Harlan, veteran, appointed Corporal; Kenworthy C. Hollingsworth, veteran, appointed Corporal, captured at Cedar Creek; Nathaniel Pugh, veteran; Edward Stanton, veteran; Sylvanus White, veteran; William W. Smith, veteran.

George Bartholomew, mustered out Sept. 4, 1864; Mansfield W. Bly, transferred to Mississippi Marine Brigade March 12, 1863, discharged; Henry C. Brandon, died May 5, 1863, of wounds received at Port Gibson, Miss.; Samuel Bumpas, discharged November 28, 1863; Thomas W. Coffin, veteran, mustered out June 7, 1865; Joseph S. Duer, appointed Corporal, wounded at Vicksburg, mustered out September 4, 1864; George W. Fisher, discharged October 16, 1862, disability; John Ford, mustered out June 14, 1865; Grover G. Fowler, discharged for wounds at Pea Ridge, Ark.; John French, died at Union City, Ind.; Thomas Gillum, record indefinite; Edward Fray, discharged December 23, 1862, disability; George W. Grimes, wounded at Pea Ridge, discharged March 17, 1863, disability; Abner Hinshaw, died at St. Louis January 7, 1863, disease; John T. Jenkins, veteran, killed at Opequan, Va., September 19, 1864; Richard E. Jenkins, died at St Louis, Mo., April 16, 1863, disease; Benjamin Jordan, mustered out September 4, 1864; Wesley Jordan, mustered out September 4, 1864; Lewis Mock, veteran, record indefinite; Isaac C. Moody, died, date unknown; Charles C. B. Mullen, record indefinite; Clark Predmore, mustered out September 4, 1864; William Pullman, wounded at Pea Ridge and Vicksburg, mustered out September 4, 1864; Michael Rariden, died at Union City, Ind., December 20, 1863; James C. Smith, discharged December 31, 1861, disability; James T. Smith, wounded at Pea Ridge, mustered out September 4, 1864; George W. Starbuck, record indefinite; William Stine, discharged January 8, 1863, minority; Isaac C. Sutton, discharged August 9, 1862, disability; Martin R. Thomas, died at Winchester, Ind., August 10, 1862, disease; William Tutor, record indefinite; Henry T. Warner, died at St. Louis, Mo., October 10, 1862, disease; Samuel Wilson, died at St. Louis, Mo., November, 1861, disease; Charles Wood, died at Humansville, Mo., November 12, 1862, disease; Christian H. Wright, discharged May 17, 1862, disability.

Recruits—William H. Ashville, mustered out June 14, 1865; Alexander Jordan, veteran, captured at Cedar Creek, Va., October 19, 1864, mustered out September 22, 1865; Charles McGuire, died at St. Louis February 22, 1863, disease; Anthony Mincer, died June 7, 1863, of wounds received at Vicksburg; John W. Page, veteran, mustered out June 14, 1865; Francis M. Puckett, veteran, discharged June 14, 1865; Isaac A. Sharp, discharged March 17, 1863, disability; Ezra Smith, discharged December 31, 1862, disability; John R. Smith, transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps May 31, 1864; Letaman A. White, transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps May 31, 1864.

NINTH INDIANA INFANTRY (THREE YEARS).

Mustered in at La Porte, Ind., September 5, 1861; Colonel, Robert H. Milroy. Mustered out in Texas September 28, 1865. Officers, 47; men, 1,010; recruits, 747: veterans, 291; died, 351; deserted, 125; unaccounted for, 18; total, 2,195.

The regiment went first to Western Virginia, encamping on Cheat Mountain summit for winter quarters, participating in the battle of Greenbrier October 3, and of Alleghany December 13, 1861. January 9, 1862, they marched to Fetterman, Va., remaining till February 19, 1862. They were then sent by rail to Cincinnati and to Nashville by steamer, joining Gen. Buell's army. March 29, 1862, the regiment marched to Tennessee River, taking part in the second day's fight at Shiloh, April 7, 1862; thence to Corinth, Miss. They marched thence by Athens, Ala., and Franklin and Murfreesboro, Tenn., to Nashville; thence to Bowling Green and back to Nashville; thence by Louisville and in pursuit of Bragg to Perryville; thence by Danville and Crab Orchard to the Wildcat Mountains and to Nashville. In these marches, the Ninth Regiment was engaged in the battles of Perryville, Danville and Wildcat Mountain. They afterward marched to Murfreesboro and were at Stone River, Tenn., marching thence over the Cumberland Mountains and the Tennessee River to Chattanooga. They fought at Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Mission Ridge, thence across the Cumberland range again to Bridgeport and to Whiteside, Tenn. Here the soldiers of the Ninth re-enlisted as veterans, December 12, 1863, taking veteran furlough, and left Valparaiso, Ind., for the front February 21, 1864, passing through Indianapolis, Louisville, Nashville and Chattanooga to Cleveland, Tenn. The regiment went through the entire Atlanta campaign, during the spring and summer of 1864, marching through Ringgold, Dalton, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, around Allatoona Mountain, to Ackworth, Big Shanty and Marietta and in the flank movement around Atlanta; through Jonesboro and Lovejoy, and back to Atlanta. In this campaign of months of solid fighting, the soldiers of the Ninth fought at Taylor's Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Dalton, Resaca, Cassville, Dallas, New Hope Church, Kenesaw, Marietta, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro and Lovejoy. They pursued Hood to Dalton, marching thence to Athens and to Pulaski, Tenn., arriving November 1, 1864. It was engaged at Columbia, Tenn., at Franklin and at Nashville, and chased Hood's flying legions to Huntsville, Ala., remaining there from January 6 to March 13, 1865. They then passed into East Tennessee, beyond Bull's Gap, and back to Nashville, reaching it May 25, 1865. It was sent thence to New Orleans and to Texas, remaining as part of Sheridan's Army of Occupation till September, 1865, when it was mustered out of service, in Texas, and the soldiers were sent to their respective homes.

The battles of the Ninth Indiana Infantry are as follows: Greenbrier, Va., October 3, 1861; Alleghany, Va., December 13, 1861; Shiloh, Tenn., April 7, 1862; Corinth (siege), April 11, to May 30, 1862; Perryville, Ky., October 8, 1862; Danville, Ky., 1862; Wildcat Mountain, Ky., October 21, 1862; Stone River, Tenn., December 31, 1862, January 1, 2, 1863; Chickamauga, Tenn., September 19, 20, 1863; Lookout Mountain, Ga., November 24, 1863; Mission Ridge, Ga., November 25, 1863; Taylor's Ridge, Ga., May, 1864; Buzzard's Roost, Ga., May 8, 1864; Resaca, Ga., May 15, 1864; Cassville, Ga., May 19, 1864; Dallas, Ga., May 27, 1864; New Hope Church, Ga., May 25, 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, June 27, 1864; Marietta, Ga., July 3, 1864; Atlanta, Ga., July 21, September 2, 1864; Jonesboro, Ga., September 1, 1864; Dalton, Ga., August 15, 1864; Lovejoy,

A. Q. Marsh
CAPT. 59TH U.S. COLORED, INF.

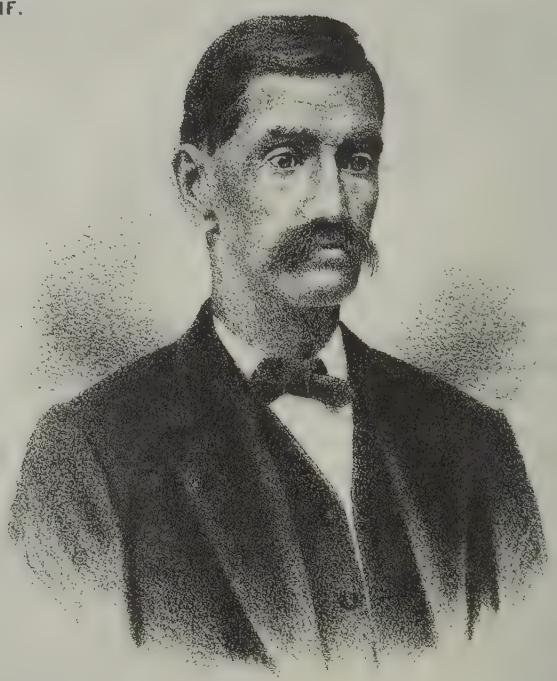
W. H. W. Daly
(EX-SHERIFF.)
1ST LIEUT. CO. B. 5TH IND. VOL. CAV.

Ralph O. Murray
(SHERIFF)
CO. D. 36TH REGT. IND. VOL. INF.

P. A. Leavell
(EX-CLERK) CO. E. 36TH REGT. IND. VOL. INF.

Yours Truly
J. N. Whitfield
CO. F. 69TH IND. V. INF.

AMOS HALL.
CO. H. 84TH IND. V. INF.



Robt. W. Hamilton M.D.
CAPT CO. C. 19TH IND. V. INF.

Ga., September 2, 1864; Columbia, Tenn., November 26, 1864; Franklin, Tenn., November 30, 1864; Nashville, Tenn., December 15, 16, 1864.

The Ninth Regiment, it will be noticed, did their full share of fighting, being engaged in twenty-six battles, to say nothing of skirmishes, etc. Many of them were chief among the engagements of the war—Shiloh, Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, Resaca, Kenesaw, Franklin, Nashville—ten large battles make a strong showing for the record of the Ninth Indiana.

The members of the Ninth Indiana (three years) from Randolph County are as follows:

Company A—Charles Anderson, mustered out June 20, 1865; Francis M. Singer, assigned, never reported.

Company C—Samuel Armstrong, died May 23, 1865; Eli Cadwallader, Job Horner, Jeremiah Horn, mustered out July 9, 1865.

Substitutes—William C. Blizzard, mustered out September 27, 1865; Eli Burkett, died of disease December 18, 1864; Silas S. Clark, Peter Funderburg, mustered out September 28, 1865; Thomas K. Karnes, record indefinite; James McFetridge, died June 17, 1865, disease.

Company G—Col. N. Steele, mustered out June 20, 1865.

Company H—Wilson Benning, mustered out September 28, 1865; Jonathan Edwards, mustered out June 19, 1865; Robert Engle, record indefinite; Daniel Fry, mustered out August 13, 1865; Henry Garrett, William F. Stillwell, mustered out June 19, 1865; James N. Wright, mustered out June 19, 1865; Jacob D. Bales, mustered out May 30, 1865; Austin F. Conyer, James P. Ellis, Philip W. Miller, mustered out September 28, 1865; James Nicholas, died January 15, 1865; Aaron Oren, mustered out May 30, 1865 (the last six were substitutes).

Company I—John W. Clark, mustered out June 21, 1865; Josiah French, died at Nashville, Tenn., January 5, 1865, disease.

Company K—David Boocher, mustered out September 28, 1865, absent, sick; Joseph Devoss, mustered out June 20, 1865; David A. Green, discharged May 25, 1865, disability; Joshua Green, mustered out May 23, 1865; John A. Green, Elias Phillips, David A. Switzer, mustered out June 20, 1865; John W. Switzer, discharged June 8, 1865, disability; Isaiah Woodard, died at Knoxville, Tenn., April 30, 1865; Sylvester Willey, discharged June 8, 1835, disability; Darius Orr, mustered out May 20, 1865.

ELEVENTH INDIANA INFANTRY, THREE YEARS.

The synopsis of the record of the Eleventh Regiment, given in the report of the State Adjutant General, stands thus:

Upper Potomac (three months), 1861.
Western Kentucky (three years), 1861.
Tennessee and Kentucky, 1862.
Siege of Corinth and pursuit of Bragg, 1862.
Against Vicksburg 1863.
Louisiana, 1863–64.
Shenandoah Valley, 1864.

STATISTICS.

Mustered in at Indianapolis, August 31, 1861, Colonel Lewis Wallace. Mustered out at Baltimore July 26, 1865.

Officers, 49; men, 1,010; recruits, 963; veterans, 296; died 245; deserted, 25; unaccounted for, 239; total, 2,348.

Veteranized at Madisonville, La., February 1, 1864; took veteran furlough by steamer from New Orleans via New York, and thence by rail to Indianapolis, arriving February 21, 1864; public reception by Gov. Morton on that day; reached New Orleans in return May 8, 1864; came by steamer to Fortress Monroe July 28, 1864; Shenandoah Valley, July 28, 1864, January, 1865; Baltimore, Md., January 7, July 26, 1865; mustered out at Baltimore July 26, 1865; public reception at Indianapolis August 4, 1865. The Eleventh Regiment marched 9,318 miles. Battles in which they took part:

Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Vicksburg, siege of Jackson, Teche Country, Lake Tasse, Perryville, Opequan, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, New Market.

Members of the Eleventh Indiana Infantry (three years), from Randolph County:

Company I (Eleventh Indiana)—John Day, record indefinite; Richard Fay, record indefinite.

TWELFTH INDIANA INFANTRY, THREE YEARS.

Mustered in at Indianapolis August 17, 1862, Colonel William H. Link. Mustered out at Washington City June 8, 1865.

Officers, 41; men, 907; recruits, 384; died, 193; deserted, 8; unaccounted for, 13; total, 1,332.

SYNOPTICAL RECORD.

Upper Potomac, 1861–62.
Shenandoah Valley, 1862.
Against Kirby Smith in Kentucky, 1862.
Pursuit of Bragg, 1862.
West Tennessee, 1862.
Against Vicksburg, 1862.
Chattanooga and East Tennessee, 1863.
Against Atlanta, 1864.
Sherman to the sea, 1864.
Through the Carolinas, 1865.

BATTLES—TWELFTH REGIMENT.

Richmond, Ky., 173 killed and wounded; regiment mostly taken prisoners; Col. Link killed.

Battles of the Vicksburg campaign, Mission Ridge, Atlanta campaign, Griswoldsville, Savannah, Columbia and Bentonville.

The regiment returned to Indianapolis 270 strong, and were publicly received by Gov. Morton June 14, 1865.

The recruits and drafted men were transferred to the Forty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Regiments, and kept in service another month, being mustered out July 15 and 17, 1865, at Louisville, Ky.

Men belonging to the Twelfth Indiana from Randolph County:

Company A.—Joseph Urick mustered out June 8, 1865; Benjamin Mann, mustered out June 8, 1865.

THIRTEENTH INDIANA INFANTRY, THREE YEARS.

Mustered in at Indianapolis June 19, 1861; Colonel J. C. Sullivan. Mustered out at Goldsboro, N. C., September 5, 1865.

Officers, 41; men, 1,006; recruits, 232; veterans, 148; died, 136; deserted, 103; unaccounted for, 25; total, 1,427.

The Thirteenth was one of the earliest six regiments for three years from Indiana, viz.:

Twelfth, May 11, 1861; Sixteenth, May 11, 1861; Fourteenth, June 7, 1861; Seventeenth, June 12, 1861; Fifteenth, June 14, 1861; Thirteenth, June 19, 1861.

It left for the field July 4, 1861, reaching McClellan's forces at the base of Rich Mountain July 10, going into the action of Rich Mountain the next day, with eight killed and nine wounded. September 12 and 13, the battles of Cheat Mountain and Elkwater were fought, and the Thirteenth was engaged in both.

The regiment fought at Greenbrier and Alleghany, and at Winchester Heights March 22, 1862, losing six killed and thirty-three wounded; also pursuing Stonewall Jackson to New Market and Columbia Bridge. At Summerville their loss was four wounded and twenty-four prisoners. They marched over the Blue Ridge to McDowell, and were sent back to Shenandoah Valley June 28, 1862; they were sent to Harrison's Landing on the James, and afterward to Fortress Monroe and to Suffolk on the Nansemond River. There they stayed nine months, engaging in numerous operations. Among them were reconnoissances to Blackwater October 3, November 7, December 15; battle of Deserted Farm, January 50, 1865.

Repulse of Gen. Longstreet from Suffolk April 10, May 3, 1863; tearing up forty miles of track from two railroads May 13 and 19, 1863. They marched 400 miles and lost two killed, nineteen wounded and seven prisoners.

After destroying railroads north of Richmond, the regiment was dispatched to Charleston harbor, reaching Folly Island August 3, 1863, and taking part in the siege of Forts Wagner and Gregg, entering the first into Fort Wagner in the assault against that fort September 7.

The regiment veteranized on Folly Island December, 1863, and the veterans reached Indianapolis on home furlough January 1, 1864.

Returning to their flag, the regiment was with Gen. Seymour at Jacksonville in Florida until April 17, 1864, and was then transferred to Gen. Butler's army in front of Richmond, arriving at Bermuda Hundred May 5, 1864.

They were in the actions of Wathal Junction May 7, Chester Station May 16, and Foster's Farm May 20, losing in the three engagements about two hundred men. They were at Cold Harbor June 3, and in various actions with the Potomac Army until June 12, and then returned to Bermuda Hundred, aiding in the assault on Petersburg June 16. The non-veterans left the regiment June 19, going to Indianapolis to be mustered out.

The regiment was at the fatal charge on Petersburg after the explosion of the mine July 30, 1864, as also at Strawberry Plains, Chapin's Bluff and the attack on the rebel works before Richmond October 10, 1864. They were ordered to New York to assist in preserving order at the elections in November, and returned December 3 to join the expedition against Fort Fisher.

When the non-veterans left, the regiment was formed at first into a battalion of five companies, but was afterward made a full regiment by adding five companies of drafted men.

January 3, 1865, the regiment sailed against Fort Fisher, assisting to capture that stronghold, as also Fort Anderson on the 19th of February, 1865. They were a part of the forces that occupied Wilmington February 22, and after some weeks marched to Raleigh, arriving April 14, and remaining there until July 20, 1865. Thence they went to Goldsboro, and were mustered out at that place September 5, starting for Indianapolis September 7, and arriving September 15, 1865, with twenty-nine officers and 550 enlisted men.

Men from Randolph County in the Thirteenth:

Company E (re-organized)—Hiram W. Seeley, appointed Corporal; mustered out September 5, 1865.

Company I (re-organized)—Edward Courtney, record indefinite.

John S. Debolt, mustered out August 19, 1865.

Fidel Higi, mustered out September 5, 1865.

Joseph E. Ruhel, First Sergeant, mustered out September 5, 1865. John Thomas, record indefinite.

SIXTEENTH INDIANA, THREE YEARS.

Regiment mustered in at Indianapolis August 19, 1861; Colonel, T. J. Lucas; regiment mustered out at New Orleans June 30, 1865.

Officers, 42; men 921; recruits, 523; veterans, none; died, 271; deserted, 36; unaccounted for, 204; total, 1,486.

Upper Potomac, 1861; Shenandoah Valley, 1862; against Kirby Smith, 1862; Mississippi Valley, 1862–63; against Vicksburg, 1863; Louisiana, 1863; Red River, 1864; Louisiana, 1865.

Mustered out at New Orleans June 30, 1865.

Arrived at Indianapolis with 365 officers and men July 10, 1865. Public reception by Gov. Morton, Gen. Hovey and others.

The recruits whose terms of service had not yet expired were transferred to the Thirteenth Cavalry, the Sixteenth having served as cavalry for some time with acceptance.

With the Thirteenth Cavalry the recruits were mustered out in October, 1865.

Members from Randolph County: Elliot Robertson, mustered out May 15, 1865.

SEVENTEENTH INDIANA INFANTRY, THREE YEARS.

Regiment mustered in at Indianapolis June 12, 1861; Colonel, Milo S. Hascall; regiment mustered out at Macon, Ga., August 8, 1865.

Officers, 49; men, 1,014; recruits, 940; veterans, 288; died, 232; deserted, 161; unaccounted for, 82; total, 2,311.

Loss in killed and wounded, 238; assisted to capture more than five thousand prisoners; marched more than four thousand miles; captured more than six thousand stand of arms; captured seventy pieces of artillery; captured eleven stand of colors; captured more than three thousand horses and mules.

Regiment mounted during February, 1863; armed with Spencer rifles May 18, 1863.

Regiment re-enlisted as veterans at Pulaski, Tenn., January 4, 1864.

Regiment arrived at Indianapolis on veteran furlough January 25, 1864.

Regiment purchased horses in Indiana for remounting and returned mounted to Nashville, and to Sherman's army before Atlanta May 10, 1864.

Regiment engaged in skirmishes in the Atlanta campaign at many places—Pumpkin Vine Church, Big Shanty, Belle Plain Road, Kenesaw, Marietta, Chattahoochie River, Stone Mountain, Flat Rock, New Hope Church, Rome, Coosaville, Leesburg and Goshen.

Remounted at Louisville, Ky., December 24, 1864, and went South again to Alabama. It fought Roddy and Forrest at Ebenezer Church, Ga., April 1, 1865; fought also at Selma, Ala., April 2, capturing four pieces of artillery and 300 prisoners; at Macon, Ga., also, they assisted in taking 3,000 prisoners, five stand of colors, sixty pieces of artillery and 3,000 small arms. The Seventeenth was an exceedingly energetic regiment, and performed efficient and thorough service, which helped greatly in conquering the rebellion and compelling a peace; for all which and for their heroism, and for their great achievements, all honor to the gallant Seventeenth Indiana.

Members belonging to the Seventeenth: David H. Chase, appointed Hospital Steward; mustered out June —, 1865.

